UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR

✦

HANDBOOK

of

FEDERAL INDIAN LAW

WITH REFERENCE TABLES AND INDEX

By

FELIX S. COHEN

Chairman, Board of Appeals
Department of the Interior

Foreword by

HAROLD L. ICKES

Secretary of the Interior

Introduction by

NATHAN R. MARGOLD

Solicitor for the Department of the Interior

First Printing 1941

Second Printing 1942

Third Printing 1942

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

WASHINGTON : 1942

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C. - Price $2.00

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

FOREWORD

There are few subjects in the history and law of the United States on which public views are more dramatically and flagrantly erroneous than on the subject of Indian affairs. According to the popular view, the Indian is a vanishing race; his lands are steadily dwindling; restricted as to the hunt and denied the warpath, he has nothing to live for and nothing to contribute to our civilization; he is not entitled to the rights of citizenship; he subsists on "rations"; and he cannot sign his name without the approval of a reservation superintendent.

The facts are very different. Indians today are probably the most rapidly increasing racial group in our population; the total area of Indian lands has been increasing slowly but steadily for nearly 5 years; the Indian today is making significant and vital contributions to American art and craftsmanship, and to our knowledge and enjoyment of the resources of forests, plains, streams, and trails that were here long before white immigrants came; all native Indians today are citizens, entitled to all of the rights and bound by all of the obligations of citizenship; if some of them still have equitable interests in property which they cannot alienate, they share this disability, or advantage, with a large number of their non-Indian fellow citizens.

That Indians have legal rights is a matter of little practical consequence unless the Indians themselves and those who deal with them are aware of those rights. Such, however, is the complexity of the body of Indian law, based upon more than 4,000 treaties and statutes and upon thousands of judicial decisions and administrative rulings, rendered during a century and a half, that one can well understand the vast ignorance of the subject that prevails even in ordinarily well informed quarters. For more than a century, commissioners of Indian affairs have appealed for aid in reducing this unmanageable mass of materials to some orderly form. Yet during that period none of the attempts to compile a simple manual of the subject was carried to completion.

Ignorance of one's legal rights is always the handmaid of despotism. This Handbook of Federal Indian Law should give to Indians useful weapons in the continual struggle that every minority must wage to maintain its liberties, and at the same time it should give to those who deal with Indians, whether on behalf of the federal or state governments or as private individuals, the understanding which may prevent oppression.

It is entirely fitting that this contribution to the enlightenment of administrators and Indians should have been made under the leadership of one who has striven valiantly to free our national relations with the Indian tribes from the despotic traces of less tolerant epochs. On April 28, 1934, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, in urging the passage of the Wheeler-Howard Act, which, with its recent extensions to Oklahoma and Alaska, stands today as the most important segment of our Indian law, declared:

> The Wheeler-Howard bill embodies the basic and broad principles of the administration for a new standard of dealing between the Federal Government and its Indian wards.
>
> It is, in the main, a measure of justice that is long overdue.
>
> We can and should, without further delay, extend to the Indian the fundamental rights of political liberty and local self-government and the opportunities of education and economic assistance that they require in order to attain a wholesome American life. This is but the obligation of honor of a powerful nation toward a people living among us and dependent upon our protection.
>
> Certainly the continuance of autocratic rule, by a Federal department, over the lives of more than 200,000 citizens of this Nation is incompatible with American ideals of liberty. It also is destructive of the character and self-respect of a great race.
>
> The continued application of the allotment laws, under which Indian wards have lost more than two-thirds of their reservation lands, while the costs of Federal administration of these lands have steadily mounted, must be terminated.
>
> Indians throughout the country have been stirred to a new hope. They say they stand at the end of the old trail. Certainly, the figures of impoverishment and disease point to their impending extinction, as a race, unless basic changes in their conditions of life are effected.
>
> I do not think such changes can be devised and carried out without the active cooperation of the Indians themselves.
>
> The Wheeler-Howard bill offers the basis for such cooperation. It allows the Indian people to take an active and responsible part in the solution of their own problems.

This Handbook of Federal Indian Law will constitute, I believe, a lasting contribution towards the ideals thus enunciated.

This work cannot have the legal force of an act of Congress or the decision of a court. Whatever legal force it will have must be derived from the original authorities which have been assiduously gathered and patiently analyzed. In publishing this work the Department of the Interior does not assume responsibility for every generalization, prediction, or inference that may be found in the volume. What is implicit, however, in the fact of publication is a considered judgment that this volume will prove a valuable aid in fulfilling the obligation which Congress has laid upon the Department of the Interior to protect and safeguard the rights of our oldest national minority.

The labors which Solicitor Nathan R. Margold, Assistant Solicitor Felix S. Cohen, and their aides and collaborators have devoted to this pioneer work will be appreciated, not only by those Indians and Indian Service administrators whose needs it most directly serves, but by all of us who hold dear the civilized ideals of liberty and tolerance.

(Signed) HAROLD L. ICKES.

JULY 9, 1940.

INTRODUCTION

1. THE BACKGROUND OF FEDERAL INDIAN LAW

We in this country are slowly learning to appreciate the significance of the problem of Indian rights for the cause of democracy here in the United States and throughout the Western Hemisphere. Over the radio, a few months ago, came the words of a man who knows more than any one else in the world about Indians as human beings. His words are a better introduction to the Indian problem than I can write.

What sort of treatment dominant groups give to subject groups—how governments treat minorities—and how big countries treat little countries: This is a subject that comes down the centuries, and never was it a more burning subject than in this year 1939—even in this month, December 1939.

So the question: How has our own country treated its oldest and most persisting minority, the Indians; how has it treated them, and how is it treating them now? This is an important question. I believe that nearly all Americans realize the importance of this question. Many millions of our citizens feel an interest, curious and sympathetic and sometimes enthusiastic, in our Indian minority.

What I shall describe will be a bad beginning which lasted a long time, which broke Indian hearts for generation after generation, which inflicted destructions that no future time can wholly repair. Then I shall describe how the long-lasting bad record was changed to something good; how, although the change came so late, it did not come too late; how when the change came, it still found hundreds of Indian tribes ready to respond to the opportunity which at last had been given them. I shall describe how the good change has developed across three Presidencies, so that it is not an achievement or program of a single political party. But I shall describe, too, the decisive and immense good change which has come under President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes.[1]

I shall not quote the main body of Commissioner Collier's speech, for that reappears, amplified and developed somewhat, in the pages that follow. I quote, again, only his final words:

No, the task is not finished. It is only well begun. But one part of the task is finished, and it marks and makes an epoch. The repressions which crushed the Indian spirit have been lifted away. From out of an ancient and dark prison house the living Indian has burst into the light, into the living sunlight and the future. All of his age-tempered powers and his age-tried discipline are still there. He knows that the future is his; and that the century of dishonor, for him, is ended.

But he needs our continuing help, and our nation's debt to him is not yet paid.

The thing we have started to do, and with your help, you citizens of our country, will continue to do, is to aid the Indian work out his own destiny. We have helped him to retain and to rebuild the richness of his own national life, and in doing this we think we have enriched the national life, the national heritage and the national honor of 130,000,000 Americans. This is the way the democracy of the United States is solving the minority problem of its first Americans.

Let me carry your thought beyond our own national borders. Our Indians are a tiny, though now a growing minority. But south of the Rio Grande, the Indians number not hundreds of thousands, but millions. Pure-blooded Indians are the major population in Mexico, in Guatemala, Honduras, Peru, Ecuador. There are thirty million Indians—one growing race, and one of the world's great races. And that race is marching toward power. It may be that the most dependable guarantee of the survival and triumph of real democracy in our hemisphere, south of the Rio Grande, is this advance toward power of the Indians, who from most ancient times, and now, are believers in, and practicers of local democracy.

What we are doing—what with your help we shall do—to meet our own Indian minority problem has a deep significance to these 30,000,000 other Indians, and to all the countries where they are located. Here we enter within the battleground and effort-ground of our Western Hemisphere destiny. It is upon this scale of two continents, and of a democracy defended and increased through at least one-half of our globe, that world-history will view our own record with our Indian minority.

[1] "America's Handling of its Indigenous Indian Minority," an address by John Collier, December 4, 1939, 7 Indians at Work, No. 5, January, 1940, pp. 11, 16.

Against this background of history and of struggle and hope, the federal law governing Indian affairs may be viewed not, as it has too often been viewed, as a curious collection of anachronisms and mysteries, but rather as a revealing record in the development of our American constitutional democracy. The decline of dictatorship in the Indian country is fresh enough in our national memory so that we may perhaps profit from an analysis of weaknesses that dictatorial bluster ever seeks to conceal, and from an understanding of the ways in which the forms and forces of democracy have, in this small sector of an endless battle line, won victory.

2. THE BASIS OF FEDERAL INDIAN LAW

For more than a century, Supreme Court Justices, Attorneys General, and Commissioners of Indian Affairs have commented on the intricate complexity and peculiarity of federal Indian law. Yet until now no writer has attempted to gather into a single work these intricacies. The reason may perhaps best be appreciated by those who have attempted that task. The federal law governing Indians is a mass of statutes, treaties, and judicial and administrative rulings, that includes practically all the fields of law known to textbook writers—the law of real property, contracts, corporations, torts, domestic relations, procedure, criminal law, federal jurisdiction, constitutional law, conflict of laws, and international law. And in each of these fields the fact that Indians are involved gives the basic doctrines and concepts of the field a new quirk which sometimes carries unpredictable consequences.

To survey a field which includes, for instance, more than four thousand distinct statutory enactments, one must generalize. And generalization on the subject of Indian law is peculiarly dangerous.

For about a century the United States dealt separately with the various Indian tribes and the legal rights of the members of each tribe were fixed by treaty.[2] These treaties are for the most part still in force and of recognized validity. In them one finds reflected the very wide pre-Columbian divergencies that existed, for instance, between the great agricultural towns and confederacies of the Southeast and the loosely organized nomadic hunters of the Plains area, or between the small fish-eating, slave-owning bands of the Northwest Coast and the great constitutional democracy that was the League of the Iroquois.

When Congress in 1871 enacted a law [3] prohibiting further treaty making with the Indian tribes, the form of governmental dealing with the Indians was changed, but the essential character of those dealings was not modified. Congress continued to deal with the Indian tribes, in large measure, through "agreements," ratified by both Houses of Congress, which do not differ from treaties in legal effect. The only substantial change accomplished by the law of 1871 was that whereas Indian treaties were submitted for the ratification of the Senate alone, as the Constitution of the United States provides,[4] agreements are ratified by the action of both Houses, and thus the House of Representatives, which had long been excluded from equal participation in Indian affairs, has achieved an equal status with the Senate in that field. Apart from treaties and agreements with particular tribes, the dealings of the Federal Government with the Indians have been predominantly by way of special statutes applying to named tribes, and, most recently, by way of tribal constitutions and tribal charters, all varying very considerably among the different tribes. Until the last years of the nineteenth century there was very little general legislation applying a uniform pattern to all tribes, and what little there was usually turns out, on analysis, to be in the nature of generalization from provisions that had appeared in several treaties.

During what may be roughly defined as the allotment period—from 1887, when the General Allotment law [5] was passed, to 1933, when the process of allotment came to an end—there developed a tendency to impose upon all Indian tribes a uniform pattern of general laws and general regulations. This tendency was commonly justified in terms of administrative efficiency and economy, and to this justification there was sometimes added the thought that Indian treaties, special statutes, and regional differences were all outworn relics which had to be sacrificed in the march of national progress. The effect, however, of this policy of ignoring the special rights conferred on individual tribes by treaty and statute and ignoring the political autonomy and cultural diversity of the tribes was to cause tremendous and widespread resentment among the Indians. The Indians found Indian and white champions. Protest against mistreatment of the Indian led to many investigations. A survey was conducted by the Institute for Government Research at the request of Secretary of Interior Work. The results of this study, published in 1928 under the title: "The Problem of Indian Administration," gave direction

[2] See Chapter 3, for an analysis of these treaties.
[3] Act of March 3, 1871, 16 Stat. 544, 566, R. S. § 2079, 25 U. S. C. 71.
[4] Article II, sec. 2.
[5] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 25 U. S. C. 331 et seq.

for more than a decade to Indian reform. On February 1, 1928, the Senate authorized its Committee on Indian Affairs to carry out an intensive survey of the condition of the Indians in the United States.[6]

These investigations have brought to light many of the evils resulting from attempts to impose a uniform pattern of treatment upon groups with different wants, and thus have strengthened the tendency towards special consideration of the legal problems of particular tribes. The policy of superseding the old pattern of uniformity and absolutism found expression in the Wheeler-Howard (Indian Reorganization) Act. Pursuant to this law, approved on June 18, 1934,[7] more than a hundred tribes in the United States adopted their own constitutions for self-government.[8] Practically all the regulations of the Indian Service have now been made subject to modifications for particular tribes through the provisions of these tribal constitutions and tribal ordinances.

These considerations indicate that a work on federal Indian law must deal with law made for, and in large part by, diverse groups with divergent economic interests, political institutions, and levels of cultural attainment.

Anyone who has worked in the field of Indian litigation is frequently asked by otherwise well informed people whether he understands "the Indian language." There are, in fact, more than 200 different Indian languages, some of them as distinct from each other as English and Chinese. This linguistic diversity is paralleled by diversities in the conditions and legal problems of more than 200 different Indian reservations.

Common opinion pictures the original American dressed in feathers and wampum, his belt adorned with scalps, mounted on a horse, gazing after buffalo. This picture blurs over the fact that many Indians, before white contact, were farmers and fishermen who had never seen feather head-dresses, wampum, scalps, or buffalo, that no Indian ever rode a horse before the Spaniards brought horses into North America, and that the special combination of striking Indian peculiarities which the modern "circus Indian" embodies did not exist before the rise of modern American showmanship.

Just as the popular picture of the Indian embodies a false juxtaposition of traits, so the popular view of Indian law embodies a false juxtaposition of ideas.

The popular view of the Indian's legal status proceeds from the assumption that the Indian is a ward of the Government, and not a citizen, that therefore he cannot make contracts without Indian Bureau approval, that he holds land in common under "Indian title," that he is entitled to education in federal schools when he is young, to rations when he is hungry, and to the rights of American citizenship when he abandons his tribal relations.

This is, on the whole, a thoroughly false picture, although historical exemplification may be found for each feature.

It would be absurd to set up in place of this false and oversimplified picture of federal Indian law any other equally simple picture. It may be worth while, however, to set forth certain hypotheses concerning the recurrent patterns of federal Indian law, which will be tested against decisions, statutes, and treaties in the pages that follow. These hypotheses may be conveniently grouped under four leading principles: (1) The principle of the political equality of races; (2) the principle of tribal self-government; (3) the principle of federal sovereignty in Indian affairs; and (4) the principle of governmental protection of Indians.

---

[6] Whereas there are two hundred and twenty-five thousand Indians presently under the control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, who are, in contemplation of law, citizens of the United States but who are in fact treated as wards of the Government and are prevented from the enjoyment of the free and independent use of property and of liberty of contract with respect thereto; and

Whereas the Bureau of Indian Affairs handles, leases, and sells Indian property of great value, and disposes of funds which amount to many millions of dollars annually without responsibility to civil courts and without effective responsibility to Congress; and

Whereas it is claimed that the control by the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the persons and property of Indians is preventing them from accommodating themselves to the conditions and requirements of modern life and from exercising that liberty with respect to their own affairs without which they can not develop into self-reliant, free, and independent citizens and have the rights which belong generally to citizens of the United States; and

Whereas numerous complaints have been made by responsible persons and organizations charging improper and improvident administration of Indian property by the Bureau of Indian Affairs; and

Whereas it is claimed that preventable diseases are widespread among the Indian population, that the death rate among them is not only unreasonably high but is increasing, and that the Indians in many localities are becoming pauperized; and

Whereas the acts of Congress passed in the last hundred years having as their objective the civilization of the Indian tribes seem to have failed to accomplish the results anticipated; and

Whereas it is expedient that said acts of Congress and the Indian policy incorporated in said acts be examined and the administration and operation of the same as affecting the condition of the Indian population be surveyed and appraised: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate is authorized and directed to make a general survey of the conditions of the Indians and of the operation and effect of the laws which Congress has passed for the civilization and protection of the Indian tribes; to investigate the relation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the persons and property of Indians and the effect of the acts, regulations, and administration of said bureau upon the health, improvement, and welfare of the Indians; and to report its findings in the premises, together with recommendations for the correction of abuses that may be found to exist, and for such changes in the law as will promote the security, economic competence, and progress of the Indians.

Said committee is authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, to employ such clerical assistance as is necessary, to sit during any recess of the Senate, and at such places as it may deem advisable. Any subcommittee, duly authorized thereto, shall have the powers conferred upon the committee by this resolution.

The expenses of said investigation shall be paid out by the contingent fund of the Senate and shall not exceed $30,000.

Res. 79, 70th Cong., 1st sess.)

[7] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461 et seq. For subsequent amendments and extensions, see Chapter 7.

[8] See Chapter 7.

A. POLITICAL EQUALITY

The right to be immune from racial discrimination by governmental agencies is an essential part of the fabric of democratic government in the United States. In part, this right is constitutionally affirmed by the fifth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Federal Constitution; in part, the right is embodied in statutes providing penalties for racial discrimination by agencies of Federal and State Government; and, in part, the right is no more than a moral right implicit in the character of democratic government but not always protected by adequate legal machinery.

Despite a widely prevalent impression to the contrary, all Indians born in the United States are citizens of the United States and of the state in which they reside.[9] As citizens they are entitled to the rights of suffrage guaranteed by the fifteenth amendment,[10] and they are likewise entitled to hold public office,[11] to sue,[12] to make contracts,[13] and to enjoy all the civil liberties guaranteed to their fellow citizens.[14] These rights take on a special significance against the background of highly organized administrative control. They indicate that a body of federal Indian law, considered as "racial law," would be as much an anomaly as a body of federal law for persons of Teutonic descent, and that the existence of federal Indian law can be neither justified nor understood except in terms of the existence of Indian tribes.

B. TRIBAL SELF-GOVERNMENT

The principle that an Indian tribe is a political body with powers of self-government was first clearly enunciated by Chief Justice Marshall in the case of Worcester v. Georgia.[15] Indian tribes or nations, he declared, > * * * had always been considered as distinct, independent, political communities, retaining their original natural rights, * * *. (P. 559.)

To this situation was applied the accepted rule of international law:

> * * * the settled doctrine of the law of nations is, that a weaker power does not surrender its independence—its right to self-government—by associating with a stronger, and taking its protection. (P. 560.)

From these premises the courts have concluded that Indian tribes have all the powers of self-government of any sovereignty except insofar as those powers have been modified or repealed by act of Congress or treaty. Hence over large fields of criminal and civil law, and particularly over questions of tribal membership, inheritance, tribal taxation, tribal property, domestic relations, and the form of tribal government, the laws, customs, and decisions of the proper tribal governing authorities have, to this day, the force of law.[16]

C. FEDERAL SOVEREIGNTY

The doctrine that Indian affairs are subject to the control of the Federal Government, rather than that of the states, derives from two legal sources.[17] In the first place, the Federal Constitution expressly conferred upon the Congress of the United States the power "to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes." [18] Matters internal to the tribe itself even to this day have been left largely in the hands of tribal governments. Federal power has generally been invoked in matters arising out of commerce with the Indian tribes, in the broad sense in which that phrase has been used to include all transactions by which Indians sought to dispose of land or other property in exchange for money, liquor, munitions or other products of the white man's civilization. The growth of the commerce clause has meant the expansion of federal power in Indian affairs, at the expense of state power.

Supplementary to the express constitutional power over commerce with the Indian tribes which was conferred upon Congress, the Federal Government was constitutionally endowed with plenary power over the making of treaties. Since the Federal Government had made several treaties with Indian tribes prior to the adoption of the Constitution in 1787, and continued to make such treaties for more than eight decades thereafter, the growth of federal power over Indian relations, at the expense of all claims of state power, was continuous and unchecked during the period in which the outlines of our present law of Indian affairs were established.

---

[9] See Chapter 8, sec. 2.
[10] See Chapter 8, sec. 3.
[11] See Chapter 8, sec. 4.
[12] See Chapter 8, sec. 6.
[13] See Chapter 8, sec. 7.
[14] See Chapter 8, sec. 10.
[15] 6 Pet. 515 (1832).
[16] See Chapter 7.
[17] See Chapter 5.
[18] Art. I, sec. 8.

At the present time it may be laid down as a rough general rule that Indians on an Indian reservation are not subject to state law. This exemption is of particular importance in the fields of criminal law and taxation. The general rule has been modified in a few particulars by congressional action conferring upon the state specific power over certain subjects. Perhaps the most important of these laws delegating power to the states is the General Allotment Act,[19] which provides that, when tribal lands have been individualized, the individual parcels shall be inherited in accordance with the laws of the state. Another important exception to the general rule of federal sovereignty exists in the case of Oklahoma, where very extensive powers over Indians have been conferred upon the government of the state.[20] In both of these cases, as well as in various other matters, the power of the state is defined by federal legislation.[21]

D. GOVERNMENTAL PROTECTION OF INDIANS

Most of the legislation of the United States with respect to Indian affairs is subject to a dual interpretation. To the cynic such legislation may frequently appear as a mechanism for the orderly plundering of the Indian. To those more charitably inclined, the Government has appeared as the protector of the Indians against individuals who wished to separate the Indian from his possessions. Without attempting to anticipate the judgment that history will render on this conflict of doctrine, it may be said that at least the theory of American law governing Indian affairs has always been that the Government owed a duty of protection to the Indian in his relations with non-Indians. As was said by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Kagama:[22]

> Because of the local ill feeling, the people of the States where they [the Indian tribes] are found are often their deadliest enemies. From their very weakness and helplessness, so largely due to the course of dealing of the Federal Government with them, and the treaties in which it has been promised, there arises the duty of protection, and with it the power. This has always been recognized by the Executive and by Congress, and by this court, whenever the question has arisen. (P. 384.)

As a practical matter the individuals against whom the Indian needed the most vigorous kind of protection were the trader and the settler. Both wanted Indian land. The trader also wanted furs. The trader offered directly or indirectly, in exchange for land or furs, kettles, knives, clothing, liquor, firearms, ammunition, and other commodities. Some of these commodities were unknown in the pre-Columbian cultures, and the tribes had developed no adequate social controls over their use; the byproducts of this trade were disease, violence and, in many cases, the destruction of the game on which the Indians had subsisted. The settler wanted Indian land. Often he offered, in exchange for the land, the trader's goods; often he took the land without offering any quid pro quo. This intercourse between Indians and whites threatened the decimation of Indians through violence, disease, and starvation and imposed upon the Federal Government a tremendous cost for military protection of the white frontier families against the not always discriminating retaliation of the despoiled natives. The effort to control this intercourse was the guiding motif of federal Indian legislation down to our own generation.

Thus the problems of federal Indian law have been primarily the problems of (1) the regulation of Indian traders, (2) controlling the disposition of Indian land, (3) the protection of that land against trespass, and (4) the control of the liquor traffic. A few words on each of these four points may suggest the general contours of our federal law on Indian affairs.

(1) In 1790 the Federal Congress adopted the policy of regulating trade with the Indians through a system of licensing traders.[23] Except for a brief period, from 1796 to 1822, when a system of Government trading houses was maintained, the principle of control of Indian trade through licenses has been in force. Under this system federal supervision of the character and quality of goods sold and prices charged has been possible. Sales of liquor, and of firearms and ammunition not needed for useful purposes, have been banned. The system depended very largely for its effectiveness upon the isolation of the Indian groups affected, and in recent years the growth of towns and cities upon or near various Indian reservations and the development of mail-order trade have introduced elements of uncertainty into the question of the present efficacy and future development of our federal control over Indian trade.

---

[19] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 25 U. S. C. 331 et seq. See Chapter 11.

[20] See Chapter 23.

[21] See Chapter 6.

[22] 118 U. S. 375, 384 (1886). The comma after "them" in the third line of the quotation appears in the Supreme Court Reporter edition but not in the U. S. Reports edition. It is essential to the sense of the passage.

[23] See Chapter 16.

(2) The problem of federal control over the disposition of Indian lands becomes a very esoteric legal problem if pursued into the mysteries which have been created by those who sought to deduce specific limitations upon Indian land sales from the inherent attributes of the general concept of "Indian title." The notion of "Indian title," as a supposed special form of tenure involving rights of possession but no right of alienation, is a notion that depends upon certain feudal doctrines of sovereignty, dominion, and seizin, on which endless controversy is possible. The subject, however, loses much of its mystery if the sale of land be viewed against the background of federal control over other types of Indian trade. The fact is that, while recognizing that the Indian tribes owned lands in their possession and had the right to dispose of them the Federal Government has always circumscribed such disposition by means of laws prescribing the manner and terms upon which Indian land may be alienated.[24] The economic significance of this control is apparent in the following statement of the United States Supreme Court:[25]

> The Indian right to the lands as property, was not merely of possession; that of alienation was concomitant; both were equally secured, protected and guarantied by Great Britain and Spain, subject only to ratification and confirmation by the license, charter or deed from the governor representing the king. Such purchases enabled the Indians to pay their debts, compensate for their depredations on the traders resident among them, to provide for their wants; while they were available to the purchasers as payment of the considerations which at their expense had been received by the Indians. It would have been a violation of the faith of the government to both, to encourage traders to settle in the province, to put themselves and property in the power of the Indians, to suffer the latter to contract debts, and when willing to pay them by the only means in their power, a cession of their lands, withhold an assent to the purchase, which, by their laws or municipal regulations, was necessary to vest a title. (Pp. 758–759.)

The first Indian Intercourse Act [26] provided that all alienations of Indian land should be made "at some public treaty, held under the authority of the United States." In the land sales that were made by treaty the United States was generally the purchaser, but in a few cases States or private individuals were designated as purchasers of the land sold.

Apart from treaties, a series of special statutes, generally but not always dependent upon the consent of the Indians concerned, provided for the sale of Indian lands. Other statutes, general as well as special, have provided for the leasing, by the Indians or by the Secretary of the Interior on their behalf, of Indian lands and minerals and the sale of Indian-owned timber.[27] Legislation authorizing the allotment of tribal lands, and supplementary laws dealing with such allotments, have provided for the sale or lease of allotted lands, under various degrees of federal administrative supervision.[28]

By maintaining its control over the transactions by which Indians dispose of land, the United States has been able to establish a degree of control over the moneys or other quid pro quo received by the Indians in connection with such disposition.[29] Thus various types of tribal and individual funds, generally representing returns from the disposition of Indian land and subject to federal control, have been established, and a good deal of the attention which Congress and the Interior Department have given to the Indian problem has been directed to the proper use of this money. Part of this vast fund, obtained from the disposition of Indian natural resources, has been used for the administration of education, health, and other public services on the Indian reservations; part of it has been distributed to the Indians in per capita payments, and part has been utilized, with or without the consent of the Indians, for expenses of government administration on the reservations. The various service functions of the Indian Service which have developed out of the administration of these funds must be left for later treatment.[30] It is enough for our present purposes to note that the principle of federal protection of the Indian, applied specifically to Indian lands, continued to exert its force beyond the transaction of Indian land sale, and that by virtue of this principle federal control came to be extended over almost the entire economic life of the Indian.

(3) The protection of Indian land against trespass was one of the first responsibilities assumed by the Federal Government. The promise of such protection for lands retained by the Indian tribes was an important quid pro quo in the process of treaty-making by which the United States acquired a vast public domain.[31] This

[24] See Chapter 15.
[25] Mitchel v. United States, 9 Pet. 711, 758–759 (1835). And see Chapter 15, sec. 18.
[26] Act of July 22, 1790, 1 Stat. 137.
[27] See Chapter 15.
[28] See Chapters 9, 11.
[29] See Chapter 10.
[30] See Chapter 12
[31] See Chapter 3.

promise of protection was sometimes backed up by a treaty provision declaring that trespassers put themselves outside the protection of the Federal Government, and might be dealt with by the tribes themselves according to their own laws and customs.

It is characteristic of the piecemeal approach characterizing federal legislation on Indian affairs that despite the importance of the subject of trespass upon Indian lands no general legislation on the subject has ever been enacted. Apart from the various treaty provisions with particular tribes, there are separate laws dealing with trespass by unlicensed traders, by horse thieves, and other criminals or would-be criminals, by settlers, by persons driving livestock to graze on Indian lands, and by hunters and trappers.[32] But there is to this day no general law which can be invoked against those trespassers whose occupation Congress has not foreseen. Ordinary civil actions have been brought by, or on behalf of, Indians and Indian tribes to protect Indian lands against trespass, but Indian unfamiliarity with legal procedure has often rendered this remedy ineffective. In recent years the Federal Government has devoted considerable attention to litigation for the protection of Indian lands against trespass. The right of the Federal Government to bring such suits has been justified either on the theory that title to the lands rested with the Federal Government or on the more general theory that the Federal Government has a special obligation, as guardian of the Indians, to protect their lands against trespass even where full title in fee simple is held by the Indian tribe.[33] It is pertinent to note, finally, that the federal protection of Indian lands against trespass by State authorities has given rise to the established doctrine that such lands are not subject to State land taxes.[34] This doctrine has been invoked, in turn, by state authorities as a reason for not rendering to reservation Indians various public services that are rendered to other citizens of the state, e. g. public education.[35]

(4) In the belief that a great deal of Indian disorder was the result of traffic in intoxicants, Congress early established a total prohibition law for the Indian country.[36] This law has been maintained in force continuously for more than a century. The breaking down of early conditions of isolation has made the enforcement of this legislation an increasingly difficult problem.

E. SUMMARY

In each of the foregoing four fields of legislation the principle of federal protection of the Indians has been carried into effect by means of some type of federal control over transactions between Indians and non-Indians, whether through complete prohibition, licensing, or the prescribing of conditions governing particular transactions. It is fair to say that historically and logically federal control over transactions of these four types is at the root of the entire body of federal legislation on Indian affairs. Thus this tremendous and unwieldy mass of legislation, comprising more than 4,300 distinct enactments, may be viewed in its entirety as the concrete content of the abstract principle of federal protection of the Indian.

In terms, this principle, an offspring of the more general one of federal sovereignty over Indian affairs, is entirely consistent with the principles of racial equality and of tribal self-government in matters internal to the tribe. In practice, however, the unsolved problems of our federal law in the field of Indian affairs all deal fundamentally with the demarcation of domain among these independent competing principles.

3. METHOD OF TREATMENT

This handbook does not purport to be a cyclopedia. It does not attempt to say the last word on the varied legal problems which it treats. If one who seeks to track down a point of federal Indian law finds in this volume relevant background, general perspective, and useful leads to the authorities, the handbook will have served the purpose for which it was written. More than this might have been done if it had been possible to carry through the work on the scale in which it was originally planned by Assistant Attorney General McFarland.

The method of this handbook is dictated by its subject matter. Federal Indian law is a subject that cannot be understood if the historical dimension of existing law is ignored. As I have elsewhere observed,[37] the groups of human beings with whom Federal Indian law is immediately concerned have undergone, in the century and a half of our national existence, changes in living habits, institutions, needs and aspirations far greater than the changes that separate from our own age the ages for which Hammurabi, Moses, Lycurgus, or Justinian legislated.

---

[32] See Act of July 22, 1790, 1 Stat. 137; Act of March 1, 1793, 1 Stat. 329; Act of May 19, 1796, 1 Stat. 469; Act of March 3, 1799, 1 Stat. 743; Act of March 30, 1802, 2 Stat. 139; Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729.

[33] See Chapter 15, sec. 10D.

[34] The New York Indians, 5 Wall. 761 (1866). And see Chapter 13.

[35] See Chapter 6.

[36] See Chapter 17.

[37] U. S. Department of the Interior, Office of the Solicitor, Statutory Compilation of the Indian Law Survey: A Compendium of Federal Laws and Treaties Relating to Indians, edited by Felix S. Cohen, Chief, Indian Law Survey, with a Foreword by Nathan R. Margold, Solicitor, Department of the Interior (1940, 46 vols.) vol. 1, pp. ii–iii.

Telescoped into a century and a half, one may find changes in social, political, and property relations which stretch over more than 30 centuries of European civilization. The toughness of law which keeps it from changing as rapidly as social conditions change in our national life is, of course, much more serious where the rate of social change is 20 times as rapid. Thus, if the laws governing Indian affairs are viewed as lawyers generally view existing law, without reference to the varying times in which particular provisions were enacted, the body of the law thus viewed is a mystifying collection of inconsistencies and anachronisms. To recognize the different dates at which various provisions were enacted is the first step towards order and sanity in this field.

Not only is it important to recognize the temporal "depth" of existing legislation, it is also important to appreciate the past existence of legislation which has, technically, ceased to exist. For there is a very real sense in which it can be said that no provision of law is ever completely wiped out. This is particularly true in the field of Indian law. At every session of the Supreme Court, there arise cases in which the validity of a present claim depends upon the question: "What was the law on such and such a point in some earlier period?" Laws long repealed have served to create legal rights which endure and which can be understood only by reference to the repealed legislation. Thus, in seeking a complete answer to various questions of Indian law, one finds that he cannot rest with a collection of laws "still in force," but must constantly recur to legislation that has been repealed, amended, or superseded.

Important, however, as is the historical factor in the understanding of federal Indian law, a mere chronology of laws and decisions would be of little value. Systematic analysis is needed, the more so because no treatise has ever been written on the subject of federal Indian law. Indeed the subject hardly exists, as yet, except as a mass of rules and laws relating to a single subject matter. Unfortunately relation to a single subject matter is not enough to establish systematic interconnections among the rules and statutes so related. This any lawyer can see for himself by referring to treatises on "the law of horses" or "the law of fire engines." Federal Indian law does exhibit a systematic interconnectedness of parts, but to discover and define the common standards, principles, concepts, and modes of analysis that run through this massive body of statutes and decisions is an analytical task of the first order.

History and analysis need to be supplemented by an understanding of the actual functioning of legal rules and concepts, the actual consequences of statutes and decisions. Language on statute books, in the field of Indian law as in other fields, frequently has only a tenuous relation to the law-in-action which courts and administrators and the process of government have derived from the words of Congress. The words of court opinions frequently have as tenuous a relation to the actual holdings. Magic "solving words" like "Indian title," "wardship," and "competency," are often used to establish connections, between a case under consideration and some precedent, that turn out on reflection to be purely verbal. Functional study of the federal Indian law in action is essential to a work that may serve the practical purposes of administrators.

While it has been fashionable in some circles to consider historical, analytical, and functional approaches to legal problems as mutually exclusive and antagonistic, a more tolerant and useful viewpoint is expressed in the keynote article of one of the most promising of the newer legal periodicals:

> Precisely because it is a very different question from these questions that have occupied so large a part of traditional jurisprudence, the question of the human significance of law must be posed as a supplement to established lines of inquiry in legal science rather than as a substitute for them. Indeed, there is an intimate and mutual interdependence among these lines of inquiry, historical, analytical, ethical, and functional.
>
> The law of the present is a tenuous abstraction hovering between legal history and legal prophecy. The functionalist cannot describe the present significance of any rule of law without reference to historical elements. It is equally true that the historical jurist cannot reconstruct the past unless he grasps the meaning of the present.
>
> The functionalist must have recourse to the logical instruments that analytical jurisprudence furnishes. Analytical jurisprudence, in turn, may develop more fruitful modes of analysis with a better understanding of the law-in-action.
>
> Functional description of the workings of a legal rule will be indispensable to one who seeks to pass ethical judgments on law. The functionalist, however, is likely to be lost in an infinite maze of trivialities unless he is able to concentrate on the important consequences of a legal rule and ignore the unimportant consequences, a distinction which can be made only in terms of an ethical theory.[38]

[38] F. S. Cohen, The Problems of a Functional Jurisprudence, 1 Modern Law Review (London) (1937) 5, 7.

When I assigned to the writer of these words the task of applying to the field of Indian law the standards of scholarship which he had written about and demonstrated in several other fields,[39] I did so with the conviction that the resulting work would be a contribution to legal scholarship and legal method as well as to the immediate field of Indian law. Assistant Solicitor Felix S. Cohen has brought to bear in the writing of this work not only an unusual equipment in fields of research but seven years of practical experience in handling on the various Indian reservations the most difficult controversies that have arisen during that period and in drafting a significant part of the legislation about which he writes.

(Signed) NATHAN R. MARGOLD,
Solicitor.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, July 3, 1940.

[39] The Ethical Basis of Legal Criticism (1931), 41 Yale Law Jour. 201; Ethical Systems and Legal Ideals (1933); (In collaboration with Mr. Justice Shientag) Summary Judgments in the Supreme Court of New York (1932), 32 Col. Law Rev. 825; The Subject Matter of Ethical Science (1932), 42 Int. Jour. of Ethics 397; Modern Ethics and the Law (1934), 4 Brooklyn Law Rev. 33; Transcendental Nonsense and the Functional Approach (1935), 35 Col. Law Rev. 809; Anthropology and the Problems of Indian Administration (1937), 18 Southwestern Social Science Quarterly No. 2; The Relativity of Philosophical Systems and the Method of Systematic Relativism (1939), 36 Journal of Philosophy 57; The Social and Economic Consequences of Exclusionary Immigration Laws (1939), 2 Nat. Lawyers Guild Quart. 171; Indian Rights and the Federal Courts (1940), 24 Minn. Law Rev. 145.

AUTHOR'S ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It is a pleasant duty to acknowledge the aid of the many individuals who have cooperated in the preparation of this work.

In the first place, it must be said that this work would not have been completed but for the strong belief of my two chiefs, Secretary Harold L. Ickes and Solicitor Nathan R. Margold, and of Commissioner of Indian Affairs John Collier in the importance of the work and their inspiring confidence in the ability of our tiny staff to carry it to completion.

Secondly, I must acknowledge the aid and encouragement that were given in the early stages of the work by Carl A. McFarland, then Assistant Attorney General, and his able assistant, Charles E. Collett, then Chief of the Trial Section in the Lands Division of the Department of Justice. Theirs was the vision that those who have worked in the preparation of this Handbook have tried to carry out, and their cooperation in this work, so long as they were able to give it, was unstinted.

Of those who aided in the actual preparation of this Handbook I owe a special debt to my chief collaborator, Theodore H. Haas, but for whose indefatigable energies a large part of this work must have remained unwritten. I am happy also to acknowledge the loyal aid given by two others who were with the work "for the duration," Mrs. Mima Pollitt and Miss Bettie Renner, both of the Department of Justice.

Because of unfortunate exigencies over which none of us had any control, the aid rendered by other attorneys collaborating in the project was limited in each case to a few weeks or months. I am nonetheless aware of the vital contributions that were made to the writing of this Handbook by Pedro Capo-Rodriguez, whose many years of experience representing the United States in Indian litigation have been of the greatest value in the preparation of this work, and by attorneys Fred G. Folsom, Jr., Abraham Glasser, Mrs. Pauline B. Heller, Thomas L. Karsten, Samuel Miller, Clifford Stearns, and Miss Doris Williamson. Valuable aid in the historical research involved in various portions of this work was given by Miss Mary K. Morris and Miss Lucy M. Kramer. Finally, I should like to acknowledge the part played in the preparation of this work by Mrs. Griselda G. Lobell and Mr. Joseph Watson, who checked and filed thousands of items of source material upon which the writing of this work was based.

Those of us who did the actual writing of this Handbook constitute only a small part in the stream of human energies that have influenced the form and content of this work. My associates in the Department of the Interior, particularly Ebert K. Burlew, First Assistant Secretary; Oscar L. Chapman, Assistant Secretary; William Zimmerman, Jr., Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs; Frederic L. Kirgis, First Assistant Solicitor; William H. Flanery, Charlotte T. Lloyd, Kenneth Meiklejohn, H. Byron Mock, Phineas Indritz, Marie Berger, and Frances Lavender, Assistant Solicitors; William A. Brophy, Special Attorney for the Pueblo Indians; John R. T. Reeves, General Counsel of the Indian Office; Samuel J. Flickinger, Assistant General Counsel; E. S. McMahon, Attorney; Fred H. Daiker, Assistant to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; Allan G. Harper, Field Representative; George A. Hossick, Chief of the Alaska Unit of the Division of Game Management, and Seton H. Thompson, Assistant Chief of the Division of Alaska Fisheries, both of the Fish and Wildlife Service; and David E. Thomas, Chief of the Alaska Section of the Office of Indian Affairs, have all contributed in different ways to this work.

Finally I should like to make grateful acknowledgment of the aid given along the many vital steps that lie between writing and publication, by Dr. W. C. Mendenhall, Director of the Geological Survey; William Barton Greenwood, Finance Officer for the Bureau of Indian Affairs; Fred W. Johnson, Commissioner of the General Land Office; Floyd E. Dotson, Chief Clerk of the Interior Department; Frank C. Updike, Chief of the Miscellaneous Service Division; Miss Helen Logan and John H. Ady, in charge of the printing work of the Department; and Miss Marie J. Turinsky and Mrs. Grace L. Dent, to whom the task of proof-reading was entrusted.

Even this lengthy roster, sufficient as it is to dispel any illusory author's pride, is far from representing a complete sum of the human efforts that move through the pages of this volume. To do justice to these efforts one would have to mention the writers of books, articles and briefs, which are quoted at length in these chapters, the judges whose opinions form the backbone of the volume, the administrative officials whose reports and legal memoranda have proved so valuable in fields not yet covered by the decided cases, the statesmen in the White House, in Congress, and among the Indian tribes whose thoughts have taken form in the language of statute, treaty, and tribal law, which makes up so large a portion of this study, the many critics outside of Government circles who have brought to light defects in Indian law and administration, the critics of preliminary drafts of these chapters who have aided in many successive revisions, and the score or more of clerical and stenographic assistants who have performed many tasks incidental to the preparation of this work. But any such attempt to place on a written page all the names of those on whom one has depended would be inevitably vain. For each of us in his appointed work, in Government service as elsewhere, is the instrument of forces that run through an entire generation. What has made this work possible, in the final analysis, is a set of beliefs that form the intellectual equipment of a generation—a belief that our treatment of the Indian in the past is not something of which a democracy can be proud, a belief that the protection of minority rights and the substitution of reason and agreement for force and dictation represent a contribution to civilization, a belief that confusion and ignorance in fields of law are allies of despotism, a belief that it is the duty of the Government to aid oppressed groups in the understanding and appreciation of their legal rights, a belief that understanding of the law, in Indian fields as elsewhere, requires more than textual exegesis, requires appreciation of history and understanding of economic, political, social, and moral problems. These beliefs represent, I think, the American mind in our generation as it impinges upon one tiny segment of the many problems which modern democracy faces. It is fundamentally to these beliefs and to this mind that an author's acknowledgments, gratitude, and loyalty are due.

(Signed) FELIX S. COHEN.

JULY 1, 1940.

ANALYSIS OF CHAPTERS

CHAPTER 23

SPECIAL LAWS RELATING TO OKLAHOMA

HANDBOOK OF FEDERAL INDIAN LAW

CHAPTER 1

THE FIELD OF INDIAN LAW: INDIANS AND THE INDIAN COUNTRY

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. THE FIELD OF INDIAN LAW

Indians are human beings, and like other human beings become involved in lawsuits. Nearly all of these lawsuits involve problems in the law of contracts, torts, and other recognized fields which have no particular relevance to Indian affairs. In many cases the only legal problems presented are of this character. Not every lawsuit, therefore, which involves Indians can be considered a part of our Indian law. Conversely, not every case that presents a problem of Indian law involves Indians as litigants. Most of the land in the United States, for example, was purchased from Indians, and therefore almost any title must depend for its ultimate validity upon issues of Indian law even though the last Indian owners and all their descendants be long forgotten.

Our subject, therefore, cannot be defined in terms of the parties litigant appearing in any case. It must be defined rather in terms of the legal questions which are involved in a case. Where such questions turn upon rights, privileges, powers, or immunities of an Indian or an Indian tribe or an administrative agency set up to deal with Indian affairs, or where governing rules of law are affected by the fact that a place is under Indian ownership or devoted to Indian use, the case that presents such questions belongs within the confines of this study.

Further, we shall use the term "federal Indian law" to cover not only decisions of courts, strictly so-called, but also decisions of administrative agencies and such materials, contained in statute, treaty, Executive order, or governmental regulation, custom and practice, as are accorded, by courts and administrators, "the force of law."

This subject matter is treated, in the course of this volume, from several distinct perspectives.

In the present chapter the scope of federal Indian law is considered, particularly in terms of the class of persons and places with which this branch of law deals.

The following three chapters treat, from an historical perspective, the three basic strands of development which make up the federal Indian law—administration (Chapter 2), treaty-making (Chapter 3), and legislation (Chapter 4).

The following three chapters deal with the problems of federal Indian law in terms of the question, "From what governmental source do legal relations flow?" These chapters deal, respectively, with the powers of federal (Chapter 5), state (Chapter 6), and tribal (Chapter 7) governments.

Chapters 8 to 17 treat the substantive law of the field from the standpoint of the generic question: What are the rights, powers, privileges, and immunities of the parties?

Of these chapters, the first four deal with the legal status of individual Indians, treating personal rights and liberties (Chapter 8), rights of participation in tribal property (Chapter 9), individual rights in personal property (Chapter 10), and individual rights in real property (Chapter 11).

The following two chapters deal with rights, vested both in tribes and in individuals, which are subsumed under the headings "Federal Services for Indians" (Chapter 12) and "Taxation" (Chapter 13).

The substantive rights, powers, privileges, and immunities of Indian tribes form the subject of Chapters 14 and 15, the former dealing generally with "The Status of Indian Tribes," the latter with "Tribal Property."

The final two chapters of this substantive law section of the Handbook deal with matters involving primarily the legal position of two classes of non-Indians who have a special relation to Indian affairs, to wit: traders (Chapter 16) and purveyors of liquor (Chapter 17).

Chapters 18 and 19 deal with problems of court jurisdiction, the former in the field of criminal law, the latter in the field of civil law.

The last four chapters of this Handbook treat of four groups of Indians occupying peculiar positions in the law. Chapter 20 deals with the Pueblos of New Mexico; Chapter 21 analyzes the peculiar problems of the Natives of Alaska; Chapter 22 comments briefly on the New York Indians; and Chapter 23 offers a sketch of "Special Laws Relating to Oklahoma."

With these comments on the substance and structure of the volume, we turn to a more explicit delimitation of the persons and places that are the primary subjects of our federal Indian law.

In this demarcation of domains we may properly begin by considering the various definitions that have been offered of the terms "Indian" and "Indian country."

SECTION 2. DEFINITIONS OF "INDIAN"

The term "Indian" may be used in an ethnological or in a legal sense. Ethnologically, the Indian race may be distinguished from the Caucasian, Negro, Mongolian, and other races. If a person is three-fourths Caucasian and one-fourth Indian, it is absurd, from the ethnological standpoint, to assign him to the Indian race. Yet legally such a person may be an Indian. From a legal standpoint, then, the biological question of race is generally pertinent, but not conclusive. Legal status depends not only upon biological, but also upon social factors, such as the relation of the individual concerned to a white or Indian community. This relationship, in turn, has two ends—an individual and a community. The individual may withdraw from a tribe or be expelled from a tribe; or he may be adopted by a tribe. He may or may not reside on an Indian reservation. He may or may not be subject to the control of the Federal Government with respect to various transactions. All these social or political factors may affect the classification of an individual as an "Indian" or a "non-Indian" for legal purposes, or for certain legal purposes. Indeed, in accordance with a statute reserving jurisdiction over offenses between tribal members to a tribal court, a white man adopted into an Indian tribe has been held to be an Indian,[1] and the decided cases do not foreclose the argument that a person of entirely Indian ancestry who has never had any relations with any Indian tribe or reservation may be considered a non-Indian for most legal purposes.

What must be remembered is that legislators, when they use the term "Indian" to establish special rules of law applicable to "Indians," are generally trying to deal with a group distinguished from "non-Indian" groups by public opinion,[2] and this public opinion varies so widely that on certain reservations it is common to refer to a person as an Indian although 15 of his 16 ancestors, 4 generations back, were white persons; while in other parts of the country, as in the Southwest, a person may be considered a Spanish-American rather than an Indian although his blood is predominantly Indian.

The lack of unanimity which exists among those who would attempt a definition of Indians is reflected in the difference in instructions to the enumerators of the 1930 and 1940 censuses. In the 1930 census enumerators were instructed to return as Indians not only those of full Indian blood, but also those of mixed white and Indian blood, "except where the percentage of Indian blood is very small" or where the individual was "regarded as a white person in the community where he lives." The instructions further specified that "a person of mixed Indian and Negro blood shall be returned as a Negro unless the Indian blood predominates and the status as an Indian is generally accepted in the community."[3]

In the 1940 census on the other hand, enumerators were directed that "a person of mixed white and Indian blood should be returned as Indian, if enrolled on an Indian agency or reservation roll; or if not so enrolled, if the proportion of Indian blood is one-fourth or more, or if the person is regarded as an Indian in the community where he lives." The provision concerning persons of mixed Indian and Negro blood was changed to provide for the return of such an individual as Negro, unless the Indian blood very definitely predominates and he is universally accepted in the community as an Indian.[4]

Recognizing the possible diversity of definitions of "Indianhood," we may nevertheless find some practical value in a definition of "Indian" as a person meeting two qualifications: (a) That some of his ancestors lived in America before its discovery by the white race, and (b) that the individual is considered an "Indian" by the community in which he lives.

The function of a definition of "Indian" is to establish a test whereby it may be determined whether a given individual is to be excluded from the scope of legislation dealing with Indians.

A typical statute dealing with Indians is the Trade and Intercourse Act of 1834,[5] which in section 25 provides:

> * * * That so much of the laws of the United States as provides for the punishment of crimes committed within any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the

---

[1] Nofire v. United States, 164 U. S. 657 (1897).

[2] A graphic example of the borrowing by courts of uncritical impressions of what constitutes an Indian is found in a series of cases on the question whether the natives of the Pueblos are "Indians." In 1869, the Supreme Court of the Territory decided that they could not be considered Indians because they were "honest, industrious, and law abiding citizens" and "a people living for three centuries in fenced abodes and cultivating the soil for the maintenance of themselves and families, and giving an example of virtue, honesty, and industry to their more civilized neighbors." United States v. Lucero, 1 N. M. 422, 438, 442 (1869). In 1876, the Supreme Court, likewise, held that these people could not be considered Indians because they were "a peaceable, industrious, intelligent, honest, and virtuous people * * * Indians only in feature, complexion, and a few of their habits * * *." United States v. Joseph, 94 U. S. 614 616 (1876). So long as these impressions continued to prevail, efforts of the Indian Bureau to assert full powers of "guardianship" over the Pueblos were unsuccessful. See Chapter 20, sec. 3, infra. In 1913 however, the Indian Bureau compiled enough reports of immorality among the Pueblos to convince the Supreme Court that its earlier observations on Pueblo character had been based upon erroneous information and that these people were really Indians needing Indian Bureau supervision. The Court, per Van Devanter, J., quoted at length from agents' reports of drunkenness, debauchery, dancing, and communal life in support of the conclusion that they were Indians, being a "simple, uninformed and inferior people." United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 28, 39–47 (1913). It may be doubted whether the conception of what makes a man an Indian, implicit in all these opinions, would be accepted today.

The test of "common understanding" is advanced by Cardozo, J., in Morrison v. California, 291 U. S. 82, 86 (1934), in support of the view that "not improbably" a person with Indian blood of less than one-fourth degree is to be regarded as an Indian.

[3] The Indian population of the United States and Alaska, 1930, U. S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C. For a discussion of statutes distinguishing between Indians and freedmen see Chapter 8, sec. 11.

[4] The results of the 1940 census are not available at the time of publication of this book so that it is not possible to compare the possible differences in results occasioned by the difference of instructions to enumerators. In the census of 1910, though the question of who should be returned as Indian was left to the discretion of the enumerator, he was obliged, once he had decided an individual was an Indian, to obtain information concerning tribe and blood. According to the census of 1930 there were 332,393 Indians in continental United States and 29,983 in Alaska, while in 1910 there were 265,683 Indians in continental United States and 25,331 in Alaska. In commenting on the results of these two censuses, Dr. George B. L. Arner, in The Indian Population of the United States and Alaska, 1930—U. S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, stated:

> In the case of the Indian population, rates of increase or decrease are of little significance, as the size of the Indian population depends entirely upon the attention paid to the enumeration of mixed bloods, and the interpretation of the term "Indian" in the instructions to enumerators. It is not without significance that at the two censuses in which specific questions were asked as to tribe and blood, the number of Indians should have been much larger than at censuses in which these questions were not asked. If the definition of the Indian population were limited to Indians maintaining tribal relations, the enumeration of the Bureau of Indian Affairs is probably more nearly accurate than that of the census. This enumeration in 1932, showed a total of 228,381. On the other hand, if all persons having even a trace of Indian blood were returned as Indians, the number would far exceed even the total returned at the census of 1930. (P. 2.)

As of January 1, 1939, the Bureau of Indian Affairs estimated that there were under its jurisdiction 351,878 Indians in continental United States and 29,983 in Alaska, or a total of 381,861. This number includes individuals of as little as 1/64 Indian blood entitled to certain rights or benefits as Indians, as well as white persons adopted into an Indian tribe. Statistical Supplement to the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1939.

[5] Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 25, 4 Stat. 729, R. S. § 2145, 25 U. S. C. 217.

> United States, shall be in force in the Indian country: Provided, The same shall not extend to crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian. (P. 733.)

Lacking other criteria than the words of the statute, the courts have, reasonably enough, taken the position that the term "Indian" is one descriptive of an individual who has Indian blood in his veins and who is regarded as an Indian by the society of Indians among whom he lives. Thus, in holding that a white man who is adopted into an Indian tribe does not thereby become an Indian within the meaning of the foregoing statute,[6] the Court, in United States v. Rogers,[7] said:

> * * * And we think it very clear, that a white man who at mature age is adopted in an Indian tribe does not thereby become an Indian, and was not intended to be embraced in the exception above mentioned. He may by such adoption become entitled to certain privileges in the tribe, and make himself amenable to their laws and usages. Yet he is not an Indian; and the exception is confined to those who by the usages and customs of the Indians are regarded as belonging to their race. It does not speak of members of a tribe, but of the race generally,—of the family of Indians; and it intended to leave them both, as regarded their own tribe, and other tribes also, to be governed by Indian usages and customs. (Pp. 572–573.)

Though a white man cannot by association become an Indian, within the application of the foregoing statute, an Indian may, nevertheless, under some circumstances, lose his identity as an Indian. It has been held that the General Allotment Act[8] operates to make Indians who are descendants of aboriginal tribes, but who have taken up residence apart from any tribe and adopted habits of civilization, non-Indians, within the meaning of an Alaska statute defining Indians for the purpose of liquor regulation as "aboriginal races inhabiting Alaska when annexed to the United States, and their descendants of the whole or half blood who have not become citizens of the United States."[9]

In upholding the constitutionality of the federal statute making murder of an Indian by another Indian on an Indian reservation a federal crime, the Supreme Court declared:

> the fair inference is that the offending Indian shall belong to that or some other tribe.[10]

On the other hand, an Indian does not lose his identity as such within the meaning of federal criminal jurisdictional acts, even though he has received an allotment of land, is not under the control or immediate supervision of an Indian agent, and has become a citizen of the United States and of the state in which he resides.[11]

Within the meaning of those various statutes which though applicable to Indians do not define them, the courts, in defining the status of Indians of mixed Indian and other blood,[12] have largely followed the test laid down in United States v. Rogers,[13] to the effect that an individual to be considered an Indian must not only have some degree of Indian blood but must in addition be recognized as an Indian. In determining such recognition the courts have heeded both recognition by the tribe or society of Indians and recognition by the Federal Government as expressed in treaty and statute.[14]

Thus in United States v. Higgins[15] it was said:

> In determining as to what class half-breeds belong, we may refer, then, to the treatment and recognition the executive and political departments of the government have accorded them. * * * (P. 350.)
>
> Considering the treaties and statutes in regard to half-breeds, I may say that they never have been treated as white people entitled to rights of American citizenship. Special provision has been made for them,—special reservations of land, special appropriations of money. No such provision has been made for any other class. It is well known to those who have lived upon the frontier in America that, as a rule, half-breeds or mixed-blood Indians have resided with the tribes to which their mothers belonged; that they have, as a rule, never found a welcome home with their white relatives, but with their Indian kindred. It is but just, then, that they should be classed as Indians, and have all of the rights of the Indian. In 7 Op. Attys. Gen. 746, it is said, "Half-breed Indians are to be treated as Indians, in all respects, so long as they retain their tribal relations." (P. 352.)

---

[6] Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729.

[7] 4 How. 567 (1846). Accord: United States v. Ragsdale, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16113 (C. C. Ark., 1847); Ex Parte Morgan, 20 Fed. 298 (D. C. W. D. Ark., 1883); Westmoreland v. United States, 155 U. S. 545 (1895); Alberty v. United States, 162 U. S. 499 (1896) (holding that a Negro does not by adoption into a tribe become an Indian).

The same rule would seem to apply to a white man married to an Indian woman and residing on a reservation. At least, it has been held that a white man, married to an Indian woman, residing on a reservation, and made a member of the tribe or nation, is not an Indian entitled to share in tribal funds or in the allotment of Indian lands. Red Bird v. United States, 203 U. S. 76 (1906).

[8] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 25 U. S. C. 331, et seq.

[9] Nagle v. United States, 191 Fed. 141 (C. C. A. 9, 1911).

[10] United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375, 383 (1886). And see Chapter 14, fn. 9.

[11] United States v. Flynn, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15124 (C. C. Minn. 1870); Hallowell v. United States, 221 U. S. 317 (1911); United States v. Kiya, 126 Fed. 879 (D. C. N. D. 1903); United States v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278 (1909); United States v. Sutton, 215 U. S. 291 (1909). Also see Chapter 8, sec. 2C.

[12] The term "mixed blood Indian" has been held to include not only those of half white or more than half white blood, but every Indian having an identifiable admixture of white blood, however small. United States v. Detroit First Nat. Bank, 234 U. S. 245 (1914); State v. Nicolls, 61 Wash. 142, 112 Pac. 269 (1910). For a discussion of distinctions based on degrees of Indian blood, see Chapter 8, sec. 8B(1)(a).

[13] Supra, fn. 7.

[14] Numerous treaties, as well as statutes, have recognized individuals of mixed blood as Indians. Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandot and other tribes, 7 Stat. 163; Treaty of October 6, 1818, with the Miami Indians, 7 Stat. 191; Treaty of August 4, 1824, with the Sac and Fox Indians, 7 Stat. 229; Treaty of November 15, 1824, with the Quapaw Indians, 7 Stat. 233; Treaty of June 2, 1825, with the Osage Indians, 7 Stat. 240; Treaty of June 3, 1825, with the Kansas Indians, 7 Stat. 245; Treaty of August 5, 1826, with the Chippewas, 7 Stat. 291; Treaty of October 16, 1826, with the Pottawatomie Indians, 7 Stat. 298, 299; Treaty of October 23, 1826, with the Miami Indians, 7 Stat. 302; Treaty of August 1, 1829, with the Winnebago Indians, 7 Stat. 324; Treaty of July 15, 1830, with the Sioux Indians, 7 Stat. 330; Treaty of August 30, 1831, with the Ottawa Indians, 7 Stat. 362; Treaty of September 15, 1832, with the Winnebago Indians, 7 Stat. 372; Treaty of September 21, 1832, with the Sac and Fox Indians, 7 Stat. 374; Treaty of October 27, 1832, with the Pottawatomie Indians, 7 Stat. 400; Treaty of March 28, 1836, with the Ottawa and other Indians, 7 Stat. 493; Treaty of July 29, 1837, with the Chippewa Indians, 7 Stat. 537; Treaty of September 29, 1837, with the Sioux Indians, 7 Stat. 539; Treaty of November 1, 1837, with the Winnebago Indians, 7 Stat. 545; Treaty of October 4, 1842, with the Chippewa Indians, 7 Stat. 592; Treaty of October 18, 1848, with the Menominee Indians, 9 Stat. 952; Treaty of March 15, 1854, with the Ottoe and Missouria Indians, 10 Stat. 1038; Treaty of February 22, 1855, with the Chippewa Indians, 10 Stat. 1169; Treaty of February 27, 1855, with the Winnebago Indians, 10 Stat. 1174; Treaty of September 24, 1857, with the Pawnee Indians, 11 Stat. 731; Treaty of March 12, 1858, with the Ponca Indians, 12 Stat. 999; Treaty of September 29, 1865, with the Osage Indians, 14 Stat. 689; Treaty of October 14, 1865, with the Cheyenne Indians, 14 Stat. 705; Treaty of March 21, 1866, with the Seminole Indians, 14 Stat. 756; Act of April 27, 1816, 6 Stat. 171; Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 740; Act of March 2, 1837, 6 Stat. 689; Act of June 5, 1872, 17 Stat. 226; 25 U. S. C. 479, 25 U. S. C. 163; Act of May 27, 1908, 35 Stat. 312, 25 U. S. C. 184, 28 U. S. C. 41(24).

In at least one treaty, children are described as quarter-blood Indians. Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandot and other tribes, 7 Stat. 163.

[15] 103 Fed. 348 (C. C. Mont. 1900).

Presumptively, a person of mixed blood residing upon a reservation, and enrolled in a tribe, is an Indian for purposes of legislation on federal criminal jurisdiction.[16] It has been held [17] that an individual of less than one-half Indian blood enrolled in a tribe and recognized as an Indian by the tribe is an Indian within the Act of March 4, 1909,[18] extending federal jurisdiction to rape committed by one Indian against another within the limits of an Indian reservation. Likewise, it has been held [19] that mixed bloods who are recognized by the tribe as members thereof may properly receive allotments of lands as Indians. In Sully v. United States,[20] where one-eighth bloods were involved, the court stated that the persons were "of sufficient Indian blood to substantially handicap them in the struggle for existence," and held that they were Indians and were entitled to be enrolled as such.

Citizenship has been denied a person of half white and half Indian blood on the ground that such an individual is not a "white person" within the meaning of that phrase as used in the statute.[21]

On the question of the status of offspring of white and Indian or Negro and Indian parents, there are conflicting lines of authority. One holds to the common law doctrine that the offspring of free parents assumes the status of the father; the other to the general tribal custom that the offspring assumes the status of the mother.[22]

In the first category are decisions to the effect that the offspring of the union between a white man [23] and an Indian woman or between a Negro [24] and an Indian woman assume the status of the father and are therefore not Indians within the meaning of statutes extending or denying federal jurisdiction over crimes committed by an Indian against another Indian. And there are holdings that where a child is born off the reservation of a white father and an Indian mother, he will not, by returning to the reservation, and receiving an allotment of land as an Indian, be classed as an Indian so as either to exempt his property from state taxation [25] or to bring himself within the criminal jurisdictional statutes relating to Indians.[26]

In the second category we find many cases which follow the usual tribal custom wherein it is held that the offspring of an Indian mother and a white or Negro father assumes the status of the mother.[27] Here again the ultimate question of the status of the individual will depend on his or his mother's recognition as an Indian by the tribe. In this connection the language of the court in Waldron v. United States [28] may be noted:

> * * * In this proceeding the court has been informed as to the usages and customs of the different tribes of the Sioux Nation, and has found as a fact that the common law does not obtain among said tribes, as to determining the race to which the children of a white man, married to an Indian woman, belong; but that, according to the usages and customs of said tribes, the children of a white man married to an Indian woman take the race or nationality of the mother.
>
> * * * * * * * * * * * * The United States have never, so far as legislation is concerned, recognized the technical rule of the common law in reference to the children born of a white father and an Indian mother. In 1897, Congress in the Indian appropriation act of that year (Act June 7, 1897, c. 3, 30 Stat. 90), declared:
>
> > "That all children, born of a marriage heretofore solemnized between a white man and an Indian woman by blood and not by adoption, where said Indian woman is at this time, or was at the time of her death, recognized by the tribe, shall have the same rights and privileges to the property of the tribe to which the mother belongs or belonged at the time of her death by blood, as any other member of the tribe, and no prior act of Congress shall be construed as to debar such child of such rights."
>
> * * * * * * * * * * In Davison v. Gibson, 56 Fed. 445, 5 C. C. A. 545, the Circuit Court of Appeals of this circuit said:
>
> > "It is common knowledge, of which the court should take judicial knowledge, that the domestic relations of the Indians of this country have never been regulated by the common law of England, and that that law is not adapted to the habits, customs, and manners of the Indians."
>
> The court has considered the cases cited by counsel for defendants wherein, upon certain facts, persons were held not to be Indians; but these cases either seek to invoke what they say was the common law, or are in criminal proceedings. These cases, so far as they seek to invoke the common law to the Indians, are not followed, for reasons herein stated, and, so far as they seek to construe criminal statutes, are inapplicable as there is a wide distinction to be made between the construction of a criminal statute and a contract between a tribe of Indians and the United States. (Pp. 419–420.)

That, however, even with reference to statutes on federal criminal jurisdiction, the child of an Indian mother may assume her status is borne out by the decision of the court in United States v. Sanders.[29]

Likewise, it has been held [30] that the child of a white father and an Indian mother, abandoned by the father and residing in tribal relationship with the mother, is an Indian within the meaning of a statute defining the offense of selling liquor to Indians.

In the foregoing discussion notice has been taken with but a single exception only of those statutes wherein no definition of the word "Indian" was attempted.

Although Congress has classified Indians for various particular purposes, it has never laid down a classification and either specified or implied that individuals not falling within the classification were not Indians. In various enactments classification has

---

[16] Famous Smith v. United States, 151 U. S. 50 (1894).

[17] United States v. Gardner, 189 Fed. 690 (D. C. E. D. Wis. 1911). Accord: State v. Campbell, 53 Minn. 354, 55 N. W. 553 (1893).

[18] 35 Stat. 1088, 1151.

[19] Sloan v. United States, 118 Fed. 283 (C. C. Neb. 1902).

[20] 195 Fed. 113 (C. C. S. D. 1912).

[21] In re Camille, 6 Fed. 256 (C. C. Ore. 1880) (Construing R. S. § 671.)

[22] On tribal power over determination of membership see Chapter 7, sec. 4.

[23] Ex Parte Reynolds, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11719 (D. C. W. D. Ark., 1879).

[24] United States v. Ward, 42 Fed. 320 (C. C. S. D. Cal. 1890).

[25] United States v. Higgins, 110 Fed. 609 (C. C. Mont. 1901). See Chapter 13, sec. 4.

[26] United States v. Hadley, 99 Fed. 437 (C. C. Wash. 1900). See Chapter 18.

[27] In United States v. Higgins, 103 Fed. 348, 352 (C. C. Mont. 1900), it was held that one born of a white father and an Indian mother, and who was a recognized member of the tribe of Indians in which his mother belonged, was not subject to taxation under the laws of the state in which he resided. In Vezina v. United States, 245 Fed. 411 (C. C. A. 8, 1917) the daughter of a half- to three-fourths blood Chippewa woman and a white man was held to be by blood a member of the Fond du Lac Band of Chippewas of Lake Superior, the court thereby overruling the action of the Department of Indian Affairs in refusing enrollment and allotment to the daughter. And in Alberty v. United States, 162 U. S. 499 (1896), the court held that an illegitimate child, born of an Indian man and a colored woman, takes the status of its mother and is therefore not an Indian.

[28] 143 Fed. 413 (C. C. S. D. 1905); see also Sioux Mixed Blood, 20 Op. A. G. 711 (1894).

[29] 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16220 (C. C. Ark. 1847). Cf. Ex Parte Pero, 99 F. 2d 28 (C. C. A. 7, 1938) (holding that the child of an Indian mother and a half-blood father who lives on the reservation and is recognized as an Indian, is an Indian within federal criminal jurisdictional statutes).

[30] Farrell v. United States, 110 Fed. 942 (C. C. A. 8, 1901). Accord: Halbert v. United States, 283 U. S. 753 (1931).

been based primarily upon the presence of some quantum of Indian blood. Thus, the Indian Appropriation Act of May 25, 1918,[31] provides:

> No appropriation, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood * * *

For the purpose of controlling the traffic in liquor with the Indians Congress has classified Indians under the "charge of any Indian superintendent or agent."[32] By a later act[33] the classification was changed to include "any Indian to whom allotment of land has been made while the title to the same shall be held in trust by the Government" or "any Indian a ward of the Government under charge of any Indian superintendent or agent" or "any Indian, including mixed bloods, over whom the Government, through its departments, exercises guardianship." This classification is perhaps as broad as any that may be found in congressional enactment, extending as it does to all mixed bloods providing only that they be considered as wards of the government.[34]

Various special acts relating to certain tribes have provided for the removal of restrictions on alienation from lands of the members of the tribe of less than one-half Indian blood.[35] Other acts have used the term "mixed blood."[36]

In the Act of March 4, 1931,[37] relating to the Eastern Band of Cherokees of North Carolina, Congress states:

> * * * That thereafter no person of less than one-sixteenth degree of said Eastern Cherokee Indian blood shall be recognized as entitled to any rights with the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians except by inheritance from a deceased member or members: * * * (P. 1518.)

Congress had previously recognized Indians of less than this degree of blood for in the Act of June 4, 1924,[38] it provided:

> That any member of said band whose degree of Indian blood is less than one-sixteenth may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Interior, be paid a cash equivalent in lieu of an allotment of land. (P. 379.)

[31] 40 Stat. 564, 25 U. S. C. 297.
[32] Act of July 23, 1892, 27 Stat. 260, 261.
[33] Act of January 30, 1897, 29 Stat. 506. See Chapter 17.
[34] For a discussion of wardship see Chapter 8, sec. 9.
[35] Act of May 27, 1908, 35 Stat. 312 (Five Civilized Tribes); Act of March 3, 1921, 41 Stat. 1249 (Osage).
[36] Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 353; Act of March 1, 1907, 34 Stat. 1034.
[37] 46 Stat. 1518.
[38] 43 Stat. 366.

A recent statutory definition of an Indian is that contained in the Indian Reorganization Act,[39] which in section 19 provides:

> The term "Indian" as used in this Act shall include all persons of Indian descent who are members of any recognized Indian tribe now under Federal jurisdiction, and all persons who are descendants of such members who were, on June 1, 1934, residing within the present boundaries of any Indian reservation, and shall further include all other persons of one-half or more Indian blood. For the purposes of this Act, Eskimos and other aboriginal peoples of Alaska shall be considered Indians.[40] (P. 988.)

In this act as in the foregoing acts, the definition of "Indian" is limited in its connotation to the purposes of the legislation.

Apart from statute, the administrative agencies of the Federal Government dealing with Indian affairs commonly consider a person who is of Indian blood and a member of a tribe, regardless of degree of blood, an Indian.[41]

Thus the Indian Law and Order Regulations approved by the Secretary of the Interior on November 27, 1935,[42] contain the provision:

> For the purpose of the enforcement of the regulations in this part, an Indian shall be deemed to be any person of Indian descent who is a member of any recognized Indian tribe now under Federal jurisdiction * * *.

This definition exemplifies the idea that in dealing with Indians the Federal Government is dealing primarily not with a particular race as such but with members of certain social-political groups towards which the Federal Government has assumed special responsibilities.

[39] Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461, et seq.
[40] For further definitions of Alaskan natives as Indians see Chapter 21, sec. 1.
[41] Here, too, however, one finds administrative regulations which classify Indians according to blood quantum for particular purposes. Thus by Executive order of January 31, 1939, Indians of one-fourth or more Indian blood were exempted insofar as positions in the Bureau of Indian Affairs were concerned, from Civil Service examination. See Chapter 8, sec. 4B(2). On the other hand regulations concerning the admission of Indians into Indian hospitals and sanitoria provide that:

> 85.2. Persons who are in need of hospitalization and who are enrolled Indians, recognized members of a tribe, and who are unable to provide such hospitalization from their own funds, may be admitted to such institutions.
> * * * * *
> 85.4. Preference should be given to those of a higher degree of Indian blood. * * *

(25 C. F. R. 85.2 and 85.4)
[42] 25 C. F. R. 161.2.

SECTION 3. INDIAN COUNTRY

Although the term "Indian country" has been used in many senses, it may perhaps be most usefully defined as country within which Indian laws and customs and federal laws relating to Indians are generally applicable. The phrase "generally applicable" is used because for certain purposes tribal law and custom and federal law relating to Indians have a validity regardless of locality. Thus, for example, Congress has made it a crime to sell liquor to Indians anywhere in the United States,[43] and the status which an Indian acquires by tribal custom marriage will generally be recognized in all parts of the United States.[44]

The greater part, however, of the body of federal Indian law and tribal law applies only to certain areas which have a peculiar relation to the Indians and which in their totality comprise the Indian country.

The Indian country at any particular time must be viewed with reference to the existing body of federal and tribal law. Until 1817 it is country within which the criminal laws of the United States are not generally applicable, so that crimes in Indian country by whites against whites, or by Indians, are not cognizable in state or federal courts,[45] any more than crimes committed on the soil of Canada or Mexico. Treaties defined the boundaries between the United States, or the separate states.

[43] Act of July 23, 1892, 27 Stat. 260, as amended by Act of June 15, 1938, 52 Stat. 696, 25 U. S. C. 241. And see Chapter 17, sec. 3.
[44] 54 I. D. 39 (1932); and see R. A. Brown, The Indian Problem and the Law (1930) 39 Yale L. J. 307, 315. See also Chapter 7, sec. 5.
[45] Under the Act of July 22, 1790, 1 Stat. 137, federal jurisdiction was extended over any crime committed by a citizen or inhabitant of the United States against the person or property of any friendly Indian in any town, settlement, or territory belonging to any nation or tribe of Indians. Since the act specified that it was to be in force only for 2 years, it was superseded by the Act of March 1, 1793, 1 Stat. 329, which extended federal jurisdiction as before. On criminal jurisdiction see Chapter 18.

and the territories of the various Indian tribes or nations.[46] Within these territories the Indian tribes or nations had not only full jurisdiction over their own citizens, but the same jurisdiction over citizens of the United States that any other power might lawfully exercise over emigrants from the United States.[47] Treaties between the United States and various tribes commonly stipulated that citizens of the United States within the territory of the Indian nations were to be subject to the laws of those nations.[48]

It is against this legal background that the first legislative definitions must be understood. As early as July 22, 1790,[49] Congress used the expression "Indian country" in the first trade and intercourse act, apparently with the meaning of country belonging to the Indians, occupied by them, and to which the Government recognized them as having some kind of right and title. In the Act of March 1, 1793,[50] Indian country and Indian territory were used synonymously.

The Act of May 19, 1796,[51] contained the first statutory delimitation of Indian country, fixing, according to the then existing treaties, the boundary line between Indian country and the United States. In this act, as in those which followed it, the term "Indian country" is used as descriptive of the country within the boundary lines of the Indian tribes. In 1799,[52] and again in 1802,[53] the boundary of Indian country was redefined by Congress to conform with new treaties. In each instance it was provided that a citizen or inhabitant of the United States committing a crime against a friendly Indian, or Indians within Indian country should be subject to the jurisdiction of the federal courts. In both of these acts the words "Indian country" and "Indian territory" are used synonymously.[54]

The inconvenience of a territory in which white desperados could escape the force of state and federal law made itself felt in the Act of March 3, 1817,[55] which extended federal law to cover crimes committed by an Indian or white person within any town, district, or territory belonging to any nation or tribe of Indians, subject, however, to the limitation that the act should not be construed to extend to an offense by one Indian against another Indian within any Indian boundary.

Indian country in all these statutes is territory, wherever situated, within which tribal law is generally applicable, federal law is applicable only in special cases designated by statute, and state law is not applicable at all. This conception of the Indian country reflects a situation which finds its counterpart in international law in the case of newly acquired territories, where the laws of those territories continue in force until repealed or modified by the new sovereign. We find that Congress, when called upon to define Indian country in the Act of June 30, 1834,[56] said:

> * * * That all that part of the United States west of the Mississippi, and not within the states of Missouri and Louisiana, or the territory of Arkansas, and, also, that part of the United States east of the Mississippi river, and not within any state to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, for the purposes of this act, be taken and deemed to be the Indian country.

Whether Indian reservations within the exterior boundaries of a state but exempted by treaty or statute from state jurisdiction were included within the foregoing distinction is a question not free from doubt.[57] Such doubts, however, were resolved by a series of judicial decisions and by the failure to include section 1 of the Act of 1834[58] in the Revised Statutes, thereby repealing it.[59]

No subsequent statutory definition of Indian country appears, though for purposes of defining federal criminal jurisdiction reference is made in numerous acts[60] to "Indian country."

---

[46] Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandot, Delaware, Chippawa, and Ottawa Nations, 7 Stat. 16; Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, 7 Stat. 18; Treaty of January 3, 1786, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 21; Treaty of January 10, 1786, with the Chickasaw Nation, 7 Stat. 24; Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wyandot, Delaware, Ottawa, Chippawa, Pattawattima, and Sac Nations, 7 Stat. 28; Treaty of August 7, 1790, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 35; Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 39; Treaty of August 3, 1795, with the Wyandots, Delawares, Shawanoes, Ottawas, Chipewas, Putawatimes, Miamis, Eel River, Weea's, Kickapoos, Piankashaws, and Kaskaskias, 7 Stat. 49; Treaty of October 2, 1798, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 62; Treaty of December 17, 1801, with the Chactaw Nation, 7 Stat. 66; Treaty of October 17, 1802, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 73; Treaty of November 3, 1804, with the Sac and Fox, 7 Stat. 84; Treaty of July 4, 1805, with the Wyandot, Ottawa, Chippawa, Munsee and Delaware, Shawanee, and Pottawatima Nations, 7 Stat. 87. See also Chapter 3, secs. 3A(2), 3A(3).

[47] It is interesting to note in this connection that some of the early Trade and Intercourse Acts contained a provision requiring a citizen or inhabitant of the United States to acquire a passport before going into the country secured by treaty to the Indians. Act of May 19, 1796, 1 Stat. 469; Act of March 3, 1799, 1 Stat. 743; Act of March 30, 1802, 2 Stat. 139. The provision was modified in the Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729 so as not to apply to citizens of the United States. See Chapter 3, sec. 3A(3); Chapter 4, sec. 6.

[48] Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandot, Delaware, Chippawa, and Ottawa Nations, 7 Stat. 16; Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, 7 Stat. 18; Treaty of January 3, 1786, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 21; Treaty of January 10, 1786, with the Chickasaw Nation, 7 Stat. 24; Treaty of January 31, 1786, with the Shawanoe Nation, 7 Stat. 26; Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wyandot, Delaware, Ottawa, Chippawa, Pattawattima, and Sac Nations, 7 Stat. 28; Treaty of August 7, 1790, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 35; Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 39; Treaty of August 3, 1795, with the Wyandots, Delawares, Shawanoes, Ottawas, Chipewas, Putawatimes, Miamis, Eel River, Weea's, Kickapoos, Piankashaws, and Kaskaskias, 7 Stat. 49.

[49] 1 Stat. 137.

[50] 1 Stat. 329, similarly in the Act of March 3, 1799, 1 Stat. 743, and in Act of March 30, 1802, 2 Stat. 139.

[51] 1 Stat. 469.

[52] Act of March 3, 1799, 1 Stat. 743.

[53] Act of March 30, 1802, 2 Stat. 139.

[54] For a later meaning of the term "Indian territory" see Chapter 23.

[55] 3 Stat. 383.

[56] 4 Stat. 729. In the report of the Committee of Indian Affairs to the House of Representatives concerning, among others, this act we find the following interesting commentary suggesting a basis for the definition of Indian country as therein contained.

> The Indian country * * * will include all the territory of the United States west of the Mississippi, not within Louisiana, Missouri, and Arkansas, and those portions east of that river, and not within the limits of any State, to which the Indian title is not extinguished. The Southern Indians are not embraced within it. Most of them have agreed to emigrate. To all their lands, with the exception of those of a part of a single tribe, the Indian title has been extinguished: and the States in which the Indians of that excepted tribe remain, have extended their laws over them.
>
> * * * * * *
>
> This act is intended to apply to the whole Indian country, as defined in the first section. On the west side of the Mississippi its limits can only be changed by a legislative act; on the east side of that river it will continue to embrace only those sections of country not within any State to which the Indian title shall not be extinguished. The effect of the extinguishment of the Indian title to any portion of it, will be the exclusion of such portion from the Indian country. The limits of the Indian country will thus be rendered at all times obvious and certain. By the intercourse act of 1802, the boundary of the Indian country was a line of metes and bounds, variable from time to time by treaties. And, from the multiplicity of those treaties, it is now somewhat difficult to ascertain what, at any given period, was the boundary or extent of the Indian country. (P. 10.)

H. Rept. No. 474, 23d Cong., 1st sess., vol. 4, May 20, 1834.

[57] It was early held that lands in territorial status to which Indian title had not been extinguished and which were exempted by treaty or statute from state jurisdiction remain Indian country within the meaning of the 1834 Act, notwithstanding the admission of the state into the Union. United States v. Bridleman, 7 Fed. 894 (D. C. Ore. 1881).

[58] 4 Stat. 729.

[59] R. S. § 5596; Donnelly v. United States, 228 U. S. 243, 268 (1913).

[60] Act of March 27, 1854, 10 Stat. 269, 270; Act of February 18, 1875, 18 Stat. 316, 318, R. S. § 2146, 25 U. S. C. 218. For statutes making it a criminal offense to introduce liquor into "Indian country" see Chapter 17, sec. 3.

Notwithstanding the repeal of section 1 of the Act of 1834,[61] the Supreme Court, when called upon to determine whether certain land was Indian country, applied in a number of instances the definition contained therein.[62]

The first case[63] to reach the Supreme Court after the repeal of section 1 of the 1834 act involved the legality of the seizure of liquor by a military officer under the authority contained in the Act of 1834, as amended by the Act of 1864. The legality of the seizure depended on whether or not it was made in Indian country, the locus being at a point within the territory of Dakota. In an unusual opinion the Court, per Mr. Justice Miller, made the following observations:

> Notwithstanding the immense changes which have since taken place in the vast region covered by the act of 1834, by the extinguishment of Indian titles, the creation of States and the formation of territorial governments, Congress has not thought it necessary to make any new definition of Indian country. Yet during all this time a large body of laws has been in existence, whose operation was confined to the Indian country, whatever that may be. And men have been punished by death, by fine, and by imprisonment, of which the courts who so punished them had no jurisdiction, if the offences were not committed in the Indian country as established by law. These facts afford the strongest presumption that the Congress of the United States, and the judges who administered those laws, must have found in the definition of Indian country, in the act of 1834, such an adaptability to the altered circumstances of what was then Indian country as to enable them to ascertain what it was at any time since then. (P. 207.)

After analyzing the definition as contained in section 1 of the 1834 Act the Court further said:

> * * * if the section be read as describing lands west of the Mississippi, outside of the States of Louisiana and Missouri, and of the Territory of Arkansas, and lands east of the Mississippi not included in any State, but lands alone to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, we have a description of the Indian country which was good then, and which is good now, and which is capable of easy application at any time.
>
> * * * * *
>
> It follows from this that all the country described by the act of 1834 as Indian country remains Indian country so long as the Indians retain their original title to the soil, and ceases to be Indian country whenever they lose that title, in the absence of any different provision by treaty or by act of Congress. (Pp. 208–209.)

In following the Bates decision, the courts have held that reservation lands to which Indian title has not been extinguished come within the definition of Indian country as contained in the 1834 Act, whether situated within a territory[64] or state.[65]

Ordinarily, Indian title is extinguished by cession under treaty or act of Congress, and the land ceases to be Indian country when the cession becomes effective.[66] Where the land, however, is held by the United States in trust, to be sold for the benefit of the Indian tribe, the courts have held that it remains "Indian land" until actually sold.[67]

The first important extension of the rule laid down in the Bates case occurred in 1913 in the case of Donnelly v. United States,[68] which involved the question of whether the jurisdiction of the United States extended to the crime of murder committed on an executive-order Indian reservation. In holding that federal criminal law was applicable, the Court said:

> It is contended for plaintiff in error that the term "Indian country" is confined to lands to which the Indians retain their original right of possession, and is not applicable to those set apart as an Indian reservation out of the public domain, and not previously occupied by the Indians.
>
> * * * In the Indian Intercourse Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729, c. 161, the first section defined the "Indian country" for the purposes of that act. But this section was not reenacted in the Revised Statutes, and it was therefore repealed by § 5596, Rev. Stat. Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556, 561; United States v. Le Bris, 121 U. S. 278, 280; Clairmont v. United States, 225 U. S. 551, 557. Under these decisions the definition as contained in the act of 1834 may still "be referred to in connection with the provisions of its original context that remain in force, and may be considered in connection with the changes which have taken place in our situation, with a view of determining from time to time what must be regarded as Indian country where it is spoken of in the statutes." With reference to country that was formerly subject to the Indian occupancy, the cases cited furnish a criterion for determining what is "Indian country." But "the changes which have taken place in our situation" are so numerous and so material, that the term cannot now be confined to land formerly held by the Indians, and to which their title remains unextinguished. And, in our judgment, nothing can more appropriately be deemed "Indian country," within the meaning of those provisions of the Revised Statutes that relate to the regulation of the Indians and the government of the Indian country, than a tract of land that, being a part of the public domain, is lawfully set apart as an Indian reservation. (P. 268–269.)

In the same year, the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Sandoval[69] held that the lands of the Pueblo Indians come within the definition of Indian country for the purpose of federal liquor regulation. The Pueblo lands were not, strictly speaking, a reservation, but were lands held by communal ownership in fee simple. It would seem that the term Indian country as applied to the Pueblos means any lands occupied by "distinctly Indian communities" recognized and treated by the Government as "dependent communities" entitled to its protection.[70]

The foregoing decisions are concerned with lands in tribal tenure. While the Supreme Court in the Donnelly case eliminated the necessity for original tribal title as a condition to the application of federal criminal law, it failed to consider the applicability of the category of Indian country to the individual Indian holdings.

Under the practice of allotting lands in severalty to individual Indians, title to the allotted land was held in trust by the Government for the benefit of the allottee, or vested in the

---

[61] 4 Stat. 729, 733.

[62] Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 204 (1877); Ex Parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556 (1883); United States v. LeBris, 121 U. S. 278 (1887); Clairmont v. United States, 225 U. S. 551 (1912).

[63] Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 204 (1887).

[64] Ex Parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556 (1883).

[65] United States v. LeBris, 121 U. S. 278 (1887). Cf. United States v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whiskey, 108 U. S. 491 (1883) (holding that, by statute, ceded Indian lands may remain Indian country for the purpose of enforcing federal liquor laws); Clairmont v. United States, 225 U. S. 551 (1912); Dick v. United States, 208 U. S. 340 (1908).

[66] United States v. La Plant, 200 Fed. 92 (D. C. S. D. 1911) (holding that land held under "mere occupancy" ceased to be Indian reservation land when ceded, even before sale to private parties); United States v. Myers, 206 Fed. 387 (C. C. A. 8, 1913).

[67] Ash Sheep Co. v. United States, 252 U. S. 159 (1920), aff'g 250 Fed. 591 (C. C. A. 9, 1918), and 254 Fed. 59 (C. C. A. 9, 1918). And see Chapter 15, sec. 21.

[68] 228 U. S. 243 (1913). Accord: Pronovost v. United States, 232 U. S. 487 (1914). ("An Indian reservation is Indian country.")

[69] 231 U. S. 28 (1913).

[70] For a fuller discussion of this case see Chapter 20, sec. 4. In holding that jurisdiction to punish the offense of larcency committed within a Pueblo resided in the Federal Government, the Court defined Indian country as "any unceded lands owned or occupied by an Indian nation or tribe of Indians." United States v. Chavez, 290 U. S. 357 (1933).

allottee subject to a restraint against alienation. Obviously, in either case tribal title is not involved.

By virtue of a series of murders committed on allotted lands, the Supreme Court was called upon to decide whether such lands were Indian country for the purpose of federal criminal jurisdiction. In the case of United States v. Pelican,[71] a case involving the murder of an Indian upon a trust allotment, the court held that trust allotments retain, during the trust period, a distinctive Indian character, being devoted to "Indian occupancy under the limitations imposed by Federal legislation," and that they were embraced within the term "Indian country."

Thereafter in United States v. Ramsey[72] Indian country was held to include a restricted allotment as well, the court saying:

> The sole question for our determination, therefore, is whether the place of the crime is Indian country within the meaning of § 2145. The place is a tract of land constituting an Indian allotment, carved out of the Osage Indian reservation and conveyed in fee to the allottee named in the indictment, subject to a restriction against alienation for a period of 25 years. That period has not elapsed, nor has the allottee ever received a certificate of competency authorizing her to sell. (P. 470.)
>
> * * * * * *
>
> * * * it would be quite unreasonable to attribute to Congress an intention to extend the protection of the criminal law to an Indian upon a trust allotment and withhold it from one upon a restricted allotment; and we find nothing in the nature of the subject matter or in the words of the statute which would justify us in applying the term Indian country to one and not to the other. (Pp. 471–472.)

Thus, the application of Federal criminal law is extended to cover lands to which the tribal title has been extinguished and title has been vested in an individual.

The last important step in the application of Federal criminal law to lands in tribal tenure has been to extend it to lands, wherever situated, which have been purchased by the Federal Government and set apart for Indian occupancy.

In this connection it is well to note the illuminating opinion of Mr. Justice Black in the case of United States v. McGowan,[73] holding that Indian country comprises lands wherever situated, which have been validly set apart for the use and occupancy of Indians. The Court declared:

> The Reno Indian Colony is composed of several hundred Indians residing on a tract of 28.38 acres of land owned by the United States and purchased out of funds appropriated by Congress in 1917 and in 1926. The purpose of Congress in creating this colony was to provide lands for needy Indians scattered over the State of Nevada, and to equip and supervise these Indians in establishing a permanent settlement.
>
> The words "Indian country" have appeared in the statutes relating to Indians for more than a century. We must consider "the changes which have taken place in our situation, with a view of determining from time to time what must be regarded as Indian country where it is spoken of in the statutes." Also, due regard must be given to the fact that from an early period of our history, the Government has prescribed severe penalties to enforce laws regulating the sale of liquor on lands occupied by Indians under government supervision. Indians of the Reno Colony have been established in homes under the supervision and guardianship of the United States. The policy of Congress, uniformly enforced through the decisions of this Court, has been to regulate the liquor traffic with Indians occupying such a settlement. This protection is extended by the United States "over all dependent Indian communities within its borders, whether within its original territory or territory subsequently acquired, and whether within or without the limits of a State."
>
> The fundamental consideration of both Congress and the Department of the Interior in establishing this colony has been the protection of a dependent people. Indians in this colony have been afforded the same protection by the government as that given Indians in other settlements known as "reservations." Congress alone has the right to determine the manner in which this country's guardianship over the Indians shall be carried out, and it is immaterial whether Congress designates a settlement as a "reservation" or "colony."
>
> * * * * *
>
> The Reno Colony has been validly set apart for the use of the Indians. It is under the superintendence of the Government. The Government retains title to the lands which it permits the Indians to occupy. * * *
>
> When we view the facts of this case in the light of the relationship which has long existed between the Government and the Indians—and which continues to date—it is not reasonably possible to draw any distinction between this Indian "colony" and "Indian country." We conclude that § 247 of Title 25, supra, does apply to the Reno Colony. (Pp. 537–539.)[74]

The foregoing decisions leave open the question of whether an allotment within the exterior boundaries of an Indian reservation which is held by the allottee in fee simple may be subject to the application of federal criminal law and tribal law, or whether such land is subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the state.[75]

Whether land acquired by the United States and used for Indian purposes which do not involve Indian occupancy right, e. g., school, hospital, or agency sites not within a reservation, are "Indian country" is a queston which has not been definitely settled by any court decision. Administrative practices and rulings, however, indicate that such lands are not considered "Indian country."[76]

---

[71] 232 U. S. 442 (1914). Cf. United States v. Sutton, 215 U. S. 291 (1909); Hallowell v. United States, 221 U. S. 317 (1911); Ex Parte Van Moore, 221 Fed. 954 (D. C. S. D. 1915).

[72] 271 U. S. 467 (1926).

[73] 302 U. S. 535 (1938).

[74] It has been indicated that in the light of the McGowan case lands purchased under the Indian Reorganization Act (Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984) not yet proclaimed a reservation or added to an existing reservation, are purchased for the purpose of being Indian reservations and that therefore the Federal Government has law and order jurisdiction over the Indians on such purchased lands pending the formal declaration of their reservation status. Memo. Sol. I. D., February 17, 1939.

[75] See Chapter 18.

[76] The Solicitor for the Interior Department, after analyzing the McGowan case, commented:

> A legal situation similar to that presented by the Reno Indian colony has occurred in the case of some of the abandoned military reservations which were turned over to this Department for Indian school purposes under the act of July 31, 1882 (22 Stat. 181, 25 U. S. C. A. sec. 276), and which have been accepted as Indian reservations. In these instances title to the land was held by the United States without any formal trust designation, but the land was occupied by Indians whose occupancy rights came to be recognized by Congress and by the Department. Examples are the Fort Bidwell and Fort Mohave reservations, in dealing with which Congress expressly referred to the rights of the Indians in the reservations. (See act of January 27, 1913, 37 Stat. 652, and act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, 858.) Another example is the Fort Totten Reservation which was recognized in the act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat. 319) as part of the Devils Lake Indian Reservation and belonging to the Indians residing on the reservation. In the case of LaDuke v. Melin, 45 N. D. 349, 177 N. W. 673, the court reviewed the history of this military reservation devoted to Indian school purposes and acknowledged the fact that it might be considered an "Indian reservation."
>
> These examples demonstrate that lands held by the United States without a declaration of trust and used for school or other institutional purposes may be considered Indian reservations where Indian communities have occupancy rights in the land. They point the distinction between this type of land and lands held exclusively by the United States for institutional purposes where there are no Indian residents nor Indian occupancy rights. The latter class of lands is best illustrated by the nonreservation schools and hospitals which the Department has itself not classified as Indian reservations. (Cf. Handbook of October 15, 1929. "General Data concerning Indian Reservations.")
>
> Another way of demonstrating this conclusion is by reference to the general proposition that Indian country is country where not only Federal laws but also Indian laws and customs apply. It is apparent that Indian laws apply only in areas occupied by Indian groups and communities and not to lands held for Federal institutions in Pierre, Phoenix, or any other non-Indian community.
>
> In brief, my conclusion is that lands held by the United States and purchased for the purpose of establishing Federal institutions for Indian welfare are not Indian country nor Indian reservations unless an Indian tribe or group has occupancy rights in the land. Such lands may be "reservations of the United States" as, for example, that term is used in right-of-way statutes (Memo. Solicitor, I. D., July 1, 1938), but they would not be "Indian reservations."
>
> Memo. Sol. I. D., July 9, 1940.

CHAPTER 2

THE OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE INDIAN SERVICE

A. ESTABLISHMENT

The relations of the United States with the Indians generally have been through designated administrative agencies, and it is therefore important to examine the structure, guiding policy, and manner of functioning of these agencies at various periods.

As a general rule, the Crown and the colonies regulated intercourse between their own subjects and the Indians, but made no attempt to govern the internal relations of Indian tribes.[1]

After the French and Indian War, and prior to the adoption of the Constitution, two superintendencies of Indian affairs were created—one for the northern and one for the southern colonies. The superintendents were in effect ambassadors, a role which to a limited extent superintendents fill today. Their duties consisted of observing events, negotiating treaties, and generally keeping peace between Indians and the border settlers.[2]

On July 12, 1775,[3] the Continental Congress, as one of its first acts, and exercising definite governmental power for all the colonies, declared its jurisdiction over Indian tribes by creating three departments of Indian affairs—northern, southern, and middle; at the head of each were placed commissioners, five for the southern, three (later four)[4] for the northern, and three for the middle department. Their duties were "* * * to treat with the Indians * * * in order to preserve peace and friendship with the said Indians and to prevent their taking any part in the present commotions."[5] The duties of the commissioners did not differ from those of the colonial superintendents but their status as official representatives of a new government, not the Crown, did.

The importance of these offices is indicated by the fact that the commissioners of the middle department unanimously elected on July 12, 1775, were Benjamin Franklin, Patrick Henry, and James Wilson.[6]

By a general ordinance for the regulation of Indian affairs of August 7, 1786,[7] the Congress of the Confederation followed the colonial precedent and established two departments—the northern, north of the Ohio River, and west of the Hudson River. and the southern, south of the Ohio River. At the head of each was placed a superintendent under the control of and reporting to the Secretary of War. Each had power to grant licenses to trade and live with the Indians.

This ordinance remained partially in force after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States.[8]

On August 7, 1789,[9] early in the first Congress, the War Department was established, upon whose Secretary devolved all matters relative to Indian affairs as were "* * * entrusted to him by the President of the United States, agreeably to the Constitution * * *."

The first Congress and the first President recognized the need for remedying a problem of conflict of Indian and white interests, serious even then.[10]

On August 20, 1789,[11] 5 months after the first Congress convened, it appropriated $20,000 for "negotiating and treating with the Indian tribes," the first of a long series of appropriations for that purpose.

On September 11, 1789,[12] in an early act establishing the salaries of executive officers of the Government, Congress began the policy of making the governor of a territory superintendent of Indian affairs in that jurisdiction by appropriating $2,000 to "the Governor of the western territory, for his salary as such, and for [1] Schmeckebier, The Office of Indian Affairs, Its History, Activities, and Organization (1927), p. 12.

[2] Ibid.
[3] Jour. Cont. Cong. (Library of Congress ed.), vol. II, p. 175.
[4] Ibid., p. 183.
[5] Ibid., p. 175.
[6] Ibid., p. 183.
[7] Jour. Cont. Cong. (Library of Congress ed.), vol. XXXI, p. 491.
[8] The Act of September 11, 1789, 1 Stat. 67, 68, refers to "* * * superintendent of Indian affairs in the northern department, * * ." The Intercourse Act of July 22, 1790, 1 Stat. 137, mentions " * * the superintendent of the department * * *."
[9] Act of August 7, 1789, 1 Stat. 49, 50.
[10] See Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 18–19 for Washington's statement to the Senate on broken treaties: "* * * the treaty with the Cherokees has been entirely violated by the disorderly white people on the frontiers of North Carolina." (Annals of Congress, 1st Cong., 1st sess., p. 66).
[11] Act of August 20, 1789, 1 Stat. 54.
[12] Act of September 11, 1789, 1 Stat. 67, 68.

discharging the duties of superintendent of Indian affairs in the northern department * * *."[13]

In 1790, Congress, exercising its power under the commerce clause of the Constitution, passed the first act "* * * to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes"[14] which provided for licensing of Indian traders, and conferred extensive regulatory powers on the President. This temporary act was renewed with modifications until 1802 when the first permanent Intercourse Act was passed.[15]

The first specific appropriation for Indian affairs appears in the Act of December 23, 1791.[16] The sum of $39,424.71 was appropriated "For defraying all expenses incident to the Indian department,[17] authorized by law, * * *."

The Treasury Department was given responsibility for the purchase of Indian goods as well as other War Department supplies by the Act of May 8, 1792.[18]

Trading houses under Government ownership were maintained from 1796[19] to 1822.[20] Their function was to supply the Indians with necessary goods at a fair price, and offer a fair price for their furs in exchange.[21] The agents were appointed by the President and responsible to him. Their accounts were transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The office of Superintendent of Indian Trade was set up in 1806.[22] The superintendent, like the agent for each trading house, was appointed by the President. His duties were, among other things, "* * * to purchase and take charge of all goods intended for trade with the Indian nations * * * and to transmit the same to such places as he shall be directed by the President."[23]

After the abolition of the office of Superintendent of Indian Trade in 1822,[24] Secretary of War Calhoun created the Bureau of Indian Affairs by order of March 11, 1824,[25] and placed at its head Thomas L. McKenney who had formerly been superintendent of Indian trade. His duties included the administration of the civilization fund[26] under departmental regulations, the examination of claims arising out of laws regulating intercourse with Indian tribes, and routine office correspondence.[27]

His staff consisted of a chief clerk and one assistant.[28] His representatives in the field included superintendents, agents, and subagents.[29]

B. DEVELOPMENT

The period between 1824 and 1832, when the statutory office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the War Department was established, appears to have been one of confusion in the Bureau of Indian Affairs.[30]

By Act of July 9, 1832,[31] Congress authorized the President to appoint, with the consent of the Senate, a Commissioner of Indian Affairs who was to have "* * * the direction and management of all Indian affairs, and of all matters arising out of Indian relations * * *." He was under the direction of the Secretary of War and subject to the regulations prescribed by the President.

The number of clerks was not specified. The Secretary of War was empowered to transfer or appoint the necessary number of clerks "* * * so as not to increase the number now employed * * *"[32] by the department.

Two years later the Act of June 30, 1834,[33] since considered the organic law of the Indian Office,[34] was passed "to provide for the organization of the department of Indian affairs." This statute established certain agencies and abolished others. It provided for the employment of subagents, interpreters, and other employees, the payment of annuities, the purchase and distribution of supplies, etc. It was in effect, a reorganization of the field force of the War Department having charge of Indian affairs,[35] and in no way altered the power of the Secretary of War or the Commissioner,[36] or changed the status of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the War Department.[37]

Subsequent appropriation acts provided for the hiring of additional personnel.[38]

Under section 5 of the Act of March 3, 1849,[39] by which the Home Department of the Interior was established, the Bureau

---

[13] As new territories were created, the governor was often made, ex officio, superintendent of Indian affairs, a position which he generally held until the territory became a state; in some cases, however, the duties of the superintendent were transferred before statehood, to one of the general superintendencies in the Indian Service or to the Washington Office. (Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 19.)

In 1867, at the time the Indian Peace Commission was created (Act of July 20, 1867, 15 Stat. 17) there were four territories whose governors were also superintendents of Indian affairs, ex officio—Colorado, Dakota, Idaho, Montana (Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 52). The Peace Commission in its report strongly urged that those governors be divested of their duties as superintendent. (Report of Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1868) p. 48.)

[14] Act of July 22, 1790, 1 Stat. 137, in force for 2 years.

[15] Act of March 30, 1802, 2 Stat. 139. For a summary of these acts, see Chapter 4, secs. 2 and 3. See also Chapter 16.

[16] 1 Stat. 226, 228.

[17] This is the first mention in an appropriation act of the existence of an "Indian department."

[18] 1 Stat. 279.

[19] Act of April 18, 1796, 1 Stat. 452. This act was a temporary measure reenacted every 2 or 3 years up to the abolition of Government trading houses in 1822. See Chapter 16.

[20] Abolished by Act of May 6, 1822, 3 Stat. 679.

[21] "In several of his annual addresses to Congress, Washington had strongly urged the establishment of trading houses by the Government, in order to protect the Indians from the practices of private traders. * * *" (Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 23. See also pp. 20–22.)

[22] Act of April 21, 1806, 2 Stat. 402.

[23] Ibid., sec. 2. Appropriation acts indicate the expansion of the office of Indian trade by providing for compensation of additional clerks. E. g., Act of March 3, 1809, 2 Stat. 544; Act of February 26, 1810, 2 Stat. 557, 559.

[24] Act of May 6, 1822, 3 Stat. 679.

[25] H. Doc. No. 146, 19th Cong., 1st sess., p. 6.

[26] Act of March 3, 1819, 3 Stat. 516, provided a permanent annual appropriation of $10,000 for "* * * introducing among them [the Indians] the habits and arts of civilization * * *"; repealed by Act of February 14, 1873, c. 138, 17 Stat. 437, 461. For further discussion see Chapter 12, sec. 2A.

[27] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1932, p. 1. Hereafter in this chapter these reports will be referred to as "Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff."

[28] Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 27. Act of March 2, 1827, 4 Stat. 233, provides for one clerk in the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Act of February 12, 1828, 4 Stat. 247, for one clerk and messengers.

[29] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1932, p. 1.

[30] Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 27 quotes Schoolcraft (Personal Memoirs, 1828, p. 319) on the "derangements in the fiscal affairs of the Indian department * * * there is a screw loose in the public machinery somewhere."

[31] 4 Stat. 564, R. S. § 462–463, 25 U. S. C. 1–2.

[32] Ibid., sec. 2.

[33] 4 Stat. 735.

[34] See Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1932, p. 1.

[35] Kinney, A Continent Lost—A Civilization Won (1937), p. 104.

[36] Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 28.

[37] Congress continued to pass appropriation acts for the "Indian department" as it had since 1791 (Act of December 23, 1791, 1 Stat. 226, 228; see e. g. Act of January 27, 1835, 4 Stat. 746), and to allow compensation for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and his clerks (Act of March 3, 1835, 4 Stat. 760).

[38] See e. g. Act of May 9, 1836, 5 Stat. 26; Joint Resolution of May 2, 1840, 5 Stat. 409.

[39] 9 Stat. 395, R. S. § 441, 5 U. S. C. 485.

of Indian Affairs passed from military to civil control. This act provided: "That the Secretary of the Interior shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers now exercised by the Secretary of the War Department, in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

The administration of Indian affairs was not markedly affected by this transfer, because as early as 1834 the office was essentially a civilian bureau.[40] Army officers continued to be employed occasionally as agents.[41]

After 1849 Congress debated for years the expediency of transferring the Indian Bureau back to the War Department.[42] Constant fluctuations of responsibility between the two departments ensued.[43]

In 1869,[44] to correct mismanagement in the purchase and handling of Indian supplies, the Board of Indian Commissioners was created, to be appointed by, and report to, the President. It was composed of not more than 10 "men eminent for intelligence and philanthropy, to serve without pecuniary compensation * * " and exercise joint control with the Secretary of the Interior over the appropriations in that act. By Act of July 15, 1870,[45] the Board was empowered " * * to supervise all expenditures of money appropriated for the benefit of Indians * * * and to inspect all goods purchased for said Indians * * *." Although the Board was entirely independent of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, it studied and advised on important questions of Indian policy.[46]

This Board was abolished by Executive Order 6145, May 25, 1933,[47] which provided that the Board's affairs be wound up by the Secretary of the Interior, and that its records, property, and personnel be transferred to, or remain under, his supervision.

By title 5, section 485, of the United States Code,[48] the Secretary of the Interior now has supervision over " * * * public business relating to * * * The Indians," and by title 25, section 2, of the United States Code,[49] the Commissioner of Indian affairs over "* * * the management of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations * * *" under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and according to regulations prescribed by the President.

C. LIST OF COMMISSIONERS

Prior to 1832, the Secretary of War was chief officer in charge of Indian matters. From 1806 to 1822 he had the advice of the Superintendent of Indian Trade, and from 1824 to 1832 of the three successive heads of the new Bureau of Indian Affairs—Thomas L. McKenney (1824–30); Samuel S. Hamilton (1830–31); Elbert Herring (1831–32). Herring became first Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1832.[50]

In the 108 years following the establishment of the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that post has been held by some 32 individuals representing a wide range of variation in their outlook upon the responsibilities and opportunities of that office. These individuals have set forth in the Commissioners' Annual Reports[51] and in unofficial writings[52] their views on the Indian question, and these expressions are in many ways the most useful guides to the variations of Government Indian policy.

In tracing prevailing policies for a particular period, the following list[53] of Commissioners of Indian Affairs, with the Secretaries and Presidents under whom they served, may prove useful:

---

[40] Administration of the Indian Office (Bureau of Municipal Research Publication No. 65) (1915), p. 13.

[41] Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 43. By Act of July 15, 1870, 16 Stat. 315, 319, Congress prohibited the appointment of the military officers to civil posts unless commissions were vacated.

However, the exception later made affecting Indian agencies appears to be a survival of the period of military control. By Act of July 13, 1892, c. 164, sec. 1, 27 Stat. 120; Act of July 1, 1898, c. 545, sec. 1, 30 Stat. 571, 573, R. S. § 2062, 25 U. S. C. 27.

> The President may detail officers of the United States Army to act as Indian agents at such agencies as in the opinion of the President may require the presence of any Army officer, and while acting as Indian agents such officers shall be under the orders and direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

(From 25 U. S. C. 27).

[42] Administration of the Indian Office (Bureau of Municipal Research Publication No. 65) (1915), p. 13; Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 50, 51.

In 1867, a commission appointed by Congress (Pub. Res. of March 3, 1865, 13 Stat. 572) to inquire into civil and military authority over Indians reported,

> * * * The question whether the Indian bureau should be placed under the War Department or retained in the Department of the Interior is one of considerable importance, and both sides have very warm advocates. * * * (P. 6.)

(Sen. Rept. No. 156, 39th Cong., 2d sess., pp. 3–8.)

Commissioner of Indian Affairs Taylor in his report of 1868 gave 11 reasons for his vigorous opposition to the transfer. He held, among other things, that the professed Indian policy was peace, but transfer was tantamount to perpetual war.

> * * * I cannot for the life of me perceive the propriety or the efficacy of employing the military instead of the civil departments, unless it is intended to adopt the Mohammedan motto, and proclaim to these people "Death or the Koran." (P. 10.)

On January 7, 1868, the Peace Commission (appointed by Act of July 20, 1867, 15 Stat. 17) recommended that "* * * Indian affairs be committed to an independent bureau or department." (Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1868, p. 48.) However, at the end of the same year (October 9, 1868) in a supplementary report to the President it stated, > * * * in the opinion of this commission the Bureau of Indian Affairs should be transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of War.

(Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1868, p. 372).

[43] Administration of the Indian Office (Bureau of Municipal Research Publication (No. 65) (1915), p. 13.

Excerpts from official reports reveal this conflict. E. g., Commissioner Manypenny in his report for 1854 states:

> Occasions frequently arise in our intercourse with the Indians requiring the employment of force. * * *. The Indian Bureau would be relieved from embarrassment, and rendered more efficient, if, in such cases, the department had the direct control of the means necessary to execute its own orders. (P. 17.)

In Secretary of Interior Harlan's introduction to the Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1865, he states that:

> On taking charge of this department on the 15th day of May last, the relations of officers respectively engaged in the military and civil departments in the Indian country were in an unsatisfactory condition. A supposed conflict of jurisdiction and a want of confidence in each other led to mutual criminations, whereby the success of military operations against hostile tribes and the execution of the policy of this department were seriously impeded. Upon conferring with the War Department, it was informally agreed that the agents and officers under the control of the Secretary of the Interior should hold no intercourse, except through the military authorities, with tribes of Indians against whom hostile measures were in progress; and that the military authorities should refrain from interference with such agents and officers in their relations with all other tribes, except to afford the necessary aid for the enforcement of the regulations of this department. * * * (P. iv.)

[44] R. S. § 2039, 25 U. S. C. 21, derived from Act of April 10, 1869, 16 Stat. 13, 40, and Act of July 15, 1870, sec. 3, 16 Stat. 335, 360. See Ryan v. United States, 8 C. Cls. 265 (1872).

[45] 16 Stat. 335, 360.

[46] Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 57.

[47] See 25 U. S. C. 21.

[48] R. S. § 441, derived from Act of March 3, 1849, c. 108, 9 Stat. 395.

[49] R. S. § 463, derived from Act of July 9, 1832, c. 174, sec. 1, 4 Stat. 564 and Act of July 27, 1868, c. 259, sec. 1, 15 Stat. 228.

[50] Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 26–27; Kinney, op. cit., p. 102.

[51] The heads of the Bureau of Indian Affairs also reported annually to the Secretary of War from 1824 to 1832.

[52] Walker, The Indian Question (1874); Manypenny, Our Indian Wards (1880); Leupp, The Indian and His Problem (1910).

[53] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1932, pp. 1–2.

Commissioners of Indian Affairs

Commissioner	Date	Secretary	President
Herring, Elbert	July 10, 1832	Cass [1]	Jackson.
Harris, Carey A	July 4, 1836	Cass [1] and Poinsett [1]	Do.
Crawford, T. Hartley	Oct. 22, 1838	Poinsett [1] to Marcy [1]	Van Buren.
Medill, William	Oct. 28, 1845	Marcy [1] and Ewing [2]	Polk.
Brown, Orlando	May 31, 1849	Ewing	Taylor.
Lea, Luke	July 1, 1850	Ewing to Stuart	Taylor and Fillmore.
Manypenny, George W.	Mar. 24, 1853	McClelland and Thompson.	Pierce.
Denver, James W	Apr. 17, 1857	Thompson	Buchanan.
Mix, Charles E	June 14, 1858	do	Do.
Denver, James W	Nov. 8, 1858	do	Do.
Greenwood, Alfred B	May 4, 1859	do	Do.
Dole, William P	Mar. 13, 1861	Smith to Harlan	Lincoln.
Cooley, Dennis N	July 10, 1865	Harlan and Browning	Johnson.
Bogy, Lewis V	Nov. 1, 1866	Browning	Do.
Taylor, Nathaniel G	Mar. 29, 1867	Browning and Cox	Do.
Parker, Ely S	Apr. 21, 1869	Cox and Delano	Grant.

[1] Secretaries of War.
[2] Ewing and all following, Secretaries of the Interior.

Commissioners of Indian Affairs—Continued

Commissioner	Date	Secretary	President
Walker, Francis A	Nov. 21, 1871	Delano	Do.
Smith, Edward P	Mar. 20, 1873	Delano and Chandler	Do.
Smith, John Q	Dec. 11, 1875	Chandler and Schurz	Do.
Hayt, Ezra A	Sept. 27, 1877	Schurz	Hayes.
Trowbridge, R. E	Mar. 15, 1880	do	Do.
Price, Hiram	May 4, 1881	Kirkwood and Teller	Garfield.
Atkins, John D. C	Mar. 21, 1885	Lamar	Cleveland.
Oberly, John H	Oct. 10, 1888	Vilas	Do.
Morgan, Thomas J	June 10, 1889	Noble	Harrison.
Browning, Daniel M	Apr. 17, 1893	Smith and Francis	Cleveland.
Jones, William A	May 3, 1897	Bliss and Hitchcock	McKinley.
Leupp, Francis E	Dec. 7, 1904	Hitchcock, Garfield and Ballinger.	Roosevelt.
Valentine, Robt. G	June 16, 1909	Ballinger, Fisher	Taft.
Sells, Cato	June 2, 1913	Lane and Payne	Wilson.
Burke, Charles H	Apr. 1, 1921	Fall, Work, West, Wilbur.	Harding, Coolidge.
Rhoads, Charles J	July 1, 1929	Wilbur	Hoover.
Collier, John	Apr. 21, 1933	Ickes	Roosevelt.

SECTION 2. THE DEVELOPMENT OF INDIAN SERVICE POLICIES

The history of Indian Service policies is the story of the rise and decline of a system of paternalism for which it is difficult to find a parallel in American history. The Indian Service begins as a diplomatic service handling negotiations between the United States and the Indian nations and tribes, characterized by Chief Justice Marshall as "domestic dependent nations." [54] By a process of jurisdictional aggrandisement, on the one hand, and voluntary surrenders of tribal powers, on the other, the Indian Service reached the point where nearly every aspect of Indian life was subject to the almost uncontrolled discretion of Indian Service officials.[55] In recent years there has been a marked reversal of these tendencies.

The reports of various Commissioners of Indian Affairs give the most graphic chronological insight into changing administrative policies.

A. THE PERIOD FROM 1825 TO 1850

In 1825 Thomas L. McKenney, as head of the new Bureau of Indian Affairs [56] in his first brief report [57] to the Secretary of War, wrote, regarding those Indians whose titles to land had been extinguished and who had elected to remove, that it was "* * * the policy of the Government to guarantee to them lasting and undisturbed possession" of their new land beyond the boundaries of Missouri and Arkansas.

The extent to which this policy was carried into effect is elsewhere discussed.[58]

In his lengthier report for 1826,[59] McKenney, in urging increased appropriations for the support of Indian schools,[60] was firmly convinced of—> * * * the vast benefits which the Indian children are deriving from these establishments; and which go further, in my opinion, towards securing our borders from bloodshed, and keeping the peace among the Indians themselves, and attaching them to us, than would the physical force of our Army, if employed exclusively towards the accomplishment of those objects.[61]

McKenney early foresaw the problem of the returned student, and recommended that—> * * * as these youths are qualified to enter upon a course of civilized life, sections of land be given to them, and a suitable present to commence with, of agricultural or other implements suited to the occupations in which they may be disposed, respectively, to engage. They will then have become an "intermediate link between our own citizens, and our wandering neighbors, softening the shades of each, and enjoying the confidence of both." [62]

Samuel S. Hamilton, in his only report [63] as head of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, recommended in 1830 that with "* * * the increase of our population, and the consequent extension of our settlements, * * *" the act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, passed in 1802, be revised, and the line setting the Indian boundary by that act be redefined. This recommendation, repeated in 1831, was finally acted upon in the Intercourse Act of 1834.[64]

Elbert Herring, who headed the Bureau of Indian Affairs for 1 year, and subsequently became its first Commissioner, commended the Government's recent policy of removal as the only means of checking the complete disintegration of the Indian tribes.

> * * * tribes numerous and powerful have disappeared from among us in a ratio of decrease, ominous to the existence of those that still remain, unless counteracted by the substitution of some principle sufficiently potent to check the tendencies to decay and dissolution. This salutary principle exists in the system of removal; of change of residence; of settlement in territories exclusively their own, and under the protection of the United States; connected with the benign influences of education and instruction in agriculture and the several mechanic arts, whereby social is distinguished from savage life.[65]

In his report for 1832 as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Herring again commends the policy of removal in exalted terms:

> * * * In the consummation of this grand and sacred object rests the sole chance of averting Indian annihilation. Founded in pure and disinterested motives, may it meet the approval of heaven, by the complete attainment of its beneficent ends! [66]

[54] See Chapter 14, sec. 6.
[55] A discussion of the subjects of Indian administrative power will be found in Chapters 5, 8, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17.
[56] The head of the Bureau of Indian Affairs was not denominated Commissioner until 1832.
[57] Annual Report for 1825, Office of Indian Affairs, p. 91.
[58] See Chapter 3, sec. 4E, and Chapter 15, secs. 5, 21.
[59] Annual Report for 1826, Office of Indian Affairs, p. 508.
[60] In the years immediately following, reports devote a section to the increase in school attendance as an indication of civilization.
[61] Annual Report for 1826, Office of Indian Affairs, p. 508. Compare this early attitude regarding the use of the military, with that expressed by Commissioner Walker in 1872, infra.
[62] Ibid., p. 508.
[63] Annual Report for 1830, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, p. 163.
[64] Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729. See sec. 1A, and fns. 14 and 15, supra, and see Chapter 1, sec. 3; Chapter 4, sec. 6.
[65] Annual Report for 1831, Indian Bureau, p. 172.
[66] Annual Report for 1832, Office of Indian Affairs, p. 160.

In this report appears the first mention of vaccination as a health measure for the benefit of the Indians, and the employment of physicians by the Bureau.[67]

In 1833 appears the first mention in Commissioners' reports of the need among Indian tribes for > * * * something, however simple, in the shape of a code of laws, suited to their wants, * * * devised and submitted for their adoption, to obviate the inconveniences, and secure the benefits incident thereto, in the relations that are springing up under the fostering care of the Government. * * *[68]

Jacksonian policy[69] was reflected in the increasing emphasis in commissioners' reports on the use of the military to effect what began as voluntary removal. In his report for 1834, apropos of the failure of the Cherokee to date to sign a treaty of removal, Commissioner Herring wrote:

> * * * Should occasion call for it, the military will be ordered out for the protection of those who decide on emigration, and of the emigrating officers of Government engaged in this hazardous and responsible service.[70]

In 1835 he wrote:

> There has been no intermission of exertion to induce the removal of the Cherokees to the west of the Mississippi, in conformity with the policy adopted by the Government * * *.[71]

In 1836 the new Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Carey A. Harris, wrote:

> The removal of the Creek Indians, like that of the Seminoles, was made a military operation on the commission by them of hostile acts. * * *[72]

T. Hartley Crawford, in his first report as Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1838,[73] apropos of removal, states that for the most part it has been peaceful, including that of the Cherokees. However, the "indisposition" of the Pottawatomies "to comply with their engagements" caused the agent > on the application of the white settlers, to call upon the Governor of Indiana for a military force to repress any outbreak that might occur. The Governor authorized General John Tipton to accept the services of one hundred volunteers; who raised them, and used their services in the collection and removal of the Pottawatomies.[74]

Commissioner Crawford urged that some evidence of title to lands granted to them in the West be given Indians on removal.[75]

In the field of education he reports:

> The principal lever by which Indians are to be lifted out of the mire of folly and vice in which they are sunk, is education. * * * To teach a savage man to read, while he continues a savage in all else, is to throw seed on a rock. * * * Manual-labor schools are what the Indian condition calls for.[76]

The educational policy of civilizing the Indians through manual training in agriculture and the "mechanic arts" became the accepted policy of the Indian office.[77]

The problem of the Indian field agent who becomes too closely identified with a particular tribe attracted concern. "Is there not some hazard of his becoming attached to their particular interests * * *?" [78] "By transferring them from one position to another," Commissioner Crawford wrote, "as frequently as may be regarded proper, they will be cut off from the strong enlistment of their feelings * * *." [79]

Vaccination for smallpox during an epidemic and medical services supplied by the Bureau of Indian Affairs are again mentioned.[80]

Commissioner Crawford, like Commissioner Herring,[81] recommended a code of laws for the government of the Western tribes, but added: "* * * this, as it seems to me, indispensable step to their advancement in civilization cannot be taken without their own consent." [82]

Like many commissioners before and after him, Commissioner Crawford felt that the policy of allotment was the only proper policy for the Government to pursue. "Common property and civilization cannot coexist." [83]

Of a proposed plan, for a confederation of Indian tribes west of the Mississippi, he held that "* * * prudential considerations would seem to require that they should be kept distinct from each other." [84]

For the next few years, commissioners report "progress" in removal, treaty-making and education in the manual arts. They begin to include "accompanying documents" prepared by field personnel.

Commissioner Medill in his report for 1847 told of the need for a "statistical account of the various tribes, including a digest of their industrial means, peculiar habits, resources, and employments of every kind * * " which would " * * materially aid the Department in suggesting the most suitable measures for their improvement." [85] This need was reiterated and various attempts were made to fill it.[86]

---

[67] Ibid., p. 162. For a discussion of federal health services, see Chapter 12, sec. 3.

[68] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1833, p. 186. Some of the tribes, notably the Five Civilized Tribes, early adopted their own code of laws. In 1882, Commissioner Price tells of the preparation and submission by the Pottawatomies of their own code of laws to the department for approval. (Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1882, p. VIII.)

[69] See Chapter 3, sec. 4E. Commenting on the situation that arose with the election of President Jackson, Schmeckebier writes:

> The election of Jackson to the Presidency in 1828 resulted in a definite change in the Indian policy in regard to removal. Both Monroe and Adams had adopted the policy of voluntary emigration, but Jackson was determined to use force if necessary. A mere reading of the statutes and the treaties would indicate no definite change, but when the method of obtaining the treaties is taken into consideration it is easy to see that the government was determined to use any pressure necessary to accomplish its ends.

(Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 33.)

[70] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1834, p. 243.

[71] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1835, p. 262.

[72] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1836, p. 368.

[73] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1838.

[74] Ibid., p. 413.

[75] Ibid., p. 414.

[76] Ibid., pp. 420–421. Many later treaties contained a specific provision for the establishment of manual labor schools.

[77] See Chapter 12, sec. 2.

[78] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1838, p. 422.

[79] Ibid.

[80] Ibid., p. 424. Commissioner Crawford states that in the northwest alone, at least 17,200 deaths occurred. Three thousand persons were vaccinated in the Columbia River region.

[81] See supra, and Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1833, p. 186.

[82] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1838, p. 424.

[83] Ibid., p. 425. See Chapter 11, sec. 1.

[84] Ibid., p. 426.

[85] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1847, pp. 747–748.

[86] E. g., Act of June 27, 1846, 9 Stat. 20, 34, provided for a survey, but failed to provide the necessary means to execute it; Act of March 3, 1847, sec. 5, 9 Stat. 203, 204, likewise provided for a census to illustrate "* * * the history, the present condition, and future prospects of the Indian tribes of the United States." At the time of Commissioner Medill's report, results were being returned by agents and subagents "* * * of most interesting and satisfactory character" (Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1847, p. 748). Some 12 years later, in 1859, Secretary of the Interior Thompson wrote:

> The statistical information in the possession of the Indian office is too meager and vague to enable us to determine with

The role that was played by missionary groups through their teachers and schools was clearly stated by Commissioner Medill:

> In every system which has been adopted for promoting the cause of education among the Indians, the Department has found its most efficient and faithful auxiliaries and laborers in the societies of the several Christian denominations * * *.[87]

Commissioner Orlando Brown, in addition to various reports on the status of removal, including a full report on the proposed removal of the Seminoles to be "* * * conducted by the military alone * * ,"[88] made recommendations for various changes in policy: That (1) " * * in all treaties hereafter to be made with the Indians, the policy of giving goods, farming utensils, provisions, etc., in lieu of money, be insisted on * * *" as far as practicable;[89] that (2) Congress take steps for the ultimate participation in the national legislation of those Indians qualified or soon to be so;[90] that (3) there be made various changes in personnel: the number of superintendents be increased from 5 to 7,[91] the duties of agent and superintendent, and superintendent and governor of a Territory be separated,[92] the position of subagent (salary $750 per annum, with duties often equal to those of agent) be abolished[93] and that of minor agent, with a salary lower than that of agent ($1,500 per annum) where the responsibilities and Indians are fewer, be established.[94]

B. THE PERIOD FROM 1851 TO 1867

The question of the status of the Indian, and the technique by which he might be civilized, had not been answered satisfactorily in 1851 when Commissioner Luke Lea wrote:

> On the general subject of the civilization of the Indians, many and diversified opinions have been put forth; but, unfortunately, like the race to which they relate, they are too wild to be of much utility. The great question, How shall the Indians be civilized? yet remains without a satisfactory answer. The magnitude of the subject, and the manifold difficulties inseparably connected with it, seem to have bewildered the minds of those who have attempted to give it the most thorough investigation. * * * I therefore leave the subject for the present, remarking, only, that any plan for the civilization of our Indians will, in my judgment, be fatally defective, if it do not provide, in the most efficient manner, first, for their concentration; secondly, for their domestication; and, thirdly, for their ultimate incorporation into the great body of our citizen population.[95]

Commissioner Lea's recommendation that the Indians be concentrated was effectuated through the gradual diminution of the size of most Indian reservations. The plea for domestication had appeared in earlier reports, and was, in fact, the accepted practice of the Bureau of Indian Affairs at that time. The recommendation that Indians be ultimately incorporated into the citizenry of the country may mark a new departure from the theory and practice of removal and segregation. It apparently bore fruit in the Allotment Act,[96] with its provisions for citizenship and fee simple tenure of land.

In 1853, Commissioner Manypenny objected to the practice of permitting Indian tribes, engulfed in the stream of western migration, to retain portions of their tribal domains as reservations.

> With but few exceptions, the Indians were opposed to selling any part of their lands, as announced in their replies to the speeches of the commissioner. Finally, however, many tribes expressed their willingness to sell, but on the condition that they could retain tribal reservations on their present tracts of land. * * *[97] The idea of retaining reservations, which seemed to be generally entertained, is not deemed to be consistent with their true interests, and every good influence ought to be exercised to enlighten them on the subject. If they dispose of their lands, no reservations should, if it can be avoided, be granted or allowed. There are some Indians in various tribes who are occupying farms, comfortably situated, and who are in such an advanced state of civilization, that if they desired to remain, the privilege might well, and ought perhaps to be granted, and their farms in each case reserved for their homes. Such Indians would be qualified to enjoy the privileges of citizenship. But to make reservations for an entire tribe on the tract which it now owns, would, it is believed, be injurious to the future peace, prosperity, and advancement of these people. The commissioner, as far as he judged it prudent, endeavored to enlighten them on this point, and labored to convince them that it was not consistent with the true interest of themselves and their posterity that they should have tribal reservations within their present limits.[98]

Commissioner Manypenny further urged the revision of the Intercourse Act of 1834[99] and the regulations promulgated thereunder, to meet changing conditions in Indian relations.

> * * * A new code of regulations is greatly needed for this branch of the public service. That now in force was adopted many years since, and, in many particulars, has become obsolete or inapplicable, especially in our new and distant territories. The regulations now existing are based upon laws in force respecting Indian affairs, and the President has authority, under the act of June 30, 1834,[100] providing for the organization of the department of Indian Affairs, to prescribe such rules as he may think fit for carrying into effect its provisions.[101]

That plea is repeated by succeeding commissioners.

In his second annual report,[102] Commissioner Manypenny foresaw a crisis in the whole removal policy, and urged its abandonment in favor of fixed and permanent settlements "thereafter not to be disturbed."

> * * * By alternate persuasion and force, some of these tribes [in Kansas territory] have been removed, step by step, from mountain to valley, and from river to plain, until they have been pushed half-way across the continent. They can go no further; on the ground they now occupy the crisis must be met, and their future determined.[103]
>
> * * * * *
>
> The wonderful growth of our distant possessions, and the rapid expansion of our population in every direction, will render it necessary, at no distant day, to restrict the limits of all the Indian tribes upon our frontiers, and cause them to be settled in fixed and permanent localities, thereafter not to be disturbed. The policy of removing Indian tribes from time to time, as the settlements approach their habitations and hunting-grounds, must be abandoned. The emigrants and settlers were formerly content to remain in the rear, and thrust the Indians before them into the wilderness; but now the white population overleaps the reservations and homes of the Indians, and is beginning > precision the ratio of increase or decrease among the aboriginal population. * * *

>
> (Excerpt, Report of Secretary of the Interior, 1859, p. 4, in Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1859.)

[87] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1847, p. 749.
[88] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1849, pp. 939–941.
[89] Ibid., p. 958.
[90] Ibid.
[91] Ibid., p. 953.
[92] Ibid., pp. 952, 953.
[93] Ibid., pp. 954, 955.
[94] This would circumvent the limitation to 11, of full agents authorized by law (Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1849, pp. 954, 955).
[95] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1851, pp. 12–13.
[96] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388. See Chapter 11.
[97] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1853, p. 249.
[98] Ibid., p. 250. See Commissioner Denver's report (1857), infra, of Indians being permitted to retain such tribal land.
[99] Act of June 30, 1834 4 Stat. 729.
[100] Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 735.
[101] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1853, pp. 261–262.
[102] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1854,
[103] Ibid., p. 10.

> to inhabit the valleys and the mountains beyond; hence removal must cease, and the policy abandoned. * * *[104]

To protect Indian funds from fraud, Commissioner Manypenny recommended that—

> * * * All executory contracts of every kind and description, made by Indian tribes or bands with claim agents, attorneys, traders, or other persons, should be declared by law null and void, and an agent, interpreter, or other person, employed in or in any way connected with the Indian service, guilty of participation in transactions of the kind referred to, should be instantly dismissed and expelled from the Indian country; and all such attempts to injure and defraud the Indians, by whomsoever made or participated in, should be penal offences, punishable by fine and imprisonment. We have now penal laws to protect the Indians in the secure and unmolested possession of their lands, and also from demoralization by the introduction of liquor into their country, and the obligation is equally strong to protect them in a similar manner from the wrongs and injuries of such attempts to obtain possession of their funds.[105]

Secretary of the Interior McClelland in 1854, apropos of treaty obligations, reiterates:

> * * * The duty of the government is clear, and justice to the Indians requires that it should be faithfully discharged. Experience shows that much is gained by sacredly observing our plighted faith with these poor creatures, and every principle of justice and humanity prompts to a strict performance of our obligations.[106]

Commissioner Denver, in 1857,[107] tells of the successful extinguishing of title to all lands owned by Indians west of Missouri and Iowa "* * * except such portions as were reserved for their future homes * * *."[108]

Of Indians who have removed to > * * * large reservations of fertile and desirable land, entirely disproportioned to their wants for occupancy and support, * * *. Their reservations should be restricted so as to contain only sufficient land to afford them a comfortable support by actual cultivation, and should be properly divided and assigned to them, with the obligation to remain upon and cultivate the same.[109]

Commissioner Denver urged discontinuance of the practice of distributing funds due to tribes in per capita payments to individual members. This practice, he thought, tended to break down the authority of the chiefs, and thus > * * * disorganizes and leaves them without a domestic government * * * The distribution of the money should be left to the chiefs, so far at least as to enable them to punish the lawless and unruly by withholding it from them * * *.[110]

Commissioner Denver tells of the attempt by the Government to suppress the practice in California of kidnapping Indian children and selling them for servants.[111]

He concludes his report with a plea for a recodification of Indian law:

> * * * I urgently repeat the recommendation of my immediate predecessor, that there be an early and complete revision and codification of all the laws relating to Indian affairs, which, from lapse of time and material changes in the location, condition, and circumstances of the most of the tribes, have become so insufficient and unsuitable as to occasion the greatest embarrassment and difficulty in conducting the business of this branch of the public service.[112]

In 1858, Commissioner Mix estimated the number of Indians to be about 350,000,[113] approximately the same number as it is estimated exists today.[114] He further estimated that about 393 treaties had been signed since the adoption of the Constitution; and that approximately 581,163,188 acres had been acquired through cession at a cost of $49,816,344.[115]

The principle upon which treaty-making with the Indians for land cessions rested was thus stated:

> that the Indian tribes possessed the occupant or usufruct right to the lands they occupied, and that they were entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of that right until they were fairly and justly divested of it.[116]

However, that principle was apparently not adhered to in the Territories of Oregon and Washington.

> * * * strong inducements were held out to our people to emigrate and settle there, without the usual arrangements being made, in advance, for the extinguishment of the title of the Indians who occupied and claimed the lands.[117]

According to Commissioner Mix, past Government policy had been in error in at least three respects: (1) Removal from place to place prevented the acquiring of "* * * settled habits and a knowledge of and taste for civilized pursuits * * ";[118] (2) assignment of too large a country to be held in common resulted in improper use and failure to acquire " * * a knowledge of separate and individual property * * *";[119] (3) annuities resulted in indolence among Indians and fraudulent practices by whites.[120]

> The policy of concentrating the Indians on small reservations of land, and of sustaining them there for a limited period, until they can be induced to make the necessary exertions to support themselves, was commenced in 1853, with those in California. It is, in fact, the only course compatible with the obligations of justice and humanity.[121]

The military appears to have been used in the vicinity of reservations "to prevent the intrusion of improper persons upon them [the Indians], to afford protection to the agents, and to aid in controlling the Indians and keeping them within the limits assigned to them."[122]

In 1859, Secretary of the Interior Thompson reports progress in the shift of Government policy from that of removal to that of fixed reservations.[123]

---

[101] Ibid., p. 17.

[105] Ibid., pp. 21–22. See also extract from Report of Secretary of Interior, 1862, p. 13, in Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1862.

> All contracts with them should be prohibited, and all promises or obligations made by them should be declared void.

Legislation along the lines urged was enacted in 1871. See Chapter 14, sec. 5.

[106] Extract from Annual Report of the Secretary of Interior, 1854, p. 41, in Rep. Comm. of Ind. Aff., 1854.

[107] Rep. Comm. of Ind. Aff., 1857.

[108] Ibid., p. 3. See Commissioner Manypenny's Report for 1853, supra, pp. 249, 250 for opposition to such a policy.

[109] Ibid., p. 4.

[110] Ibid., p. 7.

[111] Ibid., p. 10.

[112] Ibid., p. 12.

[113] Rep. of Comm. of Ind. Aff., 1858, p. 1.

[114] See Chapter 1, sec. 2, fn. 4.

[115] Rep. Comm. of Ind. Aff., 1858, p. 1.

[116] Ibid., p. 6.

[117] Ibid., p. 7.

[118] Ibid., p. 7. He notes the difference in development between the northern tribes and those of the South who were permitted to remain for long periods in their original locations (pp. 6–7).

[119] Ibid., p. 6.

[120] Ibid., p. 6.

[121] Ibid., p. 9.

[122] Ibid., p. 10.

[123] See Commissioner Manypenny's recommendation for such a shift in 1854, supra.

> The policy heretofore adopted of removing the Indians from time to time, as the necessities of our frontier population demanded a cession of their territory, the usual consideration for which was a large money annuity to be divided among them per capita had a deleterious effect upon their morals, and confirmed them in their roving, idle habits. This policy, we are now compelled by the necessity of the case to change. At present, the policy of the government is to gather the Indians upon small tribal reservations, within the well-defined exterior boundaries of which small tracts of land are assigned, in severalty, to the individual members of the tribe, with all the rights incident to an estate in fee-simple, except the power of alienation. This system, wherever it has been tried, has worked well, and the reports of the superintendents and agents give a most gratifying account of the great improvement which it has effected in the character and habits of those tribes which have been brought under its operation.[124]

Alfred B. Greenwood, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under Secretary Thompson,[125] recommended that the reservation policy, as it had been pursued in California, be abandoned.

> * * * neither the Government nor California recognizes any right in the Indians of that State to one foot of land within her borders. An unnecessary number of reservations and separate farms have been established; the locations of many of them have proved to be unsuitable, and have not been sufficiently isolated; * * *[126]
>
> * * * * *
>
> Under these circumstances, and being desirous to initiate a policy for California which will secure our own citizens from annoyance, and, at the same time, save the Indians from the speedy extinction with which they are threatened, I feel constrained to recommend the repeal of all laws authorizing the appointment of superintendent, agents, and sub-agents for California, and the abandonment of the present, and the substitution of a somewhat different plan of operations. * * * the State should be divided into two districts, and an agent appointed for each * * *. The agents should give the Indians in their respective districts to understand that they are not to be fed and clothed at government expense; but that they must supply all their wants by means of their own labor.[127]
>
> * * * * *
>
> Should Congress authorize a change in the present system, and new reservations be established, great care should be taken so as to isolate the Indians from contact with the whites. Fertile lands should be selected which will repay the efforts to cultivate them * * *.[128]

During the Civil War period, when defections from the Federal Government occurred and tribes were concluding treaties with the Confederate Government,[129] the movement to terminate the practice of dealing with Indian tribes by treaty and to deal with them instead as objects of national charity, lacking legal rights, gained momentum.

Secretary of the Interior Caleb B. Smith clearly stated the new policy.

> It may well be questioned whether the government has not adopted a mistaken policy in regarding the Indian tribes as quasi-independent nations, and making treaties with them for the purchase of the lands they claim to own. They have none of the elements of nationality; they are within the limits of the recognized authority of the United States and must be subject to its control. The rapid progress of civilization upon this continent will not permit the lands which are required for cultivation to be surrendered to savage tribes for hunting grounds. Indeed, whatever may be the theory, the government has always demanded the removal of the Indians when their lands were required for agricultural purposes by advancing settlements. Although the consent of the Indians has been obtained in the form of treaties, it is well known that they have yielded to a necessity which they could not resist.[130]
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * A radical change in the mode of treatment of the Indians should, in my judgment, be adopted. Instead of being treated as independent nations they should be regarded as wards of the government, entitled to its fostering care and protection. Suitable districts of country should be assigned to them for their homes, and the government should supply them, through its own agents, with such articles as they use, until they can be instructed to earn their subsistence by their labor.[131]

Under the Lincoln administration, Commissioner Dole concerned himself with the legal disadvantage under which Indians labor, in the conflict between state and federal jurisdiction.[132]

> * * * they find themselves amenable to a system of local and federal laws, as well as their treaty stipulations, all of which are to the vast majority of them wholly unintelligible. If a white man does them an injury, redress is often beyond their reach; or, if obtained, is only had after delays and vexations which are themselves cruel injustice. If one of their number commits a crime, punishment is sure and swift, and oftentimes is visited upon the whole tribe. * * *[133]

Better cooperation between the Federal Government and the states was recommended, with state legislation leading to ultimate citizenship the goal to be pursued.

> Very much of the evil attendant upon the location of Indians within the limits of States might be obviated, if some plan could be devised whereby a more hearty co-operation with government on the part of the States might be secured. It being a demonstrated fact that Indians are capable of attaining a high degree of civilization, it follows that the time will arrive, as in the case of some of the tribes it has doubtless now arrived, when the peculiar relations existing between them and the federal government may cease, without detriment to their interests or those of the community or State in which they are located; in other words, that the time will come when, in justice to them and to ourselves, their relations to the general government should be identical with those of the citizens of the various States. In this view, a more generous legislation on the part of most of the States within whose limits Indians are located, looking to a gradual removal of the disabilities under which they labor, and their ultimate admission to all the rights of citizenship, as from time to time the improvement and advancement made by a given tribe may warrant, is earnestly to be desired, and would, I doubt not, prove a powerful incentive to exertion on the part of the Indians themselves.[134]

At the end of the Civil War, Secretary of the Interior Harlan reported the terms of a negotiated peace with those Indians who had joined forces with Confederate soldiers.[135]

> * * * Such preliminary arrangements were made as, it is believed, will result in the abolition of slavery among them, the cession within the Indian territory of lands for the settlement of the civilized Indians now residing on reservations elsewhere, and the ultimate establishment of civil government, subject to the supervision of the United States.[136]

---

[124] Extract from Report of the Secretary of the Interior, 1859, pp. 4–5 in Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1859.

[125] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1859.

[126] Ibid., p. 22.

[127] Ibid., p. 23.

[128] Ibid., p. 24.

[129] See Chapter 8, sec. 4H and Chapter 8, sec. 11.

[130] Extract from Report of the Secretary of the Interior, 1862, p. 7, in Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1862.

[131] Ibid., p. 9.

[132] See Chapter 8, sec. 10.

[133] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1862, p. 12.

[134] Ibid., p. 12.

[135] See Chapter 3, sec. 4I and Chapter 8, sec. 11.

[136] Extract from Report of the Secretary of the Interior, 1865, p. III, in Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1865.

Apparently, even at this late date the policy of complete extermination of the Indian was advocated by "gentlemen of high position, intelligence, and personal character." [137]

> Financial considerations forbid the inauguration of such a policy. * * * It is estimated that the maintenance of each regiment of troops engaged against the Indians of the plains costs the government two million dollars per annum. * * * Such a policy is manifestly as impracticable as it is in violation of every dictate of humanity and Christian duty.[138]

Secretary Harlan, in urging Congressional action for the necessary reforms in the administration of justice on Indian reservations, stated:

> It is earnestly recommended that the superintendents, and also agents of a suitable grade, be empowered to act as civil magistrates within the limits of reservations where the tribal relations are maintained, and also on the plains remote from the jurisdiction of civil authorities. The want of an acceptable and efficient provision for the administration of justice has been sensibly felt in cases arising between members of the tribes, or between Indians and the white men who have been permitted to reside among them.[139]

Commissioner Cooley [140] recommended various radical reforms in Indian Service personnel, particularly with regard to traders and agents. To eliminate collusion between them, he urged Congress to make it a penal offense for > * * * any agent or other officer in the Indian service to be in any manner, directly or indirectly, interested in the profits of the business of any trader, or in any contract for the purchase of goods, or in any trade with the Indians, at their own or any other agency; the same penalties to apply to the licensing of any relative to trade, or to purchasing goods or provisions for the use of the Indians of any firm in which they or any relative may be partners or in any way interested. * * *[141]

In urging, as commissioners had done before, increase in agents' salary above the $1,500 they had received since 1834,[142] as a means of securing more thoroughly qualified persons, Commissioner Cooley held:

> * * * The fact that innumerable applicants stand ready to take any places which are vacated is not, in my judgment, an argument against an increase of pay; it is simply a proof of the commonly received idea of the outside profit of the business. * * *[143]

He noted progress in the civilization of the Indian:

> Another evidence of progress in the right direction is the request made by several agents, on behalf of the Indians, that the kind of goods furnished to them may be changed from the blankets, bright-colored cloths, and various gewgaws, which have from time immemorial gone to make up invoices of Indian goods, to substantial garments, improved agricultural implements, etc.[144]

In 1867, Acting Commissioner Mix summarized the obstacles to Indian civilization as he saw them, and the means to overcome them.

> * * * mainly * * * his almost constant contact with the vicious, unscrupulous whites, who not only teach him their base ways, but defraud and rob him, and, often without cause, with as little compunction as they would experience in killing a dog, take even his life.[145]

Further

> * * * the Indian has no certainty as to the permanent possession of the land he occupies and which he is urged to improve, for he knows not how long he may be permitted to enjoy it. * * *[146] Evidently the remedy for these evils lies in securing to the Indians a permanent home in a country exclusively set apart for them, upon which no whites or citizens, except government agents and employes, shall be permitted to reside or intrude; in the granting to them allotments of land as individual property, to cultivate and improve; in the appointment of moral, honest, and efficient agents, with a fair compensation for services; and in the prompt fulfilment by the government of its treaty and other obligations, furnishing the necessary aid required for teaching, and placing them in the way of becoming self-sustaining and eventually independent of the government.[147]

He recommended to the Secretary the repeal of section 4 of the Act of July 26, 1866,[148] allowing any citizen "of proper character" to trade with Indians, since the Department had no authority to restrict the numbers, nor discretion to determine the fitness or ability of a trader.[149]

C. THE PERIOD FROM 1868 TO 1876

For the next few years, with Indians largely in the process of being settled or resettled on western reservations, commissioners concerned themselves primarily with problems of permanent policy and administration. Should treaty-making be abandoned? What was the proper role of the military? Should the Bureau of Indian Affairs be transferred back to the War Department?[150] How should the Indian Service be reorganized so as to overcome charges of dishonesty and inefficiency? What was the best technique for individualizing and controlling the Indian? What were the present rights and future prospects of the Indian?

Although Commissioner Parker in 1869 urged that treaties then in force be "promptly and faithfully executed," nevertheless he recommended, as Secretary Smith had in 1862,[151] that the whole policy of treaty-making be abandoned.

> * * * A treaty involves the idea of a compact between two or more sovereign powers, each possessing sufficient authority and force to compel a compliance with the obligations incurred. The Indian tribes of the United States are not sovereign nations, capable of making treaties, as none of them have an organized government of such inherent strength as would secure a faithful obedience of its people in the observance of compacts of this character. They are held to be the wards of the government, and the only title the law concedes to them to the lands they occupy or claim is a mere possessory one. But, because treaties have been made with them, generally for the extinguishment of their supposed absolute title to land inhabited by them, or over which they roam, they have

[137] Ibid., p. III.
[138] Ibid., pp. III, IV.
[139] Ibid., p. IV. See Chapter 7, sec. 9.
[140] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1865.
[141] Ibid., p. 2. Legislation along the lines proposed was enacted in 1874. Act of June 22, 1874, sec. 10, 18 Stat. 146, 177, 25 U. S. C. 87. This, in effect, strengthened the restrictions contained in section 14 of the Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 735, 738, R. S. § 2078, 25 U. S. C. 68. The Act of June 19, 1939, 53 Stat. 840, 25 U. S. C. 87a, modified these two prohibitory statutes to permit purchases for personal use by federal employees.
[142] By Act of April 20, 1818, 3 Stat. 461, agents' salaries varied from $1.200 to $1.800. and subagents' were fixed at $500. By Act of June 30. 1834. 4 Stat. 735. agents' salaries were fixed at $1,500, and subagents' at $750.
[143] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1865, pp. 2–3.
[144] Ibid., p. 4.
[145] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1867, p. 1.
[146] Ibid, p. 1.
[147] Ibid., p. 2.
[148] 14 Stat. 255, 280. R. S. § 2128.
[149] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1867, pp. 5–6.
[150] See sec. 1B, supra, for a discussion of that problem, and the recommendations of various commissioners and the Indian Peace Commission of 1867.
[151] See Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1862, p. 7, and supra.

become falsely impressed with the notion of national independence. It is time that this idea should be dispelled, and the government cease the cruel farce of thus dealing with its helpless and ignorant wards. Many good men, looking at this matter only from a Christian point of view, will perhaps say that the poor Indian has been greatly wronged and ill treated; that this whole country was once his, of which he has been despoiled, and that he has been driven from place to place until he has hardly left to him a spot where to lay his head. This indeed may be philanthropic and humane, but the stern letter of the law admits of no such conclusion, and great injury has been done by the government in deluding this people into the belief of their being independent sovereignties, while they were at the same time recognized only as its dependents and wards. As civilization advances and their possessions of land are required for settlement, such legislation should be granted to them as a wise, liberal, and just government ought to extend to subjects holding their dependent relation. * * *[152]

By the Act of March 3, 1871,[153] treaty-making was abandoned. However, agreements, approved by both Senate and House of Representatives, continued to be made. In 1873 Commissioner Edward P. Smith urged that even agreements cease.

> * * * We have in theory over sixty-five independent nations within our borders, with whom we have entered into treaty relations as being sovereign peoples; and at the same time the white agent is sent to control and supervise these foreign powers, and care for them as wards of the Government. This double condition of sovereignty and wardship involves increasing difficulties and absurdities, as the traditional chieftain, losing his hold upon his tribe, ceases to be distinguished for anything except for the lion's share of goods and moneys which the Government endeavors to send, through him, to his nominal subjects, and as the necessities of the Indians, pressed on every side by civilization, require more help and greater discrimination in the manner of distributing the tribal funds. So far, and as rapidly as possible, all recognition of Indians in any other relation than strictly as subjects of the Government should cease. To provide for this, radical legislation will be required.[154]

On the use of the military, official opinion varied. Commissioner Taylor (1868)[155] was strongly opposed; Commissioner Parker (1869),[156] himself a general, believed in its use, particularly for those Indians who failed to remove. In his 1870 report[157] he lamented the passage by Congress of an act[158] which "* * * prohibited the employment of army officers in any civil capacity * * *." Commissioner Francis A. Walker (also a general) in 1872[159] urged the use of the military to effect the "peace policy."[160]

> * * * Such a use of the military constitutes no abandonment of the "peace policy," and involves no disparagement of it. It was not to be expected—it was not in the nature of things—that the entire body of wild Indians should submit to be restrained in their Ishmaelitish proclivities without a struggle on the part of the more audacious to maintain their traditional freedom. * * *[161]

Commissioner Walker complained that his policy had been widely misunderstood and criticized by the press.

> * * * This misunderstanding in regard to the occasional use of force in making effective and universal the policy of peace, has led no small portion of the press of the country to treat the more vigorous application of the scourge to refractory Indians which has characterized the operations of the last three months as an abandonment of the peace policy itself, whereas it is, in fact, a legitimate and essential part of the original scheme which the Government has been endeavoring to carry out, with prospects of success never more bright and hopeful than to-day.[162]

In 1873, Commissioner Edward P. Smith urged that a military force be set up among the Sioux, notwithstanding treaty assurances to the contrary.

> Hitherto the military have refrained from going on this reservation because of the express terms of the treaty with the Sioux, in which it is agreed that no military force shall be brought over the line. I respectfully recommend that provision be made at once for placing at each of the Sioux reservations a military force sufficient to enable the agents to enforce respect for their authority, and to conduct agency affairs in an orderly manner.[163]

After many years of charges against Indian Service field personnel of dishonesty and inefficiency,[164] a new system of choosing agents was inaugurated in 1869 under President Grant.[165] Their nomination was for the most part delegated to various religious bodies active in missionary work, particularly the Society of Friends. The remaining agencies were filled by Army officers detailed for such duty,[166] until the Appropriation Act of July 15, 1870,[167] caused them to relinquish civil posts.

Commissioner Parker in 1869 and in 1870 reported the plan working well.[168] However, it was gradually abandoned and completely discontinued by the early eighties.[169]

On the question of the techniques for individualizing and controlling the Indians, commissioners differed somewhat, although all agreed basically on allotment of land in severalty as one of the major methods.

> * * * The policy of giving to every Indian a home that he can call his own is a wise one, as it induces a strong incentive to him to labor and make every effort in his power to better his condition. By the adoption, generally, of this plan on the part of the Government, the Indians would be more rapidly advanced in civilization than they would if the policy of allowing them to hold their land in common were continued.[170]
>
> * * * * * * A fundamental difference between barbarians and a civilized people is the difference between a herd and an individual. * * * The starting-point of indi-

[152] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1869, p. 6.

[153] 16 Stat. 544, 566, R. S. § 2079, 25 U. S. C. 71. See Chapter 3.

[154] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1873, p. 3.

[155] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1868, pp. 8–10.

[156] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1869, p. 5.

[157] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1870, pp. 9–10.

[158] Act of July 15, 1870, 16 Stat. 315, 319. See fn. 41, supra. By Act of July 13, 1892, c. 164, sec. 1, 27 Stat. 120; and Act of July 1, 1898, c. 545, sec. 1, 30 Stat. 571, 573, the President was given the power to detail Army officers for duty to Indian agencies. 25 U. S. C. 27.

[159] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1872.

[160] In 1867 (Act of July 20, 1867, 15 Stat. 17) the Indian Peace Commission was authorized by Congress to study the cause and cure for Indian wars. Their recommendations in 1868 (Report of January 7, 1868 to the President, in Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1868, pp. 26–50) were the basis for the new "peace policy" of the Government. See discussion sec. 1, supra.

[161] Rep. Comm. of Ind. Aff., 1872, p. 5.

[162] Ibid., p. 6.

[163] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1873, p. 6.

[164] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1869, p. 5.

[165] 1st Annual Message to Congress, December 6, 1869.

> I have attempted a new policy towards these wards of the nation * * *. The Society of Friends is well known as having succeeded in living in peace with the Indians in the early settlement of Pennsylvania, while their white neighbors of other sects in other sections were constantly embroiled. They are also known for their opposition to all strife, violence, and war, and are generally noted for their strict integrity and fair dealings. These considerations induced me to give the management of a few reservations of Indians to them and to throw the burden of the selection of agents upon the society itself * * *. For superintendents and agents not on the reservations, officers of the Army were selected. (Richardson. Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 1897, Vol. IX, pp. 3992–3993.)

According to Schmeckebier this policy was inaugurated by Grant to insure against opposition to his appointments by the Senate. (Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 54.)

[166] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1869, p. 5.

[167] 16 Stat. 315, 319. See fn. 157, supra.

[168] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1869, p. 5; Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1870, pp. 9–10.

[169] Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 55, fn. 92.

[170] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1870, p. 9. See Chapter 11, sec. 1.

vidualism for an Indian is the personal possession of his portion of the reservation.[171]

In 1870, Commissioner Parker reported, as an indication of Indian progress, that many were asking to have their land surveyed and allotted.[172]

In 1872, Commissioner Walker defended the "feeding" policy which had been in effect for 3 years.

> The Indian policy, so called, of the Government, is a policy, and it is not a policy, or rather it consists of two policies, entirely distinct, seeming, indeed, to be mutually inconsistent and to reflect each upon the other: the one regulating the treatment of the tribes which are potentially hostile, that is, whose hostility is only repressed just so long as, and so far as, they are supported in idleness by the Government; the other regulating the treatment of those tribes which, from traditional friendship, from numerical weakness, or by the force of their location, are either indisposed toward, or incapable of, resistance to the demands of the Government. * * *[173] It is, of course, hopelessly illogical that the expenditures of the Government should be proportioned not to the good but to the ill desert of the several tribes; that large bodies of Indians should be supported in entire indolence by the bounty of the Government simply because they are audacious and insolent, while well-disposed Indians are only assisted to self-maintenance, since it is known they will not fight. * * * And yet, for all this, the Government is right and its critics wrong; and the "Indian policy" is sound, sensible, and beneficent, because it reduces to the minimum the loss of life and property upon our frontier, and allows the freest development of our settlements and railways possible under the circumstances.[174]
>
> * * * * *
>
> There is no question of national dignity, be it remembered, involved in the treatment of savages by a civilized power. With wild men, as with wild beasts, the question whether in a given situation one shall fight, coax, or run, is a question merely of what is easiest and safest.[175]

Commissioner Walker discussed the function of the reservation as he saw it.

> * * * the Indians should be made as comfortable on, and as uncomfortable off, their reservations as it was in the power of the Government to make them; that such of them as went right should be protected and fed, and such as went wrong should be harassed and scourged without intermission. * * * Such a use of the strong arm of the Government is not war, but discipline.[176]
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * The reservation system affords the place for thus dealing with tribes and bands, without the access of influences inimical to peace and virtue. It is only necessary that Federal laws, judiciously framed to meet all the facts of the case, and enacted in season, before the Indians begin to scatter, shall place all the members of this race under a strict reformatory control by the agents of the Government. Especially is it essential that the right of the Government to keep Indians upon the reservations assigned to them, and to arrest and return them whenever they wander away, should be placed beyond dispute. * * *[177]

The problem of the consolidation and sale of surplus land on reservations had already appeared in 1872.

> The reservations granted heretofore have generally been proportioned, and rightly so, to the needs of the Indians in a roving state, with hunting and fishing as their chief means of subsistence, which condition implies the occupation of a territory far exceeding what could possibly be cultivated. As they change to agriculture, however rude and primitive at first, they tend to contract the limits of actual occupation. With proper administrative management the portions thus rendered available for cessation or sale can be so thrown together as in no way to impair the integrity of the reservation. Where this change has taken place, there can be no question of the expediency of such sale or cession. The Indian Office has always favored this course, and notwithstanding the somewhat questionable character of some of the resulting transactions, arising especially out of violent or fraudulent combinations to prevent a fair sale, it can be confidently affirmed that the advantage of the Indians has generally been subserved thereby.[178]

The present rights and the future prospects of the Indian appears to have concerned many commissioners.

Commissioner Taylor, in 1868, asked the question:

> Shall our Indians be civilized, and how?
>
> * * * Assuming that the government has a right, and that it is its duty to solve the Indian question definitely and decisively, it becomes necessary that it determine at once the best and speediest method of its solution, and then, armed with right, to act in the interest of both races.
>
> If might makes right, we are the strong and they the weak; and we would do no wrong to proceed by the cheapest and nearest route to the desired end, and could, therefore, justify ourselves in ignoring the natural as well as the conventional rights of the Indians, if they stand in the way, and, as their lawful masters, assign them their status and their tasks, or put them out of their own way and ours by extermination with the sword, starvation, or by any other method.
>
> If, however, they have rights as well as we, then clearly it is our duty as well as sound policy to so solve the question of their future relations to us and each other, as to secure their rights and promote their highest interest, in the simplest, easiest, and most economical way possible.
>
> But to assume they have no rights is to deny the fundamental principles of Christianity, as well as to contradict the whole theory upon which the government has uniformly acted towards them; we are therefore bound to respect their rights, and, if possible, make our interests harmonize with them. * * *[179]

Commissioner Walker, in 1872, answered the question in one way.

> It belongs not to a sanguine, but to a sober view of the situation, that three years will see the alternative of war eliminated from the Indian question, and the most powerful and hostile bands of to-day thrown in entire helplessness on the mercy of the Government. * * *
>
> * * * * *
>
> No one certainly will rejoice more heartily than the present Commissioner when the Indians of this country cease to be in a position to dictate, in any form or degree, to the Government; when, in fact, the last hostile tribe becomes reduced to the condition of suppliants for charity. * * *[180]

Commissioner John Q. Smith in 1876 answered the question in another way.

> * * * No new hunting-grounds remain, and the civilization or the utter destruction of the Indians is inevitable. The next twenty-five years are to determine the fate of a race. If they cannot be taught, and taught very soon, to accept the necessities of their situation and begin in earnest to provide for their own wants by labor in civilized pursuits, they are destined to speedy extinction.[181]
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * We have despoiled the Indians of their rich hunting-grounds, thereby depriving them of their ancient means of support. Ought we not and shall we not give them at

[171] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1873, p. 4.
[172] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1870, p. 9.
[173] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1872, p. 3.
[174] Ibid., p. 4.
[175] Ibid., p. 5.
[176] Ibid., p. 6.
[177] Ibid., pp. 11-12.
[178] Ibid., p. 13.
[179] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1868, p. 16.
[180] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1872, p. 9.
[181] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1876, p. VI.

least a secure home, and the cheap but priceless benefit of just and equitable laws?[182]

Along with the broad problems of administration and policy, were the problems of specific reform in legislation as inadequacies became apparent in laws governing intercourse and trade with the Indians, and in the extension of United States law and the jurisdiction of the courts over Indians. These specific reforms had been recommended for many years, the revision of the Intercourse Act of 1834[183] since 1853,[184] and law and order reform since at least 1862.[185]

In 1871 Acting Commissioner Clum wrote that the laws regulating trade > * * * are so defective as to fail to secure the Indians against the encroachments of the whites * * *. A revision of these laws is very much to be desired to meet the changed circumstances now surrounding the Indians, arising out of the building of railroads through their lands, the rapid advance of white settlements, and the claims and rights of squatters, miners, and prospecting parties.[186]

The request for reform in the administration of justice over the Indians was made in the report of the Board of Indian Commissioners for 1871;[187] it was reiterated in 1873[188] by Commissioner Edward P. Smith, who urged that agents and superintendents be given magisterial powers, and again in 1875, when he urged that authority be given > * * * to the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe for all tribes prepared, in his judgment, to adopt the same, an elective government, through which shall be administered all necessary police regulations of the reservation.[189]

Commissioner John Q. Smith recommended the > * * * Extension over them [the Indians] of United States law and the jurisdiction of United States courts.[190]

D. THE PERIOD FROM 1877 TO 1904

In 1877 Commissioner Hayt made seven specific recommendations for policy, that of a system of compulsory common schools being particularly noteworthy: (1) A code of laws for reservations and means for dispensing justice; (2) Indian police under which shall be vested in individuals and inalienable for twenty of land "* * * into farms of convenient size, the title to which shall be vested in individuals and inalienable for twenty years * * *"; (4) The establishment of a compulsory common school system, including industrial schools; (5) Free access to Indians of missionaries; (6) Insistence on labor in return for food and clothing; and (7) A steady concentration of the smaller bands on larger reservations.[191]

In 1880, Acting Commissioner Marble included statistical tables of population and amount and types of work accomplished during the year.[192] He reported extensively on educational advances, particularly the opening of new boarding schools.[193] "The importance of having at least one good boarding-school at each agency need not be argued."[194]

The system of Indian police, in operation less than 3 years, was reported to be working admirably with a force of 162 officers and 653 privates.[195]

The plea for a "uniform and perfect title to their lands, as a measure conducive in the highest degree to their present and future welfare" was again urged for the Indians.[196]

Commissioner Price, as a business man, was concerned with Indian administration and personnel.

> * * * Within the last year seven entire months were consumed in making such a change at one of the agencies, where any correct business man transacting his own business would have made the change in less than seven days. This is the fault of the law, and ought to be changed.[197]
>
> * * * * *
>
> I give it as my honest conviction as a business man after one year and a half of close observation, in a position where the chances for a correct knowledge of this question are better than in any other, that the true policy of the government is to pay Indian agents such compensation and place them under such regulations of law as will insure the services of first-class men. It is not enough that a man is honest; he must, in addition to this, be capable. He must be up to standard physically as well as morally and mentally. Men of this class are comparatively scarce, and as a rule cannot be had unless the compensation is equal to the service required. Low-priced men are not always the cheapest. A bad article is dear at any price. Paying a man as Indian agent $1,200 or $1,500, and expecting him to perform $3,000 or $4,000 worth of labor, is not economy, and in a large number of cases has proven to be the worst kind of extravagance.[198]

He urged increased appropriations for education, particularly for industrial schools.

> * * * If one million of dollars for educational purposes given now will save several millions in the future, it is wise economy to give that million at once, and not dole it out in small sums that do but little good.[199]

Commissioner Price departed from the accepted theory in Indian education of the superiority of boarding over day schools.[200]

> * * * It is as common a belief that the boarding should supersede the day school as it is that training-schools remote from the Indian country ought to be substituted for those located in the midst of the Indians. But I trust that the time is not far distant when a system of district schools will be established in Indian settlements, which will serve not only as centers of enlightenment for those neighborhoods, but will give suitable employment

---

[182] Ibid., p. XI. Commissioner Smith commends, as "* * * The only thing yet done by the Government * * * permanent and far-reaching * * * the dedication of the Indian Territory as the final home for the race." (P. XI.) See Chapter 23, sec. 5, on the throwing open of Indian Territory lands for settlement.

[183] Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729. See Chapter 16.

[184] See Rep. Comm. Ind. Affairs, 1853, pp. 261–262, and supra.

[185] See Rep. Comm. Ind. Affairs, 1862, p. 12, and supra.

[186] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1871, p. 6.

[187] Third Annual Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners, in Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1871, p. 16.

[188] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1873, pp. 4–5.

[189] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1875, p. 16.

[190] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1876, p. VII. See Chapter 7, sec. 9; Chapters 18 and 19.

[191] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1877, pp. 1–2.

[192] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1880, pp. III–IV.

[193] Ibid., pp. V–VI.

[194] Ibid., p. VI.

[195] Ibid., p. IX. Act of May 27, 1878, 20 Stat. 63, 86. Their duties involved discovery and arrest of thieves, action as truant officers, protection of annuities and property, prevention of depredations to timber and of the introduction of liquor, action as messengers and census takers, etc. (p. X).

[196] Ibid., p. XVI.

[197] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1882, p. V.

[198] Ibid., pp. V, VI. Commissioner E. P. Smith in his report for 1873 (pp. 9–10) had urged that salaries be increased to $2,000 or $2,500, depending on the remoteness of the reservation; Commissioner John Q. Smith in his report for 1876 (pp. III, IV) to $3,000; Commissioner E. A. Hayt in his report for 1877 (pp. 6–7) that salaries be scaled according to the number of Indians under an agent's jurisdiction Recommendations for increasing agents' salaries appear constantly in Commissioners' reports.

[199] Ibid., p. VII.

[200] See Chapter 12, sec. 2.

to returned students, especially the young women, for whom it is specially difficult to provide.[201]

* * * * *

The cost of maintaining an Indian pupil in a reservation boarding school may be set down as a little over $150 per annum; in a day school at about $30 per annum.[202]

In the matter of health, also, Commissioner Price had specific recommendations.

When the length of time (three or four years) which is required for the physician to familiarize himself with the language, habits, and mental peculiarities of Indians is taken into consideration, and also the diplomacy which is required to obtain and maintain their confidence, it is obvious that it is specially desirable to procure efficient and, if possible, permanent medical officers of pronounced moral and temperate habits, of great will power, capable of making good and enduring impressions on the Indians. It is detrimental to the service to be continually changing medical officers.

In connection with permament medical officers, a system should be inaugurated of caring for the blind, insane, and destitute aged Indians.[203]

The problem of freedmen in Indian Territory, pressing since the close of the Civil War, had not been solved by 1882.

The rights guaranteed to the freedmen in the Indian Territory by treaty stipulations have been ignored, and so far as their interests are involved the treaties themselves have been virtually set aside, both by the Indians and by the government.[204]

* * * * *

In this report of January 26, 1882, Agent Tufts states that—

It is unpopular in the Cherokee Nation to advocate a measure that provides for placing the colored man on an equality with Cherokees, and the politicians are civilized enough to do nothing that might lessen their chances for political success; hence until the sentiment shall undergo a revolution there will be no favorable action.

From the hesitancy heretofore shown by the nation to carry out in good faith toward the colored people simply what has been granted them by the treaty, I am convinced that the nation will not fix and settle the status of the colored people until a more peremptory demand is made on the nation to execute the conditions of their treaty respecting them.

Many of the colored people speak the Cherokee language, and having been brought up among Cherokees and accustomed to their ways, it would be a hardship to remove them from that country, and remaining in the nation, they should be accorded all their rights. Agent Tufts recommended the appointment of a commission to visit the agency with authority to hear evidence and determine the question whether the claimants were freedmen liberated by voluntary act of owner, or by law, or whether they were free colored persons and in the country at the commencement of the rebellion; and whether they were residents of the nation at the time of the treaty, or returned within six months thereafter—the findings of the commission to be submitted to the department for approval.[205]

With the discovery of valuable coal deposits in an Indian reservation in Arizona Territory, arose the problem of its extraction and removal. Commissioner Price felt that the Indians could not be prevailed upon to remove again, that the Government could not undertake to work the mines, that the Indians themselves were not capable technically of doing so, and even were they, they could not dispose of the coal since

* * * under existing law there is no authority for permitting the severance and removal from an Indian reservation, for purposes of sale or speculation, of any material attached to or forming a part of the realty, such as timber, coal, or other minerals.[206]

Commissioner Price therefore recommended a system of leasing.

After carefully considering the questions involved, this office became convinced that the most practicable solution of the matter would be the adoption of a system of leasing upon a royalty plan; and accordingly a draft of a joint resolution was prepared in this office and submitted to the department in April last with a view to securing the needful legislation therefore. It was believed that by this means a very large part of the annual expenditure for the support and care of the Indians of Arizona and New Mexico might be reimbursed to the government from the profit of the mines without hardship to consumers, and that the Indians themselves would be greatly benefited, not only by the example of industry set, but through the opportunity that would be afforded them to earn wages by their own labor.[207]

According to Commissioner Atkin's report for 1886,[208] the system of leasing grazing land had been tried on the Cheyenne and Arapaho Reservation unsuccessfully. By Presidential proclamation[209] the leases were declared null and void, and the cattle and cattlemen removed, much to the satisfaction of the Indians who

* * * no longer contemplate the monopoly of nine-tenths of their reservation by outsiders, but in place thereof they view with satisfaction their own fields of corn, and farms inclosed with fences, put up by their own labor, * * *.[210]

The system of leasing Indian lands was further complicated by a decision of the Attorney General to the effect that—

* * * the system of leasing Indian lands which has hitherto prevailed is illegal without the consent of Congress * * *.[211]

Commissioner Atkins recommended that the leasing system either be legalized, as his predecessor had recommended before him,[212] or abolished.[213]

If Congress would authorize Indians to dispose of their grass, or would take any definite action as to the policy which this office can legally pursue in regard to Indian grazing lands, it would materially lessen the perplexities and confusion which now pertain to the subject. Moreover, if some way could be adopted by which, under proper restrictions, the surplus grass on the several Indian reservations could be utilized with profit to the Indians, the annual appropriations needed to care for the Indians could be correspondingly and materially reduced.[214]

Of the general allotment bill, which had passed the Senate and was favorably reported in the House, Commissioner Atkins reported:

* * * As there seems to be no substantial opposition to this bill, it is hoped that it will become a law during the coming winter. Its passage will relieve this office of much embarrassment and enable it to make greater progress in [201] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1882, p. XXXV.

[202] Ibid., p. XL.
[203] Ibid., p. XLVIII. See Chapter 12, sec. 3.
[204] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1882, p. LV.
[205] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1882, p. LVII.
[206] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1882, p. XLIX. See Chapter 15, sec. 19.
[207] Ibid., p. XLIX.
[208] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1886.
[209] See Sen. Ex. Doc. 17, 48th Cong., 2d sess., vol. I, pt. I, 1885.
[210] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1886, p. XVIII.
[211] Ibid., p. XIX. 18 Op. A. G. 235 (1885).
[212] See Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff. (Hiram Price) 1882, p. XLIX, and supra.
[213] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1886, p. XIX.
[214] Ibid., p. XIX.

the important work of assisting the Indians to become individual owners of the soil by an indefeasible title.[215]

Of courts of Indian offenses which had been instituted at various agencies to try minor offenses, Commissioner Atkins wrote:

> These courts are also unquestionably a great assistance to the Indians in learning habits of self-government and in preparing themselves for citizenship. I am of the opinion that they should be placed upon a legal basis by an act of Congress authorizing their establishment, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. Their duties and jurisdiction could then be definitely determined and greater good accomplished.[216]

Commissioner Atkins expressed a hope with regard to traders which has not yet been realized.

> But it is earnestly hoped that the necessity for white traders upon the reservations will soon be superseded. Under the law the full-blood Indian is guaranteed the right to trade with the Indians of his tribe, without the restrictions imposed upon half-breeds and white traders. It is the constant aim and effort of the Indian Office to make the Indian self-reliant and self-sustaining, and if this policy is persevered in, with the aid of the educational advantages available at almost every agency, I cannot but believe that the Indians will at an early day acquire sufficient ability to manage the trading posts themselves and supply their people with such goods as they may need.[217]

In the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1888 one notes the beginnings of a problem which grew into major proportions in later years—the problem of the annuity roll.

> In this connection, I would suggest that action should be taken by Congress to confine the benefits arising under Indian treaties to those justly entitled thereto, by excluding from participation therein whites hereafter enrolled as Indians by adoption and also the descendants of whites and Indians beyond a certain degree.[218]

Of the application of the Allotment Act,[219] which had been in force for more than a year, Commissioner Oberly reports slow progress,[220] and considerable opposition.

> Considerable opposition to the allotment policy has been developed from two sources. Those who believe in the wisdom of tribal ownership, and in the policy of continuing the Indian in his aboriginal customs, habits, and independence, oppose it because it will eventually dissolve his tribal relations and cause his absorption into the body politic. On the other hand, those who expected that the severalty act would immediately open to public settlement long-coveted Indian lands, oppose it because they have learned that these expectations will not be realized.
>
> There is a third class of persons who are heartily in favor of allotting Indian lands, but who are apprehensive that, under the flexible terms of the allotment act, allotments may be forced upon Indians before they are ready to receive, use, and hold them. * * *[221]

Commissioner Oberly presents a detailed analysis of the status of Indian health[222]—the diseases prevalent among Indians, the scarcity of physicians[223] and nurses, and the need for a hospital at every agency.

In his report on the operation of the contract system of purchasing Indian supplies, whereby numerous contractors submit samples which the Government is forced to examine, he recommends that the Indian Office fix the standard sample on which bids are to be received, thus assuring uniformity of quality, saving time, and eliminating charges of favoritism.[224]

Since Commissioner Oberly had been United States Civil Service Commissioner[225] as well as Superintendent of Indian Schools,[226] he was particularly interested in incorporating school employees under Civil Service, to correct the "party spoils system" method of appointment and dismissal.

> * * * for no matter how desirous the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Superintendent of Indian Schools may be to obtain good material for the service, and no matter how conscientiously both may endeavor to improve its condition, they will, so long as this system is endured, be obstructed in all such efforts by clamorous demands that the places on Indian reservations, and in the schools not on reservations, shall be dispensed as rewards for partisan activity. In short, the Commissioner and Superintendent, with 1,200 places (exclusive of Indians) at their disposal, can not give to the agency and the school competent employes until after they shall have secured protection from partisan pressure and personal solicitation; and such protection can be afforded to them only by the provisions of the civil-service act of 1883. As United States Civil Service Commissioner I gave to this subject much consideration, and I have no doubt that the provisions of that act could be applied to the Indian service, and, that by their application thereto, under wise rules promulgated by the President, the cause of Indian civilization would be advanced many years. * * *[227]

Commissioner Thomas J. Morgan entered upon his duties on July 1, 1889, and made his first report in October of that year. He offers, until such time as he may acquaint himself > * * * by personal observation with the practical workings of the Indian field-service * * * a few simple, well-defined, and strongly cherished convictions:

>
> First.—The anomalous position heretofore occupied by the Indians in this country can not much longer be maintained. The reservation system belongs to a "vanishing state of things" and must soon cease to exist.
>
> Second.—The logic of events demands the absorption of the Indians into our national life, not as Indians, but as American citizens.
>
> Third.—As soon as a wise conservatism will warrant it, the relations of the Indians to the Government must rest solely upon the full recognition of their individuality. Each Indian must be treated as a man, be allowed a man's rights and privileges, and be held to the performance of a man's obligations. Each Indian is entitled to his proper share of the inherited wealth of the tribe, and to the protection of the courts in his "life, liberty, and

---

[215] Ibid., p. XX. In an earlier report (1885) Commissioner Atkins had recommended that "When the Indians have taken their lands in severalty in sufficient quantities * * *," the remainder should be purchased by the Government and thrown open for homesteading.

> The money paid by the Government for their lands should be held in trust in 5 percent bonds, to be invested as Congress may provide for the education, civilization, and material development and advancement of the red race, reserving for each tribe its own money. (Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff,. 1885, p IV.)

This became part of the General Allotment Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 25 U. S. C. 331 et seq. and was the basis of trust-fund reports of succeeding commissioners. For a discussion of the background of the allotment system, see Chapter 11, sec. 1.

[216] Ibid., p. XXVII. The courts of Indian offenses were established in 1882 according to the Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1889 (p. 26).

[217] Ibid., p. XL. See Chapter 16.

[218] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff. (John H. Oberly), 1888, p. XXXIII.

[219] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 338, 25 U. S. C. 331, et seq.

[220] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1888, p. XXXVII. The necessity for surveying prior to allotment, and the late date at which the appropriation bill passed are the reasons given.

[221] Ibid., pp. XXXVIII–XXXIX. Cf. report of the previous commissioner, Atkins, in 1886, supra, of "* * * no substantial opposition to this bill * * *." (P. XX.)

[222] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1888, pp. XXXIV–XXXV.

[223] There were 81 physicians for more than 200,000 Indians—approximately 1 for every 2,500 Indians.

[224] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1888, pp. LXXXI, LXXXII.

[225] Ibid., p. LXXXV. From April 17, 1886, to October 10, 1888, according to the Civil Service Commission official files.

[226] Ibid., p. LXXXIV. From 1880 to 1886, according to Indian Office Library files.

[227] Ibid., p. LXXXV.

pursuit of happiness." He is not entitled to be supported in idleness.

Fourth.—The Indians must conform to "the white man's ways," peaceably if they will, forcibly if they must. They must adjust themselves to their environment, and conform their mode of living substantially to our civilization. This civilization may not be the best possible, but it is the best the Indians can get. They can not escape it, and must either conform to it or be crushed by it.

Fifth.—The paramount duty of the hour is to prepare the rising generation of Indians for the new order of things thus forced upon them. A comprehensive system of education modeled after the American public-school system, but adapted to the special exigencies of the Indian youth, embracing all persons of school age, compulsory in its demands and uniformly administered, should be developed as rapidly as possible.

Sixth.—The tribal relations should be broken up, socialism destroyed, and the family and the autonomy of the individual substituted. The allotment of lands in severalty, the establishment of local courts and police, the development of a personal sense of independence, and the universal adoption of the English language are means to this end.

Seventh.—In the administration of Indian affairs there is need and opportunity for the exercise of the same qualities demanded in any other great administration—integrity, justice, patience, and good sense. Dishonesty, injustice, favoritism, and incompetency have no place here any more than elsewhere in the Government.

Eighth.—The chief thing to be considered in the administration of this office is the character of the men and women employed to carry out the designs of the Government. The best system may be perverted to bad ends by incompetent or dishonest persons employed to carry it into execution while a very bad system may yield good results if wisely and honestly administered.[228]

In 1890, Commissioner Morgan made a very detailed report (144 pp.) of the duties, difficulties, hopes, and improvements of his administration.[229] One of the chief difficulties was lack of personnel. A chief clerk, solicitor, and medical expert for the office were urged, in addition to other clerical help.[230] Agents' salaries were still too low for adequate performance.[231]

Another difficulty was the whole reservation policy.

> The entire system of dealing with them [the Indians] is vicious, involving, as it does, the installing of agents, with semi-despotic power over ignorant, superstitious, and helpless subjects; the keeping of thousands of them on reservations practically as prisoners, isolated from civilized life and dominated by fear and force; the issue of rations and annuities, which inevitably tends to breed pauperism; the disbursement of millions of dollars worth of supplies by contract, which invites fraud; the maintenance of a system of licensed trade, which stimulates cupidity and extortion, etc.[232]

Commissioner Morgan looked with hope on > * * * the settled policy of the Government to break up reservations, destroy tribal relations, settle Indians upon their own homesteads, incorporate them into the national life, and deal with them not as nations or tribes or bands, but as individual citizens. The American Indian is to become the Indian American. * * *[233]

The rapid process of individualizing the Indian, Commissioner Morgan felt, was best indicated by the reduction of reservations.[234] More than 17,400,000 acres, or about one-seventh of all Indian land had been acquired by the Government during the year.[235] > * * * the growing recognition on the part of Western people that the Indians of their respective States and Territories are to remain permanently and become absorbed into the population as citizens. * * *

Commissioner Morgan reported:

>
> * * * * *
>
> There is also a growing popular recognition of the fact that it is the duty of the Government, and of the several States where they are located, to make ample provision for the secular and industrial education of the rising generation, * *.[236]

Commissioner Morgan refused to grant further licenses for Indians to leave the reservation for the purpose of travel with "Wild West" shows on the grounds of the demoralizing influence.[237]

"* * * I consider the payment of cash to Indians," Commissioner Morgan wrote, "except in return for service rendered or labor performed for themselves or their people, as of very little real benefit in a majority of cases * * *."[238]

In the matter of traders, the policy of the office was to permit at least two on every reservation.

> Competition within the reservation, in addition to that growing up outside, is fostered by licensing on each reserve as many traders as practicable.[239]

Commissioner Browning, in 1895, reports progress, particularly in the education and the employment of the Indians.

> * * * a large increase has been made in the number of Indian employees, and in filling positions at agencies and schools Indians have been given the preference for appointment when found competent to do the work required.[240]

In education, opposition from the older Indians appears to have lessened.[241] Enrollment and school attendance increased.

> * * * without resort to coercion even to the extent allowed by law. * * * I have refrained from using such means, preferring the better course of moral suasion and convincing arguments, and finding them ultimately effective. It gives me pleasure to note the success of such methods, * * *.[242]

---

[228] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1889, pp. 3–4.

[229] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1890.

[230] Ibid., pp. IV–V. See sec. 3B infra.

[231] Ibid., pp. CXVIII–CXIX. Salaries ranged from $800 to $2,200, and averaged $1,533. See fn. 142, supra.

[232] Ibid., p. V.

[233] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1890, p. VI. For an index of prevailing policy on allotment versus tribal ownership, see the Act of March 3, 1893, 27 Stat. 557, 561 (Kickapoo).

[234] Ibid., p. VI.

[235] Ibid., p. XXXIX. Of the reduction of Indian-owned lands Commissioner Morgan felt constrained to say:

> This might seem like a somewhat rapid reduction of the landed estate of the Indians, but when it is considered that for the most part the land relinquished was not being used for any purpose whatever, that scarcely any of it was in cultivation, that the Indians did not need it and would not be likely to need it at any future time, and that they were, as, is believed, reasonably well paid for it, the matter assumes quite a different aspect. The sooner the tribal relations are broken up and the reservation system done away with the better it will be for all concerned. If there were no other reason for this change, the fact that individual ownership of property is the universal custom among the civilized people of this country would be a sufficient reason for urging the handful of Indians to adopt it. (P. XXXIX.)

[236] Ibid., pp. VI–VII.

[237] Ibid., pp. VIII, LVII. By letter of August 4, 1890, the Secretary of the Interior directed that no more licenses be granted. (Ibid., p. LVII.) On the issuance of passes to Indians leaving a reservation, see Chapter 8, sec. 10A(2).

[238] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1890, p. CXVIII.

[239] Ibid., p. LX. However, Commissioner Morgan felt the whole license system was archaic, "* * * a relic of the old system of considering an Indian as a ward, a reservation as a corral, and a tradership as a golden opportunity for plunder and profit." (Ibid., p. LIX.)

[240] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1895, p. 1.

[241] Ibid., p. 3.

[242] Ibid., p. 4.

Commissioner Browning reports in detail on the leasing of Indian lands. The Act of February 28, 1891,[243] authorized the leasing of unalloted or tribal lands, and allotted lands where age or disability of allottee warrants it. By Act of August 15, 1894,[244] and later acts these leasing statutes were broadened.

On this point, Commissioner Browning stated:

> * * * the indiscriminate leasing of allotments will not be permitted. * * * the indiscriminate leasing of allotments would defeat the very purpose for which they were made. * * *[245]

Commissioner Jones,[246] like his predecessor, reports progress in all fields, follows a statistical pattern of summarizing, and offers accompanying papers in support. The activity of the Bureau of Indian Affairs centered mainly about education; allotment and the problems arising therefrom—leasing, homesteading, surveying; the sale of liquor; railroads; and disturbances on reservations.

E. THE PERIOD FROM 1905 TO 1928

Commissioner Francis E. Leupp, in his first report in 1905, presents his outlines of an Indian policy as "* * * one of the fruits of my twenty years' study of the Indian face to face and in his home, as well as of his past and present environment * * *."[247]

The Indian, says Commissioner Leupp, > * * * will never be judged aright till we learn to measure him by his own standards, as we whites would wish to be measured if some more powerful race were to usurp dominion over us.[248]

Commissioner Leupp has various recommendations for a new Indian policy—in education, in individualizing Indian land and money, in weaning the Indian from the licensed trader, in making him a part of his community.[249]

To carry out this policy,

> * * * our main hope lies with the youthful generation * * *. The task we must set ourselves is to win over the Indian children by sympathetic interest and unobtrusive guidance. It is a great mistake to try, as many good persons of bad judgment have tried, to start the little ones in the path of civilization by snapping all the ties of affection between them and their parents, and teaching them to despise the aged and non-progressive members of their families. * * *[250]

Manual training is the basis of Commissioner Leupp's educational policy. He would limit the ordinary Indian boy scholastically to enough of the "3 R's" so that > * * * he can read the simple English of the local newspaper, can write a short letter which is intelligible though maybe ill-spelled, and knows enough of figures to discover whether the storekeeper is cheating him. * * *[251]

Of the policy of individualizing the Indian through division of tribal lands and tribal funds, Commissioner Leupp says:

> * * * it is our duty to set him upon his feet and sever forever the ties which bind him either to his tribe, in the communal sense, or to the Government. This principle must become operative in respect to both land and money. * * *[252] Thanks to the late Senator Henry L. Dawes of Massachusetts, we have for eighteen years been individualizing the Indian as an owner of real estate by breaking up, one at a time, the reservations set apart for whole tribes and establishing each Indian as a separate landholder on his own account. Thanks to Representative John F. Lacey of Iowa, I hope that we shall soon be making the same sort of division of the tribal funds.[253]

In order that the Indian might rapidly become a member of his community instead of a "necessary nuisance,"[254] Commissioner Leupp would encourage him to trade in local market towns; he would have Indian money deposited in local banks; he would teach him to shop competitively instead of with the obsolescent licensed trader.

In 1908, Commissioner Leupp reports the success of his plan > * * * for systematic cooperation between various departments and bureaus of the Government, so as to get rid of the "wheels within wheels" which are so grave a source of waste in administration.[255]

The Reclamation Service, Geological Survey, and Forest Service in the Department of the Interior, and the Bureaus of Plant Industry and Animal Industry in the Department of Agriculture cooperated with the Bureau of Indian Affairs on specific projects of common interest.[256]

In 1911, Commissioner Valentine reports individual Indian money as a source of both good and harm. It had been used for houses, farm repairs, etc., helping to quicken industrial development of the Indians.[257] It had also caused traders to inculcate extravagant habits in the possessors of funds, and caused a great increase in indebtedness.[258] He recommends a continuance of the policy of "liberal supervision" over Indian funds by superintendents.[259]

---

[243] Sec. 3, 26 Stat. 794, 795 partly embodied in 25 U. S. C. 397. See Chapter 15, sec. 19, Chapter 11, sec. 5.

[244] 28 Stat. 286, 305. See Chapter 15, sec. 19, Chapter 11, secs. 1C and 5.

[245] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1895, p. 34.

[246] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1897.

[247] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1905, p. 1. Many of Commissioner Leupp's views on Indian affairs are set forth in The Indian and His Problem (1910).

[248] Ibid., p. 1. To illustrate his point, Commissioner Leupp goes on to say:

> Suppose, a few centuries ago, an absolutely alien people like the Chinese had invaded our shores and driven the white colonists before them to districts more and more isolated, destroyed the industries on which they had always subsisted, and crowned all by disarming them and penning them on various tracts of land where they could be fed and clothed and cared for at no cost to themselves, to what condition would the white Americans of today have been reduced? In spite of their vigorous ancestry they would surely have lapsed into barbarism and become pauperized. No race on earth could overcome, with forces evolved from within themselves, the effect of such treatment. That our red brethren have not been wholly ruined by it is the best proof we could ask of the sturdy traits of character inherent in them. (P. 2.)

[249] Ibid., pp. 3–5.

[250] Ibid., p. 2.

[251] Ibid., p. 3. Commissioner Leupp would have a girl trained in the domestic arts necessary for frontier life—cooking, sewing, washing, and ironing (p. 3).

[252] Ibid., p. 3.

[253] Ibid., p. 4. Two years later Congress enacted legislation providing for the breaking up of tribal funds. Act of March 2, 1907, 34 Stat. 1221, 25 U. S. C. 119. See Chapter 15, sec. 23B; Chapter 10, sec. 4; Chapter 9, sec. 6.

[254] Ibid., p. 4.

[255] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1908, p. 2. See sec. 3, infra, for a discussion of the extensive cooperation between bureaus and departments that has been effected.

[256] Ibid., pp. 2–9 The joint projects were the result either of direct approach between departments, or specific legislation. E. g., the Act of May 30, 1908, 35 Stat. 558 directed the Secretary of the Interior to cause an examination of the lands on the Fort Peck Reservation to be made by Reclamation Service and Geological Survey (p. 3). See sec. 3C, infra, and Chapter 12, sec. 7.

[257] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1911, p. 21.

[258] Ibid., p. 22.

[259] Ibid., p. 21.

Various amendments [260] to the Allotment Act permitting alienation had been passed, some causing difficulty. The Act of June 25, 1910,[261] requiring that the Secretary determine the heirs of deceased allottees and issue patents in fee entailed > * * * a vast amount of work; many allotments are now of 20 years' standing; estates are contested; and the questions of law, and particularly of fact, become extremely difficult, largely through difficulty in obtaining Indian testimony of value. As allotments have been made on 55 reservations, and upon the Winnebago Reservation alone—one of the smaller reservations—there are 600 heirship cases, the work to be done under this act will become one of the greater tasks of the office. * * *[262]

The leasing system, in general operation since 1891 "* * * raises some of the gravest questions of policy with which the Indian Office has to deal." [263] Commissioner Valentine analyzes the cases where leasing has been of real value to the Indian—where the Indian is already farming as much as his capital and help permit; where the Indian has chosen some other industrial pursuit than farming; where he is ill or otherwise incapacitated.[264] For the most part, however, "* * * leasing as it has been practiced is * * * a positive detriment to the Indians. * * * a steady rental from his land is one of the strongest incentives not to begin to work." [265]

Commissioner Valentine reports the result of investigation into the status of "State" Indians—Indians who have long been more or less independent of the Federal Government.[266]

> * * * It is noteworthy that in many cases these Indians have worked out for themselves, with some assistance from their States, problems which the service has still to meet in other parts of the field.[267]

Although, by the Act of May 8, 1906,[268] the Secretary of the Interior was given the power, before the expiration of the 25-year trust period, to issue a patent in fee "whenever he shall be satisfied that any Indian allottee is competent and capable of managing his or her affairs * * *," a conservative policy was followed.[269] Each application had to be considered on its merits, and was accompanied by a report of the superintendent. However, even with this conservative policy, during the first 3 years of the law's operation, 60 percent of the patentees disposed of their land and its proceeds.[270]

Commissioner Valentine, therefore, inaugurated a policy of requiring more rigid proof of competency, and superintendents were required to answer more specific questions.[271] In his report for 1911, he sums up his policy thus:

> * * * I am opposed to granting patents in fee unless circumstances clearly show that a title in fee will be of undoubted advantage to the applicant. * * * In the face of existing evidences of carelessness and incompetence any liberal policy of giving patents in fee would be utterly at cross-purposes with the other efforts of the Government to encourage industry, thrift, and independence.[272]

In 1917, under Commissioner Cato Sells,[273] a more drastic policy was inaugurated.

> Broadly speaking, a policy of greater liberalism will henceforth prevail in Indian administration to the end that every Indian, as soon as he has been determined to be as competent to transact his own business as the average white man, shall be given full control of his property and have all his lands and moneys turned over to him, after which he will no longer be a ward of the Government.
>
> Pursuant to this policy, the following rules shall be observed:
>
> 1. Patents in fee.—To all able-bodied adult Indians of less than one-half Indian blood, there will be given as far as may be under the law full and complete control of all their property. Patents in fee shall be issued to all adult Indians of one-half or more Indian blood who may, after careful investigation, be found competent, provided, that where deemed advisable patents in fee shall be withheld for not to exceed 40 acres as a home.
>
> Indian students, when they are 21 years of age, or over, who complete the full course of instruction in the Government schools, receive diplomas and have demonstrated competency will be so declared.
>
> 2. Sale of lands.—A liberal ruling will be adopted in the matter of passing upon applications for the sale of inherited Indian lands where the applicants retain other lands and the proceeds are to be used to improve the homesteads or for other equally good purposes. A more liberal ruling than has hitherto prevailed will hereafter be followed with regard to the applications of noncompetent Indians for the sale of their lands where they are old and feeble and need the proceeds for their support.
>
> 3. Certificates of competency.—The rules which are made to apply in the granting of patents in fee and the sale of lands will be made equally applicable in the matter of issuing certificates of competency.
>
> 4. Individual Indian moneys.—Indians will be given unrestricted control of all their individual Indian moneys upon issuance of patents in fee or certificates of competency. Strict limitations will not be placed upon the use of funds of the old, the indigent, and the invalid.
>
> 5. Pro rata shares—trust funds.—As speedily as possible their pro rata shares in tribal trust or other funds shall be paid to all Indians who have been declared competent, unless the legal status of such funds prevents. Where practicable the pro rata shares of incompetent Indians will be withdrawn from the Treasury and placed in banks to their individual credit.
>
> * * * * *
>
> This is a new and far-reaching declaration of policy. It means the dawn of a new era in Indian administration. It means that the competent Indian will no longer be treated as half ward and half citizen. It means reduced appropriations by the Government and more self-respect and independence for the Indian. It means the ultimate absorption of the Indian race into the body politic of the Nation. It means, in short, the beginning of the end of the Indian problem.[274]

Competency commissions were set up, and superintendents were requested to furnish—> * * * a list of all Indians of one-half or less Indian blood, who are able-bodied and mentally competent,

[260] See Chapter 5, secs. 11B and 11C. And cf. Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1911, p. 26.

[261] 36 Stat. 855. See Chapter 5, sec. 11C.

[262] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1911, p. 26.

[263] Ibid., p. 26. See Chapter 11, sec. 5 and Chapter 15, sec. 19.

[264] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1911, pp. 26–27.

[265] Ibid., p. 27.

[266] E. g. the Catawba Indians of South Carolina, over whom the State of South Carolina had assumed sovereign rights without federal objection. It had treated with the Indians since 1763, had granted them a reservation and had attempted to extinguish their title in 1840. The Alabama Indians in Texas lived on land granted to them conditionally by the state about 1850. Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1911, pp. 46, 47.

[267] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1911, p. 46.

[268] 34 Stat. 182, 183, generally known as the Burke Act. See Chapter 5, sec. 11B.

[269] Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 150–151.

[270] Ibid., p. 151.

[271] According to Schmeckebier (op. cit., p. 151), between 1909 and 1912, 3,400 applications for patents were approved, and approximately 2,000 denied.

[272] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1911, pp. 22–23.

[273] Cato Sells was Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 8 years under President Wilson (from 1913 to 1921), the first Commissioner to hold office for that length of time.

[274] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1917, pp. 3–4, declaration of policy of April 17, 1917. (Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 152–153.) From 1917 to 1920, 10,956 fee simple patents were issued, as compared with 9,894 from 1906 to 1916. (Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 154. Also Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1920, p. 8.)

267785—41——4

twenty-one years of age or over, together with a description of land allotted to said Indians, and the number of the allotment. It is intended to issue patents in fee simple to such Indians.[275]

The question of Indian citizenship became prominent after Indian participation in the World War.[276] In reply to critics, Commissioner Sells wrote in 1920:

> I have, however, gone further and taken the position that the citizenship of Indians should not be based upon their ownership of lands, tribal or in severalty, in trust or in fee, but upon the fact that they are real Americans, and favorable report has been made on a bill introduced in Congress having for its purpose the conferring of citizenship on all Indians, but retaining control of the estates of incompetents.[277]

Commissioner Sells adopted the policy with respect to individual Indian money of paying it directly to competent adult Indians without deposit, or having it disbursed in large sums by the superintendents from funds deposited under their supervision.[278]

In 1921, with a change in administration, the new commissioner[279] declared:

> This practice, however [of issuing patents in fee to Indians of one-half or less Indian blood without any further proof of competency], has been discontinued, and in all cases involving the issuance of patents to Indians, the practice is now to require a formal application and proof of competency.[280]

The result of the shift in policy is clear from the following tabulation of patents issued from 1921 to 1926:[281]

Fiscal year:
1921	1,692
1922	911
1923	625
1924	913
1925	451
1926	322

In his brief report for 1922, Commissioner Burke devotes a considerable portion to education.

> In the education of the Indian youth lies the hope of the future generations of the American Indian. In this time, when it is so essential to practice economy in every possible way, it should be realized that the child who is allowed to grow up in this country without being taught English and manual skill in some useful occupation is always in danger of becoming a liability. It is false economy to neglect the education of any children.[282]

An industrial survey of all the reservations, based on a house-to-house canvass of Indian families, was inaugurated > * * * to ascertain their condition, needs, and resources, with the view to organizing the work of the reservation service so that each family will make the best use of its resources. * * *[283]

The industrial survey was to form the basis of a more comprehensive one for each reservation, embracing the needs—for health, education, housing, sanitation, social welfare on the one hand, and the resources—both tribal and individual on the other. The purpose of such a survey would be "to formulate for each reservation a definite program or policy which may be followed for such term of years as will place the Indians on a self-supporting basis."[284]

Increasing cooperation with Federal health agencies, as well as with state, local, and voluntary agencies, is noted during Commissioner Burke's administration.[285]

> It is hoped that closer cooperation may be established between States having Indian populations and the Federal Government in dealing with questions of education, health, and law enforcement. Probably States should ultimately assume complete responsibility for the Indians within their borders, but pending that time, there is much to be done by the Federal service.[286]

F. THE PERIOD FROM 1929 TO 1939

The survey of the social and economic conditions of the Indians, begun at the invitation of the Interior Department in 1926 by the Institute for Government Research,[287] was completed in 1928.

The publication of this report helped to inaugurate a new era in the Indian Service. The criticisms and recommendations contained in the report commanded the attention of the Bureau,[288] as well as the general public. The report raised serious doubts as to the wisdom of such established Indian policies as that which had developed around the allotment problem. Of the policy of individual allotment, the report declared:

> * * * Not accompanied by adequate instruction in the use of property, it has largely failed in the accomplishment of what was expected of it. It has resulted in much loss of land and an enormous increase in the details of administration without a compensating advance in the economic ability of the Indians. The difficult problem of inheritance is one of its results. * * * (P. 41.)

Even more serious doubts were raised as to the efficiency and adequacy of the public services rendered by the Indian Bureau. On the question of health, the survey reported:

> The health of the Indians as compared with that of the general population is bad. (P. 3.)
> * * * For some years it has been customary to speak of the Indian medical service as being organized for public health work, yet the fundamentals of sound public health work are still lacking. (P. 190.)

---

[275] Letter of March 7, 1919, to superintendents in Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 153–154. This liberal policy of Commissioner Sells under the secretaryship of Franklin K. Lane has resulted in litigation based on forced allotments and sale of land for taxes, which is still one of the chief concerns of the Department of Justice. See Chapter 11.

[276] By Act of November 6, 1919, 41 Stat. 350, 8 U. S. C. 3, citizenship had been made available to Indian participants in the World War, honorably discharged, on declaration of courts of competent jurisdiction. See Chapter 8, sec. 2.

[277] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1920, p. 8. By Act of June 2, 1924, c. 233. 43 Stat. 253, 8 U. S. C. 3, 173, such general citizenship was granted. See Chapter 8, sec. 2.

[278] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1920, p. 50.

[279] Charles H. Burke became the new Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and served for more than 8 years under 2 Presidents. The reports again become brief summaries as they were at the beginning of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in 1824.

[280] Rep Comm. Ind. Aff., 1921. p. 23.

[281] Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 154.

[282] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1922, p. 7.

[283] Ibid., p. 11.

[284] Ibid., p. 11. That program was later followed in the establishment of a unit of the Soil Conservation Service, known as Technical Cooperation, Bureau of Indian Affairs (TC–BIA), in November 1935. The purpose of the TC–BIA is to make such surveys and recommendations for each reservation, in collaboration with the Soil Conservation Service.

[285] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1928, p. 1.

[286] Ibid., 1928, p. 7.

[287] Meriam, Problem of Indian Administration (1928). In a publication of the American Indian Defense Association (American Indian Life, Bulletin No. 12, June 1928, p. 6) the survey was evaluated.

> The report of the Institute for Government Research is the most important single document in Indian Affairs since Helen Hunt Jackson's "The Century of Dishonor" published 45 years ago. It contains three sections which intrinsically are very fine. (Health, Education, and Women and Family and Community Life.) Its 847 pages of text are a result of team-work between ten specialists. The studied moderation of its language; the avoidance of a suggestion even as to where responsibility shall be placed; the omission (save in regard to health and education) of most of the facts which give a quality of sinister deliberateness to the wrongs suffered by Indians; its nearly total avoidance of those skeleton closets, the handling of individual Indian trust moneys and reimbursable indebtedness: these qualities of the report increase its convincingness and usefulness.

[288] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1928, pp. 4–7.

> Special hospital equipment, such as X-ray, clinical laboratory, and special treatment facilities is generally lacking. (P. 282.)
>
> No sanatorium in the Indian Service meets the minimum requirements of the American Sanatorium Association. (P. 287.)
>
> The hospitals, sanatoria, and sanatorium schools maintained by the Service, despite a few exceptions, must be generally characterized as lacking in personnel, equipment, management, and design. (P. 9.)

On the subject of education, the survey was scarcely less critical.

> The work of the government directed toward the education and advancement of the Indian himself, as distinguished from the control and conservation of his property, is largely ineffective. (P. 8.)
>
> The survey staff finds itself obliged to say frankly and unequivocally that the provisions for the care of Indian children in boarding schools are grossly inadequate. (P. 11.)

On the economic problems of the Indians, the survey did much to overthrow the popular impression, based largely on the publicity given to a few "oil" Indians, that the Indians generally occupied a favored economic position:

> An overwhelming majority of the Indians are poor, even extremely poor, and they are not adjusted to the economic and social system of the dominant white civilization. (P. 3.)
>
> The prevailing living conditions among the great majority of the Indians are conducive to the development and spread of disease. (P. 3.)
>
> Even under the best conditions it is doubtful whether a well rounded program of economic advancement framed with due consideration of the natural resources of the reservation has anywhere been thoroughly tried out. The Indians often say that programs change with superintendents. Under the poorest administration there is little evidence of anything which could be termed an economic program. (P. 14.)

Of the general social objectives of Indian administration, the survey had this to say:

> The Indian Service has not appreciated the fundamental importance of family life and community activities in the social and economic development of a people. The tendency has been rather toward weakening Indian family life and community activities than toward strengthening them. (P. 15.)

On the question of law and order, the survey reported:

> Most notable is the confusion that exists as to legal jurisdiction over the restricted Indians in such important matters as crimes and misdemeanors and domestic relations. The act of Congress providing for the punishment of eight major crimes applies to the restricted Indians on tribal lands and restricted allotments, and cases of this character come under the unquestioned jurisdiction of the United States courts. Laws respecting the sale of liquor to Indians and some other special matters have been passed, and again jurisdiction is clear. For the great body of other crimes and misdemeanors the situation is highly unsatisfactory. (Pp. 16–17.)

The positive recommendations of the survey, which have greatly influenced the policy of the Indian Bureau since 1928,[289] stressed the need for a comprehensive educational program designed to meet the problems of reservation life, the need for sustained and coordinated economic planning and development, the need for a strengthened, more efficient and better paid personnel, the encouragement of Indian use of Indian lands, the strengthening of Indian community life, the clarification of confusions in the Indian law and order situation, and the final settlement of outstanding legal claims.[290]

Commissioner Rhoads,[291] like his predecessor, devotes a good part of his reports to education, particularly to federal-state relations.[292] In 1929 he reports:

> * * * The States and the local public-school districts appear to be generally in sympathy with the plan of education by the States, conditioned, however, upon such financial assistance as they need and as the Federal Government can offer. * * *[293]

In 1931 Commissioner Rhoads reiterates:

> * * * Indian education is in no sense solely a Federal problem, but a State and local problem as well. When Congress in 1924 made all Indian citizens it served notice that Indians could no longer be overlooked in the citizenry of any State.[294]

In 1932, Commissioner Rhoads states:

> The most significant feature of the year in Indian education was the determined effort to make the change from boarding school attendance to local day or public school attendance for Indian children.[295]

This was in keeping with the new educational policy of providing the Indian's education "* * * in his own community setting."[296]

Throughout the reports[297] of recent commissioners appears the title "Additional lands for Indian use," one result of the Allotment Act. In some cases tribal funds are used on a reimbursable plan for such purchases.[298]

Commissioner Collier in his first report in 1933 discusses the four main lines along which his policy is to be directed: Indian lands, Indian education, Indians in Indian Service, and reorganization of the Indian Service.

> (1) Indian lands.—The allotment system has enormously cut down the Indian landholdings and has rendered many areas, still owned by Indians, practically unavailable for Indian use. The system must be revised both as a matter of law and of practical effect. Allotted lands must be consolidated into tribal or corporate ownership with individual tenure, and new lands must be acquired for the 90,000 Indians who are landless at the present time. A modern system of financial credit must be instituted to enable the Indians to use their own natural resources. And training in the modern techniques of land use must be supplied Indians. The wastage of Indian lands through erosion must be checked.
>
> (2) Indian education.—The redistribution of educational opportunity for Indians, out of the concentrated boarding school, reaching the few, and into the day school, reaching the many, must be continued and accelerated. The boarding schools which remain must be specialized on lines of occupational need for children of the older groups, or of the need of some Indian children for institutional care. The day schools must be worked out on lines of community service, reaching the adult as well as the child, and influencing the health, the recreation, and the economic welfare of their local areas.
>
> (3) Indians in Indian Service.—The increasing use of Indians in their own official and unofficial service must [289] For an account of the effect which this report had on Indian education, for instance, see Chapter 12, sec. 2.

[290] It will be noted that most of these recommendations had been made from time to time in commissioners' reports.

[291] Charles J. Rhoads, 1929–33.

[292] See, for example, Rep. Comm. Indian Aff., for 1929, pp. 4–7; for 1930, pp. 7–13; for 1931, pp. 4–13; for 1932, pp. 4–9.

[293] Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1929, p. 5.

[294] Ibid. 1931, p. 7.

[295] Ibid., 1932, p. 4.

[296] Ibid., 1932, p. 5.

[297] See e. g., Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1928, p. 23, 1929, p. 10, etc.

[298] See e. g., Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., 1928, p. 23, 1931, pp. 30–31, etc. See Chapter 15, secs. 6, 8.

be pressed without wearying. To this end, adjustments of Civil Service arrangements to Indian need must be sought; but in order that standards may not be lowered, opportunities for professional training must be made genuinely accessible to Indians. With respect to unofficial Indian self-service, a steadily widening tribal and local participation by Indians in the management of their own properties and in the administration of their own services must be pursued.

(4) Reorganization of the Indian Service.—A decentralizing of administrative routine must be progressively attempted. The special functions of Indian Service must be integrated with one another and with Indian life, in terms of local areas and of local groups of Indians. An enlarged responsibility must be vested in the superintendents of reservations and beyond them, or concurrently, in the Indians themselves. This reorganization is in part dependent on the revision of the land allotment system; and in part it is dependent on the steady development of cooperative relations between the Indian Service as a Federal agency, on the one hand, and the States, counties, school districts, and other local units of government on the other hand.[299]

Commissioner Collier's major policies found statutory expression in the Wheeler-Howard (Indian Reorganization) Act of June 18, 1934.[300] The extent to which they have been embodied in existing law and practice will be one of the principal inquiries of the substantive chapters that follow.

G. HISTORICAL RETROSPECT

Recent trends in our national Indian policy are set forth against the background of history in a statement prepared by the Office of Indian Affairs in 1938, at the request of the Department of State:[301]

> * * * The chief issue around which Indian policy revolved prior to 1933 was whether this transfer of ownership [of land and resources] could best be brought about through peaceful treaty, through force of arms, or through the usual legal forms of patent, deed and mortgage. Indian policy and Indian administration, even today when this motive has been reversed, is underlaid with strata of the earlier policies, and can be understood only as these earlier policies are understood.
>
> During the years when the rivalries of England, France and Spain on the continent gave the various Indian tribes positions of strategic power, negotiations with these tribes were carried on by the Colonies and later by the United States on the basis of international treaties. These treaties acknowledge the sovereignty of Indian tribes and implied the acknowledgement of a possessory right in the soil that the tribes occupied. After the cession of Louisiana by France in 1803, the termination of the war with Great Britain in 1814 and the cession of Florida by Spain in 1819, there developed an increasing tendency to deny the sovereignty of Indian tribes and to deal with them by force of arms.[302]
>
> * * * * *
>
> The use of military force to control Indians was a dominant factor in United States policy from the 1820's until the 1850's and did not wholly disappear with the last of the Indian wars in the 1890's. This warfare materially handicapped the settlement of the West and proved costly to the Federal Government. It was officially estimated with probable correctness about 1870 that Indian wars had cost the Government in excess of $1,000,000 for every dead Indian.[303]
>
> * * * * *
>
> While treaties and wars had failed to break down the internal organization and culture of the Indian tribes, the allotment policy brought with it a growing roster of white superintendents, farm agents, teachers, inspectors and missionaries who superseded Indian leaders and to a large extent succeeded in destroying Indian culture. There was developed a system of closed reservations ruled autocratically by the Indian Bureau, which in 1849 had been transferred from the War Department to the Department of the Interior. This autocratic rule was carried out under an ever-increasing number of uncorrelated statutes; a never codified and vast body of administrative regulations; and the personal government of Indian agents who were politically appointed. Misery became extreme upon the reservations, graft became notorious and led to more Indian outbreaks, and as a measure of relief. President Grant, in his first term, placed Christian mission bodies administratively in charge of Indian affairs in numerous parts of the country. This official identification of missionary bodies with Indians gradually was brought to an end in later years, but the political identification of the mission bodies with the Indian Bureau had not been dissolved until very recent times. * * * it was not acknowledged that Indians were entitled to the constitutional guarantees of liberty of conscience.[304]
>
> The guiding concepts in what may be called the autocratic phase of the Federal policy toward Indians were the destruction of all Indian tribal bonds, the effacing of Indian languages and cultural heritages, the forcing of the Indian as an individual to become identified with and lost in the white life, and the breaking of tribal, communal and even family landholdings into individual allotments of farm, timber and grazing lands.[305]
>
> * * * * *
>
> In the autocratic phase of Indian policy, a uniform pattern of administration and of program was imposed throughout the Indian country.[306]
>
> * * * * *
>
> Against the above background the present phase of governmental Indian policy can be better understood. The present policy continues the Federal guardianship over Indians and trusteeship over Indian property while seeking to establish individual and group liberty within the guardianship.[307] * * * In the new phase, the stress is against uniformity and in the direction of the maximum of local adaptation, both of method and of goal.[308]
>
> In all of these phases of the present-day government policy toward Indians, an underlying factor is the realization that the Indian is no longer the "vanishing American," but is actually increasing in numbers. During the past eight years the growth in population as reported by Indian agencies in the United States has been at the rate of over 1 per cent per annum. As with various other peoples during periods of development, the birth rate has been decreasing, but the decline in the Indian death rate has been even greater.
>
> To help Indians in making adjustments to the drastic changes in their way of life made necessary by the overwhelming invasion of the alien white race, and yet to foster the perpetuation of much of their cultural heritage, to train and stimulate them for complete economic self-sufficiency, looking toward a better standard of living for this vital race, are the ultimate goals of the present Administration.
>
> Although only slightly over a third of a million in population in a nation of approximately 130 million people, the Indians of the United States will become an even greater factor in its cultural, social, and economic life.[309]

---

[299] Annual Report of The Secretary of the Interior, 1933, Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff., pp. 68–69.

[300] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461 et seq. See Chapter 4, sec. 16.

[301] "A Brief Statement on the Background of Present-day Indian Policy" (submitted November 21, 1938).

This statement was for the use of the American delegation at the Eighth International Conference of American States, at Lima, Peru, December 9, 1938.

[302] Ibid., pp. 1–2.

[303] Ibid., p. 2.

[304] Ibid., p. 3.

[305] Ibid., pp. 3–4.

[306] Ibid., p. 8.

[307] Ibid., p. 6.

[308] Ibid., p. 8.

[309] Ibid., p. 9.

SECTION 3. ADMINISTRATION OF THE INDIAN SERVICE TODAY

A. ORGANIZATION AND ACTIVITIES

The organization and functions of the Office of Indian Affairs today are pictured in the accompanying chart.[310]

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is the titular and functioning head of the entire office, both in Washington and in the field. He has directly under him the Assistant Commissioner, who shares the duties of office and acts in his place. Those duties are: General management of and promulgation of policies covering all matters relating to Indians and to the natives of Alaska, including economic development; organization of tribes; education; health activities; land acquisitions, leases, sales; forest and grazing management; construction, maintenance, and operation of irrigation facilities; construction and upkeep of roads and bridges on Indian reservations; conservation work; and relief activities; and the interpretation of the needs of the Indian Service in legislative and budgetary terms.

The Probate Division and the Legal Division are jointly under the Office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and under the Solicitor for the Department.

The Probate Division[311] determines heirs and probates wills of all deceased Indians outside the Five Tribes and Osage Nation; reviews the work of the Probate Attorneys of the Five Tribes, and the probate recommendations of the Osage Tribal Attorney and Superintendent; and handles income and inheritance tax matters of Five Tribes.

The Legal Division reviews matters covering legal and other questions affecting the Indians, including reviewed reports on Congressional bills affecting Indians, and passes on a host of other legal matters involving Indians or their property, rights-of-way, condemnation, taxation, irrigation, determination of heirs, etc.

The Assistants to the Commissioner are the Commissioner's immediate staff officers. They are assigned from time to time numerous duties which devolve upon the Commissioner's Office. In general the Assistants to the Commissioner serve to coordinate the diverse functions of the Service and to stimulate cooperative planning. There are at present three field representatives, four [310] Chart on Organization and Functions prepared by the Office of Indian Affairs as of May 1940. All the descriptions of duties contained in this section are based on information supplied by the Indian Office. The chart appears also in Blauch, Educational Service for Indians (President's Advisory Committee on Education, Staff Study No. 18, '939), p. 28.

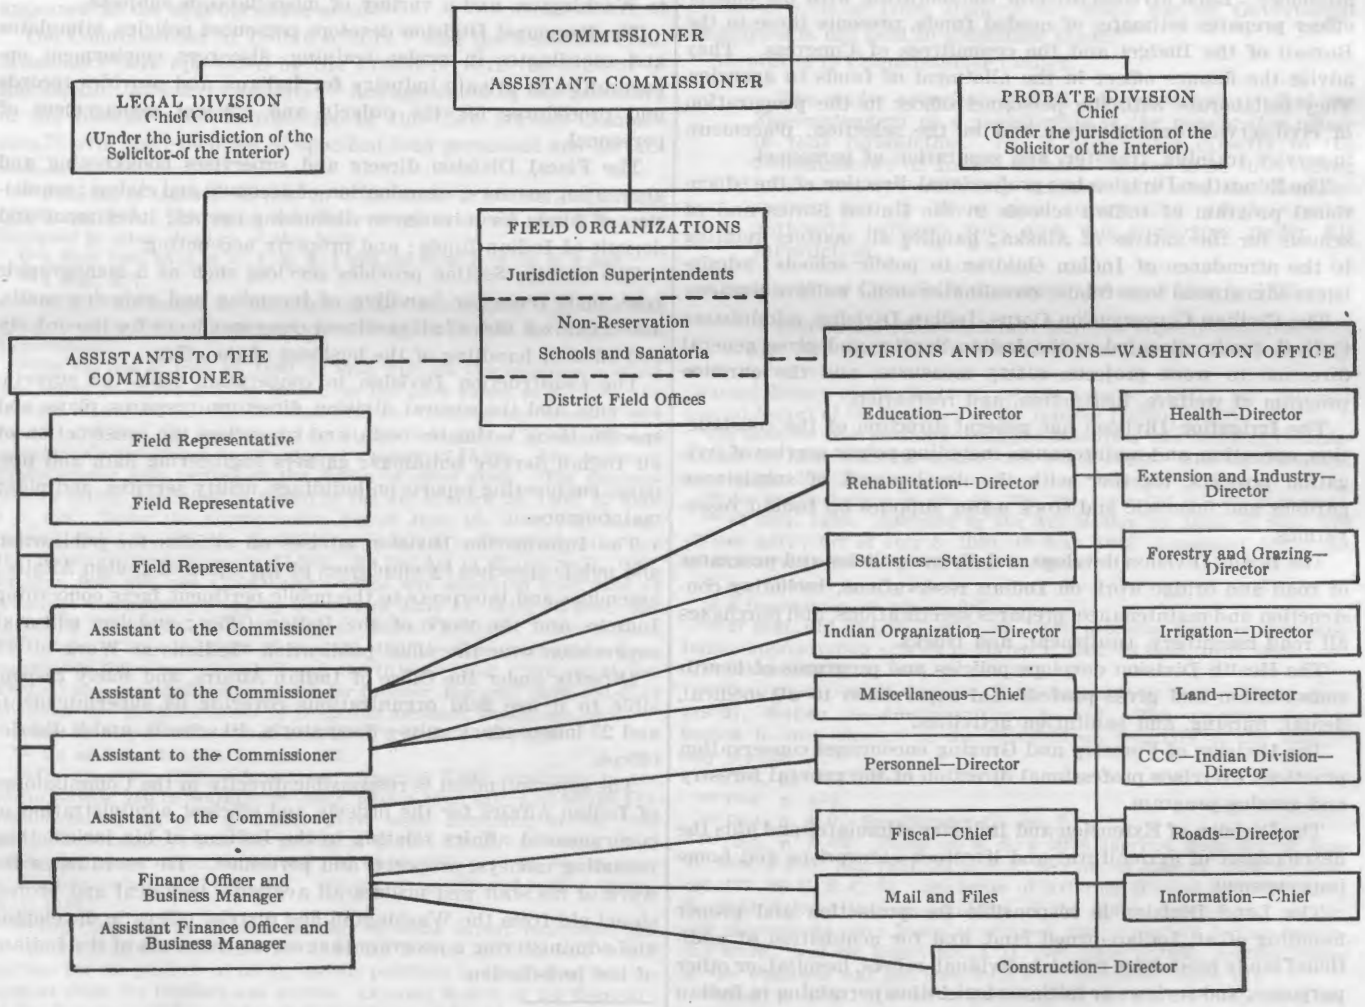
[311] See Chapter 11, sec. 6.



ORGANIZATION CHART OF THE OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.
1940

special assistants, and two finance officers. One field representative is in charge of contacts with Indian tribes; the second, in charge of conferences and the relating of educational, health, and other facilities to new projects and management problems; the third, in charge of cooperation with other agencies. Of the four special assistants, one is in charge of land use, consolidation, and heirship problems. A second coordinates projects involving land use and resettlement and works chiefly with the Statistics Section and the Rehabilitation Division. A third handles all matters relating to Indian tribal organization, Indian delegations, law and order, individual Indian moneys, field investigations, and works chiefly with the Indian Organization Division and the Miscellaneous Section. A fourth is in charge of personnel policies and works with the Personnel Division. The finance officer and his assistant are in charge of all fiscal matters for the Office of Indian Affairs—its budget, expenditure of funds under appropriation acts, and legislation.

In the Washington office, organizational functions are broken up into 17 divisions and sections directly under the Office of the Commissioner. At the head of each division is a director. The division directors are responsible to the Commissioner for the general development of policies and programs and the professional direction of activities within the spheres of their several interests. They work through the agency superintendents and in cooperation with each other and the assistants to the Commissioner. Each division director collaborating with the finance officer prepares estimates of needed funds, presents these to the Bureau of the Budget and the committees of Congress. They advise the finance officer in the allotment of funds to agencies. They collaborate with the personnel officer in the preparation of civil-service examinations and in the selection, placement, in-service training, transfer, and separation of personnel.

The Education Division has professional direction of the educational program of Indian schools in the United States and of schools for the natives of Alaska; handles all matters relating to the attendance of Indian children in public schools; administers educational loan funds; coordinates social welfare services.

The Civilian Conservation Corps, Indian Division, administers C. C. C. funds allocated to the Indian Service and gives general direction to work projects, safety measures, and the enrollee program of welfare, instruction, and recreation.

The Irrigation Division has general direction of the construction, operation, and maintenance, including power service of irrigation projects, together with the development of subsistence gardens and domestic and stock water supplies on Indian reservations.

The Roads Division develops and directs policies and programs of road and bridge work on Indian reservations, including construction and maintenance, prepares specifications, and purchases all road machinery, equipment, and trucks.

The Health Division develops policies and programs of health conservation and gives professional supervision to all medical, dental, nursing, and sanitation activities.[312]

The Division of Forestry and Grazing encourages conservation practices, exercises professional direction of the general forestry and grazing program.

The Division of Extension and Industry stimulates and aids the development of agricultural and livestock enterprises and home improvement.

The Land Division is responsible for protection and proper handling of all Indian-owned land, and for acquisition of additional lands needed for tribal, individual, school, hospital, or other purposes; and reviews or initiates legislation pertaining to Indian lands, mineral rights, and tribal claims.

[312] See Chapter 12, sec. 3.

The Statistics Section collects, tabulates, and analyses data obtained from the field on population, health, Indian income, land, agricultural, and other activities of Indians needed in dealing with Indian problems and Indian development; and coordinates statistical needs, improves statistical records, and designs forms for use in the field and by divisions of the Washington office.

The Rehabilitation Division applies for allotments of emergency relief funds, and in consultation with other divisions and with field superintendents, allots to agencies these funds for approved rehabilitation projects.

The Indian Organization Division assists Indian tribes and bands to draft constitutions, bylaws, and charters of incorporation under authority of the Act of June 18, 1934,[313] the Oklahoma Indian Welfare Act[314] and the Alaska Reorganization Act;[315] conducts educational work and supervises elections in connection therewith; assists tribes to make intelligent use of the powers acquired through organization and incorporation; reviews ordinances and resolutions adopted by tribes and presented for departmental review or approval; and determines the tribal status of individual Indians or groups of Indians.

The Miscellaneous Section initiates correspondence on the following: maintenance of law and order, individual Indian money, claims for withdrawal of pro-rata shares and Sioux benefits, traders, dance and ceremonies, Indian monuments, delegations to Washington, and a variety of miscellaneous subjects.

The Personnel Division develops personnel policies, stimulates and coordinates in-service training, discovers employment opportunities in private industry for Indians, and provides records and procedures for the orderly and efficient management of personnel.

The Fiscal Division directs and supervises bookkeeping and accounting matters; examination of accounts and claims; requisition of funds for advance to disbursing agents; investment and deposit of Indian funds; and property accounting.

The Service Section provides services such as a stenographic pool, mail room for handling of incoming and outgoing mails, and organized files of all pertinent correspondence for the orderly and efficient handling of the business of the office.

The Construction Division in cooperation with the superintendents and the several division directors, prepares plans and specifications, estimates costs, and supervises the construction of all Indian Service buildings; gathers engineering data and prepares engineering reports on buildings, utility services, and plant maintenance.

The Information Division advises on articles for publication and public speeches by employees of the Office of Indian Affairs; assembles and interprets to the public pertinent facts concerning Indians and the work of the Indian Office; and has editorial supervision over the office publication "Indians at Work."

Directly under the Office of Indian Affairs, and solely responsible to it are field organizations covering 64 superintendents and 25 independent units—6 sanatoria, 10 schools, and 9 district offices.

The superintendent is responsible directly to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the orderly and efficient administration of governmental affairs relating to the Indians of his jurisdiction, including moneys, property, and personnel. He coordinates the work of his staff and utilizes all available technical and professional aid from the Washington and district offices in developing and administering a program that serves the needs of the Indians of his jurisdiction.

[313] See Chapter 4, sec. 16.
[314] See Chapter 23, sec. 13.
[315] See Chapter 21, sec. 9.

An examination of the regulations under which the Indian Service operates will illustrate its manifold activities. The codified regulations cover Alaska; antiquities; attorneys and agents; Civilian Conservation Corps, Indian Division; credit to Indians; education of Indians; enrollment and reallotment of Indians; forestry, grazing; heirs and wills; hospital and medical care of Indians; irrigation projects; law and order; leases, permits, and sale of minerals on restricted Indian lands; moneys, tribal and individual; patents in fee, competency certificates, sales, and reinvestment of proceeds; records (Oklahoma Indian tribes); relief of Indians; rights-of-way; roads and highways; trading with Indians; wilderness and roadless areas; wildlife. In addition to the regulations contained in the Code of Federal Regulations there are many special regulations.[316]

B. PERSONNEL

The Act of July 9, 1832,[317] which provided for the appointment of a Commissioner of Indian Affairs at a salary of $3,000, made no provision for specific clerical assistance or contingent expenses of the office. The Appropriation Act of June 18, 1834,[318] provided for the first time, in addition to $3,000 for salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $5,000 for salary of clerks in the office of the Commissioner, $700 for salary of the messenger, and $800 for contingent expenses.[319]

Provisions for various increases and new offices gradually appeared in the appropriation acts.[320]

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs [321] and the Assistant Commissioner [322] are appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate. All other employees[323] are appointed by the Secretary of the Interior after certification by the Civil Service Commission,[324] with the exception of specified field personnel and certain administrative offices in the Washington office.[325] The salaries are fixed basically by the Classification Act of March 4, 1923.[326] The extent to which Indians themselves are employed is elsewhere discussed.[327]

Up to 1893 officers in immediate control of Indians were known as "agents." They were appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate.[328] To remove this office from politics the Act of March 3, 1893,[329] authorized the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to devolve the duties of agent upon the superintendent of the school located at the agency.

With the closing of Government schools many "superintendents" were left without schools. "Agency" has again become the term for units of administration, but officers in charge are still called "superintendents." [330]

The superintendent of an agency is a bonded officer, responsible for all expenditures.[331] The superintendent is authorized to acknowledge deeds, administer various oaths, take depositions.[332] He instructs new employees in their duties and the statutory limitations or prohibitions.[333] He may not serve as a guardian of an Indian under appointment by a local court.[334]

No employee of the United States Government may have any interest or concern in any trade with the Indians, except for and on account of the United States; and any person offending is liable to a penalty of $5,000 and removal from office.[335] The purchase of articles from Indians for home use by Government employees is not held to constitute trade.[336]

According to Commissioner Collier,

> The major principle of field administration is that the Superintendent of a jurisdiction is the responsible officer in that jurisdiction. He is responsible directly to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There is no intervening administrative authority between him and the Commissioner, nor is there any intervening administrative authority between him and the employees under his jurisdiction. * * *[337]

Commissioner Cato Sells expressed the same idea in 1916:

> Inspecting officers should impress superintendents with the fact that they are held responsible for every activity

---

[316] This list is taken from title 25 of the Code of Federal Regulations (1940) pp. 1–3. The major subjects covered by these regulations are discussed in other chapters of this book.

[317] 4 Stat. 564, 25 U. S. C. 1, R. S. § 462, 25 U. S. C. 2, R. S. § 463.

[318] 4 Stat. 677.

[319] This is the budget for the Office of the Commissioner only, and does not include the field. There were separate appropriations for the "Indian Department."

[320] By the Act of June 15, 1880, 21 Stat. 210, the Commissioner's salary was raised to $3,500 and the budget for the office raised to $77,980. By the Act of August 5, 1882, 22 Stat. 219, the Commissioner's salary was raised to $4,000. By the Act of July 31, 1886, 24 Stat. 172, the Office of Assistant Commissioner was created at a salary of $3,000. The Assistant Commissioner also performed the duties of chief clerk. The Commissioner's salary was raised to $5,000 by the Act of April 28, 1902, 32 Stat. 120, 158. Under the Appropriation Act of June 18, 1940, 76th Cong., 3d sess., Pub., No. 640, the Commissioner's salary is $9,000 annually and the Assistant Commissioner's $7,500. By the Act of February 26, 1907, 34 Stat. 935, 936, the Chief Clerk's Office was separated from that of Assistant Commissioner and by the Act of June 17, 1910, 36 Stat. 468, the Chief Clerk's title was changed to Second Assistant Commissioner. By the Act of May 10, 1916, 39 Stat. 66, 100, the Second Assistant Commissioner's Office was abolished and the title of Chief Clerk reinstated. This act also provided compensation for forester, financial clerk, chiefs of divisions, law clerk, examiner of irrigation accounts, draftsman, etc.

[321] Act of July 9, 1832, 4 Stat. 564, 25 U. S. C. 1, R. S. § 462.

[322] Act of July 31, 1886, 24 Stat. 172.

[323] On June 30, 1926, Schmeckebier reported 5,002 employees in the entire service, 190 in Washington office, with a total salary of $6,198,313 (Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 293.) There were, according to the 1940 budget, 9,173 employees in the Bureau of Indian Affairs (including emergency and conservation employees), of which 388 were in Washington, with a total salary of $14,781,927. (Figures from Office of Indian Affairs, May, 1940.)

[324] The Civil Service Commission has to some extent recognized the specialized problems that exist in the Indian Service, and has held examinations for the purpose of filling specific positions in the Indian Service such as those for teachers and nurses. (Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1937), p. 241; ibid. (1936), p. 203.) Annual reports of the Secretary of the Interior comment on the extreme diversity in the types of personnel needed, and on the need for persons with ability to handle human relation problems, in addition to their particular training. (Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1937), pp. 240–242; Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1938), p. 256.)

The need for such peculiarly equipped employees was voiced by Commissioners for more than 100 years. See sec. 2, supra. Also Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 296–299.

[325] See Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 293, 294, for a list of such exceptions.

[326] 42 Stat. 1488. Amended by the Act of May 28, 1928, 45 Stat. 776 (Welsh Act); Act of July 3, 1930, 46 Stat. 1003 (Brookhart Act); and by Executive Order No. 6746, June 21, 1934.

[327] See Chapter 8, sec. 4B.

[328] Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 282.

[329] 27 Stat. 612, 614, 25 U. S. C. 66. This provision was carried in later Indian appropriation acts up to March 1, 1907, 34 Stat. 1015, 1020.

[330] Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 282–284.

[331] Department of the Interior, U. S. Indian Field Service Regulations (1939), Section A—Administration, p. A–8. The superintendent is bonded in such amount as the President or Secretary of the Interior may require.

[332] Ibid., pp. A–11, A–12.

[333] Ibid., p. A–9.

[334] Ibid., p. A–9. See Chapter 12, sec. 2.

[335] Ibid., p. A–52. Based on R. S. § 2078 (derived from Act of June 0, 1834, 4 Stat. 735, 739), 25 U. S. C. 68; Act of June 22, 1874, 18 Stat. 146, 177, 25 U. S. C. 87. See letter of Attorney General dated February 15, 1940, holding that an employee of the Indian Service may not accept employment after hours as salaried manager of an Indian community store. And see Memo. Sol. I. D., November 7, 1939, holding Indian service employee may not lease land from Indian for home site.

[336] Ibid., p. A–52. (Order of Secretary of the Interior, September 30, 1912.) See also Act of June 19, 1939, 53 Stat. 840, 25 U. S. C. (Supp.) 87a.

[337] Office of Indian Affairs, Order No. 481, Field District Plan, June 21, 1937, p. 2.

relating to Indians within their jurisdiction, from "saving the babies" to taking care of old Indians. (Department of Interior, Office of Indian Affairs, "Methods and Suggestions for Inspecting Officers of the United States Indian Service," February 23, 1916, p. 7.)

C. COOPERATION WITH OTHER AGENCIES

Some decentralization of administrative control over Indian life[338] has been effected in recent years by the distribution of governmental powers among the federal, state, and tribal governments. In earlier decades, cooperation, where it has existed, has been primarily between the Indian Bureau and other federal agencies,[339] not between the Indians and the agencies. In recent years various federal agencies have been in direct contact with the Indians. They include the Soil Conservation Service, the Farm Security Administration, the Social Security Board, the Civilian Conservation Corps,[340] the National Youth Administration, the Public Works Administration, and the Works Progress Administration.

The General Land Office assists the Indian Office in the sale of land which the Indian tribes cede to the United States.[341] It also adjudicates or administers Indian allotments and Indian homesteads,[342] and issues allotments on certification by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs,[343] who must also consent to the granting of various licenses by the Federal Power Commission[344] and other agencies for irrigation, right-of-way, power development, and other land use.

In the field of conservation the Indian Service often unites for common action with one or more state or federal bureaus. The Interdepartmental Rio Grande Board, composed of representatives of the Indian Service, Grazing Service, and the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior, and the Soil Conservation Service, the Forest Service, the Farm Security Administration and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture,[345] seeks to determine how a native rural population of Indians and Spanish Americans can subsist permanently through the utilization of the Rio Grande watershed in central and northern New Mexico.[346]

A survey and planning unit was created by the Soil Conservation Service to study Indian reservations and prepare plans for proper land use and conservation for the Indian Service.[347] This unit (TC–BIA) has supplied a new type of integrated administrative procedure in which two services are functionally integrated, though preserving technical and organizational distinctions.[348] The TC–BIA works with and through the Indian superintendents, their local staffs, and Indian governing bodies. They are consulted in its surveys, they comment on its findings, and they are expected to carry out its program.[349]

Section 4 of the Act of March 10, 1934,[350] provides:

> The Office of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Fisheries, and the Bureau of Biological Survey are authorized, jointly, to prepare plans for the better protection of the wild-life resources, including fish, migratory waterfowl and upland game birds, game animals and fur-bearing animals, upon all the Indian reservations and unallotted Indian lands coming under the supervision of the Federal Government.

It also empowers the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate such plans and to make rules for their enforcement.

Because there is danger of depletion of fish and animals, particularly in the case of spawning salmon, where fox or mink farmers may exploit small local runs, the Office cooperates with the Alaska Game Commission and the Division of Alaskan Fisheries, Bureau of Fisheries, in settling problems affecting the rights of Indians.

An interesting cooperative enterprise is the joint operation by the Indian Service and the Bureau of Animal Industry of a sheep genetics laboratory at Fort Wingate, New Mexico.[351]

The Indian Service has always cooperated with the Department of Justice in enforcing prohibition laws and suppressing liquor traffic with the Indians, and generally in litigation affecting Indians.

Other cooperating agencies[352] include the Extension Service of the Department of Agriculture, the Bureaus of Mines, Standards, Animal Industry, and Plant Industry, the Public Health Service,[353] the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, state agricultural colleges, and education and welfare bureaus of various states.[354]

Mr. Joseph C. McCaskill, one of Commissioner Collier's four assistants, has summed up the recent trend in Indian administration:

> Thus we see the Indian Office divesting its authority into three directions; first among other agencies of the Federal Government which have specialized services to render; second among the local state and county governments which are much more closely associated with the problems in some areas than Washington can be; and finally among the tribal governments which have organized governing bodies, and which expect eventually to take over and manage all of the affairs of Indians. Perhaps thus, but not at once, it may be found possible to cease special treatment, special protective and beneficial legislation for the Indians, and they shall become self-supporting, self-managing, and self-directing communities within our national citizenry. (P. 76.)[355]

---

[338] See Chapter 5. See also sec. 2F, supra, for a statement of policy regarding decentralization by Commissioner Collier in 1933.

[339] E. g., the Bureaus of Plant and Animal Industry of Agriculture and the Reclamation Service, Geological Survey and Forest Service of Interior had cooperated with the Indian Bureau under Commissioner Leupp in 1908. (See sec. 2 supra. Also see Rep. Comm. Ind. Aff. 1908, pp. 2–9.)

[340] The Indian Office has a special division devoted to the C. C. C. See sec. 3A supra.

[341] Conover, The General Land Office (1923), p. 76.

[342] Ibid., p. 88.

[343] Ibid., pp. 61–62.

[344] Since the primary responsibility for administering an Indian reservation is in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, it has been urged that the Federal Power Commission must decline to issue a permit if the Secretary believes that a proposed power development would be inconsistent with the purposes of the reservation. (Letter of Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs to Chairman, Federal Power Commission, February 19, 1935.)

[345] National Resources Planning Board, General Land Office, and Reconstruction Finance Corporation are consulting members. (Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1939) p. 64.)

[346] Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1938), p. 253.

[347] Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1936), p. 188. The unit is commonly designated as TC–BIA, Technical Cooperation, Bureau of Indian Affairs.

[348] Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1936), p. 188.

[349] Indian Office Order 483, United States Indian Field Service, Rules and Regulations (1939), section A—Administration, pp. A–5, A–6.

[350] 48 Stat. 401, 402.

[351] See Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1938), p. 253.

[352] Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1936), pp. 169–172, 180–183.

[353] The United States Public Health Service, since 1926, has detailed personnel to the Indian Service, for health and medical work on reservations. Ibid., p. 179.

[354] Under the Johnson-O'Malley Act of April 16, 1934, 48 Stat. 596, amended by Act of June 4, 1936, 49 Stat. 1458, state educational and health services were made available to certain Indian tribes by contract between the State and the Federal Government. As of 1939, California, Washington, and Minnesota have contracted for the education of Indian children, Wisconsin for child-welfare services, and Arizona for limited educational services. (Annual Report of the Secretary of Interior (1939), p. 64.) See Chapter 12, sec. 1.

[355] Joseph C. McCaskill, The Cessation of Monopolistic Control of Indians by the Indian Office, in Indians of the United States, April 1940, pp. 69–76. This paper was prepared for the First Inter-American Conference on Indian Life, held at Patzcuaro, Mexico, in April 1940.

CHAPTER 3

INDIAN TREATIES

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. THE LEGAL FORCE OF INDIAN TREATIES

One who attempts to survey the legal problems raised by Indian treaties must at the outset dispose of the objection that such treaties are somehow of inferior validity or are of purely antiquarian interest. These objections apparently spring from the belief that when the treaty method of dealing with the natives was abandoned in the Indian Appropriation Act of 1871[1] the force of treaties in existence at that time also disappeared.

Such an assumption is unfounded. Although treaty making itself is a thing of the past, treaty enforcement continues.[2] As a matter of fact, the act in question expressly provides that there shall be no lessening of obligations already incurred.

The reciprocal obligations assumed by the Federal Government and by the Indian tribes during a period of almost a hundred years constitute a chief source of present-day Indian law. As one legal commentator has pointed out:

> * * * The chief foundation [of federal power over Indian affairs] appears to have been the treaty-making power of the President and Senate with its corollary of Congressional power to implement by legislation the treaties made.
>
> * * * * *
>
> And by a broad reading of these treaties the national government obtained from the Indians themselves authority to legislate for them to carry out the purpose of the treaties.[3]

That treaties with Indian tribes are of the same dignity as treaties with foreign nations is a view which has been repeat-

[1] Act of March 3, 1871, 16 Stat. 544, 566, R. S. § 2079, 25 U. S. C. 71.

[2] See, for example, Act of June 15, 1935, sec. 4, 49 Stat. 378.

[3] See Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States (1934), 16 J. Comp. Leg. 78, 80–81. See also Chapter 5, sec. 1.

Justice Baldwin, in the case of Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1 (1831), gives an interesting account of the negotiation of treaties by the Continental Congress with the Indians:

> The proceedings of the old congress will be found in 1 Laws U. S. 597, commencing 1st June 1775, and ending 1st September 1788, of which some extracts will be given. 30th June 1775: "Resolved, that the committee for Indian affairs do prepare proper talks to the several tribes of Indians; as the Indians depend on the colonists for arms, ammunition and clothing which are become necessary for their subsistence." "That the commissioners have power to treat with the Indians;" "to take to their assistance gentlemen of influence among the Indians." "To preserve the confidence and friendship of the Indians, and prevent their suffering for want of the necessaries of life, 40,000*l.* sterling of Indian goods be imported." "No person shall be permitted to trade with the Indians, without a license;" "traders shall sell their goods at reasonable prices; allow them to the Indians for their skins, and take no advantage of their distress and intemperance;" "the trade to be only at posts designated by the commissioners." Specimens of the kind of intercourse between the congress and deputations of Indians may be seen in pages 602 and 603. They need no incorporation into a judicial opinion. (P. 34.)

edly confirmed by the federal courts and never successfully challenged.[4]

As late as 1828 Attorney General William Wirt, in an opinion to the President on Georgia and the Treaty of Indian Spring,[5] found it necessary to answer the contention that treaties with Indians were not effective because they were not treaties with an independent nation, and because, even if independent, the Indians were uncivilized. In discussing the first objection the Attorney General said, in part:

> If it be meant to say that, although capable of treating, their treaties are not to be construed like the treaties of nations absolutely independent, no reason is discerned for this distinction in the circumstance that their independence is of a limited character. If they are independent to the purpose of treating, they have all the independence that is necessary to the argument. * * * The point, then, once conceded, that the Indians are independent to the purpose of treating, their independence is, to that purpose, as absolute as that of any other nation.
>
> * * * Nor can it be conceded that their independence as a nation is a limited independence. Like all other independent nations, they are governed solely by their own laws. Like all other independent nations, they have the absolute power of war and peace. Like all other independent nations, their territory is inviolable by any other sovereignty. Questions have arisen as to the character of their title to that territory; but these discussions have resulted in this conclusion: that, whether their title be that of sovereignty in the jurisdiction or the soil, or a title by occupancy only, it is such a title as no other nation has a right to interfere with, or to take from them; and which no other nation can rightfully acquire, but by the same means by which the territory of all other nations, however absolute their independence, may be acquired—that is, by cession or conquest. * * * As a nation they are still free and independent. They are entirely self-governed—self-directed. They treat, or refuse to treat, at their pleasure; and there is no human power which can rightfully control them in the exercise of their discretion in this respect. In their treaties, in all their contracts with regard to their property, they are as free, sovereign, and independent as any other nation. And being bound, on their own part, to the full extent of their contracts, they are surely entitled, on every principle of reason, justice, and equity to hold those with whom they thus treat and contract equally bound to them. Nor can I discover the slightest foundation for applying different rules to the construction of their contracts from those which are applied to all other contracts, because they reside within the local limits of the sovereignty of Georgia. (Pp. 132–135.)

The Circuit Court for the Michigan District said:[6]

> * * * It is contended that a treaty with Indian tribes, has not the same dignity or effect, as a treaty with a foreign and independent nation. This distinction is not authorized by the constitution. Since the commencement of the government, treaties have been made with the Indians and the treaty-making power has been exercised in making them. They are treaties, within the meaning of the constitution, and, as such, are the supreme laws of the land. (P. 346.)

It is clear that the Constitution recognized as part of the supreme law of the land treaties made with Indian tribes prior to its ratification.[7] The Supreme Court said with reference to the provisions of an Indian treaty:[8]

> * * * the Constitution declares a treaty to be the supreme law of the land; and Chief Justice Marshall, in Foster and Elam v. Neilson, 2 Pet. 314, has said, "That a treaty is to be regarded, in courts of justice, as equivalent to an act of the legislature, whenever it operates of itself, without the aid of any legislative provision." No legislation is required to put the seventh article in force; and it must become a rule of action, if the contracting parties had power to incorporate it in the treaty of 1863. About this there would seem to be no doubt. * * * (P. 196.)

Generally speaking, the incidents attaching to a treaty with a foreign power have been held applicable to Indian treaties. Thus, in accordance with the general rule applicable to foreign treaties, the courts will not go behind a treaty which has been ratified to inquire whether or not an Indian tribe was properly represented by its head men, nor determine whether a treaty has been procured by duress or fraud, and declare it inoperative for that reason.[9] > * * * the treaty, after executed and ratified by the proper authorities of the Government, becomes the supreme law of the land, and the courts can no more go behind it for the purpose of annulling its effect and operation, than they can behind an act of Congress.[10]

An Indian treaty, like a foreign treaty, may be modified by mutual consent.[11]

The fact that Congress has, by legislation, repealed, modified, or disregarded various Indian treaties has been thought by some to show that Indian treaties are of inferior legal validity. The fact is, however, that the power of Congress to enact legislation in conflict with treaties is well established in the field of foreign affairs, as well as in the field of Indian affairs.[12]

In upholding legislation contravening a treaty, the Supreme Court in Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock[13] said:

> * * * Until the year 1871 the policy was pursued of dealing with the Indian tribes by means of treaties, and, of

---

[4] Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. 211, 242–243 (1872); Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 559 (1832); Turner v. American Baptist Missionary Union, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14251 (C. C. Mich. 1852).

[5] 2 Op. A. G. 110 (1828).

[6] Turner v. American Baptist Missionary Union, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14251 (C. C. Mich. 1852).

[7] Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 559 (1832). Examples of such treaties are found in the opinion of the Supreme Court in Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 32–38 (1831).

[8] United States v. Forty-three Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U. S. 188 (1876).

[9] United States v. New York Indians, 173 U. S. 464 (1899); United States v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 427, 466 (1893). See fn. 8, supra, and on the form of tribal government, see Chapter 7, sec. 3.

[10] Fellows v. Blacksmith, 60 U. S. 366, 372 (1856).

[11] 14 Pet. 4 (1840). Justice McLean said in the case of Latimer v. Poteet:

> It is argued that it was not in the power of the United States and the Cherokee nation, by the treaty of Tellico, in 1798, to vary in any degree the treaty line of Holston; so as to affect private rights, or the rights of North Carolina. The answer to this is, that the Tellico treaty does not purport to alter the boundary of the Holston treaty, but by the acts of the parties, this boundary is recognized. Not that a new boundary was substituted, but that the old one was substantially designated. Will any one deny that the parties to the treaty are competent to determine any dispute respecting its limits. In what mode can a controversy of this nature be so satisfactorily determined as by the contracting parties. If their language in the treaty be wholly indefinite, or the natural objects called for are uncertain or contradictory, there is no power but that which formed the treaty which can remedy such defects. And it is a sound principle of national law, and applies to the treaty-making power of this government, whether exercised with a foreign nation or an Indian tribe that all questions of disputed boundaries may be settled by the parties to the treaty. And to the exercise of these high functions by the government, within its constitutional powers, neither the rights of a state, nor those of an individual, can be interposed. We think it was in the due exercise of the powers of the executive and the Cherokee nation, in concluding the treaty of Tellico, to recognize in terms, or by acts, the boundary of the Holston treaty. (P. 13.)

[12] The Supreme Court in Ex parte Webb, 225 U. S. 663 (1912), said:

> Of course, an act of Congress may repeal a prior treaty as well as it may repeal a prior act. The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 616; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 720; Ward v. Race Horse, 163 U. S. 504, 511; Draper v. United States, 164 U. S. 240, 243. (P. 683.)

[13] 187 U. S. 553, 565–566 (1903). Also see Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 616 (1870); Ward v. Race Horse, 163 U. S. 504 (1896); Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S. 264 (1898); 16 Op. A. G. 300 (1879). Accord: 26 Op. A. G. 340, 347 (1907); 54 I. D. 401 (1934).

At one time this principle was not well established. This is shown by the following excerpt from H. Rept. No. 474, Comm. on Indian Affairs, 23d Cong., 1st sess., May 20, 1834:

> It was not competent for an act of Congress to alter the stipulations of the treaty or to change the character of the agents appointed under it. (P. 5.)

course, a moral obligation rested upon Congress to act in good faith in performing the stipulations entered into on its behalf. But, as with treaties made with foreign nations, Chinese Exclusion Case, 130 U. S. 581, 600, the legislative power might pass laws in conflict with treaties made with the Indians. Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S. 264, 270; Ward v. Race Horse, 163 U. S. 504, 511; Spalding v. Chandler, 160 U. S. 394, 405; Missouri, Kansas & Texas Ry. Co. v. Roberts, 152 U. S. 114, 117; The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 616.

The power exists to abrogate the provisions of an Indian treaty, though presumably such power will be exercised only when circumstances arise which will not only justify the government in disregarding the stipulations of the treaty, but may demand, in the interest of the country and the Indians themselves, that it should do so. When, therefore, treaties were entered into between the United States and a tribe of Indians it was never doubted that the power to abrogate existed in Congress, and that in a contingency such power might be availed of from considerations of governmental policy, particularly if consistent with perfect good faith towards the Indians. * * *

The Attorney General has ruled:[14]

> By the 6th article of the Constitution, treaties as well as statutes are the laws of the land. There is nothing in the Constitution which assigns different ranks to treaties and to statutes. The Constitution itself is of higher rank than either by the very structure of the Government. A statute not inconsistent with it, and a treaty not inconsistent with it, relating to subjects within the scope of the treaty-making power, seem to stand upon the same level, and to be of equal validity; and as in the case of all laws emanating from an equal authority, the earlier in date yields to the later. (P. 357.)

This doctrine has been qualified by some cases. In the case of Jones v. Meehan[15] it was held that title to land granted to an Indian by treaty cannot be divested by any subsequent action of the lessor, Congress or the Executive department.

> The construction of treaties is the peculiar province of the judiciary; and, except in cases purely political, Congress has no constitutional power to settle the rights under a treaty, or to affect titles already granted by the treaty itself. Wilson v. Wall, 6 Wall. 83, 89; Reichart v. Felps, 6 Wall. 160; Smith v. Stevens, 10 Wall. 321, 327; Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. 211, 247 (P. 32).

Thus the issuance of a patent by the General Land Office upon lands reserved by a treaty with Indian tribes is void.[16]

The Supreme Court has often coupled a statement about the absolute power of Congress to supersede a treaty obligation with a discussion of the moral obligation of the Government to redress such a violation. In holding that an act of Congress extended revenue laws over the Indian Territory, despite a prior treaty exempting tobacco raised on Indian reservations, the Court wrote:[17]

> A treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress,* and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty.# In the cases referred to these principles were applied to treaties with foreign nations. Treaties with Indian nations within the jurisdiction of the United States, whatever considerations of humanity and good faith may be involved and require their faithful observance, cannot be more obligatory. They have no higher sanctity; and no greater inviolability or immunity from legislative invasion can be claimed for them. The consequences in all such cases give rise to questions which must be met by the political department of the government. They are beyond the sphere of judicial cognizance. In the case under consideration the act of Congress must prevail as if the treaty were not an element to be considered. If a wrong has been done, the power of redress is with Congress, not with the judiciary, and that body, upon being applied to, it is to be presumed, will promptly give the proper relief. (P. 621.)
>
> * Foster & Elam v. Neilson, 2 Peters, 314.
>
> # Taylor v. Morton, 2 Curtis, 454; The Clinton Bridge, 1 Walworth, 155.

By many statutes and occasionally by treaties, the Court of Claims has been authorized to determine many claims for treaty violations.[18]

In construing a jurisdictional act,[19] the Supreme Court discussed the liability of the United States for a violation of a treaty with the Creek tribe:

> * * * But we think it plain that that act only gave authority to the Court of Claims to hear and determine claims "for the amount due or claimed to be due said bands from the United States under any treaties or laws of Congress." It does not purport to alter or enlarge any rights conferred on petitioners by the treaties or laws of the United States or authorize any recovery except in accordance with the legal principles applicable in determining those rights under laws and treaties of the United States. See United States v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 427, 468, 469; United States v. Mille Lac Chippewas, 299 U. S. 498, 500. (P. 436.)

---

[14] 13 Op. A. G. 354 (1870).

> * * * congress has never abrogated treaties promiscuously by legislation, those with Indians, Chinese, and the French treaty of 1778, being the chief ones in point.

Boyd, The Expanding Treaty Power, in Selected Essays on Constitutional Law, vol. 3, The Nation and The States (1938), pp. 410, 414.

The Solicitor of the Department of the Interior has said:

> Congress has paramount authority over such reservations and the Indians occupying them (Lone Wolf v. Hitchock, 187 U. S. 553, 565), and may, if it sees fit so to do, provide game laws to restrict the Indians in their natural and immemorial rights of fishing and hunting. In re Blackbird, supra [109 Fed. 139 (D. C. W. D. Wis. 1901]. And even though such laws should conflict with the provisions of prior treaties with the Indians, there is respectable authority for upholding their validity. Thus in The Cherokee Tobacco Case (11 Wall. 616), it was held that a law of Congress imposing a tax on tobacco, if in conflict with a prior treaty with the Cherokees, was paramount to the treaty. And in Ward v. Race Horse (163 U. S. 504), the court ruled that the provision in treaty of February 24, 1869, with the Bannock Indians, whose reservation was within the limits of what is now the State of Wyoming, that "they shall have the right to hunt upon the unoccupied lands of the United States so long as game may be found thereon", was superseded by the provisions of the Enabling Act admitting Wyoming into the Union, and that the treaty provision did not give the Indians the right to exercise the hunting privilege within the limits of the State in violation of its laws. (54 I. D. 517, 520 (1934).)

[15] 175 U. S. 1 (1899), holding unconstitutional Joint Resolution of August 4, 1894, 28 Stat. 1018, authorizing departmental approval of a lease after the execution of a different lease by the Indian landowner.

[16] United States v. Carpenter, 111 U. S. 347 (1884). Also see Spalding v. Chandler, 160 U. S. 394 (1896). It has been held that an Executive order which purports to restore to the public domain land granted by treaty to Indians is inoperative. 18 Op. A. G. 141 (1885).

[17] Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 616 (1870). For an example of the superseding of a treaty by the General Allotment Act see Op. Sol. I. D., M. 25930, June 30, 1930, 53 I. D. 133.

The moral obligation to perform treaties faithfully was recognized in the preamble to the Treaty of August 9, 1814, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 120, which referred to the fulfillment "with punctuality and good faith" by the United States of former treaties with the Creeks up to the time of their waging war against the United States. Also see Chapter 14, sec. 2, fn. 41.

An example of a treaty superseding a statute is noted in Choctaw Indians, 13 Op. A. G. 354 (1870).

[18] See Chapter 14, sec. 6, and Chapter 19, sec. 3; Ray A. Brown, The Indian Problem and the Law (1930), 39 Yale L. J. 307, 323–324, and Meriam, Problem of Indian Administration (1928), pp. 805–811. Treaties are often the foundation for claims. United States v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 427, 467–468 (1893). Congress may waive the benefit of the rule of res adjudicata by allowing another trial of a claim against the United States, Cherokee Nation v. United States, 270 U. S. 476 (1926), or disregarding laches, United States v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 427, 473 (1893).

[19] Sioux Indians v. United States, 277 U. S. 424 (1928). The Act of April 11, 1916, 39 Stat. 47 (Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux), authorizes the Court of Claims to hear and determine claims "for the amount due or claimed to be due said bands from the United States under any treaties or laws of Congress."

The Supreme Court in United States v. Blackfeather, 155 U. S. 180 (1894), held that when the United States undertook by treaty to "expose to sale to the highest bidder" the land ceded to the United States by the Indians, and disposed of a large part of such land at private sale, the Federal Government was guilty of a violation of trust.

In a subsequent case the Court held that provisions granting claims against the United States are strictly construed. Blackfeather v. United States, 190 U. S. 368, 376 (1903). The Court said:

> * * * The moral obligations of the Government toward the Indians, whatever they may be, are for Congress alone to recognize,

Certain treaties with the Indians were invalidated by hostilities.[20] During the Civil War Congress expressly authorized the President to declare all treaties with a tribe engaged in hostility toward the United States abrogated by such tribe, "if in his opinion the same can be done consistently with good faith and legal and national obligations." [21]

While the United States often abrogated treaty provisions,[22] some treaties contained drastic penalties for Indians who might commit violations. Article 4 of the Treaty of June 19, 1818,[23] required the chiefs and warriors of the tribe to deliver "to the authority of the United States, (to be punished according to law,) each and every individual of the said tribe, who shall, at any time hereafter, violate the stipulations of the treaty * * *." The Treaty of August 9, 1814,[24] after denouncing them as violators or instigators of violation, required the "caption and surrender of all the prophets and instigators of the war, whether foreigners or natives, who have not submitted to the arms of the United States * * *." The Treaty of March 2, 1868,[25] provided that a chief violating an essential part of the treaty shall forfeit his position.

Some treaties provided for the modification [26] or abrogation of previous provisions [27] or declared previous treaties null and void and canceled claims under them,[28] or nullified preemption rights and reservations created under them,[29] or expressly recognized former treaties.[30]

Treaties sometimes provided saving clauses in the event of rejection of some of the articles. For example, article 7 of the Treaty of August 5, 1826, with the Chippewas,[31] provides among other things:

> * * * But it is expressly understood and agreed, that the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles, or either of them, may be rejected by the President and Senate, without affecting the validity of the other articles of the treaty.

Future contingencies sometimes provided for included violation by a chief of an essential part of the treaty [32] or relinquishment by chiefs of land reserved by treaty,[33] nonratification,[34] nonremoval of the Indians,[35] abandonment of land [36] and insufficiency of "good tillable land" ceded to the tribe.[37]

The legal force of Indian treaties did not insure their actual enforcement. Some important treaties were negotiated but never ratified by the Senate,[38] or ratified only after a long delay.[39] Treaties were sometimes consummated by methods amounting to bribery,[40] or signed by representatives of only a small part of the signatory tribes.[41] The Federal Government failed to fulfill the terms of many treaties,[42] and was sometimes unable or unwilling to prevent states,[43] or white people,[44] from violating treaty rights of the Indians.

---

and the courts can exercise only such jurisdiction over the subject as Congress may confer upon them. (P. 373.)

[20] See Preamble to Treaty of August 9, 1814 with the Creeks, 7 Stat. 120. Also see Leighton v. United States, 161 U. S. 291, 296 (1895). On what constitutes war between the United States and a tribe see Marks v. United States, 161 U. S. 297 (1896); McCandless v. United States ex rel. Diabo. 25 F. 2d 71 (C. C. A. 3, 1928).

[21] Act of July 5, 1862, 12 Stat. 512. 528 R. S. § 2080, 25 U. S. C. 72, discussed in Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. 211, 215 (1872).

[22] See fn. 14, supra.

[23] With the Pitavirate Noisy Pawnees, 7 Stat. 173. 174. The same provision was contained in other treaties, such as the Treaty of June 18, 1818, with the Grand Pawnee Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 172; Treaty of June 22, 1818, with the Pawnee Marhar Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 175.

[24] With the Creeks, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 120.

[25] With the Utes, Art. 17, 15 Stat. 619.

[26] For example, see Treaty of January 20, 1825, with the Choctaws, 7 Stat. 234. Sometimes permanent additions to treaties in force were made (Treaty of September 25, 1818, with the Osages, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 183) and rights under previous treaties were preserved (Treaty of July 15, 1830, with the Sacs and others, Art. 12, 7 Stat. 328).

[27] The Treaty of August 31, 1822, with the Osages, 7 Stat. 222, abrogates the Treaty of November 10, 1808, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 107; the Treaty of September 3, 1822, with the Sac and Fox Tribes, 7 Stat. 223, abrogates the Treaty of November 3, 1804, 7 Stat. 84; the Treaty of February 27, 1867, with the Pottawatomies, Art. 13, 15 Stat. 531, 534, voids all provisions of former treaties inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty.

The Treaty of April 1, 1850, with the Wyandots, Art. 11, 9 Stat. 987, abrogated and declared null and void all former treaties between the United States and the Wyandots, except provisions previously made for the benefit of individuals "by grants of reservations of lands, or otherwise, which are considered as vested rights, and not to be affected by any thing contained in this treaty."

Article 21 of the Treaty of June 22, 1855, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, 11 Stat. 611, provided:

> This convention shall supersede and take the place of all former treaties between the United States and the Choctaws, and also, of all treaty stipulations between the United States and the Chickasaws, and between the Choctaws and Chickasaws, inconsistent with this agreement, and shall take effect and be obligatory upon the contracting parties, from the date hereof, whenever the same shall be ratified by the respective councils of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, and by the President and Senate of the United States.

Also see Treaty of August 7, 1856, with the Creeks, Art. 26, 11 Stat. 699.

[28] Treaty of January 24, 1826, with the Creeks, Art. 1, 7 Stat. 286.

[29] Supplementary articles to the Treaty of December 29, 1835, with the Cherokees, 7 Stat. 488; Treaty of May 18, 1854, with the Sacs and Foxes, Art. 1, 10 Stat. 1074; Treaty of May 18, 1854, with the Kickapoos, Art. 8, 10 Stat. 1078; Treaty of July 31, 1855, with the Ottawas and Chippewas, Art. 3, 11 Stat. 621.

[30] Treaty of October 25, 1805, with the Cherokees, Art. 1, 7 Stat. 93; Treaty of July 18, 1815, with the Potawatamies, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 123; Treaty of July 18, 1815, with the Piankishaws, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 124; Treaty of September 25, 1818, with the Illinois Nation, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 181.

[31] 7 Stat. 290.

[32] Treaty of March 2, 1868, with the Utes, Art. 13, 15 Stat. 619.

[33] Treaty of September 18, 1823, with the Florida Indians, Additional Art., 7 Stat. 224, 226.

[34] By Art. 16, the rejection of any article would not affect the other provisions in the Treaty of June 28, 1862, with the Kickapoos, 13 Stat. 623; Art. 6 of the Treaty of November 23, 1838, with the Creeks, 7 Stat. 574, provided that the rejection of a certain article would not affect the other provisions.

[35] For example, see Treaty of November 15, 1854, with the Rogue River Tribe, Art. 4, 10 Stat. 1119.

[36] Treaty of September 21, 1833, with the Otoes and Missourias, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 429.

[37] Treaty of September 18, 1823, with the Florida Tribes, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 224.

[38] Hoopes, Indian Affairs and their Administration, with Special Reference to the Far West (1932), p. 86.

[39] Ibid., p. 115.

[40] Kinney, A Continent Lost—A Civilization Won (1937), pp. 37, 38, 52, 56, 71, 94; Schmeckebier, The Office of Indian Affairs, Its History, Activities, and Organization (1927), p. 31.

[41] Kinney, op. cit. pp. 44, 45.

[42] Kinney, op. cit. p. 68; Hoopes, op. cit. pp. 180, 218, 219; Schmeckebier describes this condition:

> One of the defects of the treaty system was that agreements were continually being made which were not carried into effect. This was due in part to inefficient administration, in part to the failure of Congress to make the necessary appropriations, and in part to the inherent difficulties presented by the nature of the problem.
>
> * * * * *
>
> Some of the stipulations of almost all treaties which it was impossible to carry out were those guaranteeing the Indians against the intrusion of the white settlers and providing for the punishment of white persons committing offenses against the Indians. As the exterior boundaries reserved to the Indians were thousands of miles in extent, it was impossible to police this area in such a way as to prevent trespass or to secure evidence against offenders. (P. 62.)

[43] See Kinney, op. cit. p. 71.

[44] Ibid., pp. 148, 149, 174, 184, 208; Hoopes, op. cit. pp. 84, 226, 228–232, 236; Schmeckebier, op. cit. p. 44.

> Treaty guarantees of land to the Indians were often violated. In 1789 Secretary of War McHenry, in his instructions to the Commissioners for negotiating a treaty with the Cherokees, made the following comment: "The arts and practices to obtain Indian land, in defiance of treaties and the laws, and at the risk of involving the whole country in war, have become so daring, and received such countenance, from persons of prominent influence, as to render it necessary that the means to countervail them shall be augmented." Am. St. Papers, Indian Affairs, vol. 1, p. 639, quoted by Schmeckebier, ibid., pp. 24–25.

SECTION 2. INTERPRETATION OF TREATIES [45]

A cardinal rule in the interpretation of Indian treaties is that ambiguities are resolved in favor of the Indians.[46]

For example, a proviso in an Indian treaty which exempts lands from "levy, sale, and forfeiture" is not, in the absence of expressions so limiting it, confined to the levy and sale under ordinary judicial proceedings, but also includes the levy and sale by county officers for the nonpayment of taxes.[47]

An agreement embodied in an act of Congress which in terms "ceded, granted, and relinquished" to the United States all of their "right, title, and interest," did not make the lands public lands in the sense of being subject to sale or other disposition under the general land laws, but only in the manner provided for in the special agreement with the Indians.[48]

The best interests of the Indians,[49] however, do not necessarily coincide with a grant to them of the broadest power over lands. The Supreme Court has held that the best interests of the Indians do not require that they should be allotted lands in fee rather than lands held in trust by the government for them.[50]

While trying to serve the Indians' best interests, the courts have indicated that they will not dispense with any of the conditions or requirements of the treaties upon any notion of equity or general convenience or substantial justice. Justice Harlan, in the case of United States v. Choctaw Nation,[51] said:

> But in no case has it been adjudged that the courts could by mere interpretation or in deference to its view as to what was right under all the circumstances, incorporate into an Indian treaty something that was inconsistent with the clear import of its words. It has never been held that the obvious, palpable meaning of the words of an Indian treaty may be disregarded because, in the opinion of the court, that meaning may in a particular transaction work what it would regard as injustice to the Indians. That would be an intrusion upon the domain committed by the Constitution to the political departments of the Government. Congress did not intend, when passing the act under which this litigation was inaugurated, to invest the Court of Claims or this court with authority to determine whether the United States had, in its treaty with the Indians, violated the principles of fair dealing. What was said in The Amiable Isabella, 6 Wheat. 1, 71, 72, is evidently applicable to treaties with Indians. Mr. Justice Story, speaking for the court, said: "In the first place, this court does not possess any treaty-making power. That power belongs by the Constitution to another department of the Government, and to alter, amend, or add to any treaty by inserting any clause, whether small or great, important or trivial, would be on our part an usurpation of power and not an exercise of judicial functions. It would be to make, and not to construe a treaty. Neither can this court supply a casus omissus in a treaty, any more than in a law. We are to find out the intention of the parties by just rules of interpretation applied to the subject-matter; and, having found that, our duty is to follow it as far as it goes and to stop where that stops—whatever may be the imperfections or difficulties which it leaves behind. * * * In the next place, this court is bound to give effect to the stipulations of the treaty in the manner and to the extent which the parties have declared, and not otherwise. We are not at liberty to dispense with any of the conditions or requirements of the treaty, or to take away any qualification or integral part of any stipulation, upon any notion of equity or general convenience, or substantial justice. The terms which the parties have chosen to fix, the forms which they have prescribed, and the circumstances under which they are to have operation, rest in the exclusive discretion of the contracting parties, and whether they belong to the essence or the modal part of the treaty, equally give the rule to the judicial tribunals." (Pp. 532–533.)

So, too, it has been held that the reservation of a privilege to fish and hunt on lands transferred by a contract ratified by a treaty does not prevent the prosecution of tribal Indians violating a conservation law on such lands, since the transfer does not expressly or impliedly limit the right of the state to enact conservation measures.[52]

A somewhat different, although related, rule of treaty interpretation is to the effect that, since the wording in treaties was designed to be understood by the Indians, who often could not read and were not learned in the technical language, doubtful clauses are resolved in a nontechnical way as the Indians would have understood the language.[53]

---

[45] Also see Chapter 15, sec. 5C. Agreements with Indians are interpreted according to the same principles as treaties. (See sec. 6, infra.) Marlin v. Lewallen, 276 U. S. 58, 64 (1928). Mr. Justice Stone said in the case of Carpenter v. Shaw, 280 U. S. 363 (1930):

> While in general tax exemptions are not to be presumed and statutes conferring them are to be strictly construed, Heiner v. Colonial Trust Co., 275 U. S. 232, the contrary is the rule to be applied to tax exemptions secured to the Indians by agreement between them and the national government. Choate v. Trapp, supra, 675. Such provisions are to be liberally construed. Doubtful expressions are to be resolved in favor of the weak and defenseless people who are the wards of the nation, dependent upon its protection and good faith. Hence, in the words of Chief Justice Marshall, "The language used in treaties with the Indians should never be construed to their prejudice. If words be made use of, which are susceptible of a more extended meaning than their plain import, as connected with the tenor of the treaty, they should be considered as used only in the latter sense." Worcester v. The State of Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 582. See The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, 760. And they must be construed not according to their technical meaning but "in the sense in which they would naturally be understood by the Indians." Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1, 11. (Pp. 366–367.)

[46] Winters v. United States, 207 U. S. 564 (1908); 34 Op. A. G. 439 (1925); 6 Op. A. G. 658 (1854); Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 582 (1832). And see Art. 11 of Treaty of September 9, 1849, with Navajo, 9 Stat. 974.

[47] The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737 (1866).

[48] The Act of April 27, 1904, 33 Stat. 352 (Crow Reservation) interpreted in Ash Sheep Co. v. United States, 252 U. S. 159 (1920).

[49] See 32 Op. A. G. 586 (1921).

[50] Starr v. Long Jim, 227 U. S. 613, 623 (1913).

[51] 179 U. S. 494 (1900). Also see United States v. Minnesota, 270 U. S. 181 (1926).

[52] Kennedy v. Becker, 241 U. S. 556 (1916). The clause "Also, excepting and reserving to them * * * the privilege of fishing and hunting on the said tract of land hereby intended to be conveyed" (Treaty of September 15, 1797, with the Seneca Nation, 7 Stat. 601, 602) was interpreted as > * * * reservation of a privilege of fishing and hunting upon the granted lands in common with the grantees, and others to whom the privilege might be extended, but subject nevertheless to that necessary power of appropriate regulation, as to all those privileged, which inhered in the sovereignty of the State over the lands where the privilege was exercised. (Pp. 563–564.)

Interpretations of other clauses are noted in sec. 4 of this Chapter and Chapter 6, sec. 3B, and Chapter 14, sec. 7.

[53] Fleming v. McCurtain, 214 U. S. 56, 60 (1909); Chapter 8, sec. 9I. See Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 551–553 (1832). In commenting on frequent mistakes one writer said:

> * * * As the Indians had no written language and few of the chiefs even had a knowledge of English, the negotiations were carried on generally through interpreters, many of whom were inefficient. The description of the lands ceded was also a source of misunderstanding. In the region east of the Mississippi, the geography was fairly well known, and it was possible to describe areas with a fair degree of accuracy by reference to the streams and ridges; the area west of the Mississippi, however, was little known when many of the treaties were made, and the descriptions were of the most indefinite character.
>
> The method of making the treaties varied according to the character of the commissioners negotiating for them. Some were manifestly fraudulent; notably the treaty with the Creeks made in 1825. Others were signed by the Indians practically under duress. For instance, George C. Sibley, factor at Fort Osage, gives the following account of the negotiations with that tribe in 1808:
>
> "* * * On the 8th of November, 1808, Peter Chouteau, the United States' agent for the Osages, arrived at Fort Clark. On the 10th he assembled the Chiefs and warriors of the Great and Little Osages in council, and proceeded to state to them the substance of a treaty, which, he said, Governor Lewis had deputed him to offer the Osages, and to execute with them. Having briefly explained to them the purport of the treaty, he addressed them to this effect, in my hearing, and very nearly in the following words: 'You have heard this treaty explained to you. Those who now come forward and sign it, shall be considered friends of the United

The Supreme Court in the case of Jones v. Meehan[54] said:

> In construing any treaty between the United States and an Indian tribe, it must always (as was pointed out by the counsel for the appellees) be borne in mind that the negotiations for the treaty are conducted, on the part of the United States, an enlightened and powerful nation, by representatives skilled in diplomacy, masters of a written language, understanding the modes and forms of creating the various technical estates known to their law, and assisted by an interpreter employed by themselves; that the treaty is drawn up by them and in their own language; that the Indians, on the other hand, are a weak and dependent people, who have no written language and are wholly unfamiliar with all the forms of legal expression, and whose only knowledge of the terms in which the treaty is framed is that imparted to them by the interpreter employed by the United States; and that the treaty must therefore be construed, not according to the technical meaning of its words to learned lawyers, but in the sense in which they would naturally be understood by the Indians. (Pp. 10–11.)

These principles received many applications in decisions interpreting terms derived from private conveyances which were often used in treaties with the Indians.[55] For example, the word "grant" is not construed as an absolute fee simple, unless the treaty by some other words clearly indicates that the tribe so understood the nature of the conveyance.[56]

The United States Supreme Court,[57] interpreting the clause,

> The United States shall cause to be conveyed to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River, in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it; * * * (P. 58.)

held that this did not create a trust for the individuals then comprising the nation and their respective descendants.

Although an interpretation of a treaty should be made in the light of conditions existing when the treaty was executed, as often indicated by its history before and after its making,[58] the exact situation which caused the inclusion of a provision is often difficult to ascertain.[59] New conditions may arise which could not be anticipated by the signatories to a treaty. A practical administrative construction of a treaty which has long been acquiesced in by congressional inaction is usually followed by the courts.[60]

States, and treated accordingly. Those who refuse to come forward and sign it shall be considered enemies of the United States, and treated accordingly.' The Osages replied in substance, 'that if their great American father wanted a part of their land he must have it, that he was strong and powerful, they were poor and pitiful, what could they do? he had demanded their land and had thought proper to offer them something in return for it. They had no choice, they must either sign the treaty or be declared enemies of the United States.'" Schmeckebier, The Office of Indian Affairs, Its History, Activities, and Organization (1927), pp. 59–60.

In discussing the status of Indian tribes during the Civil War, one writer stated:

> * * * Moreover, the Indians fought as solicited allies, some as nations, diplomatically approached. Treaties were made with them as with foreign powers and not in the farcical, fraudulent way that had been customary in times past. Abel, The American Indian as Slaveholder and Secessionist, vol. 1, The Slaveholding Indians (1915), p. 17.

[54] 175 U. S. 1. (1899).

[55] Fleming v. McCurtain. 215 U. S. 56, 59 (1909). For example, by Art. 4 of the Treaty of September 18, 1823, 7 Stat. 224, the United States promised to guarantee the signatory Florida tribes "the peaceable possession of the district of country" assigned them, and the Treaty of September 26, 1833, with the Chippewas and others, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 431, provides that in consideration of the cession of land, "the United States shall grant to the said United Nation of Indians to be held as other Indian lands are held which have lately been assigned to emigrating Indians, a tract of country west of the Mississippi river, to be assigned to them by the President of the United States * * *."

[56] 3 Op. A. G. 322 (1838). And see Chapter 15, sec. 5C.

[57] Fleming v. McCurtain, 215 U. S. 56, 58–60 (1909).

[58] Seminole Nation v. United States, 78 C. Cls. 455, 458 (1933). Also see Ayres v. United States, 44 C. Cls. 48, 85, 95 (1908).

[59] 32 Op. A. G. 586 (1921). See Fish v. Wise, 52 F. 2d 544 (C. C. A. 10, 1931), cert. den. 282 U. S. 903 (1931), in which the court declined to permit the testimony of interested witnesses 30 years after its execution to thwart the object of an agreement as interpreted by the courts.

[60] Hicks v. Butrick, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6458 (C. C. Kan. 1875). Also see Ayres v. United States, supra, fn. 58, and see Chapter 5, sec. 7.

SECTION 3. THE SCOPE OF TREATIES

In the Constitution[61] the President was given power to make treaties, with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.[62] The Supreme Court, in interpreting this provision, said:[63]

> * * * inasmuch as the power is given, in general terms, without any description of the objects intended to be embraced within its scope, it must be assumed that the framers of the Constitution intended that it should extend to all those objects which in the intercourse of nations had usually been regarded as the proper subjects of negotiation and treaty, if not inconsistent with the nature of our government and the relation between the States and the United States. (Holmes v. Jennison et al., 14 Peters, 569; 1 Kent, 166; 2 Story on the Constitution, § 1508; 7 Hamilton's Works, 501; Duer's Jurisprudence, 229.)

Again, the scope of this power was described by the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Forty-three Gallons of Whiskey:[64]

> Besides, the power to make treaties with the Indian tribes is, as we have seen, coextensive with that to make treaties with foreign nations. In regard to the latter, it is, beyond doubt, ample to cover all the usual subjects of diplomacy. * * * (P. 197.)

During the last period of treaty making, amendments by the Senate were frequent.[65]

A special limitation of the treaty-making power is that it cannot appropriate money.[66] Referring to this fact, the Circuit Court for the District of Michigan[67] said that a treaty > * * * cannot bind or control the legislative action in this respect, and every foreign government may be presumed to know, that so far as the treaty stipulates to pay money, the legislative sanction is required. (P.346.)

[61] Treaties already made were recognized by the Constitution. Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1 (1831); Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 559 (1832).

[62] Art. 2, sec. 2, cl. 2. An amendment to a treaty adopted by the Senate which did not receive Presidential approval and was not embodied in his proclamation cannot be regarded as part of the treaty. New York Indians v. United States, 170 U. S. 1, 23 (1898). Professor Willoughby writes of the early practice:

> During the first years under the Constitution the relations between the President and the Senate were especially close. In 1789 President Washington notified the Senate that he would confer with them with reference to a treaty with certain of the Indian tribes, and, on the next day, and again two days later, went with General Knox before that body for that purpose. Again, in 1790, President Washington in a written communication asked the advice of the Senate as to a new boundary treaty to be entered into with the Cherokee. Willoughby, The Constitutional Law of the United States, (2d ed. 1929) vol. I, p. 521.

[63] Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. 211, 242–243 (1872).

[64] 93 U. S. 188 (1876). Also see Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 266 (1890).

[65] See, for example, Treaty of February 18, 1867, with Sac and Fox Indians, 15 Stat. 495; Treaty of February 23, 1867, with the Senecas, and others, Art. 40, 15 Stat. 513, 523.

[66] 24 Op. A. G. 623 (1903); 25 Op. A. G. 163 (1904).

[67] Turner v. American Baptist Missionary Union, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14251 (C. C. Mich. 1852).

However, as Boyd has pointed out: [68]

> Although in regard to treaties calling for appropriations congress has seemed reluctant to act without making it plain that there was a discretionary right vested in congress in the premises, such appropriations have always been forthcoming.

Apart from this limitation, treaties may contain provisions which could not constitutionally be included in acts of Congress.[69]

Within the broad scope of "all the usual subjects of diplomacy," the Federal Government and the Indian tribes adopted treaties covering not only all aspects of intercourse between Indians and whites but also some of the internal affairs of the tribes themselves. Among the most important of the subjects covered were: [70]

A. The international status of the tribe.
   1. War and peace.
   2. Boundaries.
   3. Passports.
   4. Extradition.
   5. Relations with third powers.

B. Dependence of tribes on the United States.
   1. Protection.
   2. Exclusive trade relations.
   3. Representation in Congress.
   4. Congressional power.
   5. Administrative power.
   6. Termination of treaty-making.

C. Commercial relations.
   1. Cessions of land.
   2. Reserved rights in ceded land.
   3. Payments and services to tribes.

D. Jurisdiction.
   1. Criminal jurisdiction.
   2. Civil jurisdiction.

E. Control of tribal affairs.

A. THE INTERNATIONAL STATUS OF THE TRIBE

Until the last decade of the treaty-making period, terms familiar to modern international diplomacy were used in the Indian treaties.

The United States sometimes guaranteed the integrity of the territory of a nation; [71] unprovoked war was "* * * repelled, prosecuted and determined * * * in conformity with principles of national justice and honorable warfare"; [72] some of the Creek Nation acted "contrary to national faith" and "suffered themselves to be instigated to violations of their national honor"; [73] the United States desired that "* * * perfect peace shall exist between the nations or tribes * * *" named and the republic of Mexico.[74]

Many provisions show the international status of the Indian tribes,[75] through clauses relating to war, boundaries, passports, extradition, and foreign relations.

[68] Boyd, The Expanding Treaty Power, in Selected Essays on Constitutional Law, vol. 3, The Nation and the States, (1938), p. 410, 414.

[69] Missouri v. Holland, 252 U. S. 416 (1920). Also see Selected Essays on Constitutional Law, vol. 3, op. cit. fn. 68, pp. 397–435.

[70] For discussion of removal provisions see sec. 4E of this Chapter. Relevant treaty provisions are discussed in other chapters.

[71] Treaty of September 17, 1778, with the Delawares, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 13, 15; Treaty of August 9, 1814, with the Creeks, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 120, 121.

[72] Preamble to Treaty of August 9, 1814, with the Creeks, 7 Stat. 120.

[73] Ibid.

[74] Treaty of August 24, 1835, with the Comanche and others, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 474, 475.

[75] Also see Chapter 14, sec. 7.

1. War and peace.—The capacity of Indian tribes to make war was frequently recognized.[76] Most of the very early treaties were treaties of peace and friendship,[77] and often provided for the restoration or exchange of prisoners,[78] and sometime for hostages until prisoners were restored.[79]

Indian tribes have also waged wars with states. The state of Georgia and the Creek Nation were engaged in several wars towards the close of the eighteenth century.[80]

The Supreme Court [81] commented on the status of Indian wars in these terms:

> * * * We recall no instance where Congress has made a formal declaration of war against an Indian nation or tribe; but the fact that Indians are engaged in acts of general hostility to settlers, especially if the Government has deemed it necessary to dispatch a military force for their subjugation, is sufficient to constitute a state of war. Marks v. United States, 161 U. S. 297. (P. 267.)

A few treaties included mutual assistance pacts. By Article 8 of the Treaty of January 9, 1789 with the Wiandot and others,[82] the parties agreed to give notice of war or any harm that might be meditated against the other party, "and do all in their power to hinder and prevent the same * * *." Article 2 of the Treaty of July 22, 1814, with the Wyandots and others [83] provided that:

> The tribes and bands abovementioned, engage to give their aid to the United States in prosecuting the war against Great-Britain, and such of the Indian tribes as still continue hostile; and to make no peace with either without the consent of the United States.

In some treaties the Indians agreed to suppress insurrections and permit the military occupation of their country by the United States,[84] or the establishment of garrisons or forts by the > * * * no war shall be undertaken or prosecuted by said Choctaw Nation, but by declaration made in full Council, and to be approved by the U. S. unless it be in self-defence * * * (Art. V).

[76] E. g., Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek of September 27, 1830, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 333, 334:

For a discussion see Fleming v. McCurtain, 215 U. S. 56, 60 (1909).

[77] See Treaty of September 17, 1778, with the Delaware Nation, 7 Stat. 13. "That a perpetual peace and friendship shall from henceforth take place * * *" (Art. 2). Later treaties "gave peace." That this was intended to cover "peace and friendship" is made clear in Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wiandots, etc., Art. XIII, 7 Stat. 28, which "renewed and confirmed the peace and friendship" entered into in an earlier treaty. That earlier treaty merely gave peace. Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandots, etc., Preamble, 7 Stat. 16. See, for example, "A Treaty of Peace and Friendship" with the Sacs, May 13, 1816, 7 Stat. 141, and Treaty of September 20, 1816, with the Chickasaws, Art. 1, 7 Stat. 150.

[78] Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, Arts. 1 and 2, 7 Stat. 18; Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokees, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 39.

[79] Treaty of October 22, 1784, with the Six Nations, Art. 1, 7 Stat. 15; Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandots and others, Art. 1, 7 Stat. 16.

[80] See 2 Op. A. G. 110 (1828).

[81] Montoya v. United States, 180 U. S. 261 (1901). See Chapter 14, sec. 3.

[82] 7 Stat. 28. See also Treaty of August 3, 1795, with the Wyandots, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 49; Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, Art. 11, 7 Stat. 18; Treaty of January 3, 1786, with the Choctaws, Art. 10, 7 Stat. 21; Treaty of January 31, 1786, with the Shawanoe Nation, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 26.

[83] 7 Stat. 118. Article 12 of the Treaty of November 10, 1808, with the Great and Little Osage Nations, 7 Stat. 107, provided:

> And the chiefs and warriors as aforesaid, promise and engage that neither the Great nor Little Osage nation will ever, by sale, exchange or as presents, supply any nation or tribe of Indians, not in amity with the United States, with guns, ammunitions or other implements of war.

Also see Treaty of July 30, 1825, with the Belantse-etoa or Minnetsaree Tribe, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 261.

[84] Treaty of March 21, 1866, with the Seminoles, Art. 1, 14 Stat. 755.

President;[85] or to prevent other tribes from making hostile demonstrations against the United States government or people.[86]

2. Boundaries.[87]—Nations are usually separated by frontiers. Many treaties fixed the boundaries between the United States and Indian tribes[88] and between Indian tribes.[89] Old boundaries were sometimes altered,[90] and during the removal period,[91] treaties generally described the new territory granted to the Indians.[92]

Frequently treaties prohibited the trespass[93] or settlement[94] of American citizens on Indian territory, unless licensed to trade.[95]

Such provisions were supplemented by statutes.[96]

3. Passports.—Additional evidence of the national character of the Indian tribes appears in the provisions requiring passports for citizens or inhabitants of the United States to enter the domain of an Indian tribe. The Treaty of August 7, 1790,[97] with the Creek Nation provided in part:

> * * * Nor shall any such citizen or inhabitant go into the Creek country, without a passport first obtained from the Governor of some one of the United States, or the officer of the troops of the United States commanding at the nearest military post on the frontiers, or such other person as the President of the United States may, from time to time, authorize to grant the same.

Such provisions were supplemented by statutes which required citizens of the United States, as well as foreigners, to secure passports before entering the Indian country, this statutory requirement being later waived in the case of citizens.[98]

4. Extradition.—The surrender of fugitives from justice by one nation to another is usually covered by treaty; similarly with the Indians and the United States.

Some treaties required the Indian tribes to deliver up persons committing crimes who were on their land, to be punished by the United States.[99] A few treaties provided for the extradition of such persons for punishment by the states,[100] or by the "states or territory of the United States northwest of the Ohio." [101] A few early treaties provided for the punishment of United States citizens in the presence of the Indians.[102] A particularly broad provision in regard to extradition was contained in the Treaty of June 19, 1858, with the Sioux,[103] which requires the extradition of violators of treaties, laws, and regulations of the United States, or of the laws of the State of Minnesota. Other treaties provided that the Indians shall prevent fugitive slaves from taking shelter among them and shall deliver such fugitives to the Indian agent.[104]

5. Relations with third powers.—During the first few decades of the Republic, the political relations of many of the Indian tribes were not confined to the United States. As late as 1835[105] the "friendly relations" existing between some Indian tribes and the Republic of Mexico,[106] the Republic of Texas,[107] and among the several Indian tribes were formally recognized by the United States.[108]

B. DEPENDENCE OF TRIBES ON THE UNITED STATES

While the national character of Indian tribes has been frequently recognized in treaties[109] and statutes,[110] numerous treaty provisions establish their status as dependent nations.[111]

---

[85] Treaty of June 16, 1802, with the Creek Nation, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 68; Treaty of November 10, 1808, with the Osages, Art. 1, 7 Stat. 107.

[86] Treaty of October 20, 1865, with the Dakotas, Art. 1, 14 Stat. 731.

[87] See Chapter 15, sec. 12, and sec. 4C of this Chapter.

[88] See Chapter 1, sec. 3, fn. 46. The primary purpose of some treaties was to establish boundaries. 5 Op. A. G. 31 (1848).

[89] Treaty of August 19, 1825, with the Sioux and others, 7 Stat. 272, Article 1 provided for peace between Sioux and Chippewas, Sacs and Foxes and the Ioways.

[90] Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokees, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 39; Treaty of October 17, 1802, with the Choctaws, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 73.

[91] See sec. 4E, infra. Also see Treaty of December 29, 1835, with the Cherokees, Art. 16, 7 Stat. 478, providing for removal in 2 years. Article 5 of the Treaty of January 19, 1832, with a band of the Wyandots, 7 Stat. 364, provides that the band may > * * * remove to Canada, or to the river Huron in Michigan, where they own a reservation of land, or to any place they may obtain a right or privilege from other Indians to go.

[92] See sec. 4E, infra; and see Chapter 15, sec. 5.

[93] Article 3 of the Treaty of May 24, 1834, with the Chickasaws, 7 Stat. 450, provides that > * * * the agent of the United States, upon the application of the chiefs of the nation, will resort to every legal civil remedy, (at the expense of the United States,) to prevent intrusions upon the ceded country; * * *.

Article 7 of the Treaty of March 6, 1861, with the Sacs and others, 12 Stat. 1171, provided that no nonmember of a tribe, except Government employees or persons connected with Government services, shall go on the reservation except with the permission of the agent or the Superintendent of Indian Affairs.

[94] Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandots and others, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 16; Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokee Nation, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 39. Also see sec. 4C infra.

[95] See Chapter 16.

[96] Act of May 19, 1796, 1 Stat. 469; also see Act of March 3, 1799, sec. 2, 1 Stat. 743 and Act of March 30, 1802, sec. 2, 2 Stat. 139. See fn. 47, Chapter 1.

[97] Art. 7, 7 Stat. 35, 37. See also Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokees, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 39.

[98] See Chapter 4, sec. 6.

[99] Article 9 of the Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandots and others, 7 Stat. 16, provides:

> If any Indian or Indians shall commit a robbery or murder on any citizen of the United States, the tribe to which such offenders may belong shall be bound to deliver them up at the nearest post, to be punished according to the ordinances of the United States.

Also see Treaty of September 27, 1830, with the Choctaws, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 333.

[100] Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokee Nation, Art. 11, 7 Stat. 39.

[101] Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wiandots and others, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 28.

[102] Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 18; Treaty of January 3, 1786, with the Choctaw Nation, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 21. Article 7 of the Treaty of May 15, 1846, with the Comanches and other tribes, 9 Stat. 844, provided that Indians guilty of insurrection shall be delivered up to the United States.

[103] Art. 6, 12 Stat. 1037. Also see Treaty of March 12, 1858, with the Poncas, Art. 7, 12 Stat. 997. For an example of a provision providing for extradition between tribes see Treaty of August 7, 1856, with the Creeks and Seminoles, Art. 14, 11 Stat. 699.

[104] Treaty of September 18, 1823, with the Floridas, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 224.

[105] Treaty of August 24, 1835, with the Comanche and others, 7 Stat. 474.

[106] Ibid., Art. 9.

[107] Treaty of May 26, 1837, with the Kioway and others, 7 Stat. 533.

[108] See fn. 105, Art. 1. Indian tribes also made treaties with the states and with the Confederacy. The Federal Government sometimes supervised state dealings with Indians. While states entered into treaties with Indians prior to the ratification of the Constitution (W. A. Duerr, Course of Lectures on the Constitutional Jurisprudence of the United States, 2d ed. (1856), p. 281), the Constitution forbids a state from entering "into any treaty, alliance, or federation * * *." (Art. 1, sec. 8. See Coffee v. Groover, 123 U. S. 1, 13–14 (1887).) Many states like New York entered into numerous treaties with Indian tribes subsequent to the Constitution with the consent of the United States. The Supreme Court in Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 581, said: "Under the constitution no state can enter into any treaty; and it is believed, that, since its adoption, no state, under its own authority, has held a treaty with the Indians." Accord: Coffee v. Groover, 123 U. S. 1, 13 (1887). See Chapter 8, sec. 11. On the view of the South that each state succeeded to the property rights of Great Britain and could treat with the Indians as it pleased, see United States v. Swain County, N. C., 46 F. 2d 99 (D. C. W. D. N. C. 1930), rev'd sub nom. United States v. Wright, et al., 53 F. 2d 300 (C. C. A. 8, 1931), cert. den. 285 U. S. 539.

[109] Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandots and others, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 16; Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 18; Treaty of January 3, 1786, with the Choctaw Nation, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 21.

[110] See Chapter 14, sec. 3.

[111] The relationship of the United States to the Indians has been likened to suzerainty. Wilson and Tucker, International Law (1935), p. 63.

1. Protection.—For example, article 2 of the Treaty of August 13, 1803, with the Kaskaskias[112] provides that—

> The United States will take the Kaskaskia tribe under their immediate care and patronage, and will afford them a protection as effectual against the other Indian tribes and against all other persons whatever as is enjoyed by their own citizens. And the said Kaskaskia tribe do hereby engage to refrain from making war or giving any insult or offence to any other Indian tribe or to any foreign nation, without having first obtained the approbation and consent of the United States. (P. 78.)

Similar provisions are contained in other treaties.[113]

In construing a similar provision, the Supreme Court said: [114]

> * * * By this treaty [Treaty of Hopewell] the Cherokees were recognized as one people, composing one tribe or nation, but subject, however, to the jurisdiction and authority of the Government of the United States, which could regulate their trade and manage all their affairs. (P. 295.)

Treaties with many of the other tribes left no doubt of the protectorate of the United States over them.[115]

In many respects this relationship is similar to that established in a great variety of cases between great powers and small, weak or backward states. Thus the limitations upon Indian law making and enforcement which appear in some treaties, may be likened to the limitations imposed upon the jurisdiction of certain oriental states, such as China, over the nationals of western countries residing within their territories.[116]

The practical inequality of the parties must be borne in mind in reading Indian treaties. It explains the presence of many clauses and the frequency with which similar or identical provisions appear in many Indian treaties during certain periods.[117]

2. Exclusive trade relations.[118]—The political dependence of the Indian tribes upon the Federal Government implied, and was implied by, their economic dependence. This economic dependence found expression in agreements by the tribes not to sell real or personal property or otherwise have commercial dealings with other sovereignties than the Federal Government or with their citizens or even with citizens of the United States not authorized by the Federal Government to engage in such transactions.

In some cases, these undertakings were explicit, as in Article 10 of the Treaty of November 10, 1808,[119] whereby the Osages disclaimed all right to > * * * cede, sell or in any manner transfer their lands to any foreign power, or to citizens of the United States or inhabitants of Louisiana, unless duly authorised by the President of the United States to make the said purchase or accept the said cession on behalf of the government.

In other cases, the exclusiveness of economic relations with the Federal Government was implicit in agreements that the United States "shall have the sole and exclusive right of regulating the trade with the Indians." [120]

Occasionally a tribe was given power to regulate trade and intercourse, "so far as may be compatible with the constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof regulating trade and intercourse with the Indians," [121] or was empowered to veto the granting of a trading license to trade within certain areas.[122]

Some treaties provided for the appointment of an agent to trade with the Indians,[123] and established trading posts [124] or designated places for trade.[125] Occasionally Indians were prohibited from trading outside the limits of the United States,[126] or were required to apprehend foreigners or other unauthorized persons coming "into their district of country, for the purposes of trade or other views," and to deliver them to federal officials.[127]

---

[112] 7 Stat. 78.

[113] The Treaty of August 7, 1790, with the Creek Nation, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 35, provides that:

> The undersigned Kings, Chiefs, and Warriors, for themselves and all parts of the Creek Nation within the limits of the United States, do acknowledge themselves, and the said parts of the Creek Nation, to be under the protection of the United States of America, and of no other sovereign whosoever; and they also stipulate that the said Creek Nation will not hold any treaty with an individual State, or with individuals of any State. (P. 35.)

The Treaty of November 17, 1807, with the Ottoways and others, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 105, provides that:

> The said nations of Indians acknowledge themselves to be under the protection of the United States, and no other power, and will prove by their conduct that they are worthy of so great a blessing.

Compare the following excerpt from the first section of a law passed by the Georgia legislature on October 31, 1787, quoted in 2 Op. A. G. 110, 124 (1828):

> * * * That from and immediately after the passing of this act, the Creek Indians shall be considered as out of the protection of this State; and it shall be lawful for the government and people of the same to put to death or capture the said Indians, wherever they may be found within the limits of the State * * *. (Pp. 124–125.)

[114] Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. United States, 117 U. S. 288 (1886).

[115] For example, Treaty of December 30, 1849, with the Utah Indians, Arts. 1 and 4, 9 Stat. 984.

[116] E. D. Dickinson, The Equality of States in International Law (1920), p. 224.

[117] For example, Treaty of September 26, 1825, with the Ottoes and Missourias, 7 Stat. 277, and the Treaty of September 30, 1825, with the Pawnees, 7 Stat. 279; Treaty of October 28, 1867, with the Cheyenne-Arapahoe Tribes, Art. 11, 15 Stat. 593, and Treaty of April 29, et. seq., 1868, with the Sioux, Art. 11, 15 Stat. 635. Also see Chapter 8, sec. 11.

[118] Cf. Chapter 16.

[119] 7 Stat. 107, 109. Also see Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wiandots and others, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 28; Treaty of September 21, 1832, with Sacs and Foxes, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 374. Treaty of May 15, 1846, with the Comanches and others, Art. 2, 9 Stat. 844.

[120] Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 18; Treaty of January 10, 1786, with the Chickasaws, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 24.

Article 1 of the Treaty of June 9, 1825, with the Poncar Tribe, 7 Stat. 247, contains another type of trade clause:

> * * * The said tribe also admit the right of the United States to regulate all trade and intercourse with them.

Also see Treaty of January 3, 1786, with the Choctaw Nation, Arts. 8, 9, 7 Stat. 21.

Sometimes this power was granted for mutual considerations. Treaty of July 6, 1825, with the Chayenne Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 255; Treaty of July 30, 1825, with the Belantse-etoa or Minnetsaree Tribe, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 261.

The Treaty of December 30, 1849, Arts. 1 and 4, 9 Stat. 984, provided for the submission of the Utah Indians to the power and authority of the United States and extended to these Indians the trade and intercourse laws already applicable to other tribes. Also see Treaty of September 9, 1849, with the Navajos, Art. 3, 9 Stat. 974. Some of the treaties did not contain such sweeping provisions, but merely provided that "the United States agree to admit and licence traders to hold intercourse with said tribe [the signatory tribe], under mild and equitable regulations." Treaty of June 9, 1825, with the Poncar Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 247. For similar provisions see Treaty of June 22, 1825, with the Teton, Yancton, and Yanctonies bands of Sioux, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 250; and Treaty of July 5, 1825, with the Sioune and Ogallala Tribes of Sioux, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 252.

[121] Treaty of August 7, 1856, with the Creeks and Seminoles, Art. 15, 11 Stat. 699. But cf. 1 Op. A. G. 645 (1824).

[122] Treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokees, Art. 8, 14 Stat. 799.

[123] E. g., Treaty of September 17, 1778, with the Delawares, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 13.

[124] Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wiandots and others, Arts. 10, 11, and 12, 7 Stat. 28; Treaty of June 29, 1796, with the Creeks, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 56. See Chapter 16.

[125] Treaty of July 5, 1825, with the Sioune and Ogallala Tribes, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 252; Treaty of July 6, 1825, with the Chayenne Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 255; Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wiandots and others, Art. 7, 7Stat. 28; Treaty of August 3, 1795, with the Wiandots and others, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 49.

[126] Treaty of December 26, 1854, with the Nisquallys and others, Art 12, 10 Stat. 1132.

[127] Treaty of September 26, 1825, with the Ottoe and Missouri Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 277; Treaty of September 30, 1825, with the Pawnees, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 279.

3. Representation in Congress.—Further light on the relations between the tribes and the Federal Government may be found in treaties which provided for the sending of Indian delegates to Congress.[128] This practice was explained in the report of the House Committee on Indian Affairs on the Trade and Intercourse Act of 1834.[129]

> The proposition for allowing Indians a delegate is not now for the first time brought forward.
>
> It was first suggested in 1778, and in the first treaty ever formed by the United States with any Indian tribe. The treaty with the Delawares of the 17th September, 1778, contains the following article: "And it is further agreed on, by the contracting parties, (should it, for the future, be found conducive for the interests of both parties,) to invite any other tribes who have been friends to the interests of the United States, to join the present confederation, and to form a State, whereof the Delaware nation shall be the head, and have a representative in Congress: Provided, Nothing contained in this article is to be considered as conclusive until it meets with the approbation of Congress."
>
> In the treaty of Hopewell, of 1785, is the following article: "Article 12. That the Indians may have full confidence in the justice of the United States, respecting their interests, they shall have the right to send a deputy of their choice, whenever they think fit, to Congress."
>
> In the treaty with the Choctaws, of September, 1830, they requested the privilege of having a delegate in the House of Representatives; and the treaty states that "the commissioners do not feel that they can, under a treaty stipulation, accede to the request, but at their desire present it in the treaty, that Congress may consider of and decide the application."
>
> The proposition is now presented to Congress, with the decided opinion of the committee that it ought to receive a favorable consideration. (Pp. 21–22.)

This recommendation was never effectuated.

4. Congressional power.—The extent to which Indian treaties conferred or confirmed congressional power to legislate over Indian affairs is the subject of a separate inquiry.[130] For the present it is sufficient to note that federal statutes have been extended over Indian country by the mere force of a treaty,[131] and that treaties sometimes provided for the creation of United States courts in the Indian country.[132] Thus, for example, Article 2 of the Treaty of October 4, 1842,[133] with the Chippewa Indians provides in part:

> The Indians stipulate * * * that the laws of the United States shall be continued in force, in respect to their trade and intercourse with the whites, until otherwise ordered by Congress.

Article 7 of the Treaty of October 2, 1863,[134] with the Chippewa Indians reads:

> * * * The laws of the United States now in force, or that may hereafter be enacted, prohibiting the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors in the Indian country, shall be in full force and effect throughout the country hereby ceded, until otherwise directed by congress or the President of the United States.

The Treaty of February 27, 1855,[135] with the Winnebago Indians provided:

> The laws which have been or may be enacted by Congress, regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, shall continue and be in force within the country herein provided to be selected as the future permanent home of the Winnebago Indians, and those portions of said laws which prohibit the introduction, manufacture, use of, and traffic in, ardent spirits, in the Indian country, shall continue and be in force within the country herein ceded to the United States, until otherwise provided by Congress.

5. Administrative power.—The President was frequently granted considerable power by treaties. He was authorized to establish trading posts;[136] military posts or garrisons on Indian lands;[137] to designate places for trade;[138] to appoint agents;[139] to arbitrate claims of whites against Indians and Indians against whites;[140] to arbitrate territorial[141] and other difficulties between tribes;[142] to prescribe the time of the removal and settlement of Indians;[143] to determine whether grants of land to certain Indians shall be conveyed;[144] to dispose of certain reserved lands as he sees fit;[145] to give reservations to the headmen of a tribe,[146] or cattle,[147] or agricultural aid;[148] to extend to an Indian tribe "from time to time, such benefits and acts of kindness as may be convenient, and seem just and proper" to him;[149] to decrease the amount of annuities in proportion to any annual decrease of the Poncas, and stop the payment of annuities in the event that satisfactory efforts to advance and improve their condition were not made;[150] to approve attorneys chosen by the chiefs and headmen;[151] to invest tribal money in stocks;[152] to make payments to the relations and friends of Indians;[153] and to receive complaints of injuries done by individuals to the Indians and use such prudent means "as shall be necessary to preserve the said peace and friendship" with an Indian tribe.[154]

Article 7 of the Treaty of September 30, 1809,[155] with the Delawares and others provided in part:

> * * * when any theft or other depredation shall be committed by any individual or individuals of one of the tribes above mentioned, upon the property of any individual or individuals of another tribe, the chiefs of the party injured shall make application to the agent of the

---

[128] See sec. 4B, infra.

[129] H. Rept. No. 474, Comm. on Ind. Aff., 23 Cong., 1st sess., May 20, 1834.

[130] See Chapter 5, sec. 2.

[131] Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 566, 567 (1883).

[132] Treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokees, Art. 7, 14 Stat. 799.

[133] 7 Stat. 591.

[134] 13 Stat. 667. See Chapter 17, sec. 1, fn. 14.

[135] Art. 8, 10 Stat. 1172.

[136] Treaty of June 29, 1796, with the Creek Nation, Art. 3(a), 7 Stat. 56.

[137] Treaty of June 16, 1802, with the Creek Nation, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 68. Other federal officials like the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs were also granted power by treaty.

[138] Treaty of July 5, 1825, with the Sioune and Ogallala Tribes, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 252; Treaty of July 6, 1825, with the Chayenne Tribe, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 255.

[139] Treaty of October 20, 1832, with the Chickasaw Nation, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 381.

[140] Treaty of January 8, 1821, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 217.

[141] Treaty of August 11, 1827, with the Chippewa and others, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 303.

[142] Treaty of September 21, 1833, with the Otoes and Missourias, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 429.

[143] Treaty of February 8, 1831, with the Menomonies, Art. 1, 7 Stat. 342.

[144] Treaty of September 17, 1818, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 178; Treaty of October 2, 1818, with the Potawatamie Nation, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 185.

[145] Treaty of June 2, 1825, with the Osages, Art. 10, 7 Stat. 240.

[146] Treaty of October 1, 1863, with the Western Band of Shoshonees, Art. 6, 18 Stat. 689.

[147] Ibid., Art. 7.

[148] Treaty of September 24, 1819, with the Chippewa Nation, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 203.

[149] Treaty of June 6, 1825, with the Chayenne Tribe, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 255.

[150] Treaty of March 12, 1858, with the Poncas, Art. 2, 12 Stat. 997; also see Treaty of February 18, 1861, with the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians, Art. 4, 12 Stat. 1163.

[151] Treaty of November 5, 1857, with the Tonawanda Band of Senecas, Art. 5, 12 Stat. 991.

[152] Ibid., Art. 6. Also see Treaty of October 1, 1859, with the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi, Art. 11, 15 Stat. 467, giving the Secretary power over tribal money.

[153] Treaty of November 1, 1837, with the Winnebago Nation, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 544, interpreted in 3 Op. A. G. 471 (1839).

[154] Treaty of August 3, 1795, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 49.

[155] 7 Stat. 113.

United States, who is charged with the delivery of the annuities of the tribe to which the offending party belongs, whose duty it shall be to hear the proofs and allegations on either side, and determine between them: and the amount of his award shall be immediately deducted from the annuity of the tribe to which the offending party belongs, and given to the person injured, or to the chief of his village for his use.

Treaties provided for the withholding, for a year or for such time as an administrator should determine, of annuities of an Indian drinking intoxicating liquors or providing others with liquor in violation of treaty provisions.[156] Administrative determinations were also authorized for reducing annuities in cases of depredations[157] and horse stealing.[158]

6. Termination of treaty-making.—The last stage of dependence is reached when a treaty-making power abandons the right to make further treaties. Such a provision is found in the Treaty of February 18, 1861[159] with the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians:

> * * * And, in order to render unnecessary any further treaty engagements or arrangements hereafter with the United States, it is hereby agreed and stipulated that the President, with the assent of Congress, shall have full power to modify or change any of the provisions of former treaties with the Arapahoes and Cheyennes of the Upper Arkansas, in such manner and to whatever extent he may judge to be necessary and expedient for their best interests.

A similar result is achieved by treaties in which a tribe makes provision for the termination of its tribal existence.[160]

[156] Treaty of March 12, 1858, with the Poncas, 12 Stat. 997; Treaty of June 19, 1858, with the Sioux, Art. 7, 12 Stat. 1037. The use of congressional power in conjunction with the treaty-making power to impose prohibitions against the liquor traffic by treaties with the Indians is discussed in Chapter 17, sec. 2. Treaty provisions regarding the enforcement of liquor prohibition laws were common.

Article 12 of the Treaty of October 18, 1820, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 210, provided:

> In order to promote industry and sobriety amongst all classes of the Red people, in this nation, but particularly the poor, it is further provided by the parties, that the agent appointed to reside here, shall be, and he is hereby, vested with full power to seize and confiscate all the whiskey which may be introduced into said nation, except that used at public stands, or brought in by the permit of the agent, or the principal Chiefs of the three Districts.

The Indians were sometimes required to aid in the enforcement of these laws. Thus provisions were sometimes made whereby the Indians promised to tell the agent of violations of liquor prohibitions. (Treaty of May 15, 1846, with the Comanche and other tribes, Art. 12, 9 Stat. 844.)

In some of the treaties the Indians promised "to use their best efforts to prevent the introduction and use of ardent spirits in their country." (Treaty of May 18, 1854, with the Sacs and Foxes, Art. 10, 10 Stat. 1074.) The Treaty of February 11, 1856, with the Menomonee Tribe, Art. 3(2), 11 Stat. 679, provided "That the Menomonees will suppress the use of ardent spirits among their people. and resist, by all prudent means, its introduction in their settlements."

The Treaty of February 22, 1855, with the Chippewas, Art. 9, 10 Stat. 1165 provides:

> * * * that they will abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks and other vices to which they have been addicted.

[157] Treaty of September 30, 1809, with the Delawares and others, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 113.

[158] Treaty of June 26, 1794, with the Cherokee Nation, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 43. Article 7 of the Treaty of January 22, 1855, with the Willamette Indians, 10 Stat. 1143, provided that:

> * * * any one of them who shall drink liquor, or procure it for other Indians to drink, may have his or her proportion of the annuities withheld from him or her for such time as the President may determine.

Also see Treaty of December 26, 1854, with the Nisquallys, Art. 9, 10 Stat. 1132.

[159] Art. 7, 12 Stat. 1163.

[160] See Chapter 14, secs. 1–2.

C. COMMERCIAL RELATIONS

Commercial dealings generally formed the substance of those treaties which were not specifically treaties of peace.

1. Cessions of land.—That which the Indians had which the United States most desired was, until very recently, land. The process of treaty-making was the first method of acquiring lands for, as well as from, the Indians.[161] The United States and the Indians sometimes exchanged land,[162] and land was sometimes ceded to the states.[163]

The right to pass through the Indian territory in certain places was sometimes reserved by the United States,[164] as were rights to build roads and establish inns and ferrys,[165] or to permit telegraph lines or railroads[166] or a named railroad to have a right-of-way (provided just compensation is paid),[167] and options to purchase rights-of-way.[168]

Considerable power was often given to the Federal Government by provisions relating to land. The Treaty of August 5, 1826,[169] granted to the United States the right to search for minerals.

Many treaties empowered the United States to allot land to Indians,[170] which, in a few cases was made "exempt from taxa-

[161] See Chapter 15, sec. 5; Westwood, Legal Aspects of Land Acquisition, p. 2, Indians and the Land, Contributions by the Delegation of the United States, First Inter-American Conference on Indian Life, Patzcuaro, Mexico, published by Office of Indian Affairs, April 1940.

For an example of cession by the United States to Indians see Treaty of September 15, 1832, with the Winnebagoes, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 370. For an example of a reservation for a tribe of land from a cession see Treaty of September 21, 1832, with the Sacs and Fox, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 374. Land was reserved to the Indians, including the right to lease salt lands. The salt was not to be sold at a higher price than $7 per bushel of 50 pounds weight; otherwise the lease would be forfeited. Treaty of October 19, 1818, with the Chickasaws, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 192. It is well settled that good title to lands of an Indian tribe may be granted to Indians by a treaty between the United States and the tribe, without an act of Congress or any patent from the executive authority of the United States. Tribal land can be disposed of by treaty. 9 Op. A. G. 24 (1857).

Examples of treaty provisions on land cessions by the Indians to the United States will be found in the Treaty of August 27, 1804, with the Plankeshaws, Art. 1, 7 Stat. 83; Treaty of September 30, 1809, with the Delawares and others, Art. 1, 7 Stat. 113; Treaty of July 8, 1817, with the Cherokees, Art. 10, 7 Stat. 156.

[162] Treaty of June 30, 1802, with the Senecas, 7 Stat. 70; Treaty of July 8, 1817, with the Cherokees, Arts. 1 and 2, 7 Stat. 156; Treaty of February 12, 1825, with the Creek Nation, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 237.

[163] Treaty of May 31, 1796, with the Seven Nations of Canada, 7 Stat. 55.

[164] Treaty of August 3, 1795, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 49. On provisions regarding free navigation for all through navigable streams, see Treaty of July 8, 1817, with the Cherokees, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 156.

[165] Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 14, 7 Stat. 160. Also see Treaty of November 11, 1794, with the Six Nations, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 44; Treaty of August 16, 1825, with the Kansas, Arts. 1, 2, and 3, 7 Stat. 270. Art. 5 provided for compensation for this privilege. Treaty of August 7, 1856, with the Creeks and Seminoles, Art. 19, 11 Stat. 699.

[166] Treaty of July 4, 1866, with the Delawares, Art. 13, 14 Stat. 793. Also see Treaty of June 22, 1855, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, Art. 18, 11 Stat. 611.

[167] Treaty of January 22, 1855, with the Willamettes, Art. 8, 10 Stat. 1143.

[168] Treaty of November 15, 1861, with the Pottawatomies, Art. 5, 12 Stat. 1191. Also see Treaty of May 30, 1860, with the Delawares, Art. 3, 12 Stat. 1129.

[169] With the Chippewas, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 290.

[170] Treaty of July 8, 1817, with the Cherokees, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 156; Treaty of February 27, 1855, with the Winnebagos, Art. 4, 10 Stat. 1172; Treaty of January 31, 1855, with the Wyandots, Arts. 3 and 4, 10 Stat. 1159, construed in Hicks v. Butrick, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,458 (C. C. Kan. 1875). Sometimes a differentiation was made between full-bloods and half-bloods. Treaty of June 3, 1825, with the Kansas Nation, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 244. Treaty stipulations apply to half-bloods as well as full-bloods, unless otherwise specially provided. 20 Op. A. G. 742 (1894).

tion, levy, sale, or forfeiture, until otherwise provided by Congress." [171] There were also many other types of restrictive clauses such as the promise that land "shall be exempt from levy, sale, or forfeiture, until otherwise provided by State legislation, with the assent of Congress," [172] or the granting to the chiefs for the use of a number of tribes tracts of land which "shall not be liable to taxes of any kind so long as such land continues the property of the said Indians." [173]

The extent to which Indian treaties revolved about land cession will form a principal thread of inquiry in section 4 of this chapter.

2. Reserved rights in ceded lands.—By way of softening the shock of land cession, the Indian tribes were often guaranteed special rights in ceded lands, such as the exclusive right of taking fish in streams bordering on the reservation,[174] or "the right of hunting on the ceded territory, with the other usual privileges of occupancy, until required to remove by the President of the United States," [175] or to hunt on lands ceded to the United States or "perpetual right of fishing" at a falls [176] "without hindrance or molestation, so long as they demean themselves peaceably, and offer no injury to the people of the United States," [177] or to hunt and make sugar on ceded land.[178]

The nature of these rights forms a part of a later discussion of tribal property.[179]

3. Payments and services to tribes.—In payment for lands ceded, and occasionally by way of compensation for other benefits or indemnification for injuries done to Indians, the Federal Government assumed extensive financial obligations to the Indian tribes. These obligations might be discharged either by lump sum or annuity payments of money or by payment in services and commodities. This is the source not only of the intricate legal problems in which tribal funds,[180] per capita payments,[181] and individual Indian moneys [182] are involved, but also of the federal services which today constitute the chief function of the Indian Service.[183]

Frequently services of various kinds were provided for in treaties. Among the articles commonly specified in treaties were those which represented the differences between the white and the Indian civilizations—cattle, hogs, iron, steel, wagons, plows, and other farming tools.[184] The purpose of civilizing the Indians is apparent in the choice of goods and services which the tribe will receive.[185] Such services included the providing of "one grist-mill and one saw-mill * * * one blacksmith and one gunsmith * * * and * * * such implements of agriculture as the proper agent may think necessary" and "one hundred and sixty bushels of salt" annually; [186] farming utensils, cattle, black-

---

[171] Treaty of October 5, 1859, with the Kansas Indians, Art. 3, 12 Stat. 1111. See Chapter 13, sec. 3A.

[172] Treaty of January 31, 1855, with the Wyandots, Art. 4, 10 Stat. 1159.

[173] Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 15, 7 Stat. 160.

[174] Treaty of June 11, 1855, with Nez Perce, Art. 3, 12 Stat. 957.

[175] Treaty of October 4, 1842, with the Chippewas, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 591.

[176] Treaty of June 16, 1820, with Chippeway Tribe, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 206. Also see Treaty of June 9, 1855, with the Walla-Wallas, Cayuses, and Umatilla Tribes, 12 Stat. 945, discussed in Memo. Sol. I. D., June 15, 1937. Also see Chapter 15, sec. 21.

[177] Treaty of August 3, 1795, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 49.; also see Art 5.

[178] Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 11, 7 Stat. 160; Treaty of September 24, 1819, with Chippewa Nation, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 203.

[179] See Chapter 15, sec. 21. See also Chapter 14, sec. 7.

[180] See Chapter 15, secs. 22, 23, 24; Chapter 9, sec. 6.

[181] Ibid. And see Chapter 10, secs. 4, 5.

[182] Ibid.

[183] See Chapter 12. The unpublished Treaty of April 23, 1792, with the Five Nations (Archives No. 19) provided:

> THE UNITED STATES, in order to promote the happiness of the five nations of Indians, will cause to be expended annually the amount of one thousand five hundred dollars, in purchasing for them clothing, domestic animals and implements of husbandry, and for encouraging useful artificers to reside in their villages.

The Treaty of September 27, 1830, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 333, provided:

> * * * The U. S. agree also to erect a Council House for the Nation at some convenient central point, after their people shall be settled; and a House for each Chief, also a Church for each of the three Districts, to be used also as school houses, until the Nation may conclude to build others; and for these purposes ten thousand dollars shall be appropriated; also fifty thousand dollars (viz) twenty-five hundred dollars annually shall be given for the support of three teachers of schools for twenty years. Likewise there shall be furnished to the Nation three Blacksmiths one for each district for sixteen years, and a qualified Mill Wright for five years; Also there shall be furnished the following articles, twenty-one hundred blankets, to each warrior who emigrates a rifle, moulds, wipers and ammunition. One thousand axes, ploughs, hoes, wheels and cards each; and four hundred looms. There shall also be furnished, one ton of iron and two hundred weight of steel annually to each District for sixteen years. (Art. 20.)

Article 4 of the Treaty of February 8, 1831, with the Menomonee Nation, 7 Stat. 342, provides:

> * * * The above reservation being made to the Menomonee Indians for the purpose of weaning them from their wandering habits, by attaching them to comfortable homes, the President of the United States, as a mark of affection for his children of the Menomonee tribe, will cause to be employed five farmers of established character for capacity, industry, and moral habits, for ten successive years, whose duty it shall be to assist the Menomonee Indians in the cultivation of their farms, and to instruct their children in the business and occupation of farming. Also, five females shall be employed, of like good character, for the purpose of teaching young Menomonee women, in the business of useful housewifery, during a period of ten years.—The annual compensation allowed to the farmers shall not exceed five hundred dollars, and that of the females three hundred dollars. And the United States will cause to be erected, houses suited to their condition, on said lands, as soon as the Indians agree to occupy them, for which ten thousand dollars shall be appropriated; also, houses for the farmers, for which three thousand dollars shall be appropriated; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. Whenever the Menomonees thus settle their lands, they shall be supplied with useful household articles, horses, cows, hogs, and sheep, farming utensils, and other articles of husbandry necessary to their comfort, to the value of six thousand dollars; and they desire that some suitable device may be stamped upon such articles, to preserve them from sale or barter, to evil disposed white persons: none of which, nor any other articles with which the United States may at any time furnish them, shall be liable to sale, or be disposed of or bargained, without permission of the agent. The whole to be under the immediate care of the farmers employed to remain among said Indians, but subject to the general controul of the United States' Indian Agent at Green Bay acting under the Secretary of War. The United States will erect a grist and saw mill on Fox river, for the benefit of the Menomonee Indians, and employ a good miller, subject to the direction of the agent, whose business it shall be to grind the grain, required for the use of the Menomonee Indians, and saw the lumber necessary for building on their lands, as also to instruct such young men of the Menomonee nation, as desire to, and conveniently can be instructed in the trade of a miller. The expenses of erecting such mills, and a house for the miller to reside in, shall not exceed six thousand dollars, and the annual compensation of the miller shall be six hundred dollars, to continue for ten years. And if the mills so erected by the United States, can saw more lumber or grind more grain, than is required for the proper use of said Menomonee Indians, the proceeds of such milling shall be applied to the payment of other expenses occurring in the Green bay agency, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Article 13 of the Treaty of April 29, et seq., 1868, with the Sioux Nation, 15 Stat. 635, provides that:

> The United States hereby agrees to furnish annually to the Indians the physician, teachers, carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmiths, as herein contemplated, and that such appropriations shall be made from time to time, on the estimates of the Secretary of the Interior, as will be sufficient to employ such persons. (P. 640.)

See also Chapter 15, sec. 23A, fn. 608.

[184] Art. 4 of Treaty of October 23, 1826, 7 Stat. 300, 301 (Miami). See also Act of May 1, 1888, Art. 3, 25 Stat. 113, 114 (concerning use of sums due to Indians of the Blackfeet, Fort Peck, and Fort Belknap Reservations). Cf. Act of April 30, 1888, sec. 17, 25 Stat. 94, 100 (Sioux). The Southern Utes were entitled to receive annuities in the form of sheep. Act of February 20, 1895, sec. 5, 28 Stat. 677, 678.

[185] Cf. Treaty of September 24, 1857, with the Pawnee, Art. 4, 11 Stat. 729.

[186] Treaty of October 6, 1818, with the Miame Nation, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 189; Cf. Treaty of June 29, 1796, with the Creeks, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 56; Treaty of June 7, 1803, with the Delawares and others, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 74; Treaty of November 14, 1805, with the Creeks, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 96; Treaty of September 18, 1823, with the Floridas, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 224; Treaty of February 12, 1825, with the Creeks, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 237.

smith and such agricultural assistants as the President may deem expedient;[187] two boats,[188] horses, perogues and provisions;[189] rifles, guns, ammunition, etc., in compensation for homes left by Indians who were removed;[190] to each warrior removing, "a blanket, kettle, rifle gun, bullet moulds and nippers, and ammunition sufficient for hunting and defence, for one year," plus corn;[191] 200 cattle, 200 hogs, plus 2,000 pounds of iron, 1,000 pounds of steel and 1,000 pounds of tobacco annually, and the assistance of laborers;[192] the payment of annuities in the form of money, merchandise, provisions, or domestic animals, at the option of the Indians;[193] the building of houses for chiefs;[194] mills and millers for a period of 3 years;[195] annuities and money for the repair of mill and schoolhouse;[196] the building of a church and an allowance for a Catholic priest.[197]

The United States agreed in treaties with most of the tribes to pay annuities in various forms: for education, blacksmiths, farmers, laborers, millers, millwrights, iron, coal, steel, salt, agricultural implements, tobacco, and transportation.[198]

Many treaties contained clauses providing for additional annuities,[199] or for the commutation of annuities,[200] or for presents and annuities,[201] and goods,[202] rations,[203] and clothing.[204]

By treaties, the United States also agreed to make payments to enable the raising of a tribal corps of light horse;[205] to pay a state for a balance due by a tribe;[206] to provide money for poor Indians;[207] to pay demands for slaves and other property alleged to have been stolen by the Indians;[208] to pay debts or other obligations owed by the nation;[209] to pay the Indians for land ceded to a state;[210] for expenses incurred by the sachem and headmen in attending to tribal business for 5 years;[211] "to indemnify the individuals of the Cherokee nation for losses sustained by them in consequence of the march of the militia and other troops in the service of the United States through that nation * * *."[212]

D. JURISDICTION

1. Criminal jurisdiction.—Many treaties deal with the difficult political problems created by offenses of Indians against whites or whites against Indians.

Some of the earliest treaties adopt the rule usual in treaties between equals. Whites committing offenses within the Indian country against Indian laws are subjected to punishment by the Indian tribe, just as Indians committing offenses against state or federal laws outside the Indian country are subjected to punishment by state or federal courts.[213]

A number of treaties adopt a modified rule, similar to that found in treaties between the United States and various Oriental nations,[214] whereby the United States is granted jurisdiction over its citizens in the Indian country, to punish them for offenses they may commit, and the Indian tribe undertakes to deliver such offenders to agents of the Federal Government.[215]

Finally, a number of treaties confer upon the Federal Government authority to punish Indians who commit offenses against non-Indians even within the Indian country.[216]

Not until some time after the end of the treaty-making period did the Federal Government take the ultimate step of asserting jurisdiction over offenses committed by Indians against Indians within the Indian country.[217]

2. Civil jurisdiction.—Most treaties contain no express provisions on civil jurisdiction and therefore, by implication, confirm the rule that tribal law governs the members of the tribe within the Indian country, to the exclusion of state law.[218]

A few treaties, however, make explicit and emphatic the assurance that state laws will not be applied to the Indians. These clauses are usually found in treaties with tribes that have had sad experiences with state jurisdiction, and the intensity of Indian feeling on the subject is sometimes reflected in the language of the treaty. Thus the purpose of the Treaty of May 6, 1828, with the Cherokee Nation[219] is stated to be the securing to the Cherokees migrating westward of > * * * a permanent home, and which shall, under the most solemn guarantee of the United States, be, and remain, theirs forever—a home that shall never, in all future time, be embarrassed by having extended around it the [187] Treaty of September 24, 1819, with the Chippewas, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 203.

---

[188] Treaty of July 30, 1819, with the Kickapoos, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 200.

[189] Treaty of October 3, 1818, with the Delawares, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 188.

[190] Treaty of July 8, 1817, with the Cherokees, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 156.

[191] Treaty of October 18, 1820, with the Choctaws, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 210.

[192] Treaty of October 23, 1826, with the Miamis, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 300.

[193] Treaty of June 2, 1825, with the Osages, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 240.

[194] Treaty of June 2, 1825, with the Osages, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 240. Also see Treaty of November 10, 1808, with the Osages, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 107.

[195] Treaty of December 2, 1794, with the Oneidas and others, Arts. 2 and 3, 7 Stat. 47. Cf. Treaty of January 7, 1806, with the Cherokees, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 101.

[196] Treaty of June 5, 1854, with the Miamis, Art. 13, 10 Stat. 1093.

[197] Treaty of August 13, 1803, with the Kaskaskias, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 78.

[198] Repts. of Committees, No. 474, 23d Cong., 1st sess., May 20, 1834, vol. IV (pp. 53–60), lists these as the most important, but contains references to other types. For examples, see Treaty of November 17, 1807, with the Ottoways and others, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 105; Treaty of August 5, 1826, with the Chippewas, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 290; Treaty of June 9, 1855, with the Walla-Wallas and others, Art. 4, 12 Stat. 945; Treaty of April 19, 1858, with the Yancton Sioux, Art. 4, 11 Stat. 743. Some treaties prohibited the use of annuities for the payment of debts of individuals. Treaty of November 18, 1854, with the Chastas and others, Art. 7, 10 Stat. 1122; Treaty of November 29, 1854, with the Umpquas and others, Art. 7, 10 Stat. 1125.

[199] The Treaty of December 30, 1805, with the Piankishaws, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 100, provided for annuities and added that "the United States may, at any time they shall think proper, divide the said annuity amongst the individuals of the said tribe." Also see Treaty of August 13, 1803, with the Kaskaskias, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 78.

[200] Treaty of November 17, 1807, with the Ottoways and others, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 105.

[201] Treaty of November 11, 1794, with the Six Nations, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 44. Also see Treaty of March 24, 1832, with the Creeks, Art. 13, 7 Stat. 366.

[202] Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandots and others, Art. 10 7 Stat. 16; Treaty of June 26, 1794, with the Cherokees, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 43; Treaty of December 29, 1835, with the Cherokees, Art. 18, 7 Stat. 478.

[203] Treaty of December 21, 1855, with the Molels, Art. 5, 12 Stat. 981.

[204] Treaty of May 7, 1868, with the Crows, Art. 9, 15 Stat. 649. Also see Treaty of May 10, 1868, with the Cheyennes and others, Art. 6, 15 Stat. 655. For some other types of provisions relating to annuities see Treaty of July 1, 1835, with the Caddo Nation and the State of Louisiana. Art. 4, 7 Stat. 470; Treaty of November 23, 1838, with the Creeks, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 574.

[205] Treaty of October 18, 1820, with the Choctaws, Art. 13, 7 Stat. 210.

[206] Treaty of January 8, 1821, with the Creeks, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 215.

[207] Treaty of October 23, 1826, with the Miamis, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 300.

[208] Treaty of May 9, 1832, with the Seminoles, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 368.

[209] Treaty of November 10, 1808, with the Osages, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 107.

[210] Treaty of March 22, 1816, with the Cherokees, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 138.

[211] Treaty of November 24, 1848, with the Stockbridge Indians, Art. 18, 9 Stat. 955.

[212] Treaty of March 22, 1816, with the Cherokees, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 139.

[213] See Chapter 1, sec. 3, fn. 48.

[214] See e. g., Art. 21 of Treaty of July 3, 1844, with China, 8 Stat. 592, 596.

[215] See e. g., Art. 6 of Treaty of August 24, 1818, with the Quapaw Tribe, 7 Stat. 176, 177. Cf. Treaty of May 15, 1846, with the Comanches and others, Art. 12, 9 Stat. 844, providing that any person introducing intoxicating liquors among these Indians "shall be punished according to the laws of the United States."

[216] See e. g., Art. 9 of Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandots and others, 7 Stat. 16, 17; Art. 6 of Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokee, 7 Stat. 18.

[217] See Chapter 7, sec. 9; Chapter 18.

[218] See Chapter 7, secs. 1, 2.

[219] 7 Stat. 311. Accord: Art. 5 of Treaty of New Echota, December 29, 1835, with the Cherokee Tribe, 7 Stat. 478.

> lines, or placed over it the jurisdiction of a Territory or State, nor be pressed upon by the extension, in any way, of any of the limits of any existing Territory or State; * * *

Various other treaties contained similar pledges.[220] Some treaties contained specific guaranties against taxation.[221]

E. CONTROL OF TRIBAL AFFAIRS

From 1776 to 1849 we find no treaty provision which limits the powers of self-government of any tribe with respect to the internal affairs of the tribe. All limitations upon tribal power, during this period, are in some way related to intercourse with non-Indians. Even the sporadic treaty provisions authorizing allotment of tribal land either list, as part of the treaty itself, the individuals, or define the class of individuals, who are to receive allotments,[222] or provide for the issuance of patents by the authorities of the tribe.[223]

In the wake of the War with Mexico, several treaties were imposed upon tribes of the newly acquired territory in which the long-established distinction between internal and external affairs of the tribes was abandoned and the internal affairs of the tribes were declared subject to federal control.

The language contained in the Treaty of September 9, 1849, with the Navajo,[224] whereby that tribe agreed that the United States "shall, at its earliest convenience, designate, settle, and adjust their territorial boundaries, and pass and execute in their territory such laws as may be deemed conducive to the prosperity and happiness of said Indians" [225] is symptomatic rather than legally important. It symbolizes a tendency to disregard the national character of the Indian tribes, a tendency that was perhaps stimulated by the loose organization and backward culture of the Southwestern nomadic tribes.

A year later, in 1850, began a series of treaties by which various tribes undertook to abandon their tribal existence.[226]

In 1851, a new breadth of authority was conferred upon the executive branch of the Federal Government by such clauses as the following:

> Rules and regulations to protect the rights of persons and property among the Indians, parties of this Treaty, and adapted to their condition and wants, may be prescribed and enforced in such manner as the President or the Congress of the United States, from time to time, shall direct.

This provision, taken from the Treaty of July 23, 1851, with the See-see-toan (Sisseton) and Way-pay-toan (Wahpeton) Sioux,[227] was copied bodily in several later treaties.[228]

The most important breach in the scope of tribal self-government made by treaty was made in 1854 and thereafter, by those treaties which conferred upon the President power to allot tribal lands to individual Indians.[229]

Along with this encroachment upon the powers of the tribes to apportion rights in tribal land among the members of the tribe, there came other extensions of federal authority over the handling and distribution of tribal funds and other incidental matters.[230]

The Civil War brought new occasions for the use of federal power in tribal affairs as a result of conflicts between different factions of a tribe. The Treaty of June 14, 1866, provided for "a general amnesty of all past offences against the laws of the United States, committed by any member of the Creek Nation * * *" and "an amnesty for all past offences against their government, * * *." [231]

Thus during the last decade or so of the treaty-making period, the basis upon which treaties had been made was gradually undermined by successive specific encroachments upon the autonomy of various tribes.

---

[220] See, e. g., Art. 14 of the Treaty of March 24, 1832, with the Creek Tribe, 7 Stat. 366, 368; Art. 11 of the Treaty of July 20, 1831, with the Wyandots, Senecas, and Shawnees, 7 Stat. 351, 353.

[221] For example, Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 15, 7 Stat. 160, 166.

[222] Treaty of August 9, 1814, with Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 120; Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandot, Seneca, Delaware, and other tribes, 7 Stat. 160.

[223] Treaty of November 6, 1838, with the Miami Tribe, 7 Stat. 569. And cf. Act of March 3, 1839, 5 Stat. 349 (Brothertown), providing for allotment by chiefs of tribe, who were to observe "the existing laws, customs, usages, or agreements of said tribe." Accord: Act of March 3, 1843, 5 Stat. 645 (Stockbridge).

[224] 9 Stat. 974.

[225] Ibid., Art. 9. Accord: Art. 7 of Treaty of December 30, 1849, with the Utah Indians, 9 Stat. 984.

[226] Treaty of April 1, 1850, with the Wyandot Indians, 9 Stat. 987. And see Chapter 14, sec. 2.

[227] 10 Stat. 949, 950.

[228] E. g., Treaty of August 5, 1851, with the Med-ay-wa-kan-toan, etc., Sioux. 10 Stat. 954.

[229] See Treaty of March 15, 1854, with the Ottoe and Missouria Indians, 10 Stat. 1038, and Treaty of March 16, 1854, with the Omaha Tribe, 10 Stat. 1043, discussed in sec. 4G, infra.

[230] See sec. 3B(5), supra.

[231] Art. 1, 14 Stat. 785. Also see Chapter 8, sec. 11. Also see the pre-Civil War Treaty of August 6, 1846, with the Cherokee Nation, "Treaty Party," and "Old Settlers," Art. 2, 9 Stat. 871, whereby the Cherokee Nation declared a general amnesty for all past offenses after a period of civil strife, and agreed to a bill of rights.

SECTION 4. A HISTORY OF INDIAN TREATIES

A. PRE-REVOLUTIONARY PRECEDENTS: 1532–1776

First mention of the necessity of a civilized nation treating with the Indian tribes to secure Indian consent to cessions of land or changes of political status [232] was made in 1532 by Franciscus de Victoria,[233] who had been invited by the Emperor of Spain to advise on the rights of Spain in the New World.

After considering in detail the argument that barbarians could not own land by reason of the sin of unbelief or other mortal sin, or by reason of "unsoundness of mind," Victoria reached the conclusion that:

> * * * the aborigines in question were true owners, before the Spaniards came among them, both from the public and the private point of view.[234]

Since the Indians were true owners, Victoria held, discovery could convey no title upon the Spaniards, for title by discovery can be justified only where property is ownerless.[235] Nor could Spanish title to Indian lands be validly based upon the divine rights of the Emperor or the Pope,[236] or upon the unbelief or sinfulness of the aborigines.[237] Thus, Victoria concluded, even the Pope had no right to partition the property of the Indians, and in the absence of a just war only the voluntary consent of the aborigines could justify the annexation of their territory.[238] No less than their property, the government of the aborigines was entitled to respect by the Spaniards, according to the view of Victoria. So long as the Indians respected the natural rights of Spaniards, recognized by the law of nations, to travel in their

---

[232] Victoria, De Indis et De Jure Belli Relectiones (Trans. by John Pawley Bate, 1917), 1557, sec. 2, titles 6, 7.

[233] Ibid., Introduction (Nys), p. 71.

[234] Ibid., sec. 1, title 24, p. 128.

[235] Ibid., sec. 2, p. 139.

[236] Ibid., sec. 2, titles 1–6.

[237] Ibid., sec. 2, titles 8–16.

[238] Ibid.

lands and to sojourn, trade, and defend their rights therein, the Spaniards could not wage a just war against the Indians,[239] and therefore could not claim any rights by conquest. In that situation, however, sovereign power over the Indians might be secured through the consent of the Indians themselves.

> Another possible title is by true and voluntary choice, as if the Indians, aware alike of the prudent administration and the humanity of the Spaniards, were of their own motion, both rulers and ruled, to accept the King of Spain as their sovereign. This could be done and would be a lawful title, by the law natural too, seeing that a State can appoint any one it will to be its lord, and herefor the consent of all is not necessary, but the consent of the majority suffices. For, as I have argued elsewhere, in matters touching the good of the State the decisions of the majority bind even when the rest are of a contrary mind; otherwise naught could be done for the welfare of the State, it being difficult to get all of the same way of thinking. Accordingly, if the majority of any city or province were Christians and they, in the interests of the faith and for the common weal, would have a prince who was a Christian, I think that they could elect him even against the wishes of the others and even if it meant the repudiation of other unbelieving rulers, and I assert that they could choose a prince not only for themselves, but for the whole State, just as the Franks for the good of their State changed their sovereigns and, deposing Childeric, put Pepin, the father of Charlemagne, in his place, a change which was approved by Pope Zacharias. This, then, can be put forward as a sixth title.[240]

The Emperors of Spain and their subordinate administrators, like many able administrators since, did not consistently carry out Fra Victoria's legal advice. They did, however, adopt many laws and issue many charters recognizing and guaranteeing the rights of Indian communities,[241] and the theory of Indian title put forward by Victoria came to be generally accepted by writers on international law of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries who were cited as authorities in early federal litigation on Indian property rights.[242]

The idea that land should be acquired from Indians by treaty involved three assumptions: (1) That both parties to the treaty are sovereign powers; (2) that the Indian tribe has a transferable title, of some sort, to the land in question; and (3) that the acquisition of Indian lands could not safely be left to individual colonists but must be controlled as a governmental monopoly. These three principles are embodied in the "New Project of Freedoms and Exemptions," drafted about 1630 for the guidance of officials of the Dutch West India Co., which declares:

> The Patroons of New Netherland, shall be bound to purchase from the Lords Sachems in New Netherland, the soil where they propose to plant their Colonies, and shall acquire such right thereunto as they will agree for with the said Sachems.[243]

The Dutch viewpoint was shared by some of the early English settlers. In the spring of 1636, Roger Williams, who insisted that the right of the natives to the soil could not be abrogated by an English patent, founded the Rhode Island Plantations.[244] This was the territory inhabited by the Narragansetts and for which Williams had treated.

From time to time other British colonies became parties to treaties with the Indians.[245] Unauthorized treating for the purchase of Indian land by individual colonists was prohibited in Rhode Island as early as 1651.[246] By the middle of the eighteenth century, eight other colonies had laws forbidding such purchase unless approved by the constituted authorities.[247] The effect of such laws was to eliminate conflicts of land titles that otherwise resulted from overlapping grants by individual Indians or tribes, to protect the Indians, in some measure, against fraud, and to center in the colonial governments a valuable monopoly.

With the outbreak of the French and Indian War the problem of dealing with the natives which had been left largely to the individual colonies was temporarily returned to the control of the mother country.[248] Later, treaties with the Indians were again negotiated by the colonies.[249]

On several occasions the Crown indicated its belief in the sanctity of treaty obligations.[250] Some of the treaties contained definite stipulations regarding land tenure.[251]

B. THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR AND THE PEACE: 1776–83

From the first days of the organization of the Continental Congress great solicitude for the natives was evidenced. The Congress pledged itself to unusual exertions in securing and preserving the friendship of the Indian nations.[252] First fruit of this effort was the treaty of alliance with the Delaware Indians of September 17, 1778.[253] Its provisions are so significant that Chief Justice Marshall's analysis in this respect should be noted:

> The first treaty was made with the Delawares, in September 1778. The language of equality in which it is drawn, evinces the temper with which the negotiation was undertaken, and the opinion which then prevailed in the United States. * * * 6. The sixth article is entitled to peculiar attention, as it contains a disclaimer of designs which were, at that time, ascribed to the United States, by their enemies, and from the imputation of which congress was then peculiarly anxious to free the government. It is in these words: "Whereas, the enemies of the United States have endeavored, by every artifice in their power, to possess the Indians in general with an opinion, that it is the design of the states aforesaid to extirpate the Indians, and take possession of their country; to obviate such false suggestion, the United States do engage to guaranty to the aforesaid nation of Delawares, and their heirs, all their terri-

---

[239] Ibid., sec. 8, title 1, et seq.

[240] Ibid., sec. 3, title 16, p. 159.

[241] See Chapter 20, sec. 1.

[242] Victoria, supra, Introduction (Nys). See also Vattel, Le Droit des Gens, vol. 1, bk. 1, c. 18, sec. 209, and other authorities cited by counsel for both parties in Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 543 (1823). And see Chapter 15, sec. 4.

[243] J. R. Brodhead, Documents Relative to the Colonial History of the State of New York (Holland Documents II, No. 27) (1855, O'Callaghan ed.), vol. 1, p. 99.

[244] Kinney, A Continent Lost—A Civilization Won (1937), pp. 11–12.

[245] In Pennsylvania, in advance of settlement, William Penn sent several commissioners to confer with the Indians and conclude with them a treaty of peace (18th Annual Report, Bureau of Ethnology, 1896–97, pt. II, pp. 591–599). Also see Chapter 15, sec. 4.

[246] Kinney, op. cit., p. 14. As early as 1609 English colonists in Virginia purchased land directly from the Indians in that territory. (P. 12.)

[247] Ibid. The colonies were Massachusetts, Virginia, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia.

[248] Mohr, Federal Indian Relations (1933), pp. 4–9.

[249] See, for example, the Treaty of Hard Labor on October 14, 1768, which defined the boundary of Virginia, and the Treaty of Fort Stanwix, November 5, 1768, defining the boundary of the northern district (Mohr, op. cit., pp. 9–10).

[250] See, e. g., Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 546, 548 (1832).

[251] In 1783 Sir John Johnson, prominent representative of the British Government, referring to the boundaries established by the treaty of peace with the United States of that year, told the Six Nations:

> You are not to believe or even think that by the line which has been described it was meant to deprive you of an extent of country of which the right of soil belongs to you and is in yourselves as sole proprietors as far as the boundary line agreed upon [by treaty of 1768] and established in the most solemn and public manner in the presence and with the consent of the governors and commissioners deputed by the different colonies for that purpose * * *. (Mohr, op. cit., p. 118.)

[252] Jour. Cont. Cong. (Library of Congress ed.) 1775, vol. II, p. 174.

[253] Treaty of September 17, 1778, 7 Stat. 13.

torial rights, in the fullest and most ample manner, as it hath been bounded by former treaties, as long as the said Delaware nation shall abide by, and hold fast the chain of friendship now entered into." The parties further agree, that other tribes, friendly to the interest of the United States, may be invited to form a state, whereof the Delaware nation shall be the heads, and have a representation in congress. This treaty, in its language, and in its provisions, is formed, as near as may be, on the model of treaties between the crowned heads of Europe. The sixth article shows how congress then treated the injurious calumny of cherishing designs unfriendly to the political and civil rights of the Indians.[254]

Articles 4 and 5 are also noteworthy. By Article 4, any offenders of either party against the treaty of peace and friendship were not to be punished, except > * * * by imprisonment, or any other competent means, till a fair and impartial trial can be had by judges or juries of both parties, as near as can be to the laws, customs and usages of the contracting parties and natural justice * * *.

Article 5[255] provided for a > * * * well-regulated trade, under the conduct of an intelligent, candid agent, with an adequate sallery, one more influenced by the love of his country, and a constant attention to the duties of his department by promoting the common interest, than the sinister purposes of converting and binding all the duties of his office to his private emolument * * *.

C. DEFINING A NATIONAL POLICY: 1783–1800

Following the close of the Revolutionary War the United States entered into a series of treaties with Indian tribes by which the "hatchet" was "forever buried." [256]

In the spring of 1784 Congress appointed commissioners to negotiate with the Indians. Full power was given them to draw boundary lines and conclude a peace, with the understanding that they would make clear that the Indian territory was forfeit as a result of the military victory.[257] This idea was not novel. General Washington, on September 7, 1783, had expressed himself as agreeable to regarding the territory held by the Indians as "conquered provinces," although opposed to driving them from the country altogether.[258] The commissioners met at Fort Stanwix and on October 22 concluded a treaty with the hostile tribes of the Six Nations.[259] In the opening paragraph the United States receives the Indians "into their protection." This has been cited as the source of the concept of the Federal Government as the guardian of Indian tribes.[260]

Article 2 provides that the "Oneida and Tuscarora Nations shall be secured in the possession of the lands on which they are settled." [261] > * * * goods to be delivered to the said Six Nations for their use and comfort.

Article 4 orders

Thus began a practice which later developed into a comprehensive system of supplying promised goods and services to Indian tribes.[262]

Soon afterwards another treaty was agreed upon with the Wiandots, Delawares, Chippawas, and Ottawas at Fort McIntosh on January 21, 1785.[263] The next year the Shawnee chiefs signed a treaty at the mouth of the Miami.[264] These three treaties, which are the only ones entered into with the northern tribes before the adoption of the Constitution, are very similar in nature. All of them recite the conclusion of hostilities and the extension of the protective influence of the United States.[265]

In the Treaty of January 21, 1785, at Fort McIntosh,[266] and the Treaty of January 31, 1786, at the Miami,[267] the boundaries between the Indian nations and the United States are defined and the lands therein are allotted to the said nations to live and hunt on, with the provision that if any citizen of the United States should attempt to settle on their territory, he would forfeit the protection of the United States.[268] In addition both treaties [269] provided for the return to the United States of Indian robbers and murderers. In the treaty with the Shawnees [270] there is a similar provision with regard to United States offenders against the Indians.

Congress was slower in taking action regarding the southern tribes. It was not until March 15, 1785,[271] that a resolution was [254] Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 548, 549 (1832). See also Art. 12, Treaty with the Cherokees of November 28, 1785, 7 Stat. 18, discussed below, which granted to the Cherokees the right to send a deputy of their own choice to Congress whenever they think fit. This, however, was never carried into effect. See also sec. 3B(3), supra.

---

[255] See Chapter 4, sec. 2, and Chapter 16.

[256] The phrase appears in the Treaties at Hopewell with the Cherokees, November 28, 1785, Art. 13, 7 Stat. 18; with the Choctaws, January 3, 1786, Art. 11, 7 Stat. 21; and with the Chickasaws, January 10, 1786, Art. 11, 7 Stat. 24.

This phrase was later supplanted by the phrase "all animosities for past grievances shall henceforth cease." See fn. 288, infra. As the disturbances caused by the Revolutionary War settled, this phrase disappeared.

[257] Mohr, op. cit., p. 108. In 1786 the Continental Congress, through its chairman, David Ramsay, again tried to make it clear, this time to the Seneca Indian, Cornplanter, that > * * * the United States alone possess the sovereign power within the limits described at the late Treaty of peace between them and the King of England. * * * You may also assure the Indians that they tell lies, who say that the King of England has not in his late Treaty with the United States given up, to them the lands of the Indians. (Jour. Cont. Cong., Library of Congress ed., 1786, vol. XXX, p. 235.)

[258] 10 Ford, Washington Writings, vol. X (1891), pp. 303–312.

[259] Treaty of October 22, 1784, 7 Stat. 15. The Treaty was construed in New York Indians, 5 Wall. 761 (1866) and in Commonwealth v. Coxe, 4 Dall. 170 (1800).

[260] United States v. Douglas, 190 Fed. 482 (C. C. A. 8, 1911).

[261] An illuminating statement regarding title claimed under the Treaty of Fort Stanwix is found in Deere v. State of New York, 22 F. 2d 851 (D. C. N. D. N. Y. 1927):

> * * * The source of title here is not letters patent or other form of grant by the federal government. Here the Indians claim immemorial rights, arising prior to white occupation, and recognized and protected by treaties between Great Britain and the United States and between the United States and the Indians. By the treaty of 1784 between the United States and the Six Nations of Indians, and the treaty of 1796 between the United States, the state of New York and the Seven Nations of Canada, the right of occupation of the lands in question by the St. Regis Indians, was not granted, but recognized and confirmed. (P. 854.)

[262] See, for a similar provision, the Treaty of Fort McIntosh with the Wiandots, Delawares, etc., January 21, 1785, 7 Stat. 16.

[263] Treaty of January 21, 1785, 7 Stat. 16. By this treaty the United States Supreme Court states, in Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1 (1899):

> * * * the United States relinquished and quitclaimed to the said nations respectively all the lands lying within certain limits, to live and hunt upon, and otherwise occupy as they saw fit; but the said nations, or either of them, were not to be at liberty to dispose of those lands, except to the United States. * * * (P. 9.)
>
> See also Commonwealth v. Coxe, 4 Dall. 170 (1800).

[264] Treaty of January 31, 1786, 7 Stat. 26.

[265] The Fort McIntosh treaty in its 10th article introduces a technique of giving presents upon the signing of the instrument which is soon to become standard practice in negotiating agreements with the Indians. Also to be noticed is the reserving for the first time of land within Indian boundaries for establishment of United States trading posts which is provided in Article 4 of the same treaty.

[266] Arts. 3, 4, 5, 7 Stat. 16.

[267] Arts. 6, 7, 7 Stat. 26.

[268] For a discussion of the significance of this stipulation see Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokees, 7 Stat. 39; and fn. 294 and 295, infra.

[269] Art. 9, 7 Stat. 16; Art. 3, 7 Stat. 26.

[270] Art. 3, Treaty of January 31, 1786, 7 Stat. 26. The Treaties at Hopewell, infra, contain a similar provision with the Cherokee, November 28, 1785, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 18; the Choctaw, January 3, 1786, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 21; the Chickasaw, January 10, 1786, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 24.

[271] Jour. Cont. Cong. (Library of Congress ed.), 1785, vol. XXVIII, pp. 160–162.

passed for the appointment of commissioners to deal with the Indian nations in the southern part of the country.

The federal commissioners met with the Cherokees at Hopewell on the Keowee, and concluded a treaty on November 28, 1785,[272] which declared that the United States "* * * give peace to all the Cherokees, and receive them into the favour and protection of the United States of America, on the following conditions." In Worcester v. Georgia,[273] Chief Justice Marshall gave the following answer to the argument that this language put the Indians in an inferior status:

> * * * When the United States gave peace, did they not also receive it? Were not both parties desirous of it? If we consult the history of the day, does it not inform us, that the United States were at least as anxious to obtain it as the Cherokees? We may ask further, did the Cherokees come to the seat of the American government to solicit peace; or, did the American commissioners go to them to obtain it? The treaty was made at Hopewell, not at New York. The word "give", then, has no real importance attached to it.

Marshall, at the same time, also called attention to Article 3 of the Hopewell agreement which acknowledges the Cherokees to be under the protection of no other power but the United States, saying:[274]

> The general law of European sovereigns, respecting their claims in America, limited the intercourse of Indians, in a great degree, to the particular potentate whose ultimate right of domain was acknowledged by the others. This was the general state of things, in time of peace. It was sometimes changed in war. The consequence was, that their supplies were derived chiefly from that nation, and their trade confined to it. Goods, indispensable to their comfort, in the shape of presents, were received from the same hand. What was of still more importance, the strong hand of government was interposed to restrain the disorderly and licentious from intrusions into their country, from encroachments on their lands, and from those acts of violence which were often attended by reciprocal murder. The Indians perceived in this protection only what was beneficial to themselves—an engagement to punish aggressions on them. It involved, practically, no claim to their lands—no dominion over their persons. It merely bound the nation to the British crown, as a dependent ally, claiming the protection of a powerful friend and neighbor, and receiving the advantages of that protection, without involving a surrender of their national character. This is the true meaning of the stipulation, and is, undoubtedly, the sense in which it was made.

Article 9 of the Hopewell treaty with the Cherokees holds that > * * * the United States in Congress assembled shall have the sole and exclusive right of regulating the trade with the Indians, and managing all their affairs in such manner as they think proper.

In Worcester v. Georgia it was argued that in this article the Indians had surrendered control over their internal affairs. This interpretation was vigorously rejected by the Supreme Court.

> To construe the expression "managing all their affairs," into a surrender of self-government, would be, we think, a perversion of their necessary meaning, and a departure from the construction which has been uniformly put on them. The great subject of the article is the Indian trade; the influence it gave, made it desirable that congress should possess it. The commissioners brought forward the claim, with the profession that their motive was "the benefit and comfort of the Indians, and the prevention of injuries or oppressions." This may be true, as respects the regulation of their trade, and as respects the regulation of all affairs connected with their trade, but cannot be true, as respects the management of all their affairs. The most important of these are the cession of their lands and security against intruders on them. Is it credible, that they should have considered themselves as surrendering to the United States the right to dictate their future cessions, and the terms on which they should be made? or to compel their submission to the violence of disorderly and licentious intruders? It is equally inconceivable that they could have supposed themselves, by a phrase thus slipped into an article, on another and most interesting subject, to have divested themselves of the right of self-government on subjects not connected with trade. Such a measure could not be "for their benefit and comfort," or for "the prevention of injuries and oppression." Such a construction would be inconsistent with the spirit of this and of all subsequent treaties; especially of those articles which recognise the right of the Cherokees to declare hostilities, and to make war. It would convert a treaty of peace, covertly, into an act annihilating the political existence of one of the parties. Had such a result been intended, it would have been openly avowed.[275]

Article 12, permitting Cherokee representation in Congress, is of particular interest, although it was never fulfilled.[276]

During the last year of the Confederation the dissatisfaction among the Indians resulting from using the "conquered province" concept as the basis for treaty deliberations became apparent. The Secretary of War, therefore, on May 2, 1788,[277] recommended a change in policy which would permit the outright purchase of the soil of the western territories described in former treaties with such additions as might be affected by further negotiations.[278] Acting on this suggestion, Congress appropriated $20,000.00 on July 2, 1788,[279] which, together with the balance remaining from the sum allocated on October 22, 1787,[280] was earmarked for use in extinguishing Indian claims to land already ceded.

The immediate result of this step were the treaties of Fort Harmar with the Wiandot, Delaware, Chippewa, and Ottawa, Indians,[281] and with the Six Nations, entered into early in 1789,[282] which reaffirmed many of the original terms of the Fort Stanwix and Fort McIntosh treaties. Both of these agreements provide for the United States relinquishing and quitclaiming certain described territory to the Indian nations. However, article 3 of the Fort Harmar treaty with the Wyandots, Delawares, Chippewas, and Ottawas,[283] added that the said nations should not be at liberty > * * * to sell or dispose of the same, or any part thereof, to any sovereign power, except the United States; nor to the subjects or citizens of any other sovereign power, nor to the subjects or citizens of the United States.

Article 7 also provided for the opening up of trade with Indians, establishing a system of licensing with guarantees of protection to certified traders, and a promise by the Indians to apprehend and deliver to the United States those individuals who intrude themselves without such authority. Article 6 makes first mention of depredations, and binds both parties to a method of handling claims arising therefrom.

Although the Fort Harmar conferences were held during the life of the Confederation, the report of the results obtained was received in the first months of the new government operating

---

[272] 7 Stat. 18.

[273] 6 Pet. 515, 551 (1832).

[274] Ibid., p. 551.

[275] Ibid., pp. 553–554.

[276] See Art. 6, Treaty with the Delawares of September 17, 1778, 7 Stat. 13, and fn. 254, supra.

[277] Mohr, op. cit., p. 132.

[278] Ibid.

[279] Ibid.

[280] Ibid.

[281] Treaty of January 9, 1789, 7 Stat. 28.

[282] Treaty of January 9, 1789 (unratified), 7 Stat. 33. See also fn. 263 supra, for interpretation of this treaty in Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1, 9 (1899).

[283] Treaty of January 9, 1789, 7 Stat. 28.

under the Constitution, and transmitted to the Senate of the United States on May 25, 1789, for its approval.[284]

Puzzled over the proper procedure, George Washington wrote to the Senate asking what it meant by advising him to "execute and enjoin" the observance of the treaties.

> It is said to be the general understanding and practice of nations, as a check on the mistakes and indiscretions of ministers or commissioners, not to consider any treaty negotiated and signed by such officers, as final and conclusive, until ratified by the sovereign or government from whom they derive their powers. This practice has been adopted by the United States respecting their treaties with European nations, and I am inclined to think it would be advisable to observe it in the conduct of our treaties with the Indians. * * *[285]

Not unmindful of the significance of the ratification of Indian treaties, the Senate appointed a special committee to investigate the matter. After several days of debate the Senate advised formal ratification.[286]

On August 22, 1789, George Washington appeared in the Senate Chamber to point out to the assembled group the gravity of the Indian situation in the South. North Carolina and Georgia, the President said, had not only protested against the treaties of Hopewell but had disregarded them. Moreover, open hostilities existed between Georgia and the Creek Nation. All of this, the President continued, involved so many complications that he wished to raise particular issues for the "advice and consent" of the Senate. Accordingly, he put seven questions which resulted in instructions to deal with the Creek situation first and, if need be, to use the whole amount of the current appropriation for Indian treaties for this purpose.[287]

On August 7, 1790, articles of agreement were concluded between the President of the United States and the kings, chiefs, and warriors of the Creek Nation.[288] Article 5 is a solemn guarantee to the Creeks of all their lands within certain described limits. Article 7 stipulated that—

> No citizen or inhabitant of the United States shall attempt to hunt or destroy the game on the Creek lands: Nor shall any such citizen or inhabitant go into the Creek country, without a passport first obtained from the Governor of some one of the United States. * * *

The obligation thus assumed by treaty the United States proceeded to implement in section 2 of the Indian Intercourse Act of May 19, 1796,[289] which made it a criminal offense for strangers to hunt, trap, or drive livestock in the Indian country.

It was found necessary to attach secret articles providing for transportation of merchandise duty free into the Creek Nation by the United States in the event of hostilities between the Creeks and Spaniards.[290]

In Article 5 of the secret treaty, the United States, for the first time, > * * * agree to educate and clothe such of the Creek youth as shall be agreed upon, not exceeding four in number at any one time.[291]

In the following year, 1791, the commissioners turned their attention to the difficulties between the Cherokees and the State of Georgia. Finally, on July 2, near the junction of the Holston River and the French Broad, the Cherokee Nation abandoned its claims to certain territories in return for $1,000 annuity.[292] The instrument signed on that occasion was well described by the court in Worcester v. Georgia:

> The third article contains a perfectly equal stipulation for the surrender of prisoners. The fourth article declares, that "the boundary between the United States and the Cherokee nation shall be as follows, beginning," etc. We hear no more of "allotments" or of "hunting-grounds." A boundary is described, between nation and nation, by mutual consent. The national character of each—the ability of each to establish this boundary, is acknowledged by the other. To preclude forever all disputes, it is agreed, that it shall be plainly marked by commissioners, to be appointed by each party; and in order to extinguish forever all claims of the Cherokees to the ceded lands, an additional consideration is to be paid by the United States. For this additional consideration, the Cherokees release all right to the ceded land, forever. By the fifth article, the Cherokees allow the United States a road through their country, and the navigation of the Tennessee river. The acceptance of these cessions is an acknowledgment of the right of the Cherokees to make or withhold them. By the sixth article, it is agreed, on the part of the Cherokees, that the United States shall have the sole and exclusive right of regulating their trade. No claim is made to the management of all their affairs. This stipulation has already been explained. The observation may be repeated, that the stipulation is itself an admission of their right to make or refuse it. By the seventh article, the United States solemnly guaranty to the Cherokee nation all their lands not hereby ceded. The eighth article relinquishes to the Cherokees any citizens of the United States who may settle on their lands; and the ninth forbids any citizen of the United States to hunt on their lands, or to enter their country without a passport. The remaining articles are equal, and contain stipulations which could be made only with a nation admitted to be capable of governing itself.[293]

This treaty of July 2, 1791, again includes a provision (Article 8) noticed before, viz: that any citizen settling on Indian land "* * * shall forfeit the protection of the United States, and the Cherokees may punish him or not, as they please."[294] This

---

[284] The Debates and Proceedings in the Congress of the United States (1789–90), vol. 1, pp. 40–41. (Hereinafter referred to as Debates and Proceedings.)

[285] Ibid., p. 83.

[286] Ibid., p. 84. It is interesting to note that the committee report (p. 82) which was rejected drew a distinction between treaties with European powers and treaties with the aborigines insisting that solemnities were not necessary in the latter case.

[287] Ibid., pp. 66–71. Washington asked the Senate "* * * if all offers should fail to induce the Creeks to make the desired cessions to Georgia, shall the Commissioners make it an ultimatum." (P. 70.) The Senate answered "No." (P. 71.)

[288] 7 Stat. 35. A recital often found in Indian treaties is the following, which appears in Art. 13: "All animosities for past grievances shall henceforth cease." (See also Treaty of July 2, 1791, Art. 15, 7 Stat. 39; Treaty of June 29, 1796, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 56.) It should be further noted that Art. 2 pledges the Creeks to refrain from treating with any individual State, or the individuals of any State. Patterson v. Jenks, 2 Pet. 216 (1829), construes provisions of this treaty relative to grants of land within the territorial limits of the State of Georgia.

[289] 1 Stat. 469.

[290] Treaty of August 7, 1790, Archives No. 17, Debates and Proceedings, vol. 1, p. 1029 (supra, fn. 284).

The Creek Treaty was amended on June 29, 1796, by a treaty which among other things provided that the United States give to the Creek Nation "goods to the value of six thousand dollars, and * * * send to the Indian nation, two blacksmiths, with strikers, to be employed for the upper and lower Creeks with the necessary tools." Art. 8, Treaty of June 29, 1796, 7 Stat. 56.

[291] See Art. 3, Treaty with the Kaskaskias, August 13, 1803, 7 Stat. 78, infra, for the first contribution by the United States for organized education in the support of a priest "* * * to instruct * * * in the rudiments of literature." See also Chapter 12, sec. 2.

[292] Art. 4, Treaty of July 2, 1791, 7 Stat. 39. This sum was increased later to $1,500 by the Treaty at Philadelphia of February 17, 1792, 7 Stat. 42. The Holston Treaty was further amended by the Treaty of Tellico of October 2, 1798, 7 Stat. 62, construed in Preston v. Browder, 1 Wheat. 115 (1816); Lattimer v. Poteet, 14 Pet. 4, 13 (1840).

[293] Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 555–556 (1832).

[294] See fn. 268 supra. A similar provision appears in the Treaties of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandots, Delawares, Chippawas, and Otta-

article, the court in Raymond v. Raymond[295] cites as the basis for the lack of jurisdiction of the federal judiciary in suits between members of the Cherokee Nation, saying:

> It is not material to the present issue that this provision has been subsequently modified. It shows, as do subsequent treaties, that for more than a century this tribe of Indians had claimed and exercised, and the United States have guarantied and secured to it, the exclusive right to regulate its local affairs, to govern and protect the persons and property of its own people, and of those who join them, and to adjudicate and determine their reciprocal rights and duties. * * * (P. 722.)

Despite efforts at conciliation, dissatisfaction was spreading among the Indian tribes. Word was received that the Indians of the Northwest Territory were preparing to cooperate with the Six Nations in a major war. Washington dispatched instructions to Colonel Pickering to hold a council with the Six Nations. At the same time preparations were made to take military action on the western frontier and General Wayne, a Revolutionary War veteran, was put in charge of the troops, who on August 20, 1794, routed the natives in the battle of Fallen Timbers.

A new treaty was made with the Six Nations on November 11, 1794.[296] In this agreement the lands belonging to the Oneidas, Onondagas, Cayugas, and Senecas were described and acknowledged by the United States as the property of the aforementioned Indian nations and in addition the United States pledged to add the sum of $3,000 to the $1,500 annuity already allowed by the Treaty of April 23, 1792,[297] with the Five Nations.

Shortly thereafter, a treaty[298] was concluded with the nations which had participated in the ill-fated expedition against General Wayne. This agreement provides for the cession of an immensely important area which today comprises most of the State of Ohio and a portion of Indiana. At the same time the United States stipulates (Article 5):

> The Indian tribes who have a right to those lands, are quietly to enjoy them, hunting, planting, and dwelling thereon so long as they please, without any molestation from the United States; but when those tribes, or any of them, shall be disposed to sell their lands, or any part of them, they are to be sold only to the United States; and until such sale, the United States will protect all the said Indian tribes in the quiet enjoyment of their lands against all citizens of the United States, and against all other white persons who intrude upon the same.

The exact meaning of this recital was at issue in Williams v. City of Chicago. After examining the instrument in detail the court held:

> * * * We think it entirely clear that this treaty did not convey a fee simple title to the Indians; that under it no tribe could claim more than the right of continued occupancy; and that when this was abandoned all legal right or interest which both tribe and its members had in the territory came to an end. * * *[299] (Pp. 437–438.)

The Seven Nations of Canada on May 31, 1796,[300] released all territorial claims within the State of New York, with the exception of a tract of land 6 miles square.[301]

D. EXTENDING THE NATIONAL DOMAIN: 1800–17

By 1800 the rapid growth of the nation had given impetus to the drive to add to the territory under federal ownership. This could be done effectively by extinguishing native title to desired lands. The treaty makers of this period may be said to have had a single objective—the acquisition of more land.

Success in this direction was almost immediate and by 1803 the President of the United States was able to report to Congress:

> The friendly tribe of Kaskaskia Indians * * * has transferred its country to the United States, reserving only for its members what is sufficient to maintain them in an agricultural way. * * * This country, among the most fertile within our limits, extending along the Mississippi from the mouth of the Illinois to and up the Ohio, though not so necessary as a barrier since the acquisition of the other bank, may yet be well worthy of being laid open to immediate settlement, as its inhabitants may descend with rapidity in support of the lower country, should future circumstances expose that to foreign enterprise.[302]

Article 3 of the Kaskaskia treaty[303] contains the first provision for contributions by the United States for organized education,[304] for the erection of a new church,[305] and for the building of a house for the chief as a gift.[306]

The Indians pledge themselves to refrain from waging war or giving any insult or offense to any other Indian tribe or to any foreign nation without first having obtained the approbation and consent of the United States (Art. 2). The United States in turn take the tribe under their immediate care and patronage, and guarantee a protection similar to that enjoyed by their own citizens. The United States also reserve the right to divide the annuity promised to the tribe "* * * amongst the several families thereof, reserving always a suitable sum for the great chief and his family." (Art. 4.)

President Jefferson selected William Henry Harrison, Governor of Indiana Territory, to represent the United States Government in its negotiations with the Indian tribes of the West.[307]

After protracted negotiations at Fort Wayne with the Delawares, Shawnees, and other tribes of the Northwest Territory, a substantial cession of territory was secured by the Treaty of June 7, 1803.[308]

An interesting provision is found in Article 3, whereby the United States guaranteed to deliver to the Indians annually salt was, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 16; November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 18; January 3, 1786, with the Choctaws, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 21; January 10, 1786, with the Chickasaws, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 24; January 31, 1786, with the Shawnees, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 26; January 9, 1789, with the Wiandots, Delawares, Chippewas, and Ottawas, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 28; August 7, 1790, with the Creeks, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 35; August 3, 1795, with the Wyandots, Delawares, Chipewas, Ottawas, etc., Art. 6, 7 Stat. 49. See also Chapter 1, sec. 3.

---

[295] Raymond v. Raymond, 83 Fed. 721 (C. C. A. 8, 1897).

[296] 7 Stat. 44. An earlier treaty had been concluded October 22, 1784, 7 Stat. 15.

[297] Unpublished treaty (Archives No. 19).

[298] Treaty with the Wyandots, Delawares, Shawanoes, etc., August 3, 1795, at Greenville, 7 Stat. 49. "The ratification of this treaty is to be considered as the terminus a quo a man might safely begin a settlement on the Western frontier of Pennsylvania." Morris's Lessee v. Neighman, 4 Dall. 209, 210 (1800). For provisions under this treaty relating to disposal of land by Indians see Patterson v. Jenks, fn. 288, supra. Chippewa Indians were treated as a single tribe in this treaty. Chippewa Indians of Minnesota v. United States, 301 U. S. 358 (1937).

[299] 242 U. S. 434 (1917).

[300] Treaty of May 31, 1796, 7 Stat. 55. "The 7 tribes signified are the Skighquan (Nipissing), Estjage (Saulteurs), Assisagh (Missisauga), Karhadage, Adgenauwe, Karrihaet, and Adirondax (Algonkins). The 4th, 5th, and 6th are unidentified." Bull. No. 30, Bureau of American Ethnology, Handbook of American Indians, pt. 2, p. 515.

[301] This tract was reserved for the Indians of St. Regis village, and is now the St. Regis Reservation. See Chapter 22, sec. 2C.

[302] Message of October 17, 1803, in Debates and Proceedings (1803–4), vol. 13, pp. 12–13.

[303] Treaty of August 13, 1803, 7 Stat. 78.

[304] See Unpublished Treaty of August 7, 1790 (Archives No. 17), fn. 290 supra, and Chapter 12, sec. 2.

[305] In 1794 the United States agreed to contribute $1,000 toward rebuilding a church for the Oneidas destroyed by the British in the Revolutionary War. Treaty of December 2, 1794, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 47.

[306] Gifts to the chief were continued in later treaties.

[307] Oskison, Tecumseh, and his Times (1938), p. 96.

[308] 7 Stat. 74. While certain commercial concessions have been noticed before this, for the first time the United States is granted (Art. 4) the not to exceed 150 bushels from a salt spring which the Indians had ceded.

The next year another large area was secured from the Delawares.[309] In this treaty the United States expressly recognizes the Delaware Indians "as the rightful owners of all the country" specifically bounded (Art. 4).

Since the Piankishaw Tribe refused to recognize the title of the Delawares to the land ceded by this treaty,[310] Harrison negotiated a separate treaty.[311] It provided for land cessions and reserved the right to the United States of apportioning the annuity, "allowing always a due proportion for the chiefs." [312]

Harrison went to St. Louis to meet the chiefs of the Sacs and Foxes, and bargain for their land, which was rich in mineral deposits of copper and lead. There he succeeded in getting, on November 3, 1804,[313] as has been noted by his biographer Dawson, "the largest tract of land ever ceded in one treaty by the Indians since the settlement of North America * * *." [314]

In this agreement it is stipulated (Art. 8) that "the laws of the United States regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, are already extended to the country inhabited by the Saukes and Foxes." The tribes also promise to put an end (Art. 10) to the war which waged between them and the Great and Little Osages. Article 11 guarantees a safe and free passage through the Sac and Fox country to every person travelling under the authority of the United States.[315]

The conclusion of the treaty at St. Louis brings to an end for several years negotiations with the Indians of the West. However, treaty-making in other quarters continued and Jefferson was able to inform Congress in 1805:

> Since your last session, the northern tribes have sold [316] to us the land between the Connecticut Reserve and the former Indian boundary, and those on the Ohio, from the same boundary to the Rapids, and for a considerable depth inland. The Chickasaws and the Cherokees have sold [317] us the country between and adjacent to the two districts of Tennessee, and the Creeks [318] the residue of their lands in the fork of Ocumlgee up to the Ulcofauhatche. The three former purchases are important, inasmuch as they consolidate disjoined parts of our settled country, and render their intercourse secure; and the second particularly so, as, with the small point on the river, which we expect is by this time ceded by the Piankeshaws,[319] it completes our possession of the whole of both banks of the Ohio, from its source to near its mouth, and the navigation of that river is thereby rendered forever safe to our citizens settled and settling on its extensive waters. The purchase from the Creeks too has been for some time particularly interesting to the State of Georgia.[320]

A treaty negotiated with the Choctaws in November 16, 1805,[321] contained the first reservation of land for the use of individual Indians.[322]

Article 2 carries the significant provision of > Forty eight thousand dollars to enable the Mingoes to discharge the debt due to their merchants and traders * * *.[323]

The treaty with the Great and Little Osages of November 10, 1808,[324] provided in addition to land cessions,[325] the pledge (Art. 12) that the Osages would not furnish "* * * any nation or tribe of Indians not in amity with the United States, with guns, ammunitions, or other implements of war."

In one of his last official messages to Congress on November 8, 1808, Jefferson observed:

> With our Indian neighbors the public peace has been steadily maintained. Some instances of individual wrong have, as at other times, taken place, but in no wise implicating the will of the nation. Beyond the Mississippi, the Iowas, the Sacs, and the Alabamas, have delivered up for trial and punishment individuals from among themselves, accused of murdering citizens of the United States. On this side of the Mississippi, the Creeks are exerting themselves to arrest offenders of the same kind; and the Choctaws have manifested their readiness and desire for amicable and just arrangements respecting depredations committed by disorderly persons of their tribe. * * * one of the two great divisions of the Cherokee nation have now under consideration to solicit the citizenship of the United States, and to be identified with us in laws and government, in such progressive manner as we shall think best.[326]

During this time there had come into power and influence among a great number of Indian tribes a Shawnee, Tecumseh, and his brother Laulewasikau called "The Prophet." When disturbing reports of the behavior of the two Shawnees reached Harrison, he resolved to press further before all Indian tribes were rendered unwilling to part with their land. Accordingly in September 1809, he convened the head men of the Delawares, Pottawatomies, Miamis, and Eel River Miamis and requested some 2,600,000 acres.[327] This they yielded.[328] A month later right to locate three tracts of land as sites for houses of entertainment. However, if ferries are esablished in connection therewith, the Indians are to cross said ferries toll free.

---

Six other treaties which need not be examined at length were negotiated during the first years of Jefferson's Administration: Chickasaws, Treaty of October 24, 1801, 7 Stat. 65; Choctaws, Treaty of December 17, 1801, 7 Stat. 66; Creeks, Treaty of June 16, 1802, 7 Stat. 68; Senecas, Treaty of June 30, 1802, 7 Stat. 72; Choctaws, Treaty of October 17, 1802, 7 Stat. 73; Choctaws, Treaty of August 31, 1803, 7 Stat. 80. These included two treaties for the building of roads through Indian territory, two treaties relinquishing areas of land to private individuals under the sanction of the United States, and two treaties for running boundary lines in accordance with previous negotiations, and two treaties providing for cessions of territory to the United States.

[309] Treaty of August 18, 1804, 7 Stat. 81.

[310] See Art. 6, Treaty of August 18, 1804, with the Delawares, 7 Stat. 81.

[311] August 27, 1804, 7 Stat. 83.

[312] Ibid., Art. 4.

[313] Treaty of November 3, 1804, 7 Stat. 84, construed in Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi in Iowa v. Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi in Oklahoma, 220 U. S. 481 (1911).

[314] Oskison, op. cit. p. 105.

[315] An additional article provided that under certain conditions grants of land from the Spanish Government, not included within the treaty boundaries should not be invalidated. This particular provision was given application in a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States in Marsh v. Brooks, 14 How. 513 (1852).

[316] Treaty with the Wyandots, Ottawas, etc., of July 4, 1805, 7 Stat. 87; Treaty with the Delawares, Pottawatimies, etc., of August 21, 1805, 7 Stat. 91. In this last-mentioned treaty the United States agreed to consider (Art. 4) the Miamis, Eel River, and Wea Indians as "joint owners" of a certain area of land and for the first time agreed not to purchase said land without the consent of each of said tribes. In early treaties the Chippewas were dealt with as a single tribe. Chippewa Indians of Minnesota v. United States, 301 U. S. 358 (1937).

[317] Treaty with the Chickasaws of July 23, 1805, 7 Stat. 89; Treaties with the Cherokees of October 25 and 27, 1805, 7 Stat. 93, 95.

[318] Treaty of November 14, 1805, 7 Stat. 96, construed in Coffee v. Groover, 123 U. S. 1, 14 (1887).

[319] Treaty of December 30, 1805, 7 Stat. 100.

[320] Message of December 3, 1805, in Debates and Proceedings (1805–7), vol. 15, p. 15.

[321] Treaty of November 16, 1805, 7 Stat. 98.

[322] Ibid., Art. 1. A tract of land was reserved for the use of Alzira and Sophia, daughters of a white man and Choctaw woman.

[323] This is not the first time that allusion to the distressed financial situation of the Indians was made in a treaty. Both the Treaty with the Creeks, June 16, 1802, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 68, and the Treaty with the Chickasaws, July 23, 1805, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 89, make mention of debts owed by the natives. Also see Chapter 8, sec. 7C.

[324] Treaty of November 10, 1808, 7 Stat. 107, construed in Hot Springs Cases, 92 U. S. 698, 704 (1875).

[325] Debates and Proceedings (1808–9), vol. 19, p. 13.

[326] Ibid. By the Treaty of Detroit, November 17, 1807, 7 Stat. 105, and the Treaty of Brownstown, November 25, 1808, 7 Stat. 112, less important territorial concessions were secured.

[327] Oskison, op. cit., p. 106.

[328] Treaty of September 30, 1809, 7 Stat. 113.

Harrison concluded an agreement with the Weas recognizing their claim to the land just ceded and extinguishing it for an annuity and a cash gift; and promised additional money if the Kickapoos should agree to the cession.[329] Shortly thereafter, December 9, 1809, the Kickapoos capitulated and ceded some 256,000 acres for a $500 annuity plus $1,500 in goods.[330]

These cessions soon occasioned dissatisfaction among the Indians and, in the summer of 1810, with Indian war imminent in the Wabash valley, Harrison summoned Tecumseh and his warriors to a conference at Vincennes.[331] Here the Shawnee Chief delivered his ultimatum. Only with great regret would he consider hostilities against the United States, against whom land purchases were the only complaint. However, unless the treaties of the autumn of 1809 were rescinded, he would be compelled to enter into an English alliance.[332]

Upon being informed by the Governor that such conditions could not be accepted by the Government of the United States, Tecumseh proceeded to merge Indian antagonisms with those of a larger conflict—the War of 1812 with Great Britain. The only treaty of military alliance the United States was able to negotiate was that with the Wyandots, Delawares, Shawanoese, Senecas, and Miamies on July 22, 1814.[333]

In 1813 war broke out among the Upper Creek towns that had been aroused by the eloquence of Tecumseh several years before. Fort Mims near Mobile was burned, and the majority of its inhabitants killed.[334] Andrew Jackson, in charge of military operations in that quarter, launched an obstinate and successful campaign, leveling whole towns in the process.[335]

Since the Creeks were a nation, and the hostile Creeks could not make a separate peace, Jackson met with representatives of the nation, friendly for the most part, and presented his "Articles of Agreement and Capitulation." [336]

The General demanded the surrender of 23,000,000 acres,[337] half or more of the ancient Creek domain,[338] as an indemnity for war expenses. Failure to comply would be considered hostile.[339] A large part of this territory belonged to the loyal Creeks, but Jackson made no distinction. Under protest, the "Articles of Agreement and Capitulation" were signed August 9, 1814.[340]

Certain other provisions indicate the spirit of capitulation in which the treaty was negotiated. For example, Article 3 demands that all communication with the British and the Spanish be abandoned, and Article 6 provides that "all the prophets and instigators of the war * * * who have not submitted to the arms of the United States * * *" be surrendered.

The terms of the peace which brought to an end the War of 1812 provided for a general amnesty for the Indians,[341] and the Federal Government proceeded to come to terms of peace with the various tribes. Twenty treaties were negotiated in 2 years, providing chiefly for mutual forgiveness, perpetual peace, and delivering up of prisoners, the recognition of former treaties, and acknowledgment of the United States as sole protector.[342]

E. INDIAN REMOVAL WESTWARD: 1817–46

With the increasing reluctance of Indians to part with their lands by treaties of cession, the policy of removal westward was accelerated. The United States offered lands in the West for territory possessed by the Indians in the eastern part of the United States. This served the double purpose of making available for white settlement a vast area, and solving the problem of conflict of authority caused by the presence of Indian nations within state boundaries.

Although the program had been considered in certain quarters for some time, it was not until after the close of the War of 1812 that the first exchange treaty was concluded.[343] Then for al-

---

[329] Treaty of October 26, 1809, 7 Stat. 116.

[330] Treaty of December 9, 1809, 7 Stat. 117. Acreage from Oskison, op. cit., p. 107.

[331] Adams, History of the United States of America During the First Administration of James Madison (1890), vol. VI, p. 85.

[332] Ibid., pp. 87–88.

[333] Treaty of July 22, 1814, 7 Stat. 118.

[334] Adams, op. cit., vol. VII, pp. 228–231.

[335] Ibid., vol. VII, pp. 255–257.

[336] Ibid., vol. VII, pp. 259–260.

[337] James, Andrew Jackson (1933), p. 189.

[338] Adams, op. cit. vol. VII, p. 260. Adams estimates that two-thirds of the Creek land was demanded; James estimates one-half (op. cit. p. 189).

[339] James, op. cit. p. 190; Adams, op. cit. p. 260.

[340] 7 Stat. 120. "Title of the Creek Nation" to lands in Georgia "was extinguished throughout most of the southern part of the state by the treaties made with the nation in 1802, 1805, and 1814. 7 Stat. 68, 96, 120." Coffee v. Groover, 123 U. S. 1, 14 (1887). This land cession was the subject of much controversy for more than a century. After the passage of the so-called jurisdiction act (Act of May 24, 1924, 43 Stat. 139), giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to render judgment on claims arising out of Creek treaties, the Creek Nation filed a petition seeking payment for the twenty-three millions and more acres of land with interest, averring that—> * * * the representatives of the Creek Nation met, all of them, with one exception, being friendly and not hostile to the United States, and protested to General Jackson that the lands were perpetually guaranteed to the Creek Nation by treaty, that the hostile Creeks had no interest in the fee to the lands, and that the treaty as drawn did not provide any compensation for the lands required to be ceded. * * * "that said Jackson represented to said council that he was without power to make any agreement to compensate them for their lands and that unless they signed the treaty as he had drawn it he would furnish the whole tribe with provisions and ammunition and that they could go down to Pensacola and join the Red Sticks and British and that, by the time they got there, he would be on their tracks and whip them and the British and drive them into the sea." and that driven to this extremity they submitted and signed the treaty. (Pp. 271–272.)

This petition was dismissed on March 7, 1927, the Court of Claims holding that the jurisdictional act does not give jurisdiction over a claim, the allowance of which involved the setting aside of a treaty on the ground that it was entered into under fraud. Creek Nation v. United States, 63 C. Cls. 270 (1927), cert. den. 274 U. S. 751.

[341] Ninth Article, Treaty of Ghent of December 24, 1814, 8 Stat. 218.

[342] Poutawatamie, July 18, 1815, 7 Stat. 123; Piankishaw, July 18, 1815, 7 Stat. 124; Teeton, July 19, 1815, 7 Stat. 125; Sioux of Lake, July 19, 1815, 7 Stat. 126; Sioux of the River of St. Peters, July 19, 1815, 7 Stat. 127; Yankton, July 19, 1815, 7 Stat. 128; Mahas, July 20, 1815, 7 Stat. 129; Kickapoos, September 2, 1815, 7 Stat. 130; Delawares, Wyandots, Senecas, etc., September 8, 1815, 7 Stat. 131; Great and Little Osage, September 12, 1815, 7 Stat. 133. The Supreme Court in construing the treaty with the Great and Little Osages, September 12, 1815, states: "peace was reestablished between the contracting parties, and former treaties were renewed * * *." State of Missouri v. State of Iowa, 7 How. 559, 668 (1849). Sac, September 13, 1815, 7 Stat. 134; Fox, September 14, 1815, 7 Stat. 135; Iaway, September 16, 1815, 7 Stat. 136; Kanzas, October 28, 1815, 7 Stat. 137; Sacs of Rock River, May 13, 1816, 7 Stat. 141; Sioux of the Leaf, Sioux of the Broad Leaf, and Sioux Who Shoot in the Pine Tops, June 1, 1816, 7 Stat. 143; Winnebago, June 3, 1816, 7 Stat. 144; Menomenee, March 30, 1817, 7 Stat. 153; Ottoes, June 24, 1817, 7 Stat. 154; Poncarar, June 25, 1817, 7 Stat. 155.

Five other treaties negotiated during this period provided for cessions of territory: Cherokees, March 22, 1816, 7 Stat. 138; Ottawas, Chipawas, etc., August 24, 1816, 7 Stat. 146; Cherokee, September 14, 1816, 7 Stat. 148; Chickasaws, September 20, 1816, 7 Stat. 150; Chactaw, October 24, 1816, 7 Stat. 152.

The Treaty of September 20, 1816, 7 Stat. 150, with the Chickasaws, made provision (Art. 6) for liberal presents to specified chiefs and individual Indians. Article 7 provided that no more licenses were to be granted to peddlers to traffic in goods in the Chickasaw Nation.

[343] Treaty of July 8, 1817, 7 Stat. 156. Construed in Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 6 (1831); Marsh v. Brooks, 8 How. 223, 232 (1850); Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. 211, 212 (1872). The Supreme Court again construed this treaty in Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413, 429 (1912). "In 1817 * * * the Cherokee Nation ceded to the United States certain tracts which they formerly held, and in exchange the United States bound themselves to give to that branch of the Nation on the Arkansas as much land as they had received, or might thereafter most 30 years thereafter Indian treaty making was concerned almost solely with removing certain tribes of natives to the vacant lands lying to the westward. The first and most significant of these treaties was concluded with the southern tribes later known as the "Five Civilized Tribes."

1. Cherokees.—In 1816 Andrew Jackson as Commissioner for the United States met with the Cherokees to discuss the proposition of exchanging lands. Many influential Cherokees were bitterly opposed to it, and the great majority of Indians were extremely dubious of the value of removing elsewhere.

However, the next year a treaty, prepared by Andrew Jackson, was accepted by representatives of the Cherokee Nation.[344] Its recitals include (Art. 5) a cession of the land occupied by the Cherokee Nation in return for a proportionate tract of country elsewhere, a stipulation (Art. 3) for the taking of a census of the Cherokee Nation in order to determine those emigrating and those remaining behind and thus divide the annuities between them; compensation for improvements (Arts. 6 and 7), and (Art. 8) reservations of 640 acres of Cherokee land in life estate with a reversion in fee simple to their children, to "each and every head of any Indian family residing on the east side of the Mississippi River * * * who may wish to become citizens * * *."[345] These "reservations" were the first allotments, and the idea of individual title with restrictions on alienation, as a basis of citizenship, was destined to play a major role in later Indian legislation.

When the attempt to execute the treaty was made, its weaknesses came to light. Removal was voluntary, and the national will to remove was lacking. In 1819 a delegation of Cherokees appeared in Washington and negotiated with Secretary Calhoun a new treaty,[346] which contemplated a cessation of migration.

The Cherokee Nation opposed removal and further cession of land, but once more the Federal Government sought to persuade them to move west. By the treaty of May 6, 1828,[347] made with that portion of the Cherokee Nation which had removed across the Mississippi pursuant to earlier treaties, another offer was made. Article 8 provides:

> * * * that their Brothers yet remaining in the States may be induced to join them * * * it is further agreed, on the part of the United States, that to each Head of a Cherokee family now residing within the chartered limits of Georgia, or of either of the States, East of the Mississippi, who may desire to remove West, shall be given, on enrolling himself for emigration, a good Rifle, a Blanket, and Kettle, and five pounds of Tobacco: (and to each member of his family one Blanket,) also, a just compensation for the property he may abandon, to be assessed by persons to be appointed by the President of the United States.[348]

This treaty was negotiated to define the limits of the Cherokees' new home in the West—limits which were different from those contemplated by the treaty of 1817 and convention of 1819 and included the following promise:

> The United States agree to possess the Cherokee, and to guarantee it to them forever, and that guarantee is hereby solemnly pledged, of seven millions of acres of land, * * *.[349]

Also interesting is the preamble wherein is stated:

> * * * the anxious desire of the Government of the United States to secure to the Cherokee nation of Indians * * * a permanent home, and which shall, under the most solemn guarantee of the United States, be, and remain, theirs forever—a home that shall never, in all future time, be embarrassed by having extended around it the lines, or placed over it the jurisdiction of a Territory or State, nor be pressed upon by the extension, in any way, of any of the limits of any existing Territory or State; * * *.[350] (P. 311.)

Article 6 provided that whenever the Cherokees desired it, a set of plain laws suited to their condition would be furnished.[351]

Confidential agents were then sent to the Cherokee Nation to renew efforts to secure immigrants to the west, but these efforts met with little success.[352] Obviously more forceful measures would have to be used, and the expansionists awaited eagerly the replacing of John Quincy Adams with a Chief Executive who would not hesitate to take such action.[353]

The election of 1828 supplied just such a President. Despite a conciliatory inaugural address,[354] Andrew Jackson immediately made it clear that the Indians must go West.[355] In this he was receive, east of the Mississippi. * * *" The tribe (Cherokee) was divided into two bodies, one of which remained where they were, east of the Mississippi, and the other settled themselves upon United States land in the country on the Arkansas and White rivers.

---

The effect of reserves to individual Indians of a mile square each, secured to heads of families by the Cherokee treaties of 1817 and 1819, is directly decided in the case of Cornet v. Winton's Lessee, 2 Yergers Ten. Rep. 143 (1826). The division of the Cherokee Nation into two parties is also discussed in Old Settlers v. United States, 148 U. S. 427, 435–436 (1893).

[344] Treaty of July 8, 1817, 7 Stat. 156. It is to be noted that in the preamble of the treaty the following quotation of President Madison is cited with approval:

> * * * when established in their new settlements, we shall still consider them as our children, give them the benefit of exchanging their peltries for what they will want at our factories, and always hold them firmly by the hand.

[345] For opinions of the Attorney General on compensation provided by the sixth and seventh articles on rights of reservees and on descent of lands, see 3 Op. A. G. 326 (1838); 3 Op. A. G. 367 (1838); 4 Op. A. G. 116 (1842); 4 Op. A. G. 580 (1847).

[346] Treaty of February 27, 1819, 7 Stat. 195.

[347] 7 Stat. 311.

[348] The term "property which he may abandon" is construed as fixed property, "that which he could not take with him; in a word, the land and improvements which he had occupied" in 2 Op. A. G. 321 (1830).

[349] Treaty of May 6, 1828, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 311.

[350] This treaty was ratified with the proviso that it should not interfere with the lands assigned or to be assigned to the Creek Indians nor should it be construed to cede any lands heretofore ceded to any tribe by any treaty now in existence.

On February 14, 1833, a treaty (7 Stat. 414) to settle disputed Creek claims was negotiated with the Cherokee Nation west of the Mississippi. In addition to certain amendments to the preceding agreement, an outlet described as a > * * * perpetual outlet, West, and a free and unmolested use of all the Country lying West of the Western boundary of the above described limits, and as far West as the sovereignty of the United States, and their right of soil extend.

which had been guaranteed in Treaty of May 6, 1828, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 311, was reaffirmed.

[351] This article was canceled, at Cherokee request, by Treaty of February 14, 1833, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 414.

[352] Foreman, Indian Removal (1932), pp. 21, 231; Abel, Indian Consolidation, in Annual Report, American Historical Association (1906), vol. 1, p. 361.

[353] Abel, op. cit., p. 370.

[354] In his speech of March 4, 1829, Jackson said:

> It will be my sincere and constant desire to observe toward the Indian tribes within our limits a just and liberal policy, and to give that humane and considerate attention to their rights and their wants which is consistent with the habits of our Government and the feelings of our people. (H. Misc. Doc., 53d Cong. 2d sess. (1893–94), vol. 37, pt. 2, p. 438.)

[355] See Abel op. cit., p. 370, 378; Foreman, op. cit., p. 21. In his first message to Congress of December 8, 1829, Jackson urged voluntary removal as a protection to the Indians and the states. (H. Misc. Doc., 53d Cong. 2d sess. (1893–94), vol. 37, pt. 2, p. 458.) On May 28, 1830, the Indian Removal Act (4 Stat. 411, 25 U. S. C. 174, R. S. § 2114) was passed. (Amendments guaranteeing protection to the Indians from the states and respect for treaty rights until removal were defeated (Abel, op cit., p. 380).) It gave to President Jackson power to initiate proceedings for exchange of lands. This was begun, with requests for conferences, in August of 1830 (Foreman, op. cit.,

aided by the legislature of Georgia which had enacted laws to harrass and make intolerable the life of the Eastern Cherokee.[356]

When the objectives of the hostile legislation became evident the chief of the Cherokee Nation, John Ross, determined to seek relief and filed a motion in the Supreme Court of the United States to enjoin the execution of certain Georgia laws. The bill reviewed the various guarantees in the treaties between the Cherokee Nation and the United States and complained that the action of the Georgia legislature was in direct violation thereof.

While the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was denied on the grounds that the Cherokee Nation was not a foreign state within the meaning of the Constitution, Chief Justice Marshall nevertheless gave utterance to a highly significant analysis—the first judicial analysis—of the effect of the various treaties upon the status of the Indian nation:

> * * * The numerous treaties made with them by the United States, recognise them as a people capable of maintaining the relations of peace and war, of being responsible in their political character for any violation of their engagements, or for any aggression committed on the citizens of the United States, by any individual of their community. Laws have been enacted in the spirit of these treaties. The acts of our government plainly recognise the Cherokee nation as a state, and the courts are bound by those acts.[357]

Shortly thereafter, two missionaries, Worcester and Butler, were indicted in the Superior Court of Gwinnett County for residing in that part of the Cherokee country attached to Georgia by recent state laws, in violation of a legislative act which forbade the residence of whites in Cherokee country without an oath of allegiance to the state and a license to remain.[358] Mr. Worcester pleaded that the United States had acknowledged in its treaties with the Cherokees the latter's status as a sovereign nation and as a consequence the prosecution of state laws could not be maintained. He was tried, convicted and sentenced to 4 years in the penitentiary.

On a writ of error the case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the Court asserted its jurisdiction and reversed the judgment of the Superior Court for the County of Gwinnett in the State of Georgia, declaring that it had been pronounced under color of a law which was repugnant to the Constitution, laws and treaties of the United States. Chief Justice Marshall in delivering this opinion examined the recitals of the various treaties with the Cherokees and proceeded to point out:

> * * * They [state laws] interfere forcibly with the relations established between the United States and the Cherokee nation, the regulation of which, according to the settled principles of our constitution, are committed exclusively to the government of the Union. They are in direct hostility with treaties, repeated in a succession of years, which mark out the boundary that separates the Cherokee country from Georgia; guaranty to them all the land within their boundary; solemnly pledge the faith of the United States to restrain their citizens from trespassing on it; and recognise the pre-existing power of the nation to govern itself. They are in hostility with the acts of congress for regulating this intercourse, and giving effect to the treaties. * * *[359]

In September 1831, the President sent Benjamin F. Currey of Tennessee into the Cherokee country to superintend the work of enrolling the natives for the journey to the west.[360] Currey found the task difficult and slow, only 71 families enrolling by December.[361] The Cherokees were divided on removal, one group headed by John Ridge favorable to emigration, another faction remaining loyal to their chief, John Ross, and opposed to the program.[362] In 1834 the Ridge faction negotiated a sweeping treaty for removal which failed of ratification by the Cherokee council.[363]

In 1835, delegates from both factions were sent to Washington. After the Ross group had refused the President's terms, negotiations were opened with the opposing party, and on March 14 an agreement was drawn up which was not to be considered binding until it should receive the approval of the Cherokee people in full council.[364]

At a full council meeting in October 1835, at Red Clay, Tennessee, both factions, temporarily abandoning their quarrels, united in opposition to this treaty and rejected it.[365] Another meeting was then called at New Echota, and a new treaty was negotiated and signed.[366]

By Article 1, the Cherokee Nation ceded all their land east of the Mississippi River to the United States for $5,000,000.

Article 2 of this instrument recites that whereas by treaties with the Cherokees west of the Mississippi, the United States had guaranteed and secured to be conveyed by patent a certain territory as their permanent home, together with "a perpetual outlet west," provided that other tribes shall have access to saline deposits on said territory, it is now agreed "to convey to the said Indians, and their descendants by patent, in fee simple * * *" certain additional territory.

The estate of the Cherokees in their new homeland (by Art. 2, 7,000,000 acres and an additional 800,000 acres) has been variously called a fee simple,[367] an estate in fee upon a condition subsequent,[368] and a base, qualified or determinable fee.[369]

Article 5 provides that the new Cherokee land should not be included within any state or territory without their consent, and pp. 21–22). The Indians were advised that refusal meant end of federal protection and abandonment to state laws (Abel, op. cit., p. 382; Foreman, op. cit., pp. 231–232.)

---

[356] See Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515 (1832). See also, Foreman, op. cit., pp. 229–230.

[357] Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 16 (1831). See Chapter 14, sec. 3.

[358] Foreman, op. cit. p. 235.

[359] Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 561, 562, (1832). On the failure of Georgia to abide by the Supreme Court decision, see Chapter 7, sec. 2.

[360] The methods which were employed at this time have been described thus:

> Intrigue was met by intrigue. Currey secretly employed intelligent mixed-breeds for a liberal compensation to circulate among the Indians and advance arguments calculated to break down their resistance. * * * Plied with liquor, the Indians were charged with debts for which their property was taken with or without process of law. (Foreman, op cit., p. 236.)

[361] Ibid., p. 241.

[362] Abel, op. cit. fn. 352 p. 403.

[363] Treaty of June 19, 1834 (unratified). This treaty ceded to the United States all the Cherokee land in Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Alabama, and the Indians agreed to move west. Abel, op. cit., p. 403; Foreman, op cit., pp. 264, 265.

[364] Treaty of March 14, 1835 (unratified). By this treaty the tribe ceded all its eastern territory and agreed to move west for $4,500,000. Foreman, op cit., p. 266; Abel, op. cit. pp. 403, 404.

[365] Foreman, op. cit., pp. 266–267.

[366] December 29, 1835, 7 Stat. 478, 488 (Supplement). The events leading to this treaty are analyzed in L. K. Cohen, The Treaty of New Echota (1936), 3 Indians at Work, No. 19.

[367] Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas Railway Co., 135 U. S. 641 (1890). In United States v. Rogers, 23 Fed. 658, 664 (D. C. W. D. Ark. 1885), the court insisted:

> * * * By looking at the title of the Cherokees to their lands, we find that they hold them all by substantially the same kind of title, the only difference being that the outlet is incumbered with the stipulation that the United States is to permit other tribes to get salt on the Salt plains. With this exception, the title of the Cherokee Nation to the outlet is just as fixed, certain, extensive, and perpetual as the title to any of their lands.

The President and Senate in concluding a treaty, can lawfully covenant that a patent should issue to convey lands which belong to the United States. Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. 211 (1872).

[368] Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. 211 (1872).

[369] United States v. Reese, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,137 (D. C. Mass. 1868).

that their right to make laws not inconsistent with the Constitution or intercourse acts should be secured.[370]

The New Echota treaty also provided (Art. 12) under certain conditions, reservations of 160 acres for those who wished to remain east of the Mississippi [371] and for settlement of claims (Art. 13) for former reservations. In addition a commission was established (Art. 17) to adjudicate these claims.[372]

2. Chickasaws.—Although the domain of the Chickasaw Nation was considerably restricted by the treaties of 1816 [373] and 1818 [374] it was not until 1830 that the subject of "removal" was given serious consideration. During the summer of that year, the President met the principal chiefs of the Chickasaw Nation and warned them that they would be compelled either to migrate to the west or to submit to the laws of the state.[375] After several days of conference a provisional treaty [376] was signed. However, performance was conditional upon the Chickasaws being given a home in the West on the lands of the Choctaw Nation, and as the two nations could come to no agreement the treaty remained unfulfilled.[377] Nevertheless, white infiltration into Chickasaw land east of the Mississippi was accelerated, and the problem of removal became a pressing government problem.[378]

On October 20, 1832,[379] another treaty for removal was negotiated in which all of the land of the tribe east of the Mississippi was ceded to the United States [380] to be sold at public auction.[381] Article 4 provides:

> * * * that the Chickasaw people shall not deprive themselves of a comfortable home, in the country where they now are, untill they shall have provided a country in the west to remove to * * *. It is therefore agreed * * * that they will endeavor as soon as it may be in their power, after the ratification of this treaty, to hunt out and procure a home for their people, west of the Mississippi river, * * * they are to select out of the surveys, a comfortable settlement for every family in the Chickasaw nation, to include their present improvements, if the land is good for cultivation, and if not they may take it in any other place in the nation, which is unoccupied by any other person. * * * All of which tracts of land, so selected and retained, shall be held, and occupied by the Chickasaw people, uninterrupted until they shall find and obtain a country suited to their wants and condition. And the United States will guaranty to the Chickasaw nation, the quiet possession and uninterrupted use of the said reserved tracts of land, so long as they may live on and occupy the same. * * *

Despite the guarantee of the United States to the Chickasaws of the "quiet possession and uninterrupted use" of the reserved tracts,[382] white settlers continued to overrun and occupy their country unlawfully.[383] Furthermore, the problem of finding land in the West proved a difficult one. Finally convinced of the need for amending the treaty in certain particulars, the Government consented to the conclusion of another treaty on May 24, 1834.[384] This altered the program of removal, granted in fee certain reservations, while asserting that the Chickasaws "still hope to find a country, adequate to the wants and support of their people, somewhere west of the Mississippi * * *." [385]

By Article 2, the Chickasaws on their removal west were to be protected by the United States from the hostile prairie tribes. They pledged themselves never to make war on another tribe, or on whites, "unless they are so authorized by the United States." Article 4 set up a commission of Chickasaws to pass on the competency of members of the tribe to handle and sell their land. Articles 5 and 6 listed the cases in which reservations could be granted in fee, and determined the amount of land in each case.[386] Article 9 provided that funds from the sale of Chickasaw lands be used for schools, mills, blacksmith shops, etc.[387]

3. Choctaws.—By 1820 it was evident that the Choctaws, disturbed by the number of settlers who were pouring into the rich valleys of the Mississippi, would consent to "removal." Ac-

---

[370] In Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas Railway Co., 135 U. S. 641 (1890), the Supreme Court commented on this clause:

> * * * By the Treaty of New Echota, 1835, the United States covenanted and agreed that the lands ceded to the Cherokee Nation should at no future time, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory, and that the government would secure to that nation "the right by their national councils to make and carry into effect all such laws as they may deem necessary for the government of the persons and property within their own country, belonging to their people, or such persons as have connected themselves with them;" * * *. But neither these nor any previous treaties evinced any intention, upon the part of the government, to discharge them from their condition of pupilage or dependency, and constitute them a separate, independent, sovereign people, with no superior within its limits. * * * (P. 654.)

[371] The Indians who remained behind under this provision dissolved their connection with the Cherokee Nation (Cherokee Trust Funds, 117 U. S. 288 (1886)), without becoming citizens either of the United States or North Carolina. United States v. Boyd, 83 Fed. 547 (C. C. A. 4, 1897).

In later years some of the ceded Cherokee lands were bought back by Cherokees who resisted removal. In 1925 this land was reconveyed to the United States in trust by Indians for disposition under the Act of June 4, 1924, 43 Stat. 376. See Historical Note, 25 U. S. C. A. 331.

[372] That the President has power to appoint new commissioners there being no limitation to this authority, except the fulfillment of its purposes, but that the expenses cannot be defrayed out of the Cherokees' fund is the advice of the Attorney General. 16 Op. A. G. 300 (1879); 4 Op. A. G. 73 (1842). See also 5 Op. A. G. 268 (1850); H. Rept. No. 391, 28th Cong., 1st sess. (1844).

[373] Treaty of September 20, 1816, 7 Stat. 150. For certain ceded lands north and south of the Tennessee River, the Indians received $12,000 per annum for 10 years (Arts. 2 and 3).

Article 7 prohibits the licensing of peddlers to trade within the Chickasaw Nation and describes the activities of the trader as a disadvantage to the nation.

[374] Treaty of October 19, 1818, 7 Stat. 192, construed in Porterfield v. Clark, 2 How. 76, 83 (1844). All Chickasaw land north of the south boundary of Tennessee was ceded for $300,000—$20,000 annually for 15 years (Arts. 2 and 3).

[375] Foreman, op. cit., p. 193. Each of the Chickasaw chiefs was to receive four sections of land if the treaty were ratified.

[376] Treaty of September 1, 1830 (unratified).

[377] Several official attempts were made by the Government to persuade the Chickasaws of the desirability of amalgamating with the Choctaws. Foreman, op. cit., pp. 193–196.

[378] Ibid., p. 197.

[379] 7 Stat. 381. Supplementary and explanatory articles (7 Stat. 388) adopted October 22, 1832. Art. 9 is of interest. The Chickasaws

> "* * * will always need a friend to advise and direct them. * * * There shall be an agent kept with the Chickasaws as heretofore, so long as they live within the jurisdiction of the United States as a nation * * *. And whenever the office of agent shall be vacant, * * * the President will pay due respect to the wishes of the nation * * *.

[380] Ibid., Art. 1.

[381] Ibid., Art. 2.

[382] Ibid. See Arts. 4 and 15.

[383] Foreman, op. cit. p. 199.

[384] Treaty of May 24, 1834, 7 Stat. 450. It is of interest that in previous treaties the word "cede" was used. In this the phrase "abandon their homes" is used (Art. 2).

[385] Art. 2. Such land was not found until 1837, when the Chickasaws purchased a large tract of land from the Choctaws. Foreman, op. cit. p. 203.

[386] For opinion that a widow keeping house and having children or other persons residing with her, except slaves, is the head of a family unless said children or other persons are provided for under the sixth and eighth articles; that as many Indian wives as were living with their children apart from their husbands (though wives of the same Indian) are "heads of a family" within the meaning of the fifth article of the treaty, see 3 Op. A. G. 34, 41 (1836). And see, on the scope of investments under Art. 11, 3 Op. A. G. 170 (1837).

Title to reservations was complete when the locations were made to identify them. Best v. Polk, 18 Wall. 112 (1873).

For details concerning the number of claimants for lands; the number approved; and the names of the assignees of those Indians who obtained lands pursuant to the provisions of the Chickasaw treaty made at Washington in 1834, see H. Rept. No. 190, 29th Cong. 1st sess., vol. VI (1846).

[387] Also see sec. 3C3 of this Chapter.

cordingly negotiations were begun and on October 18, 1820,[388] the Indians ceded to the United States the "coveted tract" in western Mississippi[389] for land west of the Mississippi between the Arkansas and Red rivers.[390]

Article 4 of the treaty contains the guarantee that the boundaries established should remain without alteration > * * * until the period at which said nation shall become so civilized and enlightened as to be made citizens of the United States, and Congress shall lay off a limited parcel of land for the benefit of each family or individual in the nation.

Article 12 gives the agent full power to confiscate all whiskey except that brought under permit into the nation. This appears to be the first attempt by treaty to regulate traffic in liquor.

Shortly after the treaty was signed it was discovered that a part of Choctaw's new country was already occupied by white settlers.[391] The President called to Washington delegates from the Choctaw Nation to reconsider the matter and negotiate another treaty. This was done on January 20, 1825,[392] and the Choctaws for $6,000 a year for 16 years (Art. 3), and a permanent annuity of $6,000 (Art. 2), ceded back all the land lying east of a line which today is the boundary between Arkansas and Oklahoma. By Article 4 of the 1825 treaty it is also agreed that all those who have reservations under the preceding treaty "shall have power, with the consent of the President of the United States, to sell and convey the same in fee simple." Article 7 calls for the modification of Article 4 of the preceding treaty so that the Congress of the United States shall not exercise the power of allotting lands to individuals without the consent of the Choctaw Nation.

A few years later, federal agents, anxious to speed up the migration program under the Removal Act of 1830[393] held another series of conferences in the Choctaw Nation.

At Dancing Rabbit Creek, at a conference characterized by generous present-giving,[394] a treaty was signed on September 27, 1830.[395] By this agreement the Choctaws ceded the remainder of their holdings east of the Mississippi to the United States Government in return for > * * * a tract of country west of the Mississippi River, in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it, * * *.[396]

This tract was the same as that in the Treaty of January 20, 1825.[397]

Provision is also made for reservations of land to individual Indians in Articles 14[398] and 19.[399] In Article 14, it is also stipulated that a grant in fee simple shall issue upon the fulfillment of certain conditions.[400]

Whether a true construction of Article 14 created a trust for the children of each reservee was one of the questions before the United States Supreme Court in Wilson v. Wall. Said the Court:

> The parties to this contract may justly be presumed to have had in view the previous custom and usages with regard to grants to persons "desirous to become citizens." The treaty suggests that they are "a people in a state of rapid advancement in education and refinement." But it does not follow that they were acquainted with the doctrine of trusts. * * *[401] (P. 87.)

The following provisions of Article 4 of the Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek deserve to be noted:

> The Government and people of the United States are hereby obliged to secure to the said Choctaw Nation of Red People the jurisdiction and government of all the persons and property that may be within their limits west, so that no Territory or State shall ever have a right to pass laws for the Government of the Choctaw Nation of Red People and their descendants; and that no part of the land granted them shall ever be embraced in any Territory or State; but the U. S. shall forever secure said Choctaw Nation from and against, all laws except such as from time to time may be enacted in their own National Councils, not inconsistent with the Constitution, Treaties, and Laws of the United States; * * *.[402]

---

[388] Treaty of Doak's Stand of October 18, 1820, 7 Stat. 210. Construed in Choctaw Nation v. United States, 119 U. S. 1 (1886); United States v. Choctaw Nation, 179 U. S. 494, 507 (1900); Mullen v. United States, 224 U. S. 448, 450 (1912). In Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 100 (1884), this treaty was cited in support of the statement that the alien and dependent condition of the members of the Indian tribes could not be put off at their own will without the action or assent of the United States. In Fleming v. McCurtain, 215 U. S. 56, 59 (1909), the Supreme Court declared that by this treaty the United States ceded certain lands to the Choctaw Nation with "no qualifying words."

[389] Abel, op cit. fn. 352, p. 286. The tract was coveted particularly by the state of Mississippi. See Art. 1.

[390] Art. 2.

[391] Abel, op. cit., pp. 286–287.

[392] Treaty of January 20, 1825, 7 Stat. 234, construed in 2 Op. A. G. 465 (1831), and 3 Op. A. G. 48 (1836).

[393] Act of May 28, 1830, 4 Stat. 411, R. S. § 2114, 25 U. S. C. 174.

[394] The expense account for the negotiations of Dancing Rabbit Creek submitted by the federal commissioners included items of $1,409.84 for calicos, quilts, razors, soap, etc. Sen. Doc. No. 512, 23rd Cong. 1st sess., pp. 251–255.

[395] 7 Stat. 333. This was the first treaty made and ratified under the Removal Act of May 28, 1830, 4 Stat. 411.

[396] Art. 2. In 1909 the United States Supreme Court examined this particular provision and ruled that this was a grant to the Choctaw Nation and was not to be held in trust for members of the tribe, which upon dissolution of the tribal relationship would confer upon each individual absolute ownership as tenants in common. Fleming v. McCurtain, 215 U. S. 56 (1909). See Chapter 15, sec 1A.

[397] 7 Stat. 234.

[398] Article 14 provided reservations of land for those electing to remain and become citizens of the states. Such persons retained their Choctaw citizenship, but lost their annuity if they removed. That in the event of the death of reservees under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, before the fulfillment of the condition precedent to the grant in fee simple of the reserve, the interest thereby acquired passes to those persons who under state laws succeed to the inheritable interest of the individual in question. See 3 Op. A. G. 107 (1836).

If an Indian was prevented by the force or fraud of individuals having no authority from the Government from complying with the conditions of Article 14 of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, it is considered by the Attorney General that the remedy was against such individuals, although if permanent dispossession was produced by the sale of the land by the Government (even though he might have temporarily lost possession by such tortious acts) his claim is still valid. 4 Op. A. G. 513 (1846). And see, on eligibility to receive reservations, 5 Op. A. G. 251 (1850).

[399] No forfeiture has resulted from the fraudulent acts of the agent of the Government who induced claimants to apply for reserves under the nineteenth article, and which were located for them, but for which patents have not been demanded, nor issued. See 4 Op. A. G. 452 (1845).

To the effect that the essential provisions of the Choctaw treaty of 1830 must take precedence over any rights claimed under the preemption laws, but that regulations to carry treaty into effect need not be inflexible and may be modified in any way not inconsistent with the treaty. See 3 Op. A. G. 365 (1838).

[400] Residence for 5 years after ratification of the treaty with the intention of becoming a citizen, is a condition.

[401] Wilson v. Wall, 6 Wall. 83, 87–90 (1867).

[402] In a negligence action brought in error to the United States Court in the Indian Territory, the defense advanced was a general denial and a plea of the statute of limitations which, it was claimed, was in force in the Indian Territory when that country was a part of the territory of Missouri, and remained in force notwithstanding the separation of the territory. This Circuit Judge Caldwell denied, calling attention to the treaty with the Choctaw Nation of September 27, 1830, 7 Stat. 333, by which the United States Government "bound itself in the most solemn manner to exclude white people from the territory, and never to permit the laws of any state or territory to be extended over it." St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. O'Loughlin, 49 Fed. 440, 442 (C. C. A. 8, 1892).

That this does not empower the Choctaws to punish by their own laws white men who come into their nation, see 2 Op. A. G. 693 (1834). And see Chapter 7, sec. 9.

The nature and extent of the jurisdiction of the Choctaw Nation were reviewed by Attorney General Caleb Cushing in 1855:

> Now, among the provisions of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek are several of a very significant character having exclusive reference to the question of criminal jurisdiction.
>
> In the first place, it provides that any Choctaw, committing acts of violence upon the person or property of "citizens of the United States," shall be delivered up for trial and punishment by the laws of the United States; by which also are to be punished all acts of violence committed upon persons or property of the Choctaw nation by "citizens of the United States." Provision less explicit, but apparently on the same principle, is made for the repression or punishment of theft. General engagement is made by the United States to prevent or punish the intrusion of their "citizens" into the territory of the nation. (Arts. 6, 7, 9, 12.)
>
> In the second place, the Choctaws express a wish in the treaty that Congress would grant to the Choctaws the right of punishing, by their own laws, "any white man" who shall come into the nation, and infringe any of their national regulations (art. 4.) But Congress did not accede to this request. On the contrary, it has made provision, by a series of laws, for the punishment of crimes affecting white men, committed by or on them in the Indian country, including that of the Choctaws, by the courts of the United States. (See act of June 30, 1834, iv Stat. at Large, p. 729, and act of June 17, 1844, v Stat. at Large, p. 680.) These acts cover, so far as they go, all crimes except those committed by Indian against Indian.
>
> But there is no provision of treaty, and no statute, which takes away from the Choctaws jurisdiction of a case like this, a question of property strictly internal to the Choctaw nation; nor is there any written law which confers jurisdiction of such a case on any court of United States. * * *[403] (Pp. 174, 178–179.)

Before the Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek was proclaimed,[404] whites began to move into Choctaw country illegally,[405] and Indians, "ill-organized and inadequately provisioned" began to move west[406] under the aegis of Greenwood Le Flore, a mixed blood and former Choctaw chief.[407] President Jackson then ordered that removal be supervised by the Army.[408] Removal began on a large scale in the fall of 1831.[409] It had not been entirely completed at the end of the century.[410]

4. Creeks.—The cession[411] of land by the Creeks after the uprising of the "hostiles" in 1812 "was the first step in the direction of systematic removal."[412]

The Compact of 1802[413] became the source of constant agitation in Georgia for change in the Creek boundary line. On January 22, 1818, a redefinition of the boundary of the Creek Nation was secured,[414] but the lands obtained by this agreement were less fertile[415] than had been anticipated and another treaty was negotiated January 8, 1821.[416] Part of the consideration tendered the Creeks on this occasion (Art. 4) was the payment to the State of Georgia of "* * * whatever ballance may be found due by the Creek nation to the citizens of said state * * *." The value of the ceded land was placed at $450,000, of which not more than $250,000 was to be paid to settle the claims of Georgia citizens against the Creek Nation,[417] the exact amount of which is left to the decision of the President of the United States.

After the award had been made, Georgia asked that it be enlarged to cover other claims. The Attorney General, after advising that the award of President Monroe must be considered final and conclusive, reviewed the contents of the treaties between the United States and the Creek Nation and asserted:

> One head of these claims submitted for my opinion is the claim for property destroyed, and which the people of Georgia carry back to 1783, the date of the treaty of Augusta. How stands this claim under these treaties? There is not one treaty which contains any stipulation to answer for property destroyed. * * * what is the effect, in a treaty of peace, of express provisions with regard to some past wrongs, and a total silence as to others? Is it not a virtual extinguishment of all claims for antecedent wrongs with regard to which the treaty is silent?
>
> * * * * *
>
> It is further asked, why the Creek nation did not stipulate for the payment over to themselves of the large surplus that must inevitably remain, upon the supposition that the claim for property destroyed was not to be allowed? * * * They were at the feet of the white people, with whom they were treating. They saw a formidable array of claims, * * * and of the circumstances attending which, the living race of Creeks must have been wholly ignorant—and now dug up from the dead, by the State of Georgia, and presented and pressed as living and valid claims. * * * the alleged debtors were Indians, a conquered and despised race, for whom it was natural for them to suppose that no sympathy was left either by the creditor or the judge. Is it not probable that, under these circumstances, they were ignorant enough to think it probable that no surplus would remain, and that they were willing enough to surrender to the United States the whole $250,000, on the condition of their relieving them from claims to which there seemed to be no end, but which threatened to be immortal? * * *[418]

In 1824 commissioners from the United States Government arrived in the Creek Nation to negotiate for still another session. At Broken Arrow, in Alabama, they met with the Creeks and told them that the President had extensive holdings beyond the Mississippi which he wished to give them in exchange for the land they then occupied.[419] > * * * ruin is the almost inevitable consequence of a removal beyond the Mississippi, we are convinced. It is true, very true, that "we are surrounded by white people," that there are encroachments made—what assurances have we that similar ones will not be made on us, should we deem it proper to accept your offer, and remove beyond [403] 7 Op. A. G. 174, 178–179 (1855). See Chapter 7, sec. 9.

The Creek chiefs replied:

---

[404] February 24, 1831.

[405] Foreman, op. cit. p. 31.

[406] Ibid., p. 38.

[407] Ibid.

[408] Ibid., p. 42.

[409] Ibid., pp. 48–49.

[410] Ibid., p. 104.

[411] Treaty of August 9, 1814, 7 Stat. 120.

[412] Abel. op. cit. fn. 352, p. 278. See sec. 4D, supra.

[413] By that compact, Georgia ceded territory now part of Alabama and Mississippi in consideration of which the United States agreed to extinguish Indian title within the limits of Georgia as soon as it could be done "peaceably and on reasonable terms." Abel, op cit., pp. 322, 323.

Ordinarily lands ceded to the United States become part of the public domain. By the Georgia pact, it became the property of the state. Hence, Georgia felt her failure to share sufficiently in previous land cessions was the result of national selfishness (Abel, op. cit., p. 322).

[414] Treaty of January 22, 1818, 7 Stat. 171.

[415] Indian Office Letter Books, Series I. D., p. 224, cited in Abel, op. cit., pp. 322, 323.

[416] Treaty of January 8, 1821, 7 Stat. 215. Subsequent to this treaty, the question of whether the United States was keeping her part of the Georgia compact arose. A House committee reporting on January 7, 1822 (American State Papers, "Indian Affairs," II, p. 259), held that it was not. According to Abel, (op. cit., p. 323), the constitutional significance of removal dates from that report.

[417] By the Treaty of August 7, 1790, 7 Stat. 35, the Creeks had undertaken responsibility to return prisoners, white or Negro, in any part of the nation (Art. 3). By that article, the Treaty of Indian Springs of January 8, 1821 (Art. 4), 7 Stat. 215, held them responsible for claims not exceeding $250,000 by the citizens of Georgia, for runaway slaves. Foreman, op. cit., p. 317.

[418] 2 Op. A. G. 110, 129, 150–151 (1828).

[419] Talk, December 7, 1824, Journal of Proceedings at Broken Arrow (Indian Office MS. Records) cited in Abel, op. cit. fn. 352, p. 337.

> the Mississippi; and how do we know that we would not be encroaching on the people of other nations?[420]

Finally after days of unavailing speech-making the conference was adjourned. However, one Commissioner, Duncan G. Campbell, aware that one faction in the Creek Nation headed by William McIntosh[421] favored migration, brought about the resumption of treaty negotiations at Indian Springs, its stronghold in Georgia.[422]

Significantly the Great Chief of the Creeks, Little Prince, and his second in command, Big Warrior, were absent, having dispatched a representative to the treaty council to protest against the lack of authority of those in attendance.[423] Undiscouraged, Campbell continued the negotiations and on February 12, 1825,[424] a treaty was concluded providing for the surrender of certain Creek holdings for $400,000 for lands of "like quantity, acre for acre, westward of the Mississippi."[425]

A year later a new treaty[426] was negotiated and referred to the Senate which refused its "advice and consent."[427] A few days later a supplementary article[428] providing for an additional cession of land was submitted and with this alteration, the treaty received Senate confirmation.[429]

Here, however, the matter did not end. Georgia now denied that treaties with the Indians had the same effect as those with civilized nations and asked that the whole question of claims under the Treaty of 1821 be reconsidered. This was refused by the Attorney General of the United States who declared:

> The matter of this objection requires to be coolly analyzed.
>
> First, they are an uncivilized nation. And what then? Are not the treaties which are made with them obligatory on both sides? It was made a question in the age of Grotius, whether treaties made by Christians with heathens were obligatory on the former. "This discussion," says Vattel (book ii, chap. xii, sec. 161), "might be necessary at a time when the madness of party still darkened those principles which it had long caused to be forgotten; but we may venture to believe it would be superfluous in our age. The law of nature alone regulates the treaties of nations. The difference of religion is a thing absolutely foreign to them. Different people treat with each other in quality of men, and not under the character of Christians or of Mussulmans. Their common safety requires that they should treat with each other, and treat with security. * * *
>
> What Vattel says of difference of religion is equally applicable to this objection * * *. And that civilization which should claim an exemption from the full obligations of a treaty, or seek to narrow it by construction, on the ground that the other party to the treaty was uncivilized, would be as little entitled to our respect as the religion which should claim the same consequences on the ground that the other treating party was a heathen.[430]

With the departure from the Presidency of John Quincy Adams the strict observance of treaty obligations with the Indian tribes ceased to be an accepted national policy. Henceforth the emphasis was to be on "removal," and a few days after his inauguration Andrew Jackson insisted that it was necessary for the Creeks to migrate as soon as possible.[431] In vain the Creeks protested.[432] Their delegation to Washington was granted an audience on the condition that they would be fully empowered to negotiate in conformity with the wishes of the Government.[433] Finally, a treaty was concluded March 24, 1832,[434] and all the Creek land east of the Mississippi passed into the possession of the Federal Government.

By article 14 of this agreement, the Unitd States solemnly promised tribal self-government to the Creeks. A number of years later this guarantee figured in a charge to the jury regarding robbery committed in the Indian country. The court in denying that the Indian country was under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States said:

> * * * A sole and exclusive jurisdiction would exclude all Indian laws and regulations, punish crimes committed by Indian on Indian, and regulate and govern property and contracts and the civil and political relations of the inhabitants, Indians and others, in that country. It would be wholly opposed to a self-government by any Indian tribe or nation. This self-government is expressly recognized and secured by several treaties between the United States and Indian tribes in the Indian country attached by the act of 1834 to Arkansas or Missouri District for certain purposes. This may be seen from the treaty with the Choctaws in 1830, and the treaty with the Creeks in 1832, and other Indian treaties. * * *[435] (P. 1004.)

For a number of years it was alleged that the United States had not fulfilled its obligations under this treaty. Suit was brought by the Creek Nation in the Court of Claims under the jurisdictional act of May 24, 1924,[436] The plaintiff sought to recover the 1837 value of the entire reserves except as to those sales for which it had been proved that the owners received the stipulated "fair consideration," alleging that the Government

---

[420] Talk, December 8, 1824, Journal of Proceedings, cited in Abel, op cit., p. 337.

[421] A mixed blood, cousin of Governor Troup of Georgia, and leader of the lower Creek towns (Abel, op. cit., p. 335).

[422] Campbell had suggested various ways of securing the Creek signature to a "removal" treaty. Finally he was informed that the President would not countenance a treaty unless it were made "in the usual form, and upon the ordinary principles with which Treaties, are held with Indian tribes * * *." Indian Office Letter Books, Series II, No. 1, pp. 309–310, cited in Abel, op. cit., p. 339.

[423] Abel, op. cit., p. 340.

[424] 7 Stat. 237.

[425] Art. 2. All Creek holdings within the State of Georgia were included in the cession.

[426] Treaty of Washington of January 24, 1826, 7 Stat. 286.

[427] Abel, op. cit., p. 352.

[428] Supplementary article of March 31, 1826, 7 Stat. 289.

[429] In the Committee of the Whole, Berrien of Georgia, asked that the first article be altered so that the Indian Spring Treaty could be abrogated without reflecting upon its negotiation. This was refused. Berrien and five others were the only members of the Senate who on the final vote refused to consent to ratification. Afterwards, Berrien admitted that he had voted against the treaty because he felt that it did not contain enough of an inducement to migration. American State Papers, Indian Affairs II, pp. 748–749, cited in Abel, op. cit., p. 352.

Before the whole matter was settled to the satisfaction of Georgia, which claimed that more than the described territory should have been relinquished, another treaty of cession was negotiated. Treaty of November 15, 1827, 7 Stat. 307.

[430] 2 Op. A. G. 110, 135–136 (1828). See also sec. 1, supra, fn. 5.

[431] Indian Office Letter Books, Series II, No. 5, pp. 373–375, cited in Abel, op. cit. fn. 352, p. 370.

[432] On February 6, 1832, the Head Men and Warriors of the Creek Indians addressed the Congress of the United States entreating them not to insist on the program of removal pointing out "We are assured that, beyond the Mississippi, we shall be exempted from further exaction; * * * Can we obtain * * * assurances more distinct and positive, than those we have already received and trusted? Can their power exempt us from intrusion in our promised borders, if they are incompetent to our protection where we are? * * * H. Doc. No. 102, 22d Cong., 1st sess. (1832), vol. 3, pp. 1, 3.

[433] Indian Office Letter Books, Series II, No. 7, p. 422, cited in Abel, op. cit., pp. 387–388.

[434] 7 Stat. 366. (This was amended in certain particulars by treaties of February 14, 1833, 7 Stat. 417, and November 23, 1838, 7 Stat. 574.) Article IV of the Treaty of February 14, 1833, 7 Stat. 417, expressly mentioned the Seminole Indians in Florida and provided for a permanent and comfortable home on the lands of the Creek Nation according to treaty negotiations with the Seminoles May 9, 1832, 7 Stat. 368.

[435] Anonymous, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 447 (C. C. Missouri 1843). And see Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Co. v. Mingus, 165 U. S. 413, 435,–436 (1897). See Chapter 23.

[436] C. 181, 43 Stat. 139.

failed to remove intruders from the country ceded as guaranteed by Article V of the treaty and that as a result it became impossible to fulfill Articles II and III involving the surveying and selection by the Indians, of reserved lands. While the Court of Claims found that the Creek Nation, with certain exceptions, had waived all claims and demands in a subsequent treaty, its holding on the execution of this treaty is illuminating:

> * * * While the record leaves no room for doubt that most dastardly frauds by impersonation were perpetrated upon the Indians in the sales of a large part of the reserves, the conclusion is justified, and we think inescapable, that because of repeated investigations prosecuted by the Government these frauds were largely eliminated. The investigations were conducted by able and fearless men and were most thorough. Every possible effort was exerted by them to have individual reservees who claimed they had been defrauded to present their claims. Chiefs of the nation were invited to bring to the attention of the investigators all claims of fraudulent practices upon the Indians, and were assured all claims would be considered and justice done. Hundreds of contracts upon investigation were found to have been fraudulently procured and their cancellation recommended by the investigating agents. While the identity of the particular cases investigated and found to have been fraudulent, and the final action of the Government on the agent's reports recommending the reversal of such cases are not disclosed, it is manifest their recommendations were in the main followed and new contracts of sales were made, certified to the President and approved by him. (Pp. 260–261.)[437]

5. Florida Indians.[438]—One of the problems arising from the treaty with Spain by which the Floridas[439] were acquired was that of the proper disposition[440] of the Indians who inhabited that region.[441] In some quarters it was insisted that the Indians had been living in the territory by sufferance only and even if this were not true their lands were now forfeit by conquest.[442] General Jackson in particular was outspoken in his opposition to treating with the Indians, asserting that if Congress were ever going to exercise its power over the natives it could not do better than to begin with these "conquered" natives.[443]

After 2 years of considering the various viewpoints, concentration in Florida was decided upon, and President Monroe appointed commissioners to treat with the Florida Indians. The result was the Treaty of Camp Moultrie of September 18, 1823.[444] Article 1 of this instrument recites that—

> The undersigned chiefs and warriors, for themselves and their tribes, have appealed to the humanity, and thrown themselves on, and have promised to continue under, the protection of the United States, and of no other nation, power, or sovereign; and, in consideration of the promises and stipulations hereinafter made, do cede and relinquish all claim or title which they may have to the whole territory of Florida * * *.

In return the United States (Art. 4) "assigned" land with a guarantee of peaceable possession, and gave them (Art. 3) in addition to implements, stock and an annuity, protection against all persons > * * * provided they conform to the laws of the United States, and refrain from making war, or giving any insult to any foreign nation, without having first obtained the permission and consent of the United States.

An additional article granted to six chiefs permission to remain and large tracts of lands.

Soon it was obvious that the territory assigned was unsatisfactory. Agriculture was impossible in the swamps of the interior. Although as provided by Article 9 the boundary line was to be extended to find "good tillable land," it still failed to afford the tribe adequate means of support.[445]

Friction developed between Indians who remained and white settlers, and between the removed Indians and whites searching for runaway slaves. The plight of those who had removed grew steadily worse.[446]

In 1832 at Payne's Landing, they were persuaded to migrate, although the treaty[447] was not to be considered binding until an initial party explored the west and found a suitable home. However, in 1833 the chiefs who undertook this preliminary search, without authority to do so, signed another treaty[448] which was construed to make removal under the early treaty obligatory instead of conditional. This treaty was never accepted by the tribe, and large scale removal of Seminoles never took place.[449]

6. Other tribes.—In the Northwest Territory a treaty of removal was concluded with the Delaware Indians on October 3, 1818.[450] Article 2 of this agreement binds the United States in exchange for land in Indiana "* * * to provide for the Delawares a country to reside in, upon the west side of the Mississippi, and to guaranty to them the peaceable possession of the same."

The next year treaties signed at Edwardsville, Illinois,[451] and at Fort Harrison[452] provided for exchange of Kickapoo lands from Indiana and Illinois to Missouri territory. By the terms of the Edwardsville treaty (Art. 6) the United States ceded to the Indians and their heirs forever a certain tract of land in Missouri territory, provided that "the said tribe shall never sell the said land without the consent of the President of the United States." Article 4 of the Fort Harrison treaty refers to the contemplation by the tribe of Kickapoos of the Vermilion, of "removing from the country they now occupy * * *."

In 1824, a treaty[453] with the Quapaw Nation was concluded, whereby the Quapaws ceded all their land in Arkansas territory and agreed to remove to the land of the Caddo Indians (Art. 4).

These agreements were for a number of years the major attempts made by the United States to persuade the Indians of [437] Creek Nation v. The United States, 77 C. Cls. 226, 252, 260 (1933). On alleged diversion of Creek Orphan fund under Article II; distinctions as to issuing of patents on individual reserves under II, III, IV, as to state citizenship and right to patent, Art. 4. See 16 Op. A. G. 31 (1878); 3 Op. A. G. 288 (1837), 585 (1840).

---

[438] See fn. 417, supra.

[439] Treaty of February 22, 1819; October 29, 1820, with Spain, ratified by United States, February 18, 1821, 8 Stat. 252.

[440] In 1821, a subagent, Penieres, was appointed for the Florida Indians by Jackson (then Governor) to explore the country, determine the number of Indians, and prepare them either for concentration in Florida or for removal elsewhere. Abel, op. cit., p. 328.

[441] They were known as Seminoles ("separatist") and consisted of descendants of Creek Tribes, Hitchiti, Yamasee, Yuchi, and a Negro element. Foreman, op. cit., p. 315.

[442] Abel, op. cit., p. 328. The first Seminole War, with General Andrew Jackson in command, had ended in 1818, disastrously for the Indians. Escape by runaway slaves into their territory continued, as did the subsequent white raids. Foreman, op. cit., p. 318.

[443] Abel, op. cit., p. 329.

[444] 7 Stat. 224. For the first time (Art. 7) recognition is taken of the fugitive slave problem and the Indians agree to prevent such individuals from taking refuge, and to apprehend and return them for a compensation. See also Treaty of June 18, 1833, 7 Stat. 427, in which the Appalachicola Band of Indians relinquished all privileges to which they were entitled by this treaty (Art. 1).

[445] Abel, op. cit., pp. 330–334; Foreman, op. cit., pp. 318–319.

[446] Foreman, op. cit. pp. 318–320.

[447] Treaty of May 9, 1832, Preamble and Art. 1, 7 Stat. 368.

[448] Treaty of March 28, 1833, 7 Stat. 423. This treaty was the cause of the second Seminole War. Foreman, op. cit., p. 321. Some of the Indians fled to the swamps where desultory fighting went on for years.

[449] Foreman, op. cit., p. 323.

[450] Treaty of October 3, 1818, 7 Stat. 188. And see supplement to this treaty, September 24, 1829, 7 Stat. 327.

[451] Treaty of July 30, 1819, 7 Stat. 200.

[452] Treaty of August 30, 1819, 7 stat. 202.

[453] Treaty of November 15, 1824, 7 Stat. 232.

that region to exchange their holdings for land lying elsewhere.[454] Then, in the autumn of 1832 four treaties were negotiated at Castor Hill, Missouri, which assured the departure from Missouri of the remnants of the Kickapoos,[455] the Shawanoes and Delawares,[456] the Kaskaskias and Peorias,[457] and the Piankeshaws and Weas.[458] In the meantime other federal commissioners were negotiating with the bands of Pottawatomies, who inhabited Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan. Although a number of treaties[459] providing for cession of their land were concluded with them, it was not until late in 1834 that their signature was secured to the first of a series of "removal" treaties.[460] The treaty of February 11, 1837,[461] provided for final removal within 2 years.

For a number of years the white settlers in the Northwest and the Sacs and Foxes had clashed. In 1804[462] the United Tribes of Sac and Fox Indians had made a treaty of limits with the United States. The white settlers interpreted that to mean relinquishment of all claims east of the Mississippi. This cession the Sacs and Foxes never recognized.[463] Dissatisfaction was further increased by the treaties of August 4, 1824[464] August 19, 1825,[465] and July 15, 1830.[466] After the making of the last treaty, the Indians left on their winter hunt and upon returning discovered that their lands north of Rock River, which had been in dispute for some time, had been surveyed and sold during their absence. Hostilities ensued. At the battle of Bad Axe, August 2, 1832, the Winnebagoes and the Sacs and Foxes were defeated.[467] In the treaties of Fort Armstrong which resulted, the United States secured from the Winnebagoes all their claims east of the Mississippi,[468] and from the Sacs and Foxes nearly all of eastern Iowa with the exception of a small reserve on which they were concentrated.[469]

In the following year the Federal Government obtained the consent of the "United Nation of Chippewa, Ottowa and Potawatamie Indians" to a treaty at Chicago, Illinois. In this treaty[470] the United States, in exchange for the land the Indians held—about 5,000,000 acres including the western shore of Lake Michigan—granted to them (Art. 2) approximately the same amount of territory "to be held as other Indian lands are held."

At about the same time, the Quapaws were concentrated in the northeast corner of the Indian territory.[471] This was done because of the failure of the original plan[472] to confine them to lands occupied by the Caddo Indians.[473]

It is not to be assumed that during this period treaty-makers were occupied with "removal" to the exclusion of all else. In fact, until 1828, the number of treaties negotiated solely for the purpose of extinguishing aboriginal title to land predominated.[474] Even during the years 1828–40 when the migration program was at its height, treaties were concluded with the Otoes and Missourias.[475] Pawnees,[476] Menominees,[477] the Miamis,[478] (3 treaties) the Wyandots,[479] the United Nations of Chippewas, Ottawa, and Potawatamie Indians,[480] Ioways,[481] Yankton Sioux,[482] Sioux,[483] and

---

[454] Treaties of cession were common during this period, but outright removal to exchanged lands was not.

[455] Treaty of October 24, 1832, 7 Stat. 391.

[456] Treaty of October 26, 1832, 7 Stat. 397.

[457] Treaty of October 27, 1832, 7 Stat. 403.

[458] Treaty of October 29, 1832, 7 Stat. 410.

[459] Treaty of October 2, 1818, with the Potawatamie, 7 Stat. 185; Treaty of August 29, 1821, with the Ottawa, Chippewa, etc., 7 Stat. 218; Treaty of August 19, 1825, with the Sioux and Chippewa, etc., 7 Stat. 272; Treaty of October 16, 1826, with the Potawatamie, 7 Stat. 295; Treaty of September 19, 1827, with the Potawatamie, 7 Stat. 305; Treaty of August 25, 1828, with the United Tribes of Potawatamie, Chippewa, etc., 7 Stat. 315; Treaty of September 20, 1828, with the Potowatami, 7 Stat. 317; Treaty of July 29, 1829, with the United Nations of Chippewas, Ottawa, etc., 7 Stat. 320; Treaty of October 20, 1832, with the Potawatamie, 7 Stat. 378; Treaty of October 26, 1832, with the Pottawatimie, 7 Stat. 394; Treaty of October 27, 1832, with the Potowatomies, 7 Stat. 399; Treaty of December 4, 1834, with the Potawattimie, 7 Stat. 467; Treaty of December 16, 1834, with the Potawattamie, 7 Stat. 468.

[460] Treaty of December 17, 1834, 7 Stat. 469; Treaty of March 26, 1836, 7 Stat. 490; Treaty of March 29, 1836, 7 Stat. 498; Treaty of April 11, 1836, 7 Stat. 499; Treaty of April 22, 1836, 7 Stat. 500; Treaty of April 22, 1836, 7 Stat. 501; Treaty of August 5, 1836, 7 Stat. 505; Treaty of September 20, 1836, 7 Stat. 513; Treaty of September 22, 1836, 7 Stat. 514; Treaty of September 23, 1836, 7 Stat. 515; Treaty of February 11, 1837, 7 Stat. 532.

[461] 7 Stat. 532.

[462] Treaty of November 3, 1804, 7 Stat. 84.

[463] Abel, op. cit., pp. 388–389.

[464] 7 Stat. 229. Interpreted in Marsh v. Brooks, 8 How. 223, 231, 232 (1850).

[465] 7 Stat. 272. Construed in Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S. 517 (1877). To this treaty the Sioux and the Chippewas, Menominie, Ioway, Winnebagoe, and a portion of the Ottawa, Chippewa, and Potawattomie tribes were also parties.

On October 21, 1837, by a treaty with the Sacs and Foxes of Missouri, 7 Stat. 543, the right or interest to the country described in the second article and recognized in the third article of this treaty, was ceded to the United States together with all claims or interests under the treaties of November 3, 1804, 7 Stat. 84; August 4, 1824, 7 Stat. 229; July 15, 1830, 7 Stat. 328; and September 17, 1836, 7 Stat. 511.

[466] 7 Stat. 328.

[467] Abel, op. cit., p. 391.

[468] Treaty of September 15, 1832, 7 Stat. 370.

[469] Treaty of September 21, 1832, 7 Stat. 374.

[470] Treaty of September 26, 1833, 7 Stat. 431.

[471] Treaty of May 13, 1833, 7 Stat. 424.

[472] Treaty of November 15, 1824, 7 Stat. 232.

[473] The lands given them by the Caddoes proved very poor, hence they returned to their old home in Arkansas. (Preamble, Treaty of May 13, 1833, 7 Stat. 424.)

It should be noted that by Treaty of July 1, 1835, the Caddo Indians (7 Stat. 470) agreed to removal in these terms: "* * * promise to remove at their own expense out of the boundaries of the United States * * * and never more return to live settle or establish themselves as a nation tribe or community of people within the same."

[474] There are 21 of these which have not been noted before: Treaty of September 29, 1817, with Wyandot, Seneca, etc., 7 Stat. 160; Treaty of September 17, 1818, with Wyandot, Seneca, etc., 7 Stat. 178; Treaty of September 20, 1818, with Wyandots, 7 Stat. 180; Treaty of October 2, 1818, with Wea Tribe, 7 Stat. 186 ("The United States, by treaty with the Delaware Indians in 1818, agreed to provide a country for them to reside in." United States v. Stone, 2 Wall. 525 (1864)); Treaty of October 6, 1818, with Miame Nation, 7 Stat. 189; Treaty of September 24, 1819, with Chippewa Nation, 7 Stat. 203; Treaty of June 16, 1820, with Chippeway Tribe, 7 Stat. 206 (7 Stat. 203 and 7 Stat. 206, construed in Chippewa Indians of Minnesota v. United States, 301 U. S. 358, 360 (1937)); Spalding v. Chandler, 160 U. S. 394, 403 (1896); Treaty of July 6, 1820, with Ottawa and Chippewa Nations, 7 Stat. 207; Treaty of August 11, 1820, with Wea Tribe, 7 Stat. 209; Treaty of August 5, 1826, with Chippewa Tribe, 7 Stat. 290; Treaty of October 23, 1826, with Miami Tribe, 7 Stat. 300; Treaty of August 11, 1827, with Chippewa, Menomonie, and Winebago Tribes, 7 Stat. 303; Treaty of August 24, 1818, with Quapaw Nation, 7 Stat. 176; Treaty of September 25, 1818, with Great and Little Osage Nation, 7 Stat. 183; Treaty of June 2, 1825, with Great and Little Osage Nation, 7 Stat. 240, construed in Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. 211, 245 (1872); Treaty of August 10, 1825, with Great and Little Osage Nations, 7 Stat. 268; Treaty of June 3, 1825, with Kansas Nation, 7 Stat. 244 (construed in Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1 (1899); Smith v. Stevens, 10 Wall. 321, 325 (1870); State of Missouri v. State of Iowa, 7 How. 660 (1849)); Treaty of November 7, 1825, with Shawonee Nation, 7 Stat. 284; Treaty of September 25, 1818, with Peoria, Kaskaskia, etc., 7 Stat. 181; Treaty of February 11, 1828, with Eel River or Thorntown party of Miami Indians, 7 Stat. 309.

[475] Treaty of September 21, 1833, 7 Stat. 429.

[476] Treaty of October 9, 1833, 7 Stat. 448.

[477] Treaty of October 27, 1832, 7 Stat. 405. This modified the treaty concluded February 8, 1831, 7 Stat. 342, and provided for a grant of land to the Stockbridge, Munsee and Brothertown Indians, and New York Indians. Later the Stockbridge Indians migrated west under the terms of the Treaty of September 3, 1839, 7 Stat. 580.

[478] Treaty of October 23, 1834, 7 Stat. 458; Treaty of November 6, 1838, 7 Stat. 569; Treaty of November 28, 1840, 7 Stat. 582.

[479] Treaty of April 23, 1836, 7 Stat. 502.

[480] Treaty of July 29, 1829, 7 Stat. 320.

[481] Treaty of October 19, 1838, 7 Stat. 568.

[482] Treaty of October 21, 1837, 7 Stat. 542.

[483] Treaty of September 29, 1837, 7 Stat. 538.

Great and Little Osage Indians,[484] providing for a considerable restriction of their ancient domains. A series of treaties were also negotiated about 1825 by Brig. Gen. Henry Atkinson of the United States Army and Benjamin O'Fallon, Indian agent, which dealt only with problems of trade and friendship.[485]

F. TRIBES OF THE FAR WEST: 1846–54

In the late summer of 1846, war having been declared with Mexico,[486] General Philip Kearney in command, the Army of the West advanced into New Mexico.

Without doing battle New Mexico's governor fled, leaving Kearney in control of the province.[487] Following the cession of the province to the United States by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, of February 2, 1848,[487a] a treaty of peace with the Navaho Indians who inhabited that region was concluded in 1849.[488]

Two months later, December 30, 1849, another far western tribe, the Utahs, signed a treaty,[489] and the period of negotiating with the Indians who roamed through the area acquired from Mexico and the Oregon Territory may be said to have opened.[490]

To Fort Laramie in the early autumn of 1851 came a great number of Sioux, Cheyenne, Arapaho, Crow, Assiniboine, Gros Ventre, Mandan, and Aricara. After several days of conference, Indian agent Thomas Fitzpatrick secured their signatures to a treaty in which the natives promised peace, acknowledged certain boundaries and agreed to recognize the right of the United States to erect posts and maintain roads within their territory.[491]

This treaty was never formally proclaimed by the President and because of this its validity was challenged in Roy v. United States and Ogallala Tribe of Sioux Indians.[492] The Court of Claims examined the circumstances, found that the treaty had been acted upon by Congress, and referred to in subsequent agreements, and held that proclamation was not necessary to give it effect and that both parties were bound by the covenant from the date of its signature.

In the meantime the discovery of gold in California had caused the migration westward to assume the proportions of a stampede. Soon this newly admitted state was faced with the familiar problem of keeping available for preemption purposes an ample supply of public land. An equally familiar solution was quickly decided upon. Congress appropriated $25,000 and dispatched commissioners to treat with the California Indians regarding the territory they occupied.[493]

Some 18 treaties with 18 California tribes were negotiated by these federal agents in 1851. All of them provided for a surrender of native holdings in return for small reservations of land elsewhere. Other stipulations made the Indians subject to state law.[494]

When the terms of these various agreements became known the California State Legislature formally protested the granting of any lands to the Indians. The reasons for this opposition were reviewed by the President and the Secretary of the Interior, and finally a number of months after the agreements had been negotiated they were submitted to the Senate of the United States for ratification. This was refused on July 8, 1852.[495]

The Indians, however, had already begun performance of their part of the agreement. Urged by government officials to anticipate the approval of the treaties they had started on the journey to the proposed reservations. Now they found themselves in the unfortunate position of having surrendered their homes for lands which were already occupied by settlers and regarding which the Federal Government showed no willingness to take action. This situation was never remedied unless the creation in the 1920's of several small reservations for the use of these Indians can be said to have done so.[496]

In 1852 the Apaches, occupying portions of the territory relinquished by Mexico, were invited to a Treaty Council at Santa Fe, New Mexico. They came and duly promised perpetual peace (Art. 2) with the United States.[497] They also engaged (Art. 5) to refrain from warlike incursions into Mexico.

The following year the Comanches, Kiowas, and Apaches met at Fort Atkinson. An agreement very similar in substance to the Santa Fe Treaty was concluded July 27, 1853.[498]

Although the number of families traveling the Oregon trail had increased steadily during the 40's, no agreements were made with the Indians of the territory until 1853. Then, in September of that year, the Rogue River Indians signed a treaty with the United States providing for a substantial cession of land (Art. 1) from which a certain portion was to be reserved for a temporary home until such time as a permanent residence should be designated by the President of the United States (Art. 2).[499] A similar arrangement was made with another Oregon tribe, the Cow Creek Band, on September 19, 1853.[500]

While these first treaties were being signed with the Indian tribes of the Far West, agreements with other tribes were being negotiated. Eight treaties[501] providing for territorial cessions

---

[484] Treaty of January 11, 1839, 7 Stat. 576.

[485] Treaty of June 9, 1825, with Poncar Tribe, 7 Stat. 247; Treaty of June 22, 1825, with Teton, Yancton, and Yanctonies Bands of Sioux Tribe, 7 Stat. 250; Treaty of July 5, 1825, with Sioune and Ogallala Tribe, 7 Stat. 252; Treaty of July 6, 1825, with Chayenne Tribe, 7 Stat. 255; Treaty of July 16, 1825, with Hunkpapa Band of Sioux, 7 Stat. 257; Treaty of July 18, 1825, with Ricara Tribe, 7 Stat. 259; Treaty of July 30, 1825, with Belantse-etoa or Minnetsaree Tribe, 7 Stat. 261; Treaty of July 30, 1825, with Mandan Tribe, 7 Stat. 264; Treaty of September 26, 1825, with Ottoe and Missouri Tribe, 7 Stat. 277; Treaty of September 30, 1825, with Pawnee Tribe, 7 Stat. 279; Treaty of October 6, 1825, with Maha Tribe. 7 Stat. 282.

[486] Act of May 13, 1846, 9 Stat. 9, and Presidential Proclamation, Appendix No. 2, 9 Stat. 999.

[487] The province was taken in the name of the United States on August 22, 1846, and Kearney was made governor. Wise, The Red Man in the New World Drama (1931), p. 408.

[487a] 9 Stat. 922. See Chapter 20, sec. 3.

[488] Treaty of September 9, 1849, 9 Stat. 974. Article 2 states "That from and after the signing of this treaty, hostilities between the contracting parties shall cease, and perpetual peace and friendship shall exist * * *."

[489] Treaty of December 30, 1849, 9 Stat. 984.

[490] An agreement with the Comanche, Ioni, Anadaca, Caddo, etc., on May 15, 1846, 9 Stat. 844, negotiated in Texas shortly after the Republic had become a member of the Union actually antedates these. The first articles of all three agreements acknowledge the jurisdiction of the United States.

[491] Treaty of September 17, 1851, 11 Stat. 749. Three of these tribes—the Assiniboines, the Arapahoes, and the Gros Ventres—were treating with the United States for the first time. See Rept. Comm. Ind. Aff. (1852), pp. 299–300.

[492] 45 C. Cls. 177 (1910).

[493] Act of September 30, 1850, 9 Stat. 544, 558.

[494] Wise, op. cit., p. 419.

[495] Ibid., pp. 421–425.

[496] Ibid., p. 426. Cf. Act of May 18, 1928, 45 Stat. 602, conferring jurisdiction over California Indian claims upon Court of Claims.

[497] Treaty of July 1, 1852, 10 Stat. 979.

[498] Treaty of July 27, 1853, 10 Stat. 1013.

[499] Treaty of September 10, 1853, 10 Stat. 1018. Construed in Ross, Ex'r v. United States and Rogue River Indians, 29 C. Cls. 176 (1894). By the treaty of November 15, 1854, 10 Stat. 1119, the Rogue River Indians agreed to permit other tribes and bands, under certain conditions, to reside on their reservation (Art. 1).

[500] Treaty of September 19, 1853, 10 Stat. 1027.

[501] Treaty of January 14, 1846, with Kansas Tribe, 9 Stat. 842; Treaty of August 2, 1847, with Chippewa of the Mississippi and Lake Superior, 9 Stat. 904; Treaty of August 21, 1847, with Pillager Band of Chippewa Indians, 9 Stat. 908; Treaty of August 6, 1848, with Pawnees, 9 Stat. 949; Treaty of April 1, 1850, with Wyandot Nation of Indians, 9 Stat. 987; Treaty of July 23, 1851, with Sioux-Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands, 10 Stat. 949.

and 10 treaties [502] stipulating for removal of the Indians to unoccupied land were signed during these years.

G. EXPERIMENTS IN ALLOTMENT:[503] 1854–61

On March 24, 1853, George W. Manypenny, of Ohio, became Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The new official was designated by the President to enter into negotiations with the tribes west of the states of Missouri and Iowa for white settlement on their land, and extinguishment of their title.[504]

His first success in this connection was with the Ottoes and Missourias on March 15, 1854.[505] Article 6 of the instrument signed on that occasion provides:

> The President may, from time to time, at his discretion, cause the whole of the land herein reserved * * * to be surveyed off into lots, and assign to such Indian or Indians of said confederate tribes, as are willing to avail [themselves] of the privilege, and who will locate on the same as a permanent home, if a single person over twenty-one years of age, one eighth of a section; to each family of two, one quarter section; to each family of three and not exceeding five, one half section; to each family of six and not exceeding ten, one section; and to each family exceeding ten in number, one quarter section for every additional five members. And he may prescribe such rules and regulations as will secure to the family, in case of the death of the head thereof, the possession and enjoyment of such permanent home and the improvements thereon. And the President may, at any time in his discretion, after such person or family has made a location on the land assigned for a permanent home, issue a patent to such person or family for such assigned land, conditioned that the tract shall not be aliened or leased for a longer term than two years; and shall be exempt from levy, sale, or forfeiture, which conditions shall continue in force until a State constitution embracing such land within its boundaries shall have been formed, and the legislature of the State shall remove the restrictions. And if any such person or family shall at any time neglect or refuse to occupy and till a portion of the land assigned, and on which they have located, or shall rove from place to place, the President may, if the patent shall have been issued, revoke the same, or if not issued, cancel the assignment, and may also withhold from such person or family, their proportion of the annuities or other moneys due them, until they shall have returned to such permanent home, and resumed the pursuits of industry; and in default of their return, the tract may be declared abandoned, and thereafter assigned to some other person or family of such confederate tribes, or disposed of as is provided for the disposal of the excess of said land. And the residue of the land hereby reserved, after all the Indian persons or families of such confederate tribes shall have had assigned to them permanent homes, may be sold for their benefit, under such laws, rules, or regulations as may hereafter be prescribed by the Congress or President of the United States. No State legislature shall remove the restriction herein provided for without the consent of Congress.

This treaty, like many other treaties negotiated during the administration of Commissioner Manypenny, included a clause (Art. 3) by which the Indians relinquished all claims to moneys due under earlier treaties. The policy of paying Indians for lands by means of permanent annuities, which had involved the conservation of the Indian estate, was thrown into discard, and there was substituted a policy of quick distribution of tribal funds, parallel to the quick distribution of tribal lands which allotment entailed. Underlying this policy of quick distribution was the assumption that tribal existence was to be brought to an end within a short time.

On March 16, 1854, an agreement similar in its recitals regarding allotments was concluded with the Omahas.[506]

A third treaty providing for the individualization of land holdings was signed by the Shawnee Indians on May 10, 1854.[507] The terminology used in this instrument varies somewhat from that of the preceding treaties. Instead of the provision that—

> "The President may, from time to time * * * cause * * * to be surveyed off into lots, and to assign", article 2 holds that > all Shawnees * * * shall be entitled to * * * two hundred acres, and if the head of a family, a quantity equal to two hundred acres for each member of his or her family * * *.

Detailed provisions are also included for the assignment of individual holdings to intermarried persons, minors, orphans, adopted persons and incompetents, the latter to have the selection made by some disinterested person or persons appointed by the Shawnee Council and approved by the United States Commissioner. Further, article 8 provides that "competent" Shawnees shall receive their share of the annuity in money, but that that of the "incompetent" Indians "shall be disposed of by the President" in the manner best calculated to promote their interests, the Shawnee Council being first consulted with respect to such persons.

Six treaties [508] stipulating allotment of land in severalty were

---

[502] Treaty of November 28, 1840, with Miami, 7 Stat. 582; Treaty of March 17, 1842, with Wyandot, 11 Stat. 581; Treaty of October 4, 1842, with Chippewa Indians of the Mississippi and Lake Superior, 7 Stat. 591; Treaty of October 11, 1842, with Sac and Foxes, 7 Stat. 596; Treaty of June 5 and 17, 1846, with Pottowautomie, 9 Stat. 853; Treaty of October 18, 1848, with Menomonee, 9 Stat. 952; Treaty of November 24, 1848, with Stockbridge, 9 Stat. 955; Treaty of March 15, 1854, with Ottoes and Missourias, 10 Stat. 1038.

[503] Prior to 1854, several treaties were signed which provided for the allotment of lands. See Chapter 11, sec. 1A; Chapter 8, sec. 2A1. Several early treaties used the words "allot" and "allotted" but they referred to the assignment of lands to groups of Indians. Kinney, A Continent Lost—A Civilization Won (1937), pp. 82–83.

[504] Rept. of the Comm. of Ind. Aff. (1853), p. 249.

[505] Treaty of March 15, 1854, 10 Stat. 1038.

[506] Treaty of March 16, 1854, 10 Stat. 1043. Construed in United States v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278 (1909); United States v. Sutton, 215 U. S. 291 (1909); United States v. Payne, 264 U. S. 446 (1924). By the terms of this agreement the United States under certain conditions agreed to pay the Indians $881,000 for land ceded (Arts. 4 and 5). Later it was contended by the Omaha Tribe in a case argued before the Court of Claims in 1918 that although the cession had been made, the Government had failed to pay anything. This the Government admitted but contended that the Omaha Indians did not own and did not have the right to make a cession thereof. In finding for the plaintiff the court said: "At the time the treaty was made the United States recognized the Omahas as having title to this land north of the due-west line, and specifically promised to pay for it. * * * the defendants can not now be heard to say that the Indians did not own the land when the treaty was made and had no right to make a cession of it." Omaha Tribe v. United States, 53 C. Cls. 549, 560 (1918), mod. 253 U. S. 275, 55 C. Cls. 521.

[507] Treaty of May 10, 1854, 10 Stat. 1053. Construed in Walker v. Henshaw, 16 Wall. 436 (1872); United States v. Blackfeather, 155 U. S. 180, 186–187 (1894); Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1 (1899); Blackfeather v. United States, 190 U. S. 368 (1903); and Dunbar v. Greene, 198 U. S. 166 (1905). Commenting on this treaty, the Supreme Court declared:

> The treaty of 1854 left the Shawnee people a united tribe, with a declaration of their dependence on the National government for protection and the vindication of their rights. Ever since this their tribal organization has remained as it was before. * * * While the general government has a superintending care over their interests, and continues to treat with them as a nation, the State of Kansas is estopped from denying their title to it. She accepted this status when she accepted the act admitting her into the Union. Conferring rights and privileges on these Indians cannot affect their situation, which can only be changed by treaty stipulation, or a voluntary abandonment of their tribal organization. As long as the United States recognizes their national character they are under the protection of treaties and the laws of Congress, and their property is withdrawn from the operation of State laws.

The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, 756–757 (1866).

[508] Delawares, Treaty of May 6, 1854, 10 Stat. 1048; Ioways, Treaty of May 17, 1854, 10 Stat. 1069; Sacs and Fox of the Missouri, Treaty of May 18, 1854, 10 Stat. 1074; Kickapoos, Treaty of May 18, 1854, 10 Stat. 1078; Kaskaskias, Peorias, etc., Treaty of May 30, 1854, 10 Stat. 1082; Miamis, Treaty of June 5, 1854, 10 Stat. 1093.

concluded by Commissioner Manypenny in the next 2 months. In one of these, provision is made for the setting up of a permanent fund with the proceeds from the sale of the lands ceded by the Indians. The United States is charged with the duty of administering this fund. The extent of this obligation was determined by the Court of Claims which held in the Delaware Tribe v. The United States that the intended trust related to the preservation of the principal received from the sale of the lands and could not be considered, as the Delaware Tribe claimed, an obligation to maintain unimpaired the face value of the securities in which the principal had been first invested.[509]

In the autumn of 1854 the Chippewa of Lake Superior became a party to a treaty providing for the allotment of land to individual Indians by the President at his discretion, and with the power to make > * * * rules and regulations, respecting the disposition of the lands in case of the death of the head of a family, or single person occupying the same, or in case of its abandonment by them.[510]

Article 2 also provides for the patenting of 80 acres to each mixed blood over 21 years of age.

The Wyandot treaty concluded January 31, 1855[511] is particularly interesting. The first article stipulates that tribal bands are dissolved, declares the Indians to be citizens of the United States and subject to the laws thereof and of the territory of Kansas, although those who wish to be exempted from the immediate operation of such provisions shall have continued to them the assistance and protection of the United States. Article 2 provides for the cession of their holdings to the United States stipulating the "object of which cession is, that the said lands shall be subdivided, assigned, and reconveyed, by patent, in fee simple, in the manner hereinafter provided for, to the individuals and members of the Wyandott nation, in severalty." Articles 4 and 5 provide for the most detailed method of allotment yet encountered, in which three commissioners, one from the United States and two from the Wyandott nation, were to make a distribution of lands to certain specified classes of individuals. Patents are then to issue containing an absolute and unconditional grant of fee simple to those individuals listed as "competent" by the commissioners, but for those not so listed the patents will contain certain restrictions and may be withheld by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. None of the land thus assigned and patented is subject to taxation for a period of 5 years.

In February of 1855 the Chippewa of Minnesota and the Winnebago signed treaties[512] ceding their territorial holdings but out of which there is "reserved" and "set apart" for the Chippewas and "granted" for the Winnebagos land for a permanent home. Further, the President is authorized whenever he deems it advisable to allot their lands in severalty.

The tribes of the Far West were not overlooked in this burst of treaty-making activity. In the closing months of 1854 and the opening days of the following year six treaties[513] were negotiated with the Indians of Oregon, the various tribes of the Puget Sound region, etc. All of these provided for the allotment of land in severalty and for reservations of territory described by such phrases as "such portions * * * as may be assigned to them," "shall be held * * * as an Indian reservation," and "district which shall be designated for permanent occupancy."

Seven more treaties providing for the assignment of land to individual Indians were negotiated during Commissioner Manypenny's administration, which ended in 1857. All of these feature extensive land cessions with certain areas either "set apart as a residence * * *" or "held and regarded as an Indian reservation" or "reserved * * * for the use and occupation."[514]

James W. Denver, Charles E. Mix, and Alfred B. Greenwood, who successively held the position of Commissioner of Indian Affairs until the outbreak of the Civil War, were likewise committed to a treaty policy providing for allotment in severalty. Under their auspices seven such agreements[515] were negotiated. These instruments in form and substance differ little from those of the Manypenny administration.

H. THE CIVIL WAR: 1861–65

The four years of conflict between the states had its effect on the various Indian tribes. Violence and bloodshed had become commonplace and several Indian tribes seized the occasion to accompany demands upon the Federal Government with a display of force.[516] This was particularly the case in Minnesota,

---

[509] 72 C. Cls. 483 (1931).

For opinion that a patent under Art. 13 should issue to Christian Indians but it may be restricted by act of Congress after issue unless the effect would be to invalidate title of bona fide purchaser; that title of Christian Indians will not be vested in the Indians comprising the tribe called by that name as tenants in common, but in the tribe itself or the nation; see 9 Op. A. G. 24 (1857). And see Chapter 15, sec. 1A.

[510] Treaty of September 30, 1854, Art. 3, 10 Stat. 1109. Construed in Fee v. Brown, 162 U. S. 602 (1896); Wisconsin v. Hitchcock, 201 U. S. 202 (1906); Chippewa Indians of Minnesota v. United States, 301 U. S. 358 (1937); and Minnesota v. United States, 305 U. S. 382 (1939).

The President is empowered by Art. 3 to issue patents with "such restrictions of the power of alienation as he may see fit to impose." A stipulation that the patentee and his heirs shall not sell, lease, or in any manner alienate said tract without the consent of the President of the United States is within the meaning of this Article. United States v. Raiche, 31 F. (2d) 624 (D. C. W. D. Wis., 1928). Moreover such restrictions extend to the timber on the land as well as the land itself. Starr v. Campbell, 208 U. S. 527 (1908).

The court in holding that state fish and game laws have no application to the Bad River Reservation because federal laws are exclusive also called attention to Art. 11 of the above treaty which gave the right to hunt and fish on lands ceded until otherwise ordered by the President. In re Blackbird, 109 Fed. 139 (D. C. W. D. Wis., 1901).

[511] Treaty of January 31, 1855, 10 Stat. 1159. Construed in Goudy v. Meath, 203 U. S. 146, 149 (1906) (power of voluntary sale granted; land withheld from taxation or forced alienation); Walker v. Henshaw, 16 Wall. 436, 441 (1872); Schrimpscher v. Stockton, 183 U. S. 290 (1902); Conley v. Ballinger, 216 U. S. 84 (1910).

[512] Treaty of February 22, 1855, 10 Stat. 1165. Construed in United States v. Mille Lac Band of Chippewa Indians, 229 U. S. 498, 500, 501 (1913); United States v. First National Bank, 234 U. S. 245, 261 (1914) (dealing with rights of mixed blood Chippewas); Johnson v. Gearlds, 234 U. S. 422, 437 (1914) (discussing liquor provisions); United States v. Minnesota, 270 U. S. 181 (1926); and Chippewa Indians of Minnesota v. United States, 301 U. S. 358 (1937). Treaty of February 27, 1855, 10 Stat. 1172.

[513] Treaty with the Umpqua, etc., of November 29, 1854, 10 Stat. 1125; Treaty with the Chasta, etc., of November 18, 1854, 10 Stat. 1122; Treaty with the Willamette, of January 22, 1855, 10 Stat. 1143; Treaty with the Wyandott, January 31, 1855, 10 Stat. 1159; Treaty with the Nisqually, etc., December 26, 1854, 10 Stat. 1132; Treaty with the Mississippi Chippewa, February 22, 1855, 10 Stat. 1165.

[514] Treaty of June 9, 1855, with Walla-Wallas, Cayuses, and Umatilla Tribes, 12 Stat. 945; Treaty of June 25, 1855, with Indians in middle Oregon, 12 Stat. 963; Treaty of June 9, 1855, with Yakamas, 12 Stat. 951; Treaty of June 11, 1855, with Nez Perces, 12 Stat. 957; Treaty of July 16, 1855, with Flatheads, etc., 12 Stat. 975; Treaty of July 31, 1855, with Ottawas and Chippewas, 11 Stat. 621; Treaty of August 2, 1855, with Chippewas, 11 Stat. 633.

[515] Mendawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux, Treaty of June 19, 1858, 12 Stat. 1031; Sisseeton and Wahpaton Bands of Sioux, Treaty of June 19, 1858, 12 Stat. 1037; Winnebago, Treaty of April 15, 1859, 12 Stat. 1101; Swan Creek Chippewas and Christian Indians, Treaty of July 16, 1859, 12 Stat. 1105; Sacs and Foxes, Treaty of October 1, 1859, 15 Stat. 467; Kansas Indians, Treaty of October 5, 1859, 12 Stat. 1111; Delawares, Treaty of May 30, 1860, 12 Stat. 1129.

[516] However several treaties of allotment were negotiated during this period. Treaty of March 13, 1862, with Kansas Indians, 12 Stat. 1221; Treaty of June 24, 1862, with Ottawas, 12 Stat. 1237; Treaty of June 28, 1862, with Kickapoos, 13 Stat. 623; Treaty of June 9, 1863, with the Nez Perce, 14 Stat. 647; Treaty of October 14, 1864, with the

where in the summer of 1862, the Sioux of the Mississippi participated in a general unsuccessful uprising against the whites.[517]

While no treaty negotiations were attempted with the Sioux of that state, the Chippewas were called to a series of treaty councils in 1863 and 1864. Here their signatures were secured to treaties providing for removal and allotment of land in severalty.[518]

In the Far West the United States succeeded in making treaties at Fort Bridger,[519] Box Elder [520] and Tuilla Valley [521] in the Utah Territory and at Ruby Valley [522] in the Nevada Territory with the Shoshonees; at Lapwai in the Territory of Washington with the Nez Perce; [523] at Cosnejos in the Colorado Territory with the Utahs; [524] and at Klamath Lake in Oregon with the Klamath Indians.[525] The last mentioned were negotiating with the United States for the first time and Article 9 of the agreement signed by them included the very broad stipulation then being inserted in many treaties that

> * * * They will submit to and obey all laws and regulations which the United States may prescribe for their government and conduct.

I. POST CIVIL WAR TREATIES: 1865–71

The years immediately after the close of the Civil War were filled with Indian councils and conferences. Usually these parleys resulted in the signing of treaties in which mutual pledges of amity and friendship were prominent and frequent.

In October of 1865 the Cheyenne and Arapaho,[526] the Apache, Cheyenne, and Arapaho,[527] the Comanche and Kiowa [528] met with Army officers Sanborn and Harney and signed treaties promising that peace would hereafter be maintained. A few days later eight tribes of Sioux at Fort Sully made the same promise.[529]

Immediately after the close of war, commissioners representing the President of the United States, appeared among the Five Civilized Tribes. Some of these Indians had been openly sympathetic with the rebel cause, even entering into treaties with the Confederacy. This action was seized upon by the commissioners as an indication of disloyalty; and a treaty negotiated in 1865 with the Creeks, Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Osage, Seminoles, Senecas, Shawnee, and Quapaw tribes opens with the statement that the Indians by their defection had become liable to a forfeiture of all the guarantees which the United States had previously made to them.[530]

While this treaty was never ratified, the principle announced undoubtedly colored subsequent negotiations and is reflected in the treaties of 1866 with the Seminoles,[531] Choctaws and Chickasaws,[532] Creeks,[533] and Cherokees.[534] These agreements provide, among other things, for the surrender of a considerable portion of the territory occupied by the Indians; they pledge peace, general amnesty, the abolition of slavery, and the assurance of civil and property rights to freedmen, and acknowledge a large measure of control by the Federal Government over the affairs of the tribes.

The summer of 1867 found the Plains still in the grip of the Sioux War. Moreover, the Cheyenne and Arapaho, the Comanche and Kiowa had joined the belligerents, carrying hostilities over a wide area.

The Indian Peace Commission,[535] composed of civilians and Army officers appointed "to investigate the cause of the war and to arrange for peace." [536] was successful in part. At Medicine Lodge Creek in Kansas, the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache; [537] and the Arapaho and Cheyenne [538] promised peace, the abandonment of the chase, and the pursuit of the habits of civilized living.

In the summer of 1868, many Sioux, together with a scattering of Cheyenne and Arapaho warriors, renewed hostilities, which were terminated by the treaty of April 29, 1868.[539] A month later the Crows [540] and the Northern Arapaho and Cheyenne [541] put an end to hostilities in two agreements concluded May 7, 1868, and Klamaths, 16 Stat. 707. In addition, an agreement amendatory of the Treaty of October 5, 1859, 12 Stat. 1111 was entered into with the Kansas Indians, Treaty of March 13, 1862, 12 Stat. 1221. Also see Chapter 8, sec. 11.

---

[517] Seymour, Story of the Red Man (1929) 268–287.

[518] Treaty of March 11, 1863, with Chippewa of the Mississippi and the Pillager and Lake Winibigoshish Bands, 12 Stat. 1249; Treaty of October 2, 1863, with Red Lake and Pembina Bands of Chippewa, 13 Stat. 667; Treaty of April 12, 1864, with Red Lake and Pembina Bands of Chippewa, 13 Stat. 689; Treaty of May 7, 1864, with Chippewa of the Mississippi and the Pillager and Winnebagoshish Bands, 13 Stat. 693; Treaty of October 18, 1864, with Chippewa of Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River, 14 Stat. 657.

[519] Treaty of July 2, 1863, with Eastern Bands of Shoshonee Indians, 18 Stat. 685.

[520] Treaty of July 30, 1863, with Northwestern Bands of Shoshonee Indians, 13 Stat. 663.

[521] Treaty of October 12, 1863, with Shoshone-Goship Bands, 13 Stat. 681.

[522] Treaty of October 1, 1863, with Western Bands of Shoshonee Indians, 18 Stat. 689. Art. 6 of the treaty recites:

> The said bands agree that whenever the President of the United States shall deem it expedient for them to abandon the roaming life, which they now lead, and become herdsmen or agriculturists, he is hereby authorized to make such reservations for their use as he may deem necessary within the country above described; and they do also hereby agree to remove their camps to such reservations as he may indicate, and to reside and remain therein.

Art. 6 of the treaty with the Shoshone-Goship Bands (see fn. 521, supra) is similar.

[523] Treaty of June 9, 1863, with the Nez Perce, 14 Stat. 647.

[524] Treaty of October 7, 1863, with Tabeguache Band of Utahs, 13 Stat. 673.

[525] Treaty of October 14, 1864, with Klamath and Modoc tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians, 16 Stat. 707.

[526] Treaty of October 14, 1865, 14 Stat. 703.

[527] Treaty of October 17, 1865, 14 Stat. 713.

[528] Treaty of October 18, 1865, 14 Stat. 717.

[529] Two Kettles Band of Sioux Indians, Treaty of October 19, 1865, 14 Stat. 723; Blackfeet Band of Sioux, Treaty of October 19, 1865, 14 Stat. 727; Sans Arc Band of Sioux, Treaty of October 20, 1865, 14 Stat. 731; Onkpahpah Band of Sioux, Treaty of October 20, 1865, 14 Stat. 739; Yanktonai Band of Sioux, Treaty of October 20, 1865, 14 Stat. 735; Upper Yanktonai Band of Sioux, Treaty of October 28, 1865, 14 Stat. 743; O'Gallala Band of Sioux, Treaty of October 28, 1865, 14 Stat. 747; Lower Brule Band of Sioux, Treaty of October 14, 1865, 14 Stat. 699.

The peace established by these agreements was a fleeting one. War continued with the Sioux save for a brief interruption for 2 years thereafter.

[530] Kinney, op. cit., p. 157.

[531] Treaty of March 21, 1866, 14 Stat. 755.

[532] Treaty of April 28, 1866, 14 Stat. 769.

[533] Treaty of June 14, 1866, 14 Stat. 785.

[534] Treaty of July 19, 1866, 14 Stat. 799.

[535] Established by Act of July 20, 1867, 15 Stat. 17.

[536] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1868, p. 4.

[537] Treaty of October 21, 1867, 15 Stat. 581; Treaty of October 21, 1867, 15 Stat. 589.

[538] Treaty of October 28, 1867, 15 Stat. 593.

[539] Treaty of April 29, 1868, 15 Stat. 635. By the Sioux treaty, the United States agreed that for every 30 children (of the said Sioux tribe who can be induced or compelled to attend school) a house should be provided and a teacher competent to teach the elementary branches of our English education should be furnished. (Quick Bear v. Leupp, 210 U. S. 50, 80 (1908).)

[540] Treaty of May 7, 1868, 15 Stat. 649. Construed in Draper v. United States, 164 U. S. 240 (1896); United States v. Powers, 305 U. S. 527, 529 (1939).

[541] Treaty of May 10, 1868, 15 Stat. 655.

May 10, 1868. By summer the Navajo,[542] the eastern band of Shoshonee and the Bannock,[543] and the Nez Perce[544] had also become signatories to treaties of peace. These were the last treaties made by the United States with Indian tribes.

[542] Treaty of June 1, 1868, 15 Stat. 667. Provision for allotment of land in severalty to individuals wishing to farm is found in Art. 5 of this treaty. This agreement also contains in Art. 1 this familiar recital:

> If bad men among the Indians shall commit a wrong or depredation upon the person or property of any one, white, black, or Indian, subject to the authority of the United States and at peace therewith, the Navajo tribe agree that they will, on proof made to their agent, and on notice by him, deliver up the wrongdoer to the United States, to be tried and punished according to its laws * * *.

In 1909, the Supreme Court of Arizona in holding the district court in error in denying to several Indians who had been imprisoned by the War Department a writ of habeas corpus called attention to this recital saying:

> * * * This stipulation amounts to a covenant that bad Indians shall not be punished by the United States, except pursuant to laws defining their offenses and prescribing the punishments therefor. While Congress by its legislation may disregard treaties, the executive branch of the government may not do so. The district court was in error in denying the writ of habeas corpus.

In re By-A-Lil-Le, 12 Ariz. 150, 155 (1909).

[543] Treaty of July 3, 1868, 15 Stat. 673. Construed in Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U. S. 476 (1878); Marks v. United States, 161 U. S. 297 (1896); and Ward v. Race Horse, 163 U. S. 504 (1896).

In United States v. Shoshone Tribe of Indians, 304 U. S. 111 (1938), it was held that the right of the Shoshone Tribe in the lands set apart for it, under the treaty of July 3, 1868, with the United States, included the mineral and timber resources of the reservation; and the value of these was properly included in fixing the amount of compensation due for so much of the lands as was taken by the United States.

[544] Treaty of August 13, 1868, 15 Stat. 693.

SECTION 5. THE END OF TREATY-MAKING

The advancing tide of settlement in the years following the close of the Civil War dispelled the belief that it would ever be possible to separate the Indians from the whites and thus give them an opportunity to work out their salvation alone. Assimilation, allotment, and citizenship became the watchwords of Indian administration[545] and attacks on the making of treaties grew in force.[546]

The termination of the treaty-making period was presaged by section 6 of the Act of March 29, 1867,[547] which provided:

> And all laws allowing the President, the Secretary of the Interior, or the commissioner of Indian affairs to enter into treaties with any Indian tribes are hereby repealed, and no expense shall hereafter be incurred in negotiating a treaty with any Indian tribe until an appropriation authorizing such expense shall be first made by law.

This provision marked the growing opposition of the House of Representatives to the practical exclusion of that House from control over Indian affairs. The provision in question was repealed a few months later[548] but the House continued its struggle against the Indian treaty system. Schmeckebier recounts the incidents of that struggle in these terms:

> While the Indian Peace Commission succeeded in ending the Indian wars, the treaties negotiated by it and ratified by the Senate were not acceptable to the House of Representatives. As the Senate alone ratified the treaties, the House had no opportunity of expressing its opinion regarding them until the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1870, making appropriations for carrying out the treaties, came before it for approval during the third session of the Fortieth Congress. The items providing funds for fulfilling the treaties were inserted by the Senate, but the House refused to agree to them, and the session expired on March 4, 1869, without any appropriations being made for the Indian Office for the fiscal year beginning July 1. When the first session of the Forty-first Congress convened in March, 1869, a bill was passed by the House in the same form as at the previous session. The Senate promptly amended it to include the sums needed to carry out the treaties negotiated by the Peace Commission. The House again refused to agree but a compromise was finally reached by which there was voted in addition to the usual appropriations a lump sum of two million dollars "to enable the President to maintain peace among and with the various tribes, bands, and parties of Indians, and to promote civilization among said Indians, bring them, where practicable, upon reservations, relieve their necessities, and encourage their efforts at self-support" (16 Stat. L., 40).
>
> The House also insisted on the insertion of a section providing "That nothing in this act contained, or in any of the provisions thereof, shall be so construed as to ratify or approve any treaty made with any tribes, bands or parties of Indians since the twentieth day of July, 1867." This was rather a remarkable piece of legislation in that while it did not abrogate the treaties, it withheld its approval although the treaties had already been formally ratified and proclaimed. It had no legal effect, but merely wrote into the act the feeling of the House of Representatives. At the next session of Congress a similar section was added to the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1871, with the additional provision that nothing in the act should ratify, approve, or disaffirm any treaty made since July 20, 1867, "or affirm or disaffirm any of the powers of the Executive and Senate over the subject." The entire section, however, was inadvertently omitted in the enrollment of the bill, and was not formally enacted until the passage of the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1872 (16 Stat. L., 570).
>
> Probably one of the reasons for the refusal of the House to agree to the treaty provisions was its distrust of the administration of the Office of Indian Affairs, for it was during the debate on this bill that General Garfield made his scathing indictment of that Office. * * * (Pp. 55–56.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> Discontinuance of treaty making, 1871.—When the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1871 came up in the second session of the Forty-first Congress the fight of the previous year was renewed, the Senate insisting on appropriations for carrying out the new treaties and the House refusing to grant any funds for that purpose. As the end of the session approached it appeared as if the bill would fail entirely, but after the President had called the attention of Congress to the necessity of making the appropriations, the two houses finally reconciled their differences.
>
> The strong fight made by the House and expressions of many members of the Senate made it evident that the treaty system had reached its end, and the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1872, approved on March 3, 1871 (16 Stat. L., 566), contained the following clause, tacked on to a sentence making an appropriation for the Yankton Indians: "Provided, That hereafter no Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power with whom the United States may contract by treaty: Provided further, That nothing herein

[545] See Chapter 2, sec. 2, for excerpts from commissioners' reports advocating termination of the treaty system.

[546] Ibid.

[547] 15 Stat. 7, 9. Also see Act of April 10, 1869, sec. 5, 16 Stat. 13, 40. The first annual report of the Board of Indian Commissioners submitted late in 1869, and the annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the same year recommended the abolition of the treaty system of dealing with the tribes. Kinney, A Continent Lost—A Civilization Won (1937), pp. 148, 159, 160.

[548] Act of July 20, 1867, 15 Stat. 18.

contained shall be construed to invalidate or impair the obligation of any treaty heretofore lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe." (P. 58.)[549]

[549] Schmeckebier, Office of Indian Affairs, 1927, pp. 56–58, Act of March 3, 1871, 16 Stat. 544, 566, R. S. § 2079, 25 U. S. C. 71. See also the statement of former Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Francis A. Walker, who wrote in 1874:

> In 1871, however, the insolence of conscious strength, and the growing jealousy of the House of Representatives towards the prerogative—arrogated by the Senate—of determining, in connection with the executive, all questions of Indian right and title, and of committing the United States incidentally to pecuniary obligations limited only by its own discretion, for which the House should be bound to make provision without inquiry, led to the adoption, after several severe parliamentary struggles, of the declaration * * * (pp. 11–12), that "hereafter no Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power, with whom the United States may contract by treaty." (P. 5.) (Walker, The Indian Question, 1874.)

Following this enactment, a congressional committee was appointed to prepare a compilation of treaties still in force. Act of March 3, 1873, 17 Stat. 579.

SECTION 6. INDIAN AGREEMENTS

The substance of treaty-making was destined, however, to continue for many decades. For in substance a treaty was an agreement between the Federal Government and an Indian tribe. And so long as the Federal Government and the tribes continue to have common dealings, occasions for agreements are likely to recur. Thus the period of Indian land cessions was marked by the "agreements" through which such cessions were made.[550] These agreements differed from formal treaties only in that they were ratified by both houses of Congress instead of by the Senate alone.[551] Like treaties, these agreements can be modified,[552] except that rights created by carrying the agreement into effect cannot be impaired.[553] In referring to such an agreement, Justice Van Devanter said:[554]

> But it is said that the act of 1902 contemplated that they alone should receive allotments and be the participants in the distribution of the remaining lands, and also of the funds, of the tribe. No doubt such was the purport of the act. But that, in our opinion, did not confer upon them any vested right such as would disable Congress from thereafter making provision for admitting newly born members of the tribe to the allotment and distribution. The difficulty with the appellants' contention is that it treats the act of 1902 as a contract, when "it is only an act of Congress and can have no greater effect." Cherokee Intermarriage Cases, 203 U. S. 76, 93. It was but an exertion of the administrative control of the Government over the tribal property of tribal Indians, and was subject to change by Congress at any time before it was carried into effect and while the tribal relations continued. Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 488; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294; Wallace v. Adams, 204 U. S. 415, 423. (P. 648.)

Legislation based upon Indian consent does not come to an end with the close of the period of Indian land cessions and the stoppage of Indian land losses in 1934. For in that very year the underlying assumption of the treaty period that the Federal Government's relations with the Indian tribes should rest upon a basis of mutual consent was given new life in the mechanism of federally approved tribal constitutions and tribally approved federal charters established by the Act of June 18, 1934.[555] Thus, while the form of treaty-making no longer obtains, the fact that Indian tribes are governed primarily on a basis established by common agreement remains, and is likely to remain so long as the Indian tribes maintain their existence and the Federal Government maintains the traditional democratic faith that all Government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed.

[550] Such agreements are exemplified by the Act of April 29, 1874, with the Utes, 18 Stat. 36; Act of July 10, 1882, with the Crows, 22 Stat. 157; Act of March 1, 1901, with the Cherokees, 31 Stat. 848. The propriety of legislation dependent upon Indian consent was questioned for a time but apparently doubts were set at rest, and the practice of legislating on the basis of Indian consent became solidly established. See G. F. Canfield, Legal Position of the Indian (1881), 15 Am. L. Rev. 21, 25.

[551] Thus in Dick v. United States, 208 U. S. 340, 359 (1908), the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a prohibition against introduction of liquor into certain ceded lands, which was contained in an agreement of 1893 with the Nez Perce Tribe, as "a valid regulation based upon the treaty-making power of the United States and upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce with those Indians."

Even the wording of statutes providing for the negotiation of agreements sometimes discloses their kinship with treaties. For example, the Act of May 1, 1876, 19 Stat. 41, 45, provides for the payment of a commission "to treat with the Sioux Indians for the relinquishment of the Black Hills country in Dakota Territory."

[552] The Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Seminole Nation, 299 U. S. 417, 428 (1937), said:

> * * * "That Congress had the power to change the terms of the agreement and authorize these payments, is well established. * * *" Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553, 564–567.

The Attorney General has said, 26 Op. A. G. 340, 347 (1907):

> * * * Certainly if, as has been often adjudged, Congress may abrogate a formal treaty with a sovereign nation (Chinese Exclusion case, 130 U. S., 581; Horner v. United States, 143 U. S., 578; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S., 706; La Abra Silver Mining Co. v. United States, 175 U. S., 460), it may alter or repeal an agreement of this kind with an Indian tribe.

In considering whether it has been superseded by a general law, an agreement has been accorded the same status as a special law. Marlin v. Lewallen, 276 U. S. 58, 67 (1928). Accord: Longest v. Langford, 276 U. S. 69 (1928).

[553] Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665, 671 (1912).

[554] Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640, 648 (1912), quoted with approval in Sizemore v. Brady, 235 U. S. 441, 450 (1914).

[555] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461, et seq., discussed in Chapter 4, sec 16.

CHAPTER 4

FEDERAL INDIAN LEGISLATION

TABLE OF CONTENTS

While federal Indian legislation forms the basic material of all the substantive chapters that follow, it may serve a useful purpose to present at this point a brief panorama of the more important general statutes in the field that have been enacted during the century and a half which this book covers. Such a panorama may convey some sense of the dynamic development of Indian legislation, and throw some light upon the basic purposes that have dominated Indian legislation at different periods in our history. Such historial perspective is of particular usefulness in the field of Indian law. Solicitor Margold, in his introduction to the Statutory Compilation of the Indian Law Survey,[1] comments on "the importance of the factor of history in this field of law" in the following terms:

> During the century and a half that this compilation covers, the groups of human beings with whom this law deals have undergone changes in living habits, institutions, needs, and aspirations far greater than the changes that separate from our own age the ages for which Hammurabi, Moses, Lycurgus, or Justinian legislated. Telescoped into a century and a half, one may find changes in social, political, and property relations which stretch over more than thirty centuries of European civilization. The toughness of law which keeps it from changing as rapidly as social conditions change in our national life is, of course, much more serious where the rate of social change is twenty times as rapid. Thus, if the laws governing Indian affairs are viewed as lawyers generally view existing law, without reference to the varying times in which particular provisions were enacted, the body of the law thus viewed is a mystifying collection of inconsistencies and anachronisms. To recognize the different dates at which various provisions were enacted is the first step towards order and sanity in this field.
>
> Not only is it important to recognize the temporal "depth" of existing legislation, it is also important to appreciate the past existence of legislation which has, technically, ceased to exist. For there is a very real sense in which it can be said that no provision of law is ever completely wiped out. This is particularly true in the field of Indian law. At every session of the Supreme Court, there arise cases in which the validity of a present claim depends upon the question: What was the law on such and such a point in some earlier period? Laws long repealed have served to create legal rights which endure and which can be understood only by reference to the repealed legislation. Thus, in seeking a complete answer to various questions of Indian law, one finds that he cannot rest with a collection of laws "still in force," but must constantly recur to legislation that has been repealed, amended, or superseded.

Let this serve at the same time as an apology for including in this work a chronicle of Indian legislation and as an explanation of the rudimentary character of this chronicle. To analyze the legal problems raised by each of the statutes noted is, after all, the main task of the rest of the book. For our present purposes it suffices simply to note what legislative problems in the field of Indian law have been faced in each decade of our national existence.[2]

[1] U. S. Dept. of the Interior, Office of the Solicitor, Statutory Compilation of the Indian Law Survey: A Compendium of Federal Laws and Treaties Relating to Indians, edited by Felix S. Cohen, Chief, Indian Law Survey, with a Foreword by Nathan R. Margold, Solicitor, Department of the Interior (1940), 46 vols.

[2] On the interpretation of Indian statutes, see Chapter 8, sec. 9I.

SECTION 1. THE BEGINNINGS: 1789

During the first year of the first Congress, and indeed in the space of some 5 weeks, there were enacted four statutes which established the outlines of our Indian legislation for many years to come. The first of these was the Act of August 7, 1789,[3] establishing the Department of War, which provided that that Department should handle, in addition to its primary military affairs "such other matters * * * as the President of the United States shall assign to the said department * * * relative to Indian affairs." We have elsewhere noted how the authority thus conferred was later transferred to the Department of the Interior.[4] While the days have long passed when our military relations with the Indian tribes were the most important aspect of Indian affairs to the Federal Government, the types of administrative control established under the Act of August 7, 1789, still play a large part in Indian law.

[3] 1 Stat. 49.

[4] See Chapter 2, sec. 1B, and Chapter 8, sec. 10A(3).

The second statute [5] referring to Indians enacted by the new Congress provided for the government of the Northwest Territory and in effect reenacted, with minor amendments, the Northwest Ordinance of 1787 containing the following article on Indian affairs:

> ART. 3. * * * The utmost good faith shall always be observed towards the Indians; their land and property shall never be taken from them without their consent; and in their property, rights, and liberty, they never shall be invaded or disturbed, unless in just and lawful wars authorized by Congress; but laws founded in justice and humanity shall from time to time be made, for preventing wrongs being done to them, and for preserving peace and friendship with them.

This represented the first of many measures by which Congress, in administering the government of the territories, legislated over Indian affairs with "plenary" authority. Congress legislated for the territories with the same latitude that the states enacted legislation to govern human conduct within state boundaries.[6]

The statute dealing with the Northwest Territory was followed by statutes establishing territorial or state governments for 35 states admitted to the Union after the adoption of the Constitution. In these 35 states were located nearly all the Indians with whom the federal law on Indian affairs now deals. Here perhaps is one clue to the frequent use of the concept of "plenary power" vested in the Federal Government over Indian affairs.

The third act of Congress dealing with Indian affairs was the Act of August 20, 1789,[7] which appropriated a sum not exceeding $20,000 to defray "the expense of negotiating and treating with the Indian tribes" and provided for the appointment of commissioners to manage such negotiations and treaties. This statute thus marks the beginning of a mode of dealing with Indian affairs that was to remain the primary mode of governmental action in this field for many decades to come.[8]

The fourth and last of the statutes enacted by Congress at its first session which dealt with Indian affairs was the Act of September 11, 1789,[9] which specified salaries to be paid to the "superintendent of Indian affairs in the northern department," a position held ex officio by the governor of the western territory.

Noteworthy is the fact that of the first 13 statutes enacted by the first Congress of the United States, four dealt primarily or partially with Indian affairs. In these four statutes we find the essential administrative machinery for dealing with Indian affairs established, and its expenses provided for. And we find four important sources of federal authority in dealing with Indian matters invoked: The power to make war (and, presumably, peace); the power to govern territories; the power to make treaties, and the power to spend money.[10]

[5] Act of August 7, 1789, 1 Stat. 50. For a discussion of colonial dealings with the Indians concerning land, see Chapter 15, sec. 9.
[6] See Chapter 5, sec. 5.
[7] 1 Stat. 54.
[8] See Chapter 3.
[9] 1 Stat. 67.
[10] Also see Chapter 5, sec. 1.

SECTION 2. LEGISLATION FROM 1790 TO 1799

The first act of Congress specifically defining substantive rights and duties in the field of Indian affairs was the Act of July 22, 1790,[11] significantly titled, "An Act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes." The significance of the title becomes clear when one notes that the act deals not only with the conduct of licensed traders, but also with the sale of Indian lands, the commission of crimes and trespasses against Indians and the procedure for punishing white men committing offenses against Indians. It seems fair to infer that the legislators who adopted this statute thereby gave a practical and contemporaneous construction to the clause of the Federal Constitution which gives to Congress > * * * the power to regulate commerce * * * with the Indian tribes * * *.[12]

The Act of July 22, 1790, contained seven sections. The first three provided that trade or intercourse with the Indian tribes should be limited to persons licensed by the Federal Government; that such licenses might be revoked for violations of regulations governing such trade, prescribed by the President, and that persons trading without licenses should forfeit all merchandise in their possession.[13]

Section 4 declared:

> * * * That no sale of lands made by any Indians, or any nation or tribe of Indians within the United States, shall be valid to any person or persons, or to any state, whether having the right of pre-emption to such lands or not, unless the same shall be made and duly executed at some public treaty, held under the authority of the United States.[14]

Sections 5 and 6 dealt with crimes and trespasses committed by non-Indians against Indians within "any town, settlement or territory belonging to any nation or tribe of Indians * * *." Such offenders were to be subject to the same punishment to which they would be subject if the offenses had been committed against a non-Indian within the jurisdiction of the state or district from which the offender came, and the procedure applicable in cases involving crimes against the United States was made applicable to such offenders.[15]

The final section declared that the act should "be in force for the term of two years, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer."

It may be noted that each of the substantive provisions of the first Indian trade and intercourse act fulfilled some obligation assumed by the United States in treaties with various Indian tribes. In its first treaty with an Indian tribe, the Treaty of September 17, 1778, with the Delaware Nation,[16] the United States had undertaken to provide for the accommodation of the Delawares—

> * * * a well-regulated trade, under the conduct of an intelligent, candid agent, with an adequate sallery, one more influenced by the love of his country, and a constant attention to the duties of his department by promoting the common interest, than the sinister purposes of converting and binding all the duties of his office to his private emolument * * *. (Art. 5.)

Similar undertakings, providing for congressional action in the regulation of traders, had been undertaken in various other

[11] C. 33, 1 Stat. 137.
[12] Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 3. Also see Chapter 5, sec. 3.
[13] See Chapter 16, sec. 1.
[14] See Chapter 15, sec. 18C.
[15] See Chapter 18, sec. 5.
[16] 7 Stat. 13.

treaties which, by 1790, had been concluded with most of the tribes then within the boundaries of the United States.[17]

Section 4, limiting land sales to the United States, also supplemented provisions contained in various treaties.[18]

The provisions with reference to the punishment of non-Indians committing crimes or trespasses within the territory of the Indian tribes likewise carried out obligations which had been assumed as early as September 17, 1778, in the treaty of that date with the Delaware Nation,[19] providing for fair and impartial trials of offenders against Indians,

> * * * The mode of such tryals to be hereafter fixed by the wise men of the United States in Congress assembled, with the assistance of such deputies of the Delaware nation, as may be appointed to act in concert with them in adjusting this matter to their mutual liking.

Similar provisions promising punishment of white offenders as a substitute for other methods of redress employed by Indian tribes had been included in practically all the treaties which were in force when the first Indian trade and intercourse act was adopted.[20]

The foregoing analysis of statutes as fulfillments of treaty obligations would probably apply equally to each of the later Indian trade and intercourse acts, culminating in the permanent Act of June 30, 1834.[21]

Despite the caution of Congress in making the first Indian trade and intercourse act a temporary measure, the substance of each of the provisions contained in this act remains law to this day.

Minor amendments were made in the language of these provisions by the second Indian trade and intercourse act, that of March 1, 1793.[22] This act also introduced a number of new provisions which have for the most part found their way into existing law. A prohibition against settlement on Indian lands and authority to the President to remove such settlers are contained in section 5 of this act. Section 6 deals with horse thieves and horse traders. Section 7 prohibits employees in Indian affairs from having "any interest or concern in any trade with the Indians."[23] Section 9 provides for the furnishing of various goods and services to the Indian tribes. Section 13 specifies that Indians within the jurisdiction of any of the individual states shall not be subject to trade restrictions.

This act, like the preceding act, was declared a temporary measure.[24]

The Act of May 19, 1796[25] constitutes the third in a series of trade and intercourse acts. Generally it follows the 1793 act, with minor modifications. It adds a detailed definition of Indian country.[26] It adds a prohibition against the driving of livestock on Indian lands.[27] It requires passports for persons travelling into the Indian country.[28]

The 1796 act contained, for the first time, a provision (sec. 14) for the punishment of any Indian belonging to a tribe in amity with the United States who shall cross into any state or territory and there commit any one of various listed offenses.[29] In the first instance, application for "satisfaction" was to be made to the nation or tribe to which the Indian offender belonged; if such application proved fruitless, after a reasonable waiting period fixed at 18 months, the President of the United States was authorized to take such measures as might be proper to obtain satisfaction for the injury. In the meantime, the injured party was guaranteed "an eventual indemnification" if he refrained from "attempting to obtain private satisfaction or revenge * * *." The only specific measure of redress which the President was authorized to take under this act was the withholding of annuities due to the tribe in question.

The fourth and last of the temporary Indian trade and inter course acts was the Act of March 3, 1799.[30] This act made only minor changes in the provisions of the 1796 act.

Apart from the four temporary Indian trade and intercourse acts passed during the decade from 1790 to 1799, the only statute of special importance was the Act of April 18, 1796,[31] which established Government trading houses with the Indians, under the control of the President of the United States. While the institution of the Government trading house was abolished in 1822,[32] some of the provisions designed to assure the honesty of employees of these establishments have been carried over into the law which now governs Indian Service employees.[33] Control of the Government trading houses became the most important administrative function of the Federal Government in the field of Indian affairs, and when the Government trading houses were finally abolished it was only natural that the superintendent of Indian trade in charge of these establishments became the first head of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.[34]

---

[17] E. g., Article 9 of Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, 7 Stat, 18, 20; Art. 8 of Treaty of January 3, 1786, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 21, 22; Art. 8 of Treaty of January 10, 1786, with the Chickasaws, 7 Stat. 24, 25; Art. 7 of Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wiandot, Delaware, Ottawa, Chippewa, Pattawattima, and Sac Nations, 7 Stat. 28, 30. See Chapter 3, sec. 3B(2).

[18] Art. 3 of Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wiandots and others had provided:

> * * * But the said nations, or either of them, shall not be at liberty to sell or dispose of the same, or any part thereof, to any sovereign power, except the United States.; nor to the subjects or citizens of any other sovereign power, nor to the subjects or citizens of the United States.

The following treaties contained specific guarantees against settlement on Indian lands by citizens of the United States: Art. 5 of Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandot, Delaware, Chippawa and Ottawa Nations, 7 Stat. 16, 17; Art. 5 of Treaty of November 28, 1785, with the Cherokees, 7 Stat. 18, 19; Art. 4 of Treaty of January 3, 1786, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 21, 22; Art. 4 of Treaty of January 10, 1786, with the Chickasaws, 7 Stat. 24, 25; Art. 7 of Treaty of January 31, 1786, with the Shawanoe Nation, 7 Stat. 26, 27. Other treaties provided generally for the protection of Indian lands.

[19] Art. 4, 7 Stat. 13, 14.

[20] See treaties cited in fns. 17 and 18, supra.

[21] 4 Stat. 729. See Chapter 3, sec. 3.

[22] 1 Stat. 329.

[23] See Chapter 2, sec. 3B.

[24] Sec. 15, 1 Stat. 329, 332.

[25] 1 Stat. 469.

[26] Sec. 1. See Chapter 1, sec. 3.

[27] Sec. 2. See Chapter 15, sec. 10.

[28] Sec. 3. See Chapter 3, sec. 3A(5); Chapter 8, sec. 10A(3).

[29] See Chapter 18, sec. 4.

[30] C. 46, 1 Stat. 743.

[31] 1 Stat. 452.

[32] Act of May 6, 1822, 3 Stat. 679.

[33] See Act of April 18, 1796, sec. 3, 1 Stat. 452, followed in Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 14, 4 Stat. 735, 738, R. S. § 2078, 25 U. S. C. 68. And see Chapter 2, sec. 3B.

[34] See Chapter 2, sec. 1A.

SECTION 3. LEGISLATION FROM 1800 TO 1809

The most important legislation enacted by Congress during the first decade of the nineteenth century was the permanent trade and intercourse act of March 30, 1802.[35] The four temporary Indian trade and intercourse acts adopted in 1790, 1793, 1796, and 1799 had, by a process of trial and error, marked out the main outlines of federal Indian law, and the Act of 1802 made few substantial changes in reducing to permanent form the provisions of the Act of March 3, 1799.[36] The only significant addition made by the 1802 act appears in section 21 of that act, which deals with the liquor problem in these terms:

> * * * That the President of the United States be authorized to take such measures, from time to time, as to him may appear expedient to prevent or restrain the vending or distributing of spirituous liquors among all or any of the said Indian tribes, any thing herein contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

The circumstances under which this provision, urged by various Indian chiefs, was recommended by President Jefferson and enacted by Congress are elsewhere noted.[37]

Apart from the permanent Indian trade and intercourse act, two legislative enactments during the decade from 1800 to 1809 deserve notice. Both of them imposed upon the Indian Service marks of its military origin which endured for more than a century.

The first of these statutes was the Act of January 17, 1800,[38] entitled "An Act for the preservation of peace with the Indian tribes." This act was apparently designed to prevent the European belligerents of that time from inciting the Indian tribes on our western frontier to attacks against the United States. The first section of this act provides:

> * * * That if any citizen or other person residing within the United States, or the territory thereof, shall send any talk, speech, message or letter to any Indian nation, tribe, or chief, with an intent to produce a contravention or infraction of any treaty or other law of the United States, or to disturb the peace and tranquillity of the United States, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding two thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

After a long and checkered career, this provision of law[39] was repealed by the Act of May 21, 1934.[40]

Section 2 of this act prescribed penalties for the carrying or delivering of messages of the character prescribed by section 1 "to or from any Indian nation, tribe, or chief * * *."[41]

The third section of this act[42] dealt with seditious correspondence with foreign nations respecting Indian affairs, and also contained the following language which, considered apart from the circumstances of its enactment, imposed severe limits upon criticism of the Indian Service:

> * * * or in case any citizen or other person shall alienate, or attempt to alienate the confidence of the Indians from the government of the United States, or from any such person or persons as are, or may be employed and entrusted by the President of the United States, as a commissioner or commissioners, agent or agents, in any capacity whatever, for facilitating or preserving a friendly intercourse with the Indians, or for managing the concerns of the United States with them, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding twelve months.

Another statute enacted by Congress during this decade which left a mark upon the Indian Service for many years was the Act of May 13, 1800,[43] which provided for the issuance of rations out of army provisions to Indians visiting the military posts of the United States. This is the first congressional statute supporting the system of inducing peace by paying tribute which characterized Indian Service policy for many years.[44]

The same statute likewise provided for repaying to Indian delegates the expense of their visits to Washington.[45]

During the decade from 1800 to 1809, there was no further Indian legislation of general and permanent significance. Appropriation acts, acts extending Indian trading house legislation, legislation for the establishing of new states and territories, measures for executing treaty provisions, and laws dealing with the disposition of lands acquired from the Indians by treaty make up the bulk of the legislation enacted during this decade in the field of Indian affairs.

[35] 2 Stat. 139.
[36] C. 46, 1 Stat. 743. See sec. 2, supra.
[37] See Chapter 17, sec. 1.
[38] 2 Stat. 6.
[39] The provision in question was incorporated in the Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 13, 4 Stat. 729, 731, and became R. S. § 2111 and 25 U. S. C. 171.
[40] 48 Stat. 787. See 25 U. S. C. A. 171 (Supp.).
[41] Sec. 2, incorporated in Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 14, 4 Stat. 729, 731, R. S. § 2112, 25 U. S. C. 172; repealed by Act of May 21, 1934, 48 Stat. 787.
[42] Incorporated in Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 15, 4 Stat. 729, 731, R. S. § 2113, 25 U. S. C. 173, repealed by Act of May 21, 1934, 48 Stat. 787. On recent uses of this statute, prior to its repeal, see Chapter 8, sec. 10A(2).
[43] C. 68, 2 Stat. 85; incorporated in Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 16, 4 Stat. 735, 738, R. S. § 2110, 25 U. S. C. 141.
[44] See Chapter 2, sec. 2C; Chapter 12, secs. 1, 4.
[45] Sec. 2.

SECTION 4. LEGISLATION FROM 1810 TO 1819

Congressional legislation on Indian affairs in the decade from 1810 to 1819 continues the trends noted in the preceding decade. Two statutes of special significance deserve to be noted.

The Act of March 3, 1817,[46] established for the first time a system of criminal justice applicable to Indians as well as to non-Indians within the Indian country. The act provided that Indians or other persons committing offenses within the Indian country should be subject to the same punishment that would be applicable if the offense had been committed in any place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. Federal courts were given jurisdiction to try such cases. The statute contained an important proviso (sec. 2), safeguarding the criminal jurisdiction of the Indian tribes:

> * * * nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect any treaty now in force between the United States and any Indian nation, or to extend to any offence committed by one Indian against another, within any Indian boundary.

The proviso, as well as the main provision of the statute, have found their way, with some modifications, into existing law.[47]

[46] C. 92, 3 Stat. 383.
[47] See 25 U. S. C. 217, 218. Note, however, that the historical notes to these sections in the U. S. Code and the U. S. Code Annotated fail to show their actual origin. For further discussion of the significance of these sections, see Chapter 5, sec. 1; Chapter 7, sec. 9; Chapter 18, secs. 3, 4.

A second important statute adopted during this decade was the Act of March 3, 1819[48] entitled "An Act making provision for the civilization of the Indian tribes adjoining the frontier settlements."

Section 1 of this act, which is law to this day,[49] provides:

> * * * That for the purpose of providing against the further decline and final extinction of the Indian tribes, adjoining the frontier settlements of the United States, and for introducing among them the habits and arts of civilization, the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby authorized, in every case where he shall judge improvement in the habits and condition of such Indians practicable, and that the means of instruction can be introduced with their own consent, to employ capable persons of good moral character, to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their situation; and for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and performing such other duties as may be enjoined, according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct, in the discharge of their duties.

Section 2 of this act established a permanent annual appropriation of $10,000 for carrying out the provisions of section 1.[50]

[48] C. 85, 3 Stat. 516.
[49] R. S. § 2071, 25 U. S. C. 271.
[50] See Chapter 12, sec. 2 for a discussion of the use made of these appropriations.

SECTION 5. LEGISLATION FROM 1820 TO 1829

By the Act of May 6, 1822,[51] the United States trading houses with the Indian tribes were abolished. On the same day a law was enacted specifying the conditions under which licensed Indian traders were to operate.[52] The act imposed various conditions upon the activities of licensed traders and conferred broad authority over such traders upon administrative officials. The act also provided (sec. 3) for the regular settlement of accounts of Indian agents. Section 4 of this act established a rule, which is still law, which in its present code form declares:

> In all trials about the right of property in which an Indian may be a party on one side, and a white person on the other, the burden of proof shall rest upon the white person, whenever the Indian shall make out a presumption of title in himself from the fact of previous possession or ownership.[53]

Apart from the foregoing general acts, treaties and legislation providing for the enforcement of treaty provisions continued to represent the main growing point of Indian law.

[51] 3 Stat. 679.
[52] Act of May 6, 1822, c. 58, 3 Stat. 682.
[53] 25 U. S. C. 194, derived from Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 22, 4 Stat. 729, 733; R. S. § 2126.

SECTION 6. LEGISLATION FROM 1830 TO 1839

The decade of the 1830's is marked by five statutes of great importance, the Act of May 28, 1830, governing Indian removal, the Act of July 9, 1832, establishing the post of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Indian Trade and Intercourse Act of June 30, 1834, the act of the same date providing for the organization of the Department of Indian Affairs, and the Act of January 9, 1837, regulating the disposition made of proceeds of ceded Indian lands.

The first of these acts[54] established in general terms the policy, which had theretofore been worked out in several specific cases,[55] of exchanging federal lands west of the Mississippi for other lands then held by Indian tribes. The act provided that such exchanges should be voluntary; that payment should be made to individuals for improvements relinquished, and that suitable guaranties should be given to the Indians as to the permanent character of the new homes to which they were migrating.

Section 3 provided:

> * * * That in the making of any such exchange or exchanges, it shall and may be lawful for the President solemnly to assure the tribe or nation with which the exchange is made, that the United States will forever secure and guaranty to them, and their heirs or successors, the country so exchanged with them; and if they prefer it, that the United States will cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same: Provided always, That such lands shall revert to the United States, if the Indians become extinct, or abandon the same.

Sections 6 and 7 defined the administrative authority of the President and the duty of protection owing to migrating tribes in the following terms:

> SEC. 6. * * * That it shall and may be lawful for the President to cause such tribe or nation to be protected, at their new residence, against all interruption or disturbance from any other tribe or nation of Indians, or from any other person or persons whatever.
>
> SEC. 7. * * * That it shall and may be lawful for the President to have the same superintendence and care over any tribe or nation in the country to which they may remove, as contemplated by this act, that he is now authorized to have over them at their present places of residence: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as authorizing or directing the violation of any existing treaty between the United States and any of the Indian tribes.[56]

The Act of July 9, 1832,[57] entitled "An Act to provide for the appointment of a commissioner of Indian Affairs, and for other purposes," represents the first legislative authorization for the post of Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Its significance in the development of Indian administration has been discussed elsewhere.[58]

Section 1 of this act[59] which is still invoked as a basis for the administrative authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, declared:

> * * * That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commissioner of Indian affairs, who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of War, and agreeably to such regulations as the President may, from time to time, prescribe, have the direction and management of all Indian affairs, and of all matters arising out of Indian relations, and shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum.

Other sections of the act dealt with the appointment of clerks to the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the supervision of accounts by the Commissioner, and the discontinuance of [54] Act of May 28, 1830. 4 Stat. 411. Secs. 7 and 8 were later incorporated in R. S. § 2114, 25 U. S. C. 174.

[55] See Chapter 2, sec. 2A; Chapter 3, sec. 4E.
[56] R. S. § 2114, 25 U. S. C. 174.
[57] C. 174, 4 Stat. 564.
[58] See Chapter 2, sec. 1B.
[59] R. S. §§ 462–463, 25 U. S. C. 1–2. See Chapter 5, sec. 8.

"* * * the services of such agents, subagents, interpreters, and mechanics, as may from time to time become unnecessary, in consequence of the emigration of the Indians, or other causes" [60] —an illuminating commentary upon the aura of impermanence which even then surrounded the treatment of the Indian problem.

Included in this act was a general prohibition against the introduction of ardent spirits into the Indian country,[61] which is part of the law to this day.

June 30, 1834, is perhaps the most significant date in the history of Indian legislation. On this day there were enacted two comprehensive statutes which, in large part, form the fabric of our law on Indian affairs to this day. Of these two statutes one stands as the final act in a series of acts "to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes." [62] The other, approved on the same day, is entitled "An Act to provide for the organization of the department of Indian Affairs." [63] The two statutes [64] were dealt with in a single report of the House Committee on Indian Affairs,[65] which contains an illuminating analysis of the entire legislative situation with respect to Indian affairs.

The difficulties and the general objectives in terms of which this legislation of 1834 was drafted are suggested in the following statements of the Committee report:

> The committee are aware of the intrinsic difficulties of the subject—of providing a system of laws and of administration, simple and economical, and, at the same time, efficient and liberal—that shall be suited to the various conditions and relations of those for whose benefit it is intended; and that shall, with a due regard to the rights of our own citizens, meet the just expectations of the country in the fulfilment of its proper and assumed obligations to the Indian tribes. Yet, so manifestly defective and inadequate is our present system, that an immediate revision seems to be imperiously demanded. What is now proposed is only an approximation to a perfect system. Much is necessarily left for the present to Executive discretion, and still more to future legislation.[66]
>
> The Indians, for whose protection these laws are proposed, consist of numerous tribes, scattered over an immense extent of country, of different languages, and partaking of all the forms of society in the progression from the savage to an approximation to the civilized. With the emigrant tribes we have treaties, imposing duties of a mixed character, recognising them in some sort as dependent tribes, and yet obligating ourselves to protect them, even against domestic strife, and necessarily retaining the power so to do. With other tribes we have general treaties of amity; and with a considerable number we have no treaties whatever. To most of the tribes with whom we have treaties, we have stipulated to pay annuities in various forms. The annexed tables (A, B, I, J, K, L) exhibit a condensed view of these relations, and will assist in determining the nature and extent of the legislation necessary for the Indian Department. These, though a part of the consideration of the cessions of land, are intended to promote their improvement and civilization, and which may now be considered as the leading principle of this branch of our legislation.[67]

The Indian Trade and Intercourse Act of 1834 followed in many respects the similar act of March 30, 1802,[68] and incorporated provisions of other acts which have already been noted.[69]

By its first section it substituted a general definition of Indian country for the definition by metes and bounds that had been contained in the 1802 act and that had become largely obsolete as a result of treaty cessions.[70]

Sections 2 to 5 of the act deal with licensed traders and impose a more detailed system of control over such traders than had been previously in force. These controls constitute, in large part, the present law on the subject and are elsewhere analyzed.[71] The purpose of the legislation with respect to control of traders is set forth in the following terms in the House Committee report:

> The Indian trade, as heretofore, will continue to be carried on by licensed traders. The Indians do not meet the traders on equal terms, and no doubt have much reason to complain of fraud and imposition. Some further provision seems necessary for their protection. Heretofore, it has been considered that every person (whatever might be his character) was entitled to a license on offering his bond. It has been the source of much complaint with the Indians. Power is now given to refuse licenses to persons of bad character, and for a more general reason, "that it would be improper to permit such persons to reside in the Indian country;" and to revoke licenses for the same reasons. The committee are aware that this is granting an extensive power to the agents, and which may be liable to abuse; yet, when it is recollected that the distance from the Government at which the traders reside, will prevent a previous consultation with the head of the department; that what is necessary to be done should be done promptly; that the agents act under an official responsibility; that they are required to assign the reasons of their conduct to the War Department; that an appeal is given to the party injured; and that the dismissal of the agent would be the consequence of a wanton act of injustice, the rights of the traders will be found as well secured as is compatible with the security of the Indians.
>
> The report of the commissioners, appended to this report, contains a detailed statement of the exorbitant prices demanded by the Indian traders. As a remedy in part, they recommend, first, a substitution of goods for money in the payment of annuities. This suggestion has been adopted so far as to authorize it to be done by the consent of the tribe. In addition to the direct benefit, it will furnish them with something like a standard of the value of goods, and enable them to deal on more equal terms with the Indian traders. * * *[72]

Section 6 of the act relaxes the prior requirement that all persons going into the Indian country must bear a passport, so as to make the requirement applicable only to foreigners.[73]

Sections 7 to 12 of the 1834 Trade and Intercourse Act reenact with minor modifications provisions of the 1802 Trade and Intercourse Act.[74]

Sections 13 to 15 of the act reenact provisions of the Act of January 17, 1800,[75] relating to subversive activities among Indian

---

[60] Sec. 5, R. S. § 2073, 25 U. S. C. 65.

[61] Sec. 4, R. S. § 2139, 25 U. S. C. 241. See Chapter 17, sec. 3, fn. 35.

[62] 4 Stat. 729.

[63] 4 Stat. 735.

[64] This report also dealt with a third proposed bill, relating to the tribes of the proposed "western territory," which was never enacted.

[65] H. Rept. No. 474, 23d Cong., 1st sess. (May 20, 1834).

[66] Ibid., p. 1.

[67] Ibid., p. 2.

[68] 2 Stat. 139. See sec. 3, supra.

[69] See fns. 38, 46, 51, supra.

[70] Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729. For a discussion of the significance of the 1834 definition see Chapter 1, sec. 3.

[71] See Chapter 16.

[72] H. Rept., op. cit., p. 11.

[73] "Other nations have excluded foreigners from trade and intercourse with the Indians within their territories. We have adopted the same policy as the only one safe for us, or beneficial to the Indians. The provision is therefore continued, that no foreigner shall enter the Indian country without a passport. But it is not deemed necessary that all the restrictions of the former laws as to our own citizens should be retained. Of them, as mere travellers in or through the Indian country, we ought not to have the same, or even any jealousy. And so frequent and necessary are the occasions of our citizens to pass into the Indian country, that of them no passports will be required for such objects. Such has been the inconvenience of obtaining passports, that, for years, the provision in the act of 1802, requiring them, has been a dead letter. If, however, our citizens desire to trade or to reside in the Indian country for any purpose whatever, a license for that particular purpose is required." H. Rept., op. cit., p. 11.

[74] See fn. 35, supra.

[75] 2 Stat. 6, discussed in sec. 3, supra. See 25 U. S. C. 171, 172, 173.

tribes. On the question of allowing the executive power to remove undesirable non-Indians the Committee declared:

> To facilitate the negotiations of treaties, it is deemed absolutely necessary that the commissioners should have power to control or remove all white persons who may attempt to prevent or impede the negotiations, and that they should have, if necessary, the aid of a military force.[76]

Section 17 reenacts and amplifies provisions of the 1802 act relating to Indian depredations.

The remaining provisions of the statute deal primarily with the prosecution of crimes. Officials of the Indian Department are empowered to make arrests.[77] The liquor prohibition provisions of the 1832 act[78] are reenacted and amplified.[79] The provision in the Act of May 6, 1822[80] relating to Indian witnesses is likewise reenacted (Section 22).[81]

Provisions on criminal jurisdiction are thus summarized in the House Committee report:

> In consequence of the change in our Indian relations, the laws relating to crimes committed in the Indian country, and to the tribunals before whom offenders are to be tried, require revision. By the act of 3d March, 1817, the criminal laws of the United States were extended to all persons in the Indian country, without exception, and by that act, as well as that of 30th March, 1802, they might be tried wherever apprehended. It will be seen that we cannot, consistently with the provisions of some of our treaties, and of the territorial act, extend our criminal laws to offences committed by or against Indians, of which the tribes have exclusive jurisdiction; and it is rather of courtesy than of right that we undertake to punish crimes committed in that territory by and against our own citizens. And this provision is retained principally on the ground that it may be unsafe to trust to Indian law in the early stages of their Government. It is not perceived that we can with any justice or propriety extend our laws to offences committed by Indians against Indians, at any place within their own limits.
>
> Some doubts have been suggested as to the constitutionality of so much of these acts as provides for the trial of offenders wherever apprehended: without expressing any opinion on that subject, it is thought that provisions more convenient to all parties, and at the same time free from all constitutional doubts, might be adopted. And for this end it is proposed, for the sole purpose of executing this act, to annex the Indian country to the judicial districts of the adjoining Territories and States. This is done principally with a view to offences that are to be prosecuted by indictment. In all cases of offences, when the punishment, by former laws, was fine or imprisonment, the imprisonment is now omitted, leaving the penalty to be recovered in an action of debt, prosecuted in any district where the offender may be found.[82]

The second[83] of the basic 1834 acts was intended to deal comprehensively with the organization and functions of the Indian Department. This purpose is developed in the sponsoring House Committee's report in the following terms:

> The present organization of this department is of doubtful origin and authority. Its administration is expensive, inefficient, and irresponsible.
>
> The committee have sought, in vain, for any lawful authority for the appointment of a majority of the agents and subagents of Indian affairs now in office. For years, usage, rendered colorably lawful only by reference to indirect and equivocal legislation, has been the only sanction for their appointment. Our Indian relations commenced at an early period of the revolutionary war. What was necessary to be done, either for defence or conciliation, was done; and being necessary, no inquiry seems to have been made as to the authority under which it was done. This undefined state of things continued for nearly twenty years. Though some general regulations were enacted, the government of the department was chiefly left to Executive discretion. In the subsequent legislation, what was, in fact, mere usage, seems to have been taken as having been established by law. It does not appear that the origin or history of the department has ever attracted the attention of Congress. No report of its investigation is found in its records. In ascertaining the authority of the appointment of the officers in the department, the committee have referred to the acts of the Government, of which they will now present a brief history, and which, it is believed, will fully sustain the position that a majority of the agents and subagents of Indian affairs have been appointed without lawful authority. This position is not taken with a view to put any particular administration in fault, for it applies to every administration for the last thirty years.[84]

The conclusion as to the lack of legal authority for various positions actually maintained in the office of Indian Affairs was borne out by a detailed review of the legislation of Congress beginning with ordinances enacted prior to the Declaration of Independence. The statute substitutes for the patchwork theretofore existing, a comprehensive schedule of departmental officers and makes all such officers responsible to the President of the United States and to regulations promulgated by him.[85]

Other sections of the 1834 act providing for the organization of the department of Indian Affairs seek to restore and guarantee tribal rights upon which administrative encroachments had apparently been made, and to encourage Indians to take over an increased measure of responsibility for the administration of the Indian Service. In matters of annuity payments, the 1834 act establishes the principle that all such payments are to be made to the chiefs of the respective tribes or to such other representatives as the tribes themselves may appoint. In explanation of this provision (sec. 11), the Committee declared:

> In the course of their investigations, the committee have become satisfied that much injustice has been done to the Indians in the payment of their annuities. The payments are required, by the terms of the treaties, to be paid to the tribe as a political body capable of acting as a nation; and it would seem, as a necessary consequence, that the payments should be made to the constituted authorities of the tribe. If those authorities distribute the annuities thus paid with a partial hand, they alone are responsible. If injustice shall be done, we are not the instruments; we have discharged our obligation. With what propriety can our Government undertake to apportion the annuities among the individuals of the tribes? And in what manner can it be done, with safety or convenience? If distributed to heads of families in proportion to the number of each family, it would require an annual enumeration, or a register of the changes. If paid to the individuals at their residences, it would be troublesome and expensive; if the individuals were required to travel to the agency, to receive the pittance of their share, to many it would not be worth going for. What security can be given against the frauds of the agents? What vouchers shall he produce to account for the payments? The payment to the chiefs is a mode simple and certain, and the only mode that will render the annuities beneficial to the tribe, by enabling it to apply them to the expenses of their Government, to the purpose of education, or to some object of general concern. When distributed to individuals, the amount is too small to be relied on as a support, yet sufficiently large to induce them to forego the labor necessary to procure their supplies. And it is found that those are the most industrious and thrifty who have no such aid.
>
> Individual payments were introduced probably with a view to induce emigration, by paying those who choose to [76] H. Rept., op. cit., p. 14.

[77] Sec. 19.
[78] See fn. 61, supra.
[79] Secs. 20 and 21.
[80] See fn. 53, supra.
[81] 4 Stat. 729, 733.
[82] H. Rept., op. cit., pp. 13, 14.
[83] Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 735.
[84] H. Rept., op. cit., pp. 2, 3. See Chapter 2, sec. 1B.
[85] Secs. 1, 2, 8.

emigrate their supposed share of the annuity. Whatever may have been the policy which gave rise to it, neither policy nor justice requires its continuance.

With a view to prevent frauds of another kind, in reference principally to the payment of goods, the President is authorized to appoint an officer of rank to superintend the payment of annuities. This, and the provision relating to the purchase of goods for the Indians, will place sufficient guards to prevent fraudulent payments.

The committee have reason to believe abuses have existed in relation to the supply of goods for presents at the making of treaties, or to fulfil treaty stipulations. Those for presents are at the loss of the Government. Those under treaty stipulations are at the loss of the Indians. The goods for presents have been usually furnished by the Indian traders, and at an advance of from 60 to 100 per cent. This the Government has been obliged to submit to, or the trader will make use of his influence to prevent a treaty. Should this in future be attempted, the Government will now have a sufficient remedy by revoking the license. The goods furnished under treaties have been charged at (what has been represented as a moderate rate) an advance of 50 per cent, and at that rate delivered to the Indians. It is now provided that the goods in both cases are to be purchased by an agent of the Government; and where there is time (as in case of goods purchased under treaties) they are to be purchased on proposals based on previous notice.[86]

The objective of staffing the Indian Service itself with Indians was embodied in a provision of section 9 of this act reading:

> And in all cases of the appointments of interpreters or other persons employed for the benefit of the Indians, a preference shall be given to persons of Indian descent, if such can be found, who are properly qualified for the execution of the duties.[87]

A related objective was to be achieved by the following provision in section 9, which is law to this day (except that the Secretary of the Interior has succeeded to the powers of the Secretary of War):

> And where any of the tribes are, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, competent to direct the employment of their blacksmiths, mechanics, teachers, farmers, or other persons engaged for them, the direction of such persons may be given to the proper authority of the tribe.[88]

The purpose behind these provisions is illuminated by a passage in the Committee report which declares:

> The education of the Indians is a subject of deep interest to them and to us. It is now proposed to allow them some direction in it, with the assent of the President, under the superintendence of the Governor, so far as their annuities (K) are concerned; and that a preference should be given to educated youth, in all the employments of which they are capable, as traders, interpreters, schoolmasters, farmers, mechanics, &c.; and that the course of their education should be so directed as to render them capable of those employments. Why educate the Indians unless their education can be turned to some practical use? and why educate them even for a practical use, and yet refuse to employ them?[89]

Other provisions of the act in question prohibit employees of the Indian Department from having "any interest or concern in any trade with the Indians, except for, and on account of, the United States."[90]

Provisions of earlier acts with respect to supplies and rations are reenacted (secs. 15 and 16). The latter provision is a reenactment of section 2 of the Act of May 13, 1800, authorizing issuance of rations to Indians at military posts.[91]

Section 17 centralizes responsibility for regulations authorized by law in the following terms:

> That the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may think fit, for carrying into effect the various provisions of this act, and of any other act relating to Indian affairs, and for the settlement of the accounts of the Indian department.[92]

The purpose of this section is set forth in the following language of the Committee report:

> The President is authorized to make the necessary regulations for carrying into effect the several acts relating to Indian affairs. In 1829, such regulations having reference to the laws then in force, were reported to the House by Messrs. Clark and Cass, commissioners appointed for that purpose. They appear to have been drawn with great care, and, with such alterations as the bills reported require, would, in the opinion of the committee, be proper and efficient; and should the acts reported pass, it would be proper to have the regulations reported to Congress at the next session, when they can be adopted by an act of Congress, or go into operation under the general provision referred to.[93]

The fifth important segment of the existing law on Indian affairs that took shape under legislation of the 1830's is that relating to payments made to tribes, by reason of treaty provisions, by the Federal Government from proceeds derived from the disposition of ceded Indian lands. The Act of January 9, 1837,[94] comprises three sections containing provisions of substantive law. The first section[95] requires the deposit in the United States Treasury of moneys received from the sale of lands ceded to the United States by treaties providing either for the investment or for the payment of such proceeds to the Indians.

Section 2 of the act[96] provides:

> That all sums that are or may be required to be paid, and all moneys that are or may be required to be invested by said treaties, are hereby appropriated in conformity to them, and shall be drawn from the Treasury as other public moneys are drawn therefrom, under such instructions as may from time to time be given by the President.

Section 3[97] declares:

> That all investments of stock, that are or may be required by said treaties, shall be made under the direction of the President; and special accounts of the funds under said treaties shall be kept at the Treasury, and statements thereof be anually laid before Congress.

These provisions of law established what was for a long time the basis of handling Indian tribal funds derived from sales of ceded land. As the sums involved increased year by year the handling of them became more and more important as providing the sustenance upon which the activities of the Indian Service were based.

---

[86] H. Rept., op. cit., pp. 9, 10.

[87] Sec. 9, 4 Stat. 735, 737, R. S. § 2069, 25 U. S. C. 45. See Chapter 8, sec. 4B.

[88] Ibid. See Chapter 7, sec. 10.

[89] H. Rept., op. cit., p. 20.

[90] Sec. 14, 4 Stat. 735, 738. See Chapter 2, sec. 3B, fn. 335.

[91] See fns. 43–45, supra.

[92] R. S. § 465, 25 U. S. C. 9. See Chapter 5, sec. 8.

[93] H. Rept., op. cit., pp. 22, 23.

[94] C. 1, 5 Stat. 135.

[95] R. S. § 2093, 25 U. S. C. 152

[96] R. S. § 2094, 25 U. S. C. 153.

[97] R. S. § 2095, 25 U. S. C. 157.

SECTION 7. LEGISLATION FROM 1840 TO 1849

During the decade of the 1840's two statutes were enacted which have impressed a lasting mark upon federal Indian law. The first of these was the Act of March 3, 1847,[98] which amended in various respects the comprehensive legislation of June 30, 1834.[99] These amendments included a broadening of the language of the Indian liquor legislation.[100] Section 3 of the 1847 [101] act relaxed the requirement that had been established by the 1834 legislation to the effect that moneys due tribes should be paid to tribal officers, and authorized payment of such moneys "to the heads of families and other individuals entitled to participate therein." This, in effect, substituted the judgment of federal officials for that of tribal governments on the question of tribal membership, so far as the disposition of funds was concerned. This provision was the first in a long series of statutes designed to individualize tribal property.[102]

[98] 9 Stat. 203.
[99] See sec. 6, supra.
[100] Sec. 2 of the 1847 act amended sec. 20, Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729.
[101] Amending sec. 11, Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 735.
[102] See Chapter 2, secs. 2C, 2E, for a discussion of official policy on that point.

The same section of the 1847 act contains a prohibition against the payment of annuities to Indians while there is liquor in the vicinity.[103]

A second statute of the 1840's which has had an important bearing upon Indian administration is the Act of March 3, 1849,[104] establishing "a new executive department of the government of the United States, to be called the Department of the Interior; the head of which department shall be called the Secretary of the Interior * * *." [105] Section 5 of this act declared:

> That the Secretary of the Interior shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers now exercised by the Secretary of the War Department, in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of money out of the treasury, on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates or accounts by the Second Auditor and Second Comptroller of the Treasury.

This marked the termination of direct War Department control over the Indian problem.

[103] See Chapter 15, sec. 23B.
[104] 9 Stat. 395. See Chapter 2, sec. 1B.
[105] Sec. 1.

SECTION 8. LEGISLATION FROM 1850 TO 1859

Throughout the decade of the 1850's treaties rather than legislation formed the growing point of Indian law, and little legislation of a general and permanent character was enacted. Three minor statutory provisions which date from this period deserve note.

Section 3 of the Appropriation Act of March 3, 1853 [106] prohibits the payment to attorneys or agents of sums due to Indians or Indian tribes and prohibits the executive branch of the Government from recognizing any contract between Indians and their attorneys or agents for the prosecution of claims against the United States.

The Act of March 27, 1854,[107] contained an important amendment of sections 20 and 25 of the Act of June 30, 1834 [108] which had the effect of removing from the jurisdiction of the federal courts Indians committing various offenses against non-Indians in the Indian country who have "been punished by the local law of the tribe * * *." [109]

Sections 4 and 5 of this act mark the beginnings of a rudimentary criminal code for the Indian country. It covered arson [110] and assault by a white man against an Indian or by an Indian against a white man, with a deadly weapon and with intent to kill or maim.[111]

A third statutory provision enacted in this decade was section 2 of the Appropriation Act of June 12, 1858.[112] This section, symbolic of the growing concentration of power in the hands of the Commissioner, declared that that officer might > * * * remove from any tribal reservation any person found therein without authority of law, or whose presence within the limits of the reservation may, in his judgment, be detrimental to the peace and welfare of the Indians. * * *

That aggrandizement of power by the administrative authorities was feared by Congress even at the time extreme powers were being conferred upon such administrative authorities, is indicated by section 7 of the Act of February 28, 1859 [113] authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, > to prepare rules and regulations for the government of the Indian service, and for trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes and the regulations of their affairs; and when approved by the President shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States for its approval: Provided, That such laws, rules, and regulations proposed shall not be in force until enacted by Congress.

It does not appear that this mandate was ever executed.

The same statute which carried the foregoing direction also contained a provision repealing prior legislation under which the United States had undertaken to indemnify whites suffering from Indian trespasses.[114]

Important legislation enacted during this decade relating to the pueblos is elsewhere discussed.[115]

[106] 10 Stat. 226, 239.
[107] C. 26, sec. 3, 10 Stat. 269.
[108] 4 Stat. 729. See sec. 6, supra.
[109] See Chapter 18, sec. 4.
[110] Sec. 4, 10 Stat. 269, 270, R. S. § 2143, 25 U. S. C. 212.
[111] Sec. 5, R. S. § 2142, 25 U. S. C. 213.
[112] 11 Stat. 329, 332, R. S. § 2149, 25 U. S. C. 222, repealed by Act of May 21, 1934, 42 Stat. 787.
[113] C. 66, 11 Stat. 388, 401.
[114] Sec. 8, R. S. § 2156, 25 U. S. C. 229, repealing sec. 17 of Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729, 731–732.
[115] See discussion of Act of December 22, 1858, 11 Stat. 374, in Chapter 20, sec. 3A.

SECTION 9. LEGISLATION FROM 1860 TO 1869

The decade of the 1860's is marked by an increasing volume of general Indian legislation, coincident with a decline in the use of Indian treaties as an instrument of national policy. These statutes for the most part strengthened or modified earlier provisions affecting Indian trade and intercourse. To a certain extent they mark new advances along the path of individualization of Indian property.[116]

The Act of February 13, 1862,[117] contains a comprehensive restatement of the Indian liquor law.

The Act of June 14, 1862,[118] entitled "An act to protect the property of Indians who have adopted the habits of civilized life," included three sections which have remained law to this day. The first section provides that when a member of a tribe has had a portion of tribal land allotted to him in severalty the superintendent "shall take such measures, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary to protect such Indian in the quiet enjoyment of the land so allotted to him." [119] The second section of the act provides for punishment of any unallotted Indian who trespasses upon an allotment, through a deduction of damages from future annuities and payment thereof to the injured party.[120] The third section provides that if the trespasser is a chief or headman he shall be removed from office for 3 months.[121] This legislation is evidence of the resistance which the new allotment system was already encountering from tribal Indians who did not wish to see tribal lands checker-boarded with private boundary lines.[122]

A proviso in the first section of the Appropriation Act of July 5, 1862,[123] authorizes the President, > * * * in cases where the tribal organization of any Indian tribe shall be in actual hostility to the United States, * * * to declare all treaties with such tribe to be abrogated by such tribe, if, in his opinion, the same can be done consistently with good faith and legal and national obligations.

Section 6 of the same act deprives guardians appointed by the several Indian tribes of the right to receive "moneys due to incompetent or orphan Indians." [124]

The Appropriation Act of March 3, 1865,[125] contains, as do most of the appropriation acts enacted in this period, a number of provisions of substantive law which have little or no relation to appropriations. Sections 8 and 9, emanating no doubt from the disturbed conditions attending the conclusion of the Civil War and the re-uniting of the sadly divided tribes of the Indian Territory, provide: [126]

> SEC. 8. That any person who may drive or remove, except as hereinafter provided, any cattle, horses, or other stock from the Indian Territory for the purposes of trade or commerce, shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.
>
> SEC. 9. That the agent of each tribe of Indians, lawfully residing in the said Indian Territory, be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell for the benefit of said Indians any cattle, horses, or other live stock belonging to said Indians, and not required for their use and subsistence, under such regulations as shall be established by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That nothing in this and the preceding section shall interfere with the execution of any order lawfully issued by the Secretary of War, connected with the movement or subsistence of the troops of the United States.

Both these provisions are still law.

The Joint Resolution of March 3, 1865,[127] marked a step in the fulfillment of a promise made by President Lincoln that upon the conclusion of the Civil War, if he survived, the Indian system should be reformed.[127a] This resolution directed a thoroughgoing inquiry into the treatment of the Indian tribes by the civil and military authorities. The results of this investigation are elsewhere discussed.[128]

The Act of July 27, 1868,[129] marks a final step in the consolidation of administrative control over Indian affairs in the Department of the Interior. Section 1 of this act [130] transfers to the Secretary of the Interior all "supervisory and appellate powers and duties in regard to Indian affairs, which may now by law be vested in the said Secretary of the Treasury * * *."

[116] For history of allotment policy, see Chapter 11, sec. 1. On treaty provisions on allotments see Chapter 3, sec. 4G.
[117] C. 24, 12 Stat. 338.
[118] 12 Stat. 427.
[119] R. S. § 2119, 25 U. S. C. 185.
[120] R. S. § 2120, 25 U. S. C. 186.
[121] R. S. § 2121, 25 U. S. C. 187.
[122] See Chapter 2, secs. 2 B, C, and D.
[123] 12 Stat. 512, 528, R. S. § 2080, 25 U. S. C. 72.
[124] R. S. § 2108, 25 U. S. C. 159.
[125] 13 Stat. 541, 563.
[126] Sec. 8, R. S. § 2138, amended by Act of June 30, 1919, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 9, 25 U. S. C. 214; sec. 9, R. S. § 2127, 25 U. S. C. 192.
[127] No. 33, 13 Stat. 572.
[127a] See H. B. Whipple, Lights and Shadows of a Long Episcopate (1899), p. 137.
[128] See Chapter 2, sec. 1B, fn. 42 and sec. 2C.
[129] 15 Stat. 228.
[130] Embodied in part in R. S. § 463, 25 U. S. C. 2.

SECTION 10. LEGISLATION FROM 1870 TO 1879

The 1870's marked the first decade in which the growth of federal Indian law was entirely a matter of legislation rather than of treaty. The decade is marked by a steady increase in the statutory powers vested in the officials of the Indian Service and by a steady narrowing of the rights of individual Indians and Indian tribes.[131] Nevertheless, as we have elsewhere noted, the termination of treaty-making did not stop the process of treating with the Indians by agreement.[132]

The Appropriation Act of March 3, 1871, provided not only for the termination of treaty-making with Indian tribes,[133] but also, (sec. 3), for the withdrawal from noncitizen Indians and from Indian tribes of power to make contracts involving the payment of money for services relative to Indian lands or claims against the United States, unless such contracts should be approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. Since many of the grievances of the Indians were grievances against these officers, the Indians were effectually deprived by this statute of one of the most basic rights known to the common law, the right to free choice of counsel for the redress of injuries. These prohibitions were amplified by the Act of May 21, 1872.[134]

[131] See Chapter 2, sec. 2C.
[132] Chapter 3, secs. 5 and 6; Chapters 2, sec. 2C.
[133] 16 Stat. 544, 566, R. S. § 2079, 25 U. S. C. 71. See Chapter 3, sec. 5.
[134] 17 Stat. 136, sec. 1, R. S. § 2103, 25 U. S. C. 81; sec. 2, R. S. § 2104, 25 U. S. C. 82, and R. S. § 2106, 25 U. S. C. 84; sec. 3, R. S. § 2105, 25 U. S. C. 83.

The effect of this legislation upon the rights of Indians [135] and Indian tribes [136] is elsewhere discussed.

A remarkable enactment of this period was that requiring Indian creditors of the United States to perform useful labor as a condition of receiving payments of money or goods which the United States was pledged to make. Such a provision, constituting permanent legislation, appears in section 3 of the Appropriation Act of June 22, 1874,[137] and again in section 3 of the Appropriation Act of March 3, 1875.[138]

An appropriation act of the following year consolidates power over Indian traders in the hands of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in the following terms:

> And hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall have the sole power and authority to appoint Traders to the Indian tribes and to make such rules and regulations as he may deem just and proper specifying the kind and quantity of goods and the prices at which such goods shall be sold to the Indians.[139]

During this period legislation was enacted requiring each agent having supplies to distribute > to make out, at the commencement of each fiscal year, rolls of the Indians entitled to supplies at the agency, with the names of the Indians and of the heads of families or lodges, with the number in each family or lodge, and to give out supplies to the heads of families, and not to the heads of tribes or bands, and not to give out supplies for a greater length of time than one week in advance.[140]

While these successive grants of power were being made to the administrative officers of the Indian department, a series of complaints against the abuses of power was leading to the multiplication of specific prohibitions against various administrative practices. Most of these prohibitions are comparatively unimportant, but mention should be made of provisions prohibiting Government employees from having any personal interest in various types of Indian trade and commercial activities relating thereto.[141]

[135] See Chapter 8, sec. 7.
[136] See Chapter 14, sec. 5.
[137] 18 Stat. 146, 176. See Chapter 12, sec. 1, Chapter 15, sec. 23A.
[138] 18 Stat. 420, 449.
[139] Sec. 5, Act of August 15, 1866, 19 Stat. 176, 200, 25 U. S. C. 261.
[140] Sec. 4, Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 420, 449, 25 U. S. C. 133.
[141] Sec. 10, Act of June 22, 1874, 18 Stat. 146, 177, 25 U. S. C. 87. Cf. fn. 90, supra. And see Chapter 2, sec. 2B, fn. 141 and sec. 3B, fn. 335.

SECTION 11. LEGISLATION FROM 1880 TO 1889

The decade of the 1880's was marked by the rapid settlement and development of the West. As an incident to this process, legislation providing for acquisition of lands and resources from the Indians was demanded. Ethical justification for this was found in the theory of assimilation. If the Indian would only adopt the habits of civilized life he would not need so much land, and the surplus would be available for white settlers. The process of allotment and civilization was deemed as important for Indian welfare as for the welfare of non-Indians.

The first general statutory provision relating to disposition of Indian resources, other than land itself, is found in a paragraph of section 2 of the Act of March 3, 1883,[142] which declares:

> The proceeds of all pasturage and sales of timber, coal, or other product of any Indian reservation, except those of the five civilized tribes, and not the result of the labor of any member of such tribe, shall be covered into the Treasury for the benefit of such tribe under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe; and the Secretary shall report his action in detail to Congress at its next session.

For some peculiar reason, this fund came to be known as "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor." The present status of funds so classified is dealt with elsewhere.[143]

A few years later this provision was supplemented by the Act of February 16, 1889,[144] authorizing the sale of dead timber on Indian reservations under such regulations as the President might prescribe.

Meanwhile the process of assimilation, on its moral side, was demanding congressional attention. Shocked by the Crow Dog case,[145] Congress appended to the Appropriation Act of March 3, 1885, a section [146] specifying seven major crimes over which the federal courts were henceforth to exercise jurisdiction, even though both the offender and the victim were Indians and therefore subject only to tribal jurisdiction in the absence of congressional statute.[147]

The same act that contained the "seven crimes" provision embodied a comprehensive attempt to deal with the problem of Indian depredations by providing for a general investigation by the Secretary of the Interior into depredation claims where treaties with Indian tribes authorized the United States to pay damages out of moneys due to the tribes.[148]

The most important statute of the decade is, of course, the General Allotment Act,[149] frequently referred to as the Dawes Act. The objectives of this legislation and the legal problems which it raised are elsewhere discussed.[150] For the sake of the general historical picture, a brief summary of the provisions of this act may be offered.

The first section authorizes the President to allot tribal lands in designated quantities to reservation Indians.[151] The second section provides that the Indian allottees shall, so far as practicable, make their own selections of land so as to embrace improvements already made.[152] Section 3 provides that allotments shall be made by agents, regular or special.[153] Section 4 allows "any Indian not residing upon a reservation, or for whose tribe no reservation has been provided" to secure an allotment upon the public domain.[154]

Section 5 provides that title in trust to allotments shall be held by the United States for 25 years, or longer if the President deems an extension desirable. During this trust period encumbrances or conveyances are void. In general, the laws of descent and partition in the state or territory where the lands are situate apply after patents have been executed and delivered. If any surplus lands remain after the allotments have been made, the Secretary is authorized to negotiate with the tribe for the purchase of such land by the United States, purchase money to be

[142] 22 Stat. 582, 590, 25 U. S. C. 155.
[143] See Chapter 5, sec. 10; Chapter 15, sec. 23.
[144] 25 Stat. 673, 25 U. S. C. 196. See Chapter 15, sec. 15.
[145] See Chapter 7, sec. 2.
[146] Sec. 9, 23 Stat. 362, 385, later incorporated, with amendments, in 18 U. S. C. 548.
[147] See Chapter 7, sec. 9.
[148] Act of March 3, 1885, 23 Stat. 362, 376. Authorization to continue this investigation is found in the Appropriation Act of May 15, 1886, 24 Stat. 29, 44.
[149] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388.
[150] See Chapter 11, sec. 1, and Chapter 13, sec. 3B.
[151] See 25 U. S. C. 331.
[152] 24 Stat. 388, 25 U. S. C. 332.
[153] 24 Stat. 388, 389. See 25 U. S. C. 333.
[154] 24 Stat. 388, 389, 25 U. S. C. 334.

held in trust for the sole use of the tribes to whom the reservation belonged but subject to appropriation by Congress for the education and civilization of such tribe or its members. This section also contains an important provision for the preference of Indians in employment in the Federal Government.[155]

Section 6 of the act sets forth the nonpecuniary benefits which the Indians are to receive in view of the destruction of tribal property and tribal existence which the act contemplates.[156]

Section 7 of the act provides the basic law upon which water rights to allotments have been measured.[157]

The remainder of the act contains sections which exempt from the allotment legislation various tribes of the Indian Territory, the reservations of the Seneca Nation in New York, and an Executive order reservation in the State of Nebraska, and which authorize appropriations for surveys. In addition, the act contains various saving clauses for the maintenance of then existing congressional and administrative powers.

[155] 24 Stat. 388, 389, 25 U. S. C. 348. See Chapter 6, sec. 2A, and Chapter 8, sec. 4B(3)(b).
[156] 24 Stat. 388, 390. See 25 U. S. C. 349. And see Chapter 8, sec. 2A(3).
[157] 24 Stat. 388, 390, 25 U. S. C. 381. See Chapter 11, sec. 3.

In the following year the process of amending the Allotment Act began. Section 2 of the Act of October 19, 1888,[158] authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to accept surrenders of patents by Indian allottees. A proviso permits the Indian allottee, if he so chooses, to make a lieu selection.

A critical point in the process of assimilation arose in the intermarriage of white men and Indian women. The so-called "squawmen" were in many cases individuals who took unto themselves at least a proportionate share of tribal property and tribal control. Section 1 of the Act of August 9, 1888,[159] provided, that, with the exception of the Five Civilized Tribes, intermarried whites should not by such marriage acquire "any right to any tribal property, privilege, or interest whatever to which any member of such tribe is entitled." Section 2 provided that an Indian woman married to a white man shall by such marriage become a citizen of the United States, without detriment to her rights of participation in tribal property.[160] The third section of the act[161] dealt with evidence required to show marriage.

[158] 25 Stat. 611, 612, 25 U. S. C. 350.
[159] 25 Stat. 392, 25 U. S. C. 181.
[160] 25 U. S. C. 182.
[161] 25 U. S. C. 183.

SECTION 12. LEGISLATION FROM 1890 TO 1899

The decade of the 1890's shows no sweeping legislation comparable in scope to the General Allotment Act, but rather embodies piecemeal development of earlier statutes. This development proceeds along four main lines: (1) Amendments to the Allotment Act, particularly for the purpose of permitting leases of allotments; (2) the development of a body of law governing Indian education; (3) increased protection for individual Indian rights; and (4) the clearing up of Indian depredation claims.

Under the first heading may be listed the Act of February 28, 1891.[162] The first two sections modified those provisions of the General Allotment Act relating to the amounts of land to be allotted. Section 3 of the act[163] permits the leasing of individual allotments, under rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, wherever the Secretary finds that the allottee, "by reason of age or other disability," cannot "personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment or any part thereof."

A proviso of this section permits leasing of tribal lands, where such lands are occupied by Indians who have bought and paid for them, "by authority of the Council speaking for such Indians," but "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Section 4 of the act supplements previous legislation on homestead allotments.[164] Section 5 of the act provides that for purposes of descent, cohabitation "according to the custom and manner of Indian life" shall be considered valid marriage.[165]

Further amendments to the allotment system adopted during this decade include provisions extending leasing privileges,[166] conferring jurisdiction upon the federal courts to adjudicate suits for allotments,[167] and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct errors in patents, and particularly in cases of "double allotment."[168]

Of the numerous statutes on Indian education enacted during the decade of the 1890's the earliest confer a large measure of authority upon the administrative officials, and the later statutes proceed to limit that authority. The Appropriation Act of July 13, 1892,[169] includes a provision[170] authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to make and enforce regulations to secure the attendance of Indian children "at schools established and maintained for their benefit."

The Appropriation Act of March 3, 1893,[171] contains a provision[172] authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to > * * * prevent the issuing of rations or the furnishing of subsistence either in money or in kind to the head of any Indian family for or on account of any Indian child or children between the ages of eight and twenty-one years who shall not have attended school during the preceding year in accordance with such regulations.

This tactic apparently created considerable Indian and public resentment, as did the parallel practice of taking children from their parents and sending them to distant nonreservation boarding schools.[173] Section 11 of the Appropriation Act of August 15, 1894,[174] prohibits the sending of children to schools outside the state or territory of their residence without the consent of their parents or natural guardians, and forbids the withholding of rations as a technique for securing such consent. This provision is reenacted in the Appropriation Act of March 2, 1895,[175] and, again, the Appropriation Act of June 10, 1896,[176] provides "That hereafter no Indian child shall be taken from any school in any State or Territory to a school in any other State against its will or without the written consent of its parents."[177]

A further limitation upon the broad authority of administrative officers over Indian education is found in a provision of the Appropriation Act of June 7, 1897[178] declaring it to be the [162] 26 Stat. 794.

[163] See 25 U. S. C. 395.
[164] See 25 U. S. C. 336.
[165] 25 U. S. C. 371.
[166] Act of August 15, 1894, 28 Stat. 286, 305, 25 U. S. C. 402.
[167] Act of August 15, 1894, 28 Stat. 286, 305, 25 U. S. C. 345.
[168] Act of January 26, 1895, 28 Stat. 641, 25 U. S. C. 343.
[169] 27 Stat. 120.
[170] 27 Stat. 120, 143, 25 U. S. C. 284.
[171] 27 Stat. 612.
[172] 27 Stat. 612, 628, 25 U. S. C. 283.
[173] See Tucker, Massacring the Indians, 1927, American Indian Life (October-November 1927 Supplement) 6, 9.
[174] 28 Stat. 286, 313–314.
[175] 28 Stat. 876, 906, 25 U. S. C. 286.
[176] 29 Stat. 321, 348.
[177] 25 U. S. C. 287.
[178] 30 Stat. 62, 79, 25 U. S. C. 278. See Chapter 12, sec. 2D.

policy of Congress to "make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school."

The role which these various statutes on Indian education have had in the development of the present law governing that subject is elsewhere discussed.[179]

Concern for the protection of individual Indian rights was one of the more constructive consequences of the allotment legislation. The Appropriation Act of March 3, 1893,[180] contains a provision, elsewhere discussed,[181] requiring United States district attorneys to render legal services to Indians. Further concern for individual Indian rights is indicated by section 10 of the Appropriation Act of August 15, 1894,[182] requiring the Interior Department to employ Indians in all employments in the Indian Service wherever practicable.

The final subject of importance covered in the legislation of the 1890's is the subject of Indian depredations. The Act of March 3, 1891,[183] established a comprehensive basis upon which all pending depredation claims were, in a comparatively short time, disposed of by the Court of Claims.[184]

[179] See Chapter 12, sec. 2.
[180] 27 Stat. 612, 631, 25 U. S. C. 175.
[181] See Chapter 12, sec. 8.
[182] 28 Stat. 286, 313, 25 U. S. C. 44. See Chapter 8, sec. 4B.
[183] 26 Stat. 851.
[184] See Chapter 14, sec. 1.

SECTION 13. LEGISLATION FROM 1900 TO 1909

Legislation of the decade from 1900 through 1909, like that of the preceding decade, consists almost entirely of piece-meal additions to and modifications of past legislation. The center of gravity is throughout the decade almost entirely in the problem of how Indian lands or interests therein may be transferred from Indian tribe to individual Indian or from individual Indian to individual white man.

Authorization for individual leasing of allotments is contained in the Appropriation Act of May 31, 1900.[185]

The Act of February 6, 1901 [186] amplifies prior legislation allowing the Indian a day in court to prove his right to an allotment.

The Appropriation Act of March 3, 1901, contains a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant rights-of-way in the nature of easements across tribal and allotted lands for telephone and telegraph lines and offices.[187] The same section contains a provision subjecting allotted lands to condemnation under the laws of the state or territory in which they are located.[188]

The Appropriation Act of May 27, 1902, established a procedure whereby the adult heirs of a deceased allottee may convey lands in heirship status with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.[189]

The Appropriation Act of June 21, 1906, contains three important provisions of substantive law.[190] In the first place it permits the President to continue the trust period or period of restriction during which allotted land is inalienable.[191] Another provision of this statute provides that:

> No lands acquired under the provisions of this Act shall, in any event, become liable to the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the issuing of the final patent in fee therefor.[192]

A third item of general legislation in this appropriation act declares:

> That no money accruing from any lease or sale of lands held in trust by the United States for any Indian shall become liable for the payment of any debt of, or claim against, such Indian contracted or arising during such trust period, or, in case of a minor, during his minority, except with the approval and consent of the Secretary of the Interior.[193]

While a provision in the foregoing act had established an administrative powers to continue restrictions on Indian land beyond the point at which they were to have ceased, a provision in the Appropriation Act of March 1, 1907,[194] extended administrative discretion and flexibility in the opposite direction. Under this legislation sale of restricted land was to be permitted prior to the time when such restriction was to have expired "under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe" and the proceeds might be used for the benefit of the vendor "under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs." [195]

The Act of March 2, 1907,[196] entitled "An Act Providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds," applies to the realm of funds the principles applied to land in the General Allotment Act. Under section 1 of this act,[197] the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to designate Indians deemed capable of managing their own affairs and to allot to such Indians a pro rata share of tribal funds, upon the application of the Indian. Section 2 of this act,[198] authorized payment, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of their pro rata share of tribal funds to Indians mentally or physically disabled.[199]

The Act of May 29, 1908, extended the authority to sell allotted lands, permitting the Secretary to make such sales upon the death of the original allottee and permitting and authorizing the issuance of a patent to the vendee of such Indian heirship lands.[200]

The Appropriation Act of March 3, 1909, authorizes the grant of Indian lands to railroads for various designated purposes.[201]

The same statute authorizes leasing of allotted lands for mining purposes [202] under terms approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

A third substantive item contained in this appropriation act authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make such arrangements as he deems to be "for the best interest of the Indians" in connection with irrigation projects affecting Indian reservation lands.[203]

In general it may be said that these provisions introduce an element of administrative discretion and flexibility into a system which when originally proposed had been considered a means of releasing the Indian from dependence upon administrative authorities.

[185] 31 Stat. 221, 229. See fn. 163, supra.
[186] 31 Stat. 760.
[187] Sec. 3, 31 Stat. 1058, 1083, 25 U. S. C. 319.
[188] Sec. 3, 31 Stat. 1058, 1084, 25 U. S. C. 357.
[189] Sec. 7, 32 Stat. 245, 275, 25 U. S. C. 379. And see Chapter 11 sec. 6C.
[190] 34 Stat. 325.
[191] 34 Stat. 325, 326, 25 U. S. C. 391.
[192] 34 Stat. 325, 327, 25 U. S. C. 354.
[193] 34 Stat. 325, 327, 25 U. S. C. 410.
[194] 34 Stat. 1015.
[195] 34 Stat. 1015, 1018, 25 U. S. C. 405.
[196] 34 Stat. 1221.
[197] 25 U. S. C. 119. See Chapter 10, sec. 4.
[198] See 25 U. S. C. 121.
[199] See Chapter 10, sec. 4.
[200] 35 Stat. 444, 25 U. S. C. 404. Also see Chapter 5, sec. 11.
[201] 35 Stat. 781, 25 U. S. C. 320.
[202] 35 Stat. 781, 783, 25 U. S. C. 396. See Chapter 11, sec. 5.
[203] 35 Stat. 781, 798, 25 U. S. C. 382.

SECTION 14. LEGISLATION FROM 1910 TO 1919

During the decade from 1910 through 1919, two trends dominate Indian legislation. In the first place, the allotment system is rendered more flexible and administrative powers in connection with the allotment system are greatly expanded. In the second place, the attempt to wind up tribal existence reaches a new high point and various powers formerly vested in the tribes are transferred by Congress to administrative officials.

Except for the single act of June 25, 1910,[204] which constitutes a comprehensive revision of the allotment law,[205] all the significant general legislation of this period is tucked away in provisions of appropriation acts.

The first such measure is found in a proviso of the Appropriation Act of April 4, 1910,[206] which makes specific the powers conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior the year before[207] with regard to irrigation projects on Indian reservations.[208]

The Act of June 25, 1910,[209] constitutes what is probably the most important revision of the General Allotment Act that has been made. Based on 33 years of experience in the administration of the act, it seeks to fill gaps and deficiencies brought to light in the course of that period. These relate particularly (a) to the administration of estates of allottees, (b) to the making of leases and timber contracts for allotted lands, and (c) to the cancellation or relinquishment of trust patents.

Section 1 of this act[210] sets forth a comprehensive plan for the administration of allottees' estates, conferring plenary authority upon the Secretary of the Interior to administer such estates and to sell heirship lands. Section 2[211] authorizes testamentary disposition of allotments with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Section 3[212] permits relinquishment of allotments by allottees in favor of unallotted children, who had been completely ignored in the original scheme of allotment to living Indians, and sale of surplus lands to whites.

Section 4 of the act[213] permits leasing of Indian allotments held by trust patent for periods not to exceed 5 years in accordance with regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, and confers upon the Secretary power to supervise or expend for the Indians' benefit the rentals thereby received. Section 5[214] makes it unlawful to induce an Indian to execute any conveyance of land held in trust, or interests therein, thus taking account of a practice which had resulted in large losses of Indian land through fraudulent or semifraudulent means. Section 6[215] contains various provisions for the protection of Indian timber against trespass and fire. Section 7[216] contains a general authorization for the sale of timber on unallotted lands under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Section 8[217] contains a similar authorization for timber sales on restricted allotted lands.

Section 13 of the act[218] authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to reserve from entry Indian power and reservoir sites, and the following section[219] authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to cancel patents covering such sites upon making allotment of other lands of equal value and reimbursing the Indian for improvements on the cancelled allotment. Other sections contain minor amendments to the General Allotment Act and related legislation.[220]

The provision of this act relating to testamentary disposition of allotments was amended and amplified by the Act of February 14, 1913.[221] As amplified, the privilege of testamentary disposition subject to departmental approval is extended not only to Indians possessed of allotments, but also to Indians having individual Indian moneys or other property held in trust by the United States.[222]

The Appropriation Act of June 30, 1913, declares:[223]

> No contract made with any Indian, where such contract relates to the tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States, shall be valid, nor shall any payment for services rendered in relation thereto be made unless the consent of the United States has previously been given.

The Appropriation Act of August 1, 1914, contains provisions of substantive law authorizing quarantine of Indians afflicted with contagious diseases,[224] and gives recognition to the existence of agency jails by requiring reports of confinements therein.[225]

Contained in the Appropriation Act of May 18, 1916, is a provision authorizing the leasing of allotted lands susceptible of irrigation where the Indian owner, by reason of age or disability, cannot personally occupy or improve the land.[226]

The same appropriation act includes a mandate to the Secretary of the Interior to make a comprehensive report of the use to which tribal funds have been put by administrative authorities. A proviso to this mandate which has become an important part of existing Indian law declares that following the submission of such report, in December 1917—

> no money shall be expended from Indian tribal funds without specific appropriation by Congress except as follows: Equalization of allotments, education of Indian children in accordance with existing law, per capita and other payments, all of which are hereby continued in full force and effect: Provided further, That this shall not change existing law with reference to the Five Civilized Tribes.[227]

The Appropriation Act of May 25, 1918, contains a number of "economy" provisions, the most important of which is that prohibiting the use of appropriations, other than those made pursuant to treaties—> to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided.[228]

Another provision of this appropriation act contains a reminder of the recent admission of the states of New Mexico and Arizona

---

[204] 36 Stat. 855.

[205] See H. Rept. No. 1, 135, 61st Cong., 2d sess., April 24, 1910, for a comprehensive outline of the purposes of the act (H. R. 24992).

[206] 36 Stat. 269, 270.

[207] Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 798. See fn. 203, supra.

[208] 36 Stat. 269, 270, 271, 25 U. S. C. 383–385. See Chapter 12, sec. 7.

[209] 36 Stat. 855.

[210] 36 Stat. 855, 25 U. S. C. 372.

[211] 36 Stat. 855, 856, 25 U. S. C. 373.

[212] 36 Stat. 855, 856, 25 U. S. C. 408.

[213] 36 Stat. 855, 856, 25 U. S. C. 403.

[214] 36 Stat. 855, 857, 18 U. S. C. 115.

[215] 36 Stat. 855, 857, 18 U. S. C. 104, 107.

[216] 36 Stat. 855, 857, 25 U. S. C. 407.

[217] 36 Stat. 855, 857, 25 U. S. C. 406.

[218] 36 Stat. 855, 858, 43 U. S. C. 148.

[219] 36 Stat. 855, 859, 25 U. S. C. 352.

[220] See sec. 16, 36 Stat. 855, 859 (incorporated in 25 U. S. C. 312) (rights-of-way); sec. 17, 36 Stat. 855, 859 (incorporated in 25 U. S. C. 331) (amending secs. 1 and 4 of the original allotment act); sec. 31, 36 Stat. 855, 863, 25 U. S. C. 337 (allotments within national forests).

[221] 37 Stat. 678. See 25 U. S. C. 373.

[222] See Chapter 10, sec. 10; Chapter 11, sec. 6. See also Sen. Rept. No. 720, 62d Cong. 2d sess., May 9, 1912, on H. R. 1332.

[223] 38 Stat. 77, 97, 25 U. S. C. 85. See Chapter 8, Sec. 7.

[224] 38 Stat. 582, 584, 25 U. S. C. 198.

[225] 38 Stat. 582, 586, 25 U. S. C. 200.

[226] 39 Stat. 123, 128, 25 U. S. C. 394. See Chapter 11, sec. 5.

[227] 39 Stat. 123, 158–159, 25 U. S. C. 123.

[228] 40 Stat. 561, 564, 25 U. S. C. 297.

to the Union, in the form of a prohibition against the executive creation of further Indian reservations in those two states.[229]

Section 28 of this act represents what is perhaps the culmination of the tendency to break up Indian tribes and tribal property. This section[230] authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw from the United States Treasury and segregate all tribal funds held in trust by the United States, apportioning a pro rata share of such funds to each member of the tribe. This provision for the dividing up of tribal funds required a final roll of persons entitled to participate in the division. Such authorization was conferred by the Appropriation Act of June 30, 1919.[231]

This same act included a comprehensive scheme for the granting of leases and prospecting permits on tribal lands of nine far western states by the Secretary of the Interior, under such regulations as he might prescribe.[232] This statute, probably stimulated by wartime demand for minerals, completely disregards any tribal voice in the disposition of tribal property. It is of a piece with legislation, already noted, looking to the complete dissolution of the Indian tribes and the division of tribal funds, as well as tribal lands, among the members thereof.

[229] 40 Stat. 561, 570, 25 U. S. C. 211.

[230] 40 Stat. 561, 591, 25 U. S. C. 162, repealed by Act of June 24, 1938, sec. 2, 52 Stat. 1037, so far as the former statute authorized distribution of tribal funds. See Chapter 9, sec. 6; Chapter 10, sec. 4; Chapter 15, sec. 23.

[231] 41 Stat. 3, 9, 25 U. S. C. 163.

[232] Sec. 26, 41 Stat. 3, 31, 25 U. S. C. 399, amended by Act of December 16, 1926, 44 Stat. 922, and Act of May 11, 1938, 52 Stat. 347, 25 U. S. C. 396A–396F. See Chapter 15, secs. 14 and 19.

SECTION 15. LEGISLATION FROM 1920 TO 1929

The decade from 1920 through 1929 is singularly devoid of basic Indian legislation. In fact, the decade marks a lull between the legislative activity in which the development of the allotment system was realized and the new trends towards corporate activity and the protection of Indian rights which were to take form in the following decade.

Seven statutes embodying permanent general legislation adopted during this decade deserve notice.

The Appropriation Act of February 14, 1920, contains a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to require owners of irrigable land under Indian irrigation projects to make payments for costs of construction.[233] The same statute contains a proviso authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make and enforce regulations to secure regular attendance of "eligible Indian children who are wards of the government" in federal or state schools.[234]

The Appropriation Act of March 3, 1921, contains general authorization for the leasing of restricted allotments for farming and grazing purposes, subject to departmental regulations.[235]

By the Act of May 29, 1924,[236] Congress authorized the execution of oil and gas leases "at public auction by the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the council speaking for such Indians," wherever such lands were subject to mining leases under the Act of February 28, 1891.[237]

Perhaps the most significant legislation of the decade is the Act of June 2, 1924, which made "all non-citizen Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States" citizens of the United States.[238] The title of this act as given in the Statutes at Large, "An Act To authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue certificates of citizenship to Indians" is the result of a clerical error which has been a source of considerable misunderstanding. The bill as originally introduced contemplated a procedure whereby the Secretary of the Interior was to issue such certificates. The act as finally passed, however, acted of its own force to confer citizenship upon the Indian and in fact as passed by both houses the title of the bill reads: "A bill granting citizenship to Indians, and for other purposes."[239] This act brought to completion a process whereby various classes of Indians had successively been granted the status of citizenship.[240]

By the Act of May 17, 1926,[241] Congress acted to regularize the handling of "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor," making such moneys > available for expenditure, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the Indian tribes, agencies, and schools on whose behalf they are collected, subject, however, to the limitations as to tribal funds, imposed by section 27 of the Act of May 18, 1916 (Thirty-ninth Statutes at Large, page 159).[242]

The status of these funds is elsewhere discussed.[243]

A comprehensive statute on oil and gas mining upon unallotted lands within Executive order reservations is the Act of March 3, 1927.[244] Section 1 of this act[245] extends to Executive order reservations the leasing privileges already applicable to other reservations under the Act of May 29, 1924, noted above.[246]

Section 2 of this act[247] provides for the deposit of rentals, royalties, and bonuses in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indian tribe concerned, such funds to be available for appropriation by Congress. This section contains a significant proviso indicating a new trend in Indian legislation:

> Provided, That said Indians, or their tribal council, shall be consulted in regard to the expenditure of such money, but no per capita payment shall be made except by Act of Congress.

Section 3 of the act[248] subjects proceeds and operations under the act to state taxation.[249] Section 4 contains general legislation not restricted to the matter of oil and gas leases:

> * * * hereafter changes in the boundaries of reservations created by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise for the use and occupation of Indians shall not be

[233] 41 Stat. 408, 409, 25 U. S. C. 386. See Chapter 12, sec. 7.

[234] 41 Stat. 408, 410. See Chapter 12, sec. 2.

[235] 41 Stat. 1225, 1232, 25 U. S. C. 393. See Chapter 11, sec. 5.

[236] 43 Stat. 244, 25 U. S. C. 398.

[237] 26 Stat. 794, 795, 25 U. S. C. 397.

[238] 43 Stat. 253, 8 U. S. C. 3. See Chapter 8, sec. 2.

[239] See H. Rept. No. 222, 68th Cong., 1st sess., February 22, 1924, on H. R. 6355, wherein the Committee on Indian Affairs said:

> At the present time it is very difficult for an Indian to obtain citizenship without either being allotted and getting a patent in fee simple, or leaving the reservation and taking up his residence apart from any tribe of Indians. This legislation will bridge the present gap and provide means whereby an Indian may be given citizenship without reference to the question of land tenure or the place of his residence * * *.

The Senate amended the bill so as to eliminate all departmental discretion in its application. See Sen. Rept. No. 441, 68th Cong., 1st sess., April 21, 1924; and see 65 Cong. Rec. 8621–8622, 9303–9304.

[240] See Chapter 8, sec. 2.

[241] 44 Stat. 560. See 25 U. S. C. 161b.

[242] See H. Rept. No. 897, 69th Cong., 1st sess., April 15, 1926, on H. R. 11171.

[243] Chapter 5, sec. 10.

[244] 44 Stat. 1347.

[245] 44 Stat. 1347, 25 U. S. C. 398a.

[246] 43 Stat. 244. See fn. 236, supra.

[247] 44 Stat. 1347, 25 U. S. C. 398b.

[248] 44 Stat. 1347, 25 U. S. C. 398c.

[249] See Chapter 13, sec. 2.

made except by Act of Congress: Provided, That this shall not apply to temporary withdrawals by the Secretary of the Interior.[250]

This limitation of a basic executive power in the field of Indian affairs is the precursor of a series of limitations upon executive authority enacted in the following decade.

The unfavorable comparisons drawn by the Meriam report [251] in 1928 between the service standards of the Indian Bureau and those of state agencies [252] led to a series of statutes looking to the transfer of power over Indian affairs from the Interior Department to the states. A first step in this devolution of power was taken by the Act of February 15, 1929,[253] which directs the Secretary of the Interior to permit the agents and employees of any state to enter upon Indian lands [254] > * * * for the purpose of making inspection of health and educational conditions and enforcing sanitation and quarantine regulations or to enforce compulsory school attendance of Indian pupils, as provided by the law of the State, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

[250] 44 Stat. 1347, 25 U. S. C. 398d. See Sen. Rept. No. 1240, 69th Cong., 2d. sess., January 11, 1927, on S. 4893.

[251] Meriam, Problem of Indian Administration (1928).

[252] See Chapter 2, sec. 2F, supra.

[253] 45 Stat. 1185, 25 U. S. C. 231.

[254] See H. Rept. 2135, 70th Cong., 2d sess., January 17, 1929, on H. R. 15523.

SECTION 16. LEGISLATION FROM 1930 TO 1939

The decade from 1930 to 1939 is as notable in the history of Indian legislation as that of the 1830's or the 1880's. Through the series of general and permanent laws enacted in the field of Indian affairs during this decade there runs the motive of righting past wrongs inflicted upon a nearly helpless minority. The sense of these wrongs owed much to the labors that went into the Meriam report,[255] much to the investigations conducted by the Senate,[256] and much to the volunteer labors of individuals and organizations willing to assume the thankless task of criticizing the workings of our governmental institutions.[257]

The first of these attempts to remedy past wrongs was the so-called Leavitt Act of July 1, 1932.[258] Both the Meriam report and the special subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs had made it clear that in the development of irrigation projects on Indian reservations, Indians had been charged with tremendous costs for construction work which they had never requested and which brought them little or no benefit. The Leavitt Act authorized the Secretary of the Interior > to adjust or eliminate reimbursable charges of the Government of the United States existing as debts against individual Indians or tribes of Indians in such a way as shall be equitable and just in consideration of all the circumstances under which such charges were made: * * *.

Such action was to be subject to congressional rescission by concurrent resolution.

A further provision of this act deferred the collection of construction charges against Indian-owned lands until the Indian title thereto should have been extinguished. The place of the Leavitt Act in current Indian irrigation work is elsewhere discussed.[259] Legislation along similar lines was later extended to white users of water on Indian irrigation projects.[260]

The first legislative result of the depression in the field of Indian affairs was an act designed to meet the problem of defaults on timber contracts. The Act of March 4, 1933, permitted the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Indians involved, expressed through a regularly called general council, and of the purchasers, to modify the terms of uncompleted contracts of sale of Indian tribal timber.[261] Similar provision was made with respect to allotted timber.[262] In all such modified contracts Indian labor was to be given preference.[263] The insistence upon Indian consent marks a trend that was to continue through the remainder of the decade.[264]

General emergency legislation, such as the National Industrial Recovery Act,[265] with its public works provisions, and the Emergency Appropriation Act of June 19, 1934,[266] under which the Indian Division of the Civilian Conservation Corps was established, made a very significant impression upon the economic situation of the Indian reservations.

An important item of general and permanent legislation was the so-called Johnson-O'Malley Act [267] of April 16, 1934,[268] authorizing (sec. 1) the Secretary of the Interior to enter into contracts with states or territories—> * * * for the education, medical attention, agricultural assistance, and social welfare, including relief of distress, of Indians in such State or Territory, through the qualified agencies of such State or Territory.

Federal moneys and federal facilities might be turned over to such state or territorial agencies.[269] This legislation constituted a response to the criticism made by the Meriam report that the standards of social service in the Indian Bureau were in large part inferior to those of parallel state agencies.[270]

Next in the list of Indian grievances to be corrected was the provision in the law governing sales of Indian heirship lands requiring the Indian to refund moneys paid by a defaulting purchaser. Fall of real-estate values and widespread defaults on uncompleted contracts made this provision particularly onerous to the Indians. By the Act of April 30, 1934,[271] the usual rule of law that instalments on a defaulted contract inure to the benefit of the vendor was applied to the Indians.[272]

The next attempt to right old wrongs was embodied in the Act of May 21, 1934,[273] an act which repealed 12 sections of the United States Code that laid peculiar restrictions upon civil liberties in the Indian country.[274] This statute marked the first step in a process of freeing the Indians and the Indian Service from the burden of obsolete laws enacted to fit long-outgrown

[255] See Chapter 2, sec. 2F.

[256] See Chapter 1, sec. 1. See also H. Rept. No. 951, 72d Cong., 1st sess.

[257] See particularly American Indian Life, Bulletins 10 (1927) to 24 (1934).

[258] 47 Stat. 564, 25 U. S. C. 386a.

[259] See Chapter 12, sec. 7.

[260] Act of June 22, 1936, 49 Stat. 1803, 25 U. S. C. 389 et seq.

[261] Act of March 4, 1933, sec. 1, 47 Stat. 1568, 25 U. S. C. 407a.

[262] Sec. 2, 47 Stat. 1568, 25 U. S. C. 407b.

[263] Sec. 3, 47 Stat. 1568, 1569, 25 U. S. C. 407c.

[264] See H. Rept. No. 1302, 72d Cong., 1st sess., May 13, 1932; Sen. Rept. No. 1281, 72d Cong., 2d sess., February 21, 1933, on H. R. 6684.

[265] Act of June 16, 1933, 48 Stat. 195.

[266] Act of June 19, 1934, 48 Stat. 1021, 1056. For a continuous account of these activities see the publication of the Office of Indian Affairs, "Indians at Work."

[267] When originally introduced it was known as the Swing-Johnson bill.

[268] 48 Stat. 596. See 25 U. S. C. 452.

[269] See Sen. Rept. No. 511, 73d Cong., 2d sess., March 20, 1934, on S. 2571.

[270] See Chapter 2, sec. 2F, and Chapter 12, secs. 2 and 3.

[271] 48 Stat. 647. See 25 U. S. C. 372 (Supp.).

[272] See H. Rept. No. 825, 73d Cong., 2d sess., February 21, 1934, on H. R. 5075.

[273] 48 Stat. 787.

[274] For a discussion of the sections repealed see Chapter 8, sec. 10A(2).

conditions.[275] The statutes repealed constitute only a small part of the mass of such obsolete laws.

The most comprehensive measure of the decade, probably equaled in scope and significance only by the legislation of June 30, 1834,[276] and the General Allotment Act of February 8, 1887,[277] is the Act of June 18, 1934.[278] Although the various provisions of this act are discussed in other chapters, an outline sketch of the entire act may show the context and perspective in which each of these provisions has to be viewed.

The general purposes of the legislation are set forth at length in Hearings before the House Indian Affairs Committee[279] and in briefer form in Hearings before the Senate Indian Affairs Committee.[280] In a series of conferences held throughout the Indian country the purposes of the proposed legislation as envisioned by officials of the Interior Department and the views voiced by Indians which were embodied in the act as finally passed are set forth in some detail.[281]

More briefly the objectives of the legislation are summed up in the report presented by Senator Wheeler, one of the co-sponsors of the measure, on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which he was chairman. The report recommending enactment of the measure[282] declared:

> The purposes of the bill, briefly stated, are as follows:
> (1) To stop the alienation, through action by the Government or the Indian, of such lands, belonging to ward Indians, as are needed for the present and future support of these Indians.
> (2) To provide for the acquisition, through purchase, of land for Indians, now landless, who are anxious and fitted to make a living on such land.
> (3) To stabilize the tribal organization of Indian tribes by vesting such tribal organizations with real, though limited, authority, and by prescribing conditions which must be met by such tribal organizations.
> (4) To permit Indian tribes to equip themselves with the devices of modern business organization, through forming themselves into business corporations.
> (5) To establish a system of financial credit for Indians.
> (6) To supply Indians with means for collegiate and technical training in the best schools.
> (7) To open the way for qualified Indians to hold positions in the Federal Indian Service.

Section 1[283] prohibits further allotment of Indian lands. This provision embodied a considered judgment that the allotment system was incapable of contributing to the economic advancement of the Indians. As was stated in the House report,[284]

> The bill now under consideration definitely puts an end to the allotment system through the operation of which the Indians have parted with 90,000,000 acres of their land in the last 50 years. (P. 6.)

Section 2[285] extends, until otherwise directed by Congress, existing periods of trust and restrictions on alienation placed on Indian lands.

Section 3,[286] apart from the lengthy provisos relating to the Papago Reservation,[287] authorized the Secretary of the Interior "to restore to tribal ownership the remaining surplus lands of any Indian reservation heretofore opened, or authorized to be opened, to sale, or any other form of disposal * * *."[288] Commenting on this section, the Senate Committee Report declares:

> When allotment was carried out on various reservations, tracts of surplus or ceded land remained unallotted and were placed with the Land Office of the Department of the Interior for sale, the proceeds to be paid to the Indians. Some of these tracts remain unsold and by section 3 of the bill they are restored to tribal use. (P. 2.)

Section 4 of the act[289] constitutes a rather complicated amalgam of differing Senate and House drafts on the subject of alienation of Indian land. The scope and effect of this section are elsewhere explored.[290] In general, it may be said that the section prohibits inter vivos transfers of restricted Indian land except to an Indian tribe and limits testamentary disposition of such land to the heirs of the devisee, to members of the tribe having jurisdiction over the land, or the tribe itself.

Section 5[291] authorizes the acquisition of lands for Indians[292] and declares that such lands shall be tax exempt.

Section 6[293] directs the promulgation of various conservation regulations.

Section 7[294] gives the Secretary authority to add newly acquired land to existing reservations and extends federal jurisdiction over such lands.

Section 8[295] leaves scattered Indian homesteads on the public domain out of the scope of this measure.

The first eight sections of the law as finally enacted correspond to the provisions of the bills considered and reported by the House and Senate Committees. In the remaining sections of the measure as finally enacted, various combinations and compromises were made between two different drafts which passed the two houses and, therefore, the House and Senate debates and committee reports must be read with caution.

Section 9[296] authorizes an appropriation for the expenses of organizing Indian chartered corporations and other organizations created under the act.

Section 10[297] authorizes the establishment of a $10,000,000 revolving credit fund from which loans may be made to incorporated tribes. Loans had been made by the Indian Service for many years to individual Indians but the experience with such loans had not been satisfactory. The individual Indian receiving money or goods from a federal official was apt to place the trans-

---

[275] See Sen. Rept. No. 634, 73d Cong., 2d sess., March 28, 1934, on S. 2671, wherein it is stated "* * * it appears that the only use now made of these obsolete sections is as an excuse for arbitrary abuses by bureaucratic officials."

[276] See sec. 6, supra.

[277] See sec. 11, supra.

[278] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461, et seq.

[279] Readjustment of Indian Affairs, Hearings, H. Comm. on Ind. Aff., on H. R. 7902, 73d Cong., 2d sess. (1934).

[280] Hearings, Sen. Comm. on Ind. Aff., on S. 2755 and S. 3645, 73d Cong., 2d sess. (1934).

[281] See, for example, Minutes of the Plains Congress, March 2–5, 1934 (Rapid City Indian School); Minutes of All-Pueblo Council, Santo Domingo Pueblo, March 15, 1934; Report of Southern Arizona Indian Conference, Pheonix, Arizona, March 15–16, 1934 (Phoenix Indian School); Proceedings of the Conference for the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma, Muskogee, Oklahoma, March 22, 1934.

[282] Sen. Rept. No. 1080, 73d Cong., 2d sess. (May 10 (calendar day, May 22), 1934).

[283] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461. See Chapter 11, sec. 1.

[284] H. Rept. No. 1804, 73d Cong., 2d sess., on H. R. 7902 (May 28, 1934).

[285] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 462.

[286] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 463.

[287] Later amended by Act of August 28, 1937, 50 Stat. 862.

[288] See Chapter 15, Secs. 1, 7, 21.

[289] 48 Stat. 984, 985, 25 U. S. C. 464.

[290] See Chapter 11, sec. 4; Chapter 15, sec. 18.

[291] 48 Stat. 984, 985, 25 U. S. C. 465.

[292] "The title to land thus acquired will remain in the United States. The Secretary may permit the use and occupancy of this newly acquired land by landless Indians; he may loan them money for improvements and cultivation, but the continued occupancy of this land will depend on its beneficial use by the Indian occupant and his heirs." (H. Rept. No. 1804, 73d Cong., 2d sess. (May 28, 1934), p. 7.)

[293] 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 466.

[294] Ibid., 25 U. S. C. 467.

[295] 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 468.

[296] 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 469.

[297] 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 470.

action in the context of goods received under treaty or agreement or by way of charity, and the urge to repayment was slight. The new legislation precluded loans from the Federal Government to individual Indians. Henceforth the individual Indian was to be responsible in the matter of repayment to his own tribe.[298]

Section 11[299] authorized "loans to Indians for the payment of tuition and other expenses in recognized vocational and trade schools," and "loans to Indian students in high schools and colleges."

Section 12[300] reenacted a promise of Indian employment which had been made in several earlier statutes during the preceding century.[301] Specifically, it directed the Secretary of the Interior to establish standards for appointment "without regard to civil-service laws, to the various positions maintained, now or hereafter, by the Indian Office, in the administration of functions or services affecting any Indian tribe," and provided that Indians meeting such non-civil-service standards "shall hereafter have the preference to appointment to vacancies in any such positions." The administration of this provision is elsewhere discussed.[302]

Sections 13,[303] 14,[304] and 15[305] of the act dealt with the exemption of various tribes from all or some of the provisions of the act, provided for the continuance of "Sioux benefits,"[306] and put forward a promise > that no expenditures for the benefit of Indians made out of appropriations authorized by this Act shall be considered as offsets in any suit brought to recover upon any claim of such Indians against the United States.

Sections 16[307] and 17[308] deal with the problem of tribal organization and tribal incorporation. Since these sections were the work of a conference committee which took phrases from the bill that had passed the House and other phrases from the bill that had passed the Senate, the House and Senate committee reports and legislative history prior to the conference report must be used with extreme circumspection, in aiding the interpretation of these two sections. The scope of these two sections and the interpretations placed thereon are elsewhere discussed.[309]

Section 18[310] provided that the act as a whole should not apply to any reservation wherein a majority of the Indians voted against its application.[311]

Section 19[312] of the act includes definitions of "Indians," "tribes," and "adult Indians." Of these definitions the definition of the term "Indian" is of particular importance:

> The term "Indian" as used in this Act shall include all persons of Indian descent who are members of any recognized Indian tribe now under Federal jurisdiction, and all persons who are descendants of such members who were, on June 1, 1934, residing within the present boundaries of any Indian reservation, and shall further include all other persons of one-half or more Indian blood.

Although many provisions of the act as originally enacted did not apply to the Territory of Alaska or the State of Oklahoma, which together accounted for approximately one-half of the Indian population of the United States, experience in the administration of the act and intensive discussion of its provisions in the exempted areas led to the adoption of legislation extending the main provisions of the act, with minor modifications, to Alaska[313] and to Oklahoma.[314]

An analysis of the workings of the Act of June 18, 1934, was published in 1938 by a committee of students of Indian affairs.[315] The conclusions reached by this committee after an analysis of concrete experiences on typical reservations are worth quoting:

> * * * these concrete experiences point dramatically to the new world of opportunity that has been opened to all Indian tribes by the development of three cardinal principles of present-day Indian administration: Indian self-government, the conservation of Indian lands and resources, and socially directed credit. On almost every reservation today, even on reservations that voted to reject the Indian Reorganization Act, one finds a deep and growing concern for these basic principles, a conscious striving to secure their application to local problems, the beginnings of constructive achievement, and hope for the future where there was once only hopeless regret for the past.
>
> * * * * *
>
> INDIAN SELF-GOVERNMENT
>
> The first major move of the present administration in the direction of Indian self-government was a provision in the Pueblo Relief Act of May 31, 1933, prohibiting the Secretary of the Interior from spending moneys appropriated under that act for the various Pueblos "without first obtaining the approval of the governing authorities of the Pueblo affected."
>
> The same principle was established on a broader scale by the Indian Reorganization Act of June 18, 1934, which gave to all Indian tribes organizing under its terms the final power of approval or veto over the disposition of all tribal assets.

---

[298] See Chapter 14.

[299] 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 471.

[300] 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 472.

[301] See Chapter 8, sec. 4B.

[302] See Chapter 8, sec. 4B(3)(b).

[303] 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 473.

[304] 48 Stat. 984, 987, 25 U. S. C. 474.

[305] 48 Stat. 984, 987, 25 U. S. C. 475. This provision, insofar as it promised that appropriations authorized by the act should not be considered offsets in Indian claim suits against the United States, was later repudiated in large part, by a rider to the Appropriation Act of August 12, 1935, 49 Stat. 571, 596, 25 U. S. C. 475a.

[306] See Act of March 2, 1889, sec. 17, 25 Stat. 888, 894; Act of June 10, 1896, 29 Stat. 321, 334.

[307] 48 Stat, 984, 987, 25 U. S. C. 476.

[308] 48 Stat. 984, 988, 25 U. S. C. 477.

[309] See Chapter 7, sec. 3; Chapter 14, sec. 4.

[310] 48 Stat. 984, 988, 25 U. S. C. 478.

[311] For a holding that the right to reject the entire act included the right to reject the special provisions dealing with the Papago Reservation, see 38 Op. A. G. 121 (1934). Under the original act, elections had to be called on the act within 1 year after its approval. By the Act of June 15, 1935, 49 Stat. 378, this period was extended another year. Under the original act a majority of all the Indians entitled to vote was required to render the act inapplicable to a particular reservation. Unreported Op. A. G., April 19, 1935. The amendment above referred to modified this rule so as to require only a majority of those voting in an election in which not less than 30 percent of those entitled to vote actually vote.

[312] 48 Stat. 984, 988, 25 U. S. C. 479. For definition of Indians see Chapter 1, sec. 2.

[313] Act of May 1, 1936, 49 Stat. 1250, 48 U. S. C. 362, 358a, discussed in Chapter 21.

[314] Act of June 26, 1936, 49 Stat. 1967, 25 U. S. C. 501–509, discussed in Chapter 23.

[315] The New Day for the Indians: A survey of the Working of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934 (1938), edited by Jay B. Nash, Oliver LaFarge, and W. Carson Ryan; sponsored by Pablo Abeita, Louis Bartlett, Ruth Benedict, Bruce Bliven, Leonard Bloomfield, Franz Boas, Ray A. Brown, Fay Cooper-Cole, John M. Cooper, George P. Clements, Harold S. Colton, Byron Cummings, William A. Durant, Ben Dwight, Herbert R. Edwards, Haven Emerson, Edwin R. Embree, Howard S. Gans, Robert Gessner, Rev. Philip Gordon, John J. Hannon, John P. Harrington, M. Raymond Harrington, Melville J. Herskovits, Frederick W. Hinrichs, Jr., F. W. Hodges, Edgar Howard, Ales Hrdlicka, Albert Ernest Jenks, A. V. Kidder, Charles iKe, Oliver LaFarge, Robert Lansdale, Ralph T. Linton, Charles T. Loram, John Joseph Mathews, William Gibbs McAdoo, Margaret McKittrick, H. Scudder Mekeel, Jay B. Nash, William F. Ogburn, Father Bona Ventura Oblasser, Robert Redfield, W. Carson Ryan, Lester F. Scott, Elizabeth Sheply Sergeant, Ernest Thompson Seton, Guy Emery Shipler, Frank G. Speck, Vilhjalmur Stefansson, Fred M. Stein, Huston Thompson, George C. Vaillant, Wilson D. Wallis, James P. Warbasse, and B. D. Weeks.

The Indian Reorganization Act further authorized the various Indian tribes to take over positive control of their own resources and to carry on tribal enterprises as membership corporations under a gradually vanishing federal supervision.

The law as finally enacted, left to the future many grants of power included in the original bill, for which it was felt that the Indians were not yet ready. Thus the power to remove undesirable employees from a reservation, the power to appropriate tribal funds held in the United States Treasury, and the power to take over services now rendered by the Interior Department to individual Indians—such services, for instance, as are connected with education, health, the probate and sale of allotments, and the handling of individual Indian moneys—all were deleted from the original bill.

What was perhaps more important than the specific powers which the act, as finally passed, conferred upon organized Indian tribes was the solemn pledge contained in the act that never again would the Federal Government tear down the municipal and economic organizations that should establish themselves under the protection of the act, and that powers vested in the tribes under past laws and treaties would not be diminished without tribal consent.

The principle of Indian self-government was carried to a new phase when the Indians themselves were asked to vote on whether or not the law establishing self-governing powers should apply on the different reservations. The great majority of the Indians voting on the question voted in favor of the Indian Reorganization Act. In accordance with the expressed desires of tribes originally excluded from the act, its essential principles were extended to Alaska by the act of May 1, 1936, and to Oklahoma by the act of June 26, 1936. Indians numbering 252,211 are now under the act. They are grouped into tribes or bands numbering 206. They represent 68.8 percent of the total of Indians in the United States and Alaska.

As of September 1, 1938, 85 tribes, with a population of 99,813, had already adopted constitutions and by-laws under the Indian Reorganization Act. Fifty-nine of these have already received charters of incorporation. No tribe or group which adopted the act, or which was brought within the terms of the act without formal vote, as in Oklahoma and Alaska, has asked by vote or by majority petition to be relieved of the terms of the act. On the other hand, a number of groups in tribes which once rejected the act have petitioned for a second chance to vote on the ground that their original adverse vote was influenced by misinformation. What the adoption of Indian constitutions has meant in the spiritual regeneration of the Indians concerned is illustrated more forcefully by the concrete experiences related in the first part of this report than by any statistical figures.

One significant change in the direction of Indian self-government can best be put in negative terms. During the century from 1833 to 1933 hundreds of laws affecting Indian tribes were enacted and a great part of these laws, perhaps a majority of them, in some way deprived the Indian tribes of rights or possessions they had once enjoyed. Since 1933 no law has been enacted which took from any Indian tribe, against its will, any of its liberties or any of its possessions.

Conservation of Natural Resources

During the years from the passage of the General Allotment Act of 1887 until the beginning of the present administration, Indian land holdings were reduced from approximately 137,000,000 acres to less than 50,000,000 acres. Of the area that remained in Indian ownership a large part was desert or mountainside. The grazing land and farming land still owned by the Indians had seriously deteriorated as a result of overgrazing, the plowing of sod that should never have been broken, reckless timber-cutting and the emigration of the topsoil by various water and aerial routes to points east and west.

These figures represented stark tragedy for a people whose economy was rooted in the soil, whose reverence for the soil was so deep that they never fully grasped the white man's concept of buying and selling land. Little groups of Indians for whom the process of land-loss had gone to its final end, the advance guard of an army moving towards landlessness, could be found in rural slums and town garbage-dumps, living in the depths of squalor and hopelessness.

Against this background the government's present conservation policies stand out in sharp relief. The loss of Indian lands through sales to whites was stopped, except for a few emergency cases, by an order of Commissioner Collier, approved by Secretary Ickes August 14, 1933, and by the general prohibition against further allotments and against sales of restricted land which is contained in the Indian Reorganization Act. Guarantees against alienation of tribal lands have been written into every tribal constitution and charter.

Between March 1933 and December 1937 the total of Indian land holdings increased by approximately 2,780,000 acres. The Indian Reorganization Act authorized an appropriation of $2,000,000 a year for land purchase. In the four years following the passage of the act a total of $2,950,000 was actually appropriated and contracts involving an additional $500,000 were authorized. This money was used to acquire 246,110 acres (as of December 1, 1937) for Indian use. During the same period an additional 349,207 acres was added to Indian reservations, under the authority which the Indian Reorganization Act confers upon the Secretary of the Interior to restore lands which have been taken away from the Indian tribes as "surplus" lands, wherever such lands are still held by the Federal Government. Restitution of a total area of approximately 5,000,000 acres is under consideration. Special legislation enacted under the present administration accounts for the addition of another 1,203,808 acres to the Indian domain. An additional area of approximately a million acres has been included in submarginal land purchases for Indians made by the Resettlement Administration in consultation with the Interior Department.

Meanwhile, vigorous measures were being taken to stop overgrazing. The soil of the Indian country was being rebuilt through an extensive program of water development and flood control, a program which was carried out by the Indians themselves on the basis of financial aid from the Public Works Administration, the Soil Conservation Service, the Civil Works Administration, and the Indian Division of the Civilian Conservation Corps. All timber-cutting on Indian lands (except in a small problem area in Washington State) was being put upon a perpetual yield basis. Oil development on a score of reservations where oil has been found was being strictly controlled in the interests of a national conservation policy. In short, the Indian estate that a few years ago was being dissipated and destroyed is today being conserved, amplified, and improved for the benefit of the Indian people today and for the unborn Indian generations.

Economic Planning

Economic planning is no new thing on Indian reservations. The Blackfeet adopted a five-year development plan in 1921, and it was later copied on many other reservations. What is new in the economic planning under the present administration is that whereas formerly the Indian Service planned for Indians and dealt with Indians as individuals, the Indian Service now yields to the tribes that have incorporated under the Indian Reorganization Act a large share of responsibility for developing and administering a reservation economic plan. On several reservations new tribal enterprises, suited to the resources of the reservation and the interests of the Indians, form an integral part of the reservation plan. On several reservations cooperative cattle associations, cooperative stores, and other forms of cooperative enterprise have been developed. On most reservations economic planning is still entirely in terms of individual programs, but even here the control of credit, upon which economic planning depends, has become a collective responsibility of the tribe.

Under the Reorganization Act $4,000,000 has already been appropriated for loans to incorporated Indian tribes. These credit funds are being expended almost entirely for capital investment, in the form of agricultural machinery, farm buildings, and other improvements, livestock, saw mills, and fishing equipment. This credit program, if it is supplemented by a sound land program, and if it does not become too deeply entangled in departmental red tape and remote control, is likely to establish for the first time a stable basis of economic independence for tribes some of which have lived in the depths of poverty, or are kept alive on the edge of starvation by income from annuities, land sales, and leases of land.

* * * * *

WHAT REMAINS TO BE DONE

One who seeks to achieve a just appraisal of the record in the field of Indian affairs must conclude that substantial progress has been made in the removal of injustices and anachronisms that have characterized our national Indian policy. The progress achieved is particularly creditable when one realizes the obstacles that were met: the opposition of vested interests, the well-earned suspicion or hostility among the Indians themselves in the face of new promises of better life, the entrenched habits of a civil service trained in disrespect for Indians and Indian ways, and the tremendous inertia which governmental institutions, financial, legal, and procedural, always offer against fundamental reforms.

Taking account of these obstacles and appreciating at their full value the gains achieved, we must nevertheless recognize that the administration of Indian affairs is not yet something of which white Americans can be proud. The achievements of the present policy represent only the beginning of a liberal Indian program. * * *

* * * * *

Progress in the direction of Indian self-government has been striking. Unfortunately this progress remains for the most part in its promissory stages. The vital question is: "Will the promises of self-government embodied in the Indian Reorganization Act and in the tribal constitutions and charters actually be fulfilled or will these promises be treated like so many earlier promises of the United States embodied in solemn treaties with the Indian tribes?"

Already Congress has cut down the appropriations which the Indian Reorganization Act authorized for land purchase, for credit, for loan funds, and for the expenses of tribal organization. Already Congress has shown a disposition to ignore the veto power which it conferred upon organized tribes in the expenditure of tribal funds.

Finally, it is important that the measures of self-government already achieved be regarded as a beginning and an earnest of good faith rather than as a final goal. The organized Indian tribes, in carrying through the program they have begun, will meet situations in which additional powers, legal and financial, are essential to success. They need sympathy and understanding in their struggle to achieve these further powers of self-government.

The problem of land is still the greatest unsolved problem of Indian administration. The condition of allotted lands in heirship status grows more complicated each year. Commissioner Collier supplied the House Appropriations Committee a year ago with examples showing probate and administrative expenditures upon heirship lands totaling costs seventy times the value of the land; and under existing law these costs are destined to increase indefinitely. Responsibility lies with Congress and the administration to work out a practical solution to this problem, either in terms of corporate ownership of lands, or through some modification of the existing inheritance system. (Pp. 26–34.)

Following the passage of the Wheeler-Howard or Indian Reorganization Act, Congress made another effort to remedy old wrongs in the Act of August 27, 1935,[316] dealing with the problem of Indian arts and crafts. For decades the Indian Bureau had discouraged the practices and conditions out of which Indian arts and crafts had emerged. The substitution of store products for native products, outside of the field of agricultural production, had been a continuing strand of Indian Service policy for more than a century. By the act establishing the Indian Arts and Crafts Board, Congress gave encouragement and protection to a movement already started by traders, artists, and Indians for the revival of native forms of artistic and craft production. The board established by this measure was authorized to engage in research and experimentation, to establish market contacts, to aid in securing financial assistance for the production and sale of Indian products, and to create government trade-marks for Indian products. A full measure of control over the use of such trade-marks was conferred upon the Indian Arts and Crafts Board, and criminal penalties were provided for those imitating or counterfeiting such marks, or advertising products as Indian products without justification.[317]

Another effort by Congress to remedy an established wrong is found in the Act of June 20, 1936.[318] This act exempted from taxation restricted Indian lands which had been purchased out of trust or restricted Indian funds on the understanding that such lands would be nontaxable[319]—an understanding which came to grief when earlier court decisions on the subject were reversed.[320]

The Act of May 11, 1938,[321] superseded earlier legislation which had given the Secretary of the Interior wide powers to dispose of minerals on Indian reservations to prospectors and lessees and established a comprehensive system of mineral leasing on Indian tribal lands, giving primary power to lease to the Indian council or government, subject to departmental approval except where provision has been made, by the terms of tribal charters, for dispensing with requirements of departmental approval.[322]

Finally, the legislation already commented upon[323] looking to the break-up and distribution of tribal funds in the United States Treasury was repealed by section 2 of the Act of June 24, 1938.[324] Section 1 of this act recodified the laws under which tribal funds may be deposited by administrative officials.[325]

The foregoing summary of legislation enacted during the decade from 1930 to 1939 covers, of course, only the more important measures of general and permanent application. It is fair to say, however, that the principles embodied in these measures were at the same time applied in a much larger mass of legislation dealing with particular tribes and areas.

---

[316] 49 Stat. 891, 25 U. S. C. 305, et seq.

[317] See Sen. Rept., No. 900, 74th Cong., 1st sess., May 13, 1935, and Rept. Comm. on Indian Arts and Crafts to Hon. Harold L. Ickes on S. 2203, incorporated therein.

[318] 49 Stat. 1542, amended by Act of May 19, 1937, 50 Stat. 188, 25 U. S. C. 412a.

[319] See H. Rept., No. 2398, 74th Cong., 2d sess., April 13, 1936, on H. R. 7764. See also Sen. Rept., No. 332, 75th Cong., 1st sess., April 12, 1937, on S. 150, amending the Act of June 20, 1936, wherein it is said:

> The said act * * * was designed to bring relief and reimbursement to Indians who by failure to pay taxes have lost or now are in danger of losing lands purchased for them under supervision, advice, and guidance of the Federal Government, which losses were not the fault of the Indians, but were purchased with the understanding and belief on their part and induced by representations of the Government that the lands be nontaxable after purchase.

[320] See Chapter 13, sec. 3D.

[321] 52 Stat. 347, 25 U. S. C. 396 et seq. See Chapter 15, sec. 19.

[322] See Sen. Rept., No. 985, 75th Cong., 1st sess., July 22, 1937, on S. 2689.

[323] See sec. 14, supra.

[324] 52 Stat. 1037, 25 U. S. C. 162a.

[325] See Sen. Rept., No. 531, 75th Cong., 1st sess., May 10, 1937, on S. 2163.

SECTION 17. INDIAN APPROPRIATION ACTS: 1789 TO 1939

Appropriation legislation plays a peculiar role in Indian law. Not only does one find a large part of the substantive law governing Indian affairs hidden away in the interstices of appropriation acts, but frequently the actual appropriations and the conditions prescribed for the expenditure of money are given considerable weight, at least administratively, in determining the rights and powers of administrative officials. Thus, for example, the fact that Congress has for many decades appropriated money for Indian judges and Indian policemen, has commonly been viewed as providing congressional authorization for the activities of these officials, although there is no substantive federal law expressly recognizing or conferring such authority.

We have already noted in the preceding sections of this chapter the more important of the provisions of general and permanent legislation which are found among the sections and provisos of appropriation laws. In other chapters attention is paid to the significance of appropriations in various specific problems of federal Indian law.[326] For the present it will be enough to offer a few suggestions as a guide to those who, in tracking down some problem of federal Indian law, must go through the relevant appropriation acts.

Appropriations affecting Indian affairs are found in appropriation acts for the Interior Department, for the War Department, the Department of Commerce, the Treasury Department, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of State, the Department of Justice, and various other agencies. Among the regular departments, only those of Labor and Navy appear to be immune from provisions affecting Indians. However, the main stream of Indian appropriation legislation has followed a narrower course. It begins with appropriations "for defraying the expenses of the Indian department." The first such general appropriation appears in the Appropriation Act of February 28, 1793,[327] entitled "An Act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-three." A year later the item reappears in "An Act making appropriations for the support of the Military establishment of the United States, for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four." [328] Thereafter the annual appropriation act for the military establishment, or in some cases, for the military and naval establishments, contains a regular appropriation, increasing year by year, "for the Indian department."

Apart from these appropriations for the Indian department, separate appropriations were made, from time to time, for the expenses of wars against Indians,[329] the expenses of treaties with Indians [330] (which frequently included considerable gifts), and expenses of carrying into effect treaty provisions.[331]

At first these appropriation acts for the carrying out of treaty promises made permanent appropriations, either for a term of years or "forever." [332] Later, the practice of making annual appropriations to carry out the terms of Indian treaties was substituted.[333]

In 1826 Congress began to enact special appropriation acts for the Indian department.[334] This practice continued until 1909. After 1826 one finds in the appropriations for the military establishment only incidental references to expenses involved in the management of Indian affairs, such as, for example, the expense of maintaining Indian prisoners, the salaries of Indian scouts and other strictly military matters. The last regular appropriation act for the "Indian department" was the act of March 3, 1909.[335] In the following year the appropriation act [336] refers in its title to the "Bureau of Indian Affairs," a name which had indeed been used for nearly a century. Regular appropriation acts for the Bureau of Indian Affairs continued until the Act of March 3, 1921.[337] Since the Appropriation Act of May 24, 1922,[338] appropriations for Indian affairs have been made within the regular Interior Department appropriation act.

Although the practice of inserting the year's crop of Indian legislation at the end of annual Indian appropriation acts was abandoned during the first decade of the century,[339] and parliamentary efforts have been made to bar the inclusion of items of substantive permanent legislation in appropriation acts during recent years, such items continue to crop up from time to time.[340] Even when completely stripped of provisions of general substantive legislation, the Indian provisions of the current Interior Department appropriation acts present so complicated a picture of layer upon layer of residues left by the treaties and laws of the past that it is difficult to read one of these statutes intelligently without a comprehensive historical prospective upon the course of Indian legislation. Efforts in recent years to simplify the form of these appropriation acts have been vigorous but unavailing.[341]

---

[326] See particularly Chapter 12.

[327] 1 Stat. 325, 326.

[328] Act of March 21, 1794, 1 Stat. 346.

[329] See, for instance, Act of February 11, 1791, 1 Stat. 190.

[330] See, for instance, Act of August 20, 1789, 1 Stat. 54; Act of July 22, 1790, 1 Stat. 136; Act of March 2, 1793, 1 Stat. 333.

[331] See, for example, Act of March 3, 1805, 2 Stat. 338.

[332] See, for example, Act of March 3, 1805, 2 Stat. 338; Act of April 21, 1806, 2 Stat. 407; Act of March 3, 1817, 3 Stat. 393; Act of March 3, 1819, 3 Stat. 517; Act of May 20, 1826, 4 Stat. 181.

[333] See, for example, Act of March 2, 1827, 4 Stat. 232; Act of May 24, 1828, 4 Stat. 300; Act of March 2, 1829, 4 Stat. 361.

[334] See, for example, Act of March 25, 1826, 4 Stat. 150; Act of March 2, 1827, 4 Stat. 217; Act of May 9, 1828, 4 Stat. 267.

[335] 35 Stat. 781.

[336] Act of April 4, 1910, 36 Stat. 269.

[337] 41 Stat. 1225.

[338] 42 Stat. 552.

[339] See, for example, the Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325.

[340] See, for example, fn. 305, supra.

[341] See the Act of March 2, 1933, 47 Stat. 1422 (providing for "alternate budget").

CHAPTER 5

THE SCOPE OF FEDERAL POWER OVER INDIAN AFFAIRS

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. SOURCES OF FEDERAL POWER

Since the National Government derives its sovereignty from powers delegated to it by the states, the Constitution of the United States forms the basis of federal control of Indian affairs.

The principal sources of congressional authority over Indian affairs are summarized by a leading authority in these terms:[1]

> * * * What is the constitutional basis of the national authority over the Indians? The national government is one of powers delegated by the states; yet Indians are mentioned in the U. S. Constitution only twice—once to exclude "Indians not taxed" (a phrase never more explicity defined, but probably meaning today Indians resident on reservations, that is, on land not taxed by the states) from the count for determining representation in the lower house of Congress; and again to empower Congress to regulate "commerce with foreign nations, among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." This commerce power is an express constitutional basis for Congressional action concerning the Indians, as is also, so far as appropriations for Indians are concerned, the power of Congress to raise and spend money "for the general welfare." But the regulation of Indians from Washington has gone much farther. Much power has been exercised because the whole Indian country, except the few eastern reservations, was formerly part of the national domain, with exclusive title and sovereignty (except to the extent it was recognized to be restricted by Indian occupancy) in the national government. In this respect, the reservations within the bounds of the original thirteen states, having a different history, are probably subject to a different legal regime. * * * The setting up of states in the territory once governed only from Washington has not affected the title of the nation to these lands. This ownership of the land supports a mass of Congressional and departmental regulations of land tenure on the reservations west of the Alleghenies; but even this, added to the express powers of Congress already mentioned, does not sustain the full extent of the national control of Indians wherever they are tribally organized. The chief foundation appears to have been the treaty-making power of the President and Senate with its corollary of Congressional power to implement by legislation the treaties made. The colonies before 1776 (and the original states thereafter) often deal with the Indian tribes through political agreements. When in 1787 the Constitution made exclusive grant of treaty power to the national government, these precedents formed a strong basis for national dealings with Indian tribes, especially those beyond the bounds of any state. Habitually for nearly 100 years the nation treated with the Indians pursuant to the constitutional forms that were used in dealing with foreign states. And by a broad reading of these treaties the national government obtained from the Indians themselves authority to legislate for them to carry out the purpose of the treaties.
>
> In view of the express grants of the commerce power and the expenditure-for-the-general-welfare power, of the fact that the greater Indian tribes lived on the national domain and not within any state (until the west was piece-meal admitted to statehood) and of the custom of dealing with Indian tribes by treaty, the United States Supreme Court has never found, so far as I can learn, that any Congressional regulation of Indians has been beyond the reach of national power. Indeed the net result is the creation of a new power, a power to regulate Indians. * * * (Pp. 80–81.)

In addition to the constitutional sources of authority over commerce[2] with Indian tribes,[3] expenditures for the general

[1] Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States (1934), 16 J. Comp. Leg. 78.

[2] Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 3.

[3] This limitation upon federal power to situations involving the existence of a tribe is emphasized by the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U. S. 188 (1876):

> As long as these Indians remain a distinct people, with an existing tribal organization, recognized by the political department welfare,[4] property of the United States,[5] and treaties,[6] noted by Professor Rice, other constitutional grants of power have played a role in Indian legislation. Most important, perhaps, are the power of Congress to admit new states and (inferentially) to prescribe the terms of such admission,[7] and to make war.[8] Congressional powers of lesser importance involved in Indian legislation include the power to establish post-roads,[9] to establish tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court,[10] and to establish a "uniform rule of naturalization."[11]

While the decisions of the courts may be explained on the basis of express constitutional powers, the language used in some cases seems to indicate that decisions were influenced by a consideration of the peculiar relationship between Indians and the Federal Government.[12]

Thus in United States v. Kagama[13] the Supreme Court found that the protection of the Indians constituted a national problem and referred to the practical necessity of protecting the Indians and the nonexistence of such a power in the states.

Reference to the so-called "plenary" power of Congress over the Indians, or, more qualifiedly, over "Indian tribes" or "tribal Indians," becomes so frequent in recent cases that it may seem captious to point out that there is excellent authority for the view that Congress has no constitutional power over Indians except what is conferred by the commerce clause and other clauses of the Constitution. The most famous defender of federal power over Indians, Chief Justice Marshall, declared:[14]

> * * * That instrument [the Constitution] confers on congress the powers of war and peace; of making treaties, and of regulating commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes. These powers comprehend all that is required for the regulation of our intercourse with the Indians. They are not limited by any restrictions on their free actions; the > of the government, Congress has the power to say with whom, and on what terms, they shall deal * * *. (P. 195.)

---

And see cases cited in Chapter 14, sec. 1, fn. 9. Note, however, that congressional objectives based upon federal power over the tribe may involve an exercise of jurisdiction over individual Indians or individual non-Indians, even outside of Indian lands. Dick v. United States, 208 U. S. 340 (1908).

In the case of The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737 (1886), the Supreme Court said:

> While the general government has a superintending care over their interests, and continues to treat with them as a nation, the State of Kansas is estopped from denying their title to it. She accepted this status when she accepted the act admitting her into the Union. Conferring rights and privileges on these Indians cannot affect their situation, which can only be changed by treaty stipulation, or a voluntary abandonment of their tribal organization. As long as the United States recognizes their national character they are under the protection of treaties and the laws of Congress, and their property is withdrawn from the operation of State laws. (P. 757.)

[4] Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 1. Art. 1, sec. 9, cl. 7 provides that "No money shall be drawn from the treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law * * *." Congress has appropriated money in the nature of a compromise of Indian claims against the Federal Government, and has made this appropriation conditioned on the consent of the tribe concerned. Act of March 3, 1903, 32 Stat. 982, 995 (Creek Nation). The validity of this provision was sustained in 24 Op. A. G. 623 (1903).

[5] Art. 4, sec. 3, cl. 2.

[6] Art. 2, sec. 2, cl. 2.

[7] Art. 4, sec. 3, cl. 1. See Ex Parte Webb, 225 U. S. 663 (1912).

The Supreme Court in Cramer v. United States, 261 U. S. 219 (1923) said:

> Congress itself, in apparent recognition of possible individual Indian possession, has in several of the state enabling acts required the incoming State to disclaim all right and title to lands "owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes". (P. 228.)

See Act of February 22, 1889, c. 180, sec. 4, par. 2, 25 Stat. 676, 48 U. S. C. 1460a; Act of July 16, 1894, c. 138, sec. 3, par. 2, 28 Stat. 107. Also see Act of June 16, 1906, 34 Stat. 267.

[8] Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 11.

[9] Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 7.

[10] Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 9; Art. 3, sec. 1. The Supreme Court in the case of Roff v. Burney, 168 U. S. 218 (1897), said:

> * * * Congress may pass such laws as it sees fit prescribing the rules governing the intercourse of the Indians with one another and with citizens of the United States, and also the courts in which all controversies to which an Indian may be party shall be submitted. (Pp. 221–222.)

By virtue of the power to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, Congress has created territorial district courts with jurisdiction over the crime of murder committed by any person other than an Indian upon an Indian reservation. In re Wilson, 140 U. S. 575 (1891). The Supreme Court, after alluding to the "power of Congress to provide for the punishment of all offenses committed" on reservations, "by whomsoever committed," said:

> * * * And this power being a general one, Congress may provide for the punishment of one class of offences in one court, and another class in a different court. (Pp. 577–578.)

See Chapter 14, sec. 6A. Also see Chapter 19, sec. 3.

Pursuant to this power, Congress has passed many jurisdictional statutes empowering Indian tribes to sue the Federal Government in the Court of Claims for claims arising out of Indian treaties, agreements, or statutes. Congress may confer jurisdiction upon this court to decide on the proper amount of recovery for property taken by an Indian tribe in amity with the United States. See Leighton v. United States, 161 U. S. 291 (1896); United States v. Navarre, 173 U. S. 77 (1899).

While granting statehood to a territory, Congress has also been upheld in transferring the jurisdiction of general crimes committed in districts over which the United States retains exclusive jurisdiction from territorial to federal courts. Pickett v. United States, 216 U. S. 456 (1910).

[11] Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 4. See Chapter 8, sec. 2.

[12] See Chapter 8, sec. 9. Also see Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553 (1903); Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294 (1902); Brader v. James, 246 U. S. 88 (1918); N. D. Houghton, The Legal Status of Indian Suffrage in the United States, 19 Cal. L. Rev. (1931) pp. 507, 512; cf. Krieger, Principles of Indian Law, 3 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. (1935) pp. 279, 291; 13 Yale L. J. (1904) p. 250. "* * * Congress possesses the broad power of legislating for the protection of the Indians wherever they may be within the territory of the United States, * * *." (United States v. Ramsey, 271 U. S. 467, 471 (1926).

The Supreme Court said in Perrin v. United States, 232 U. S. 478, 486 (1914):

> As the power is incident only to the presence of the Indians and their status as wards of the Government, it must be conceded that it does not go beyond what is reasonably essential to their protection, and that, to be effective, its exercise must not be purely arbitrary, but founded upon some reasonable basis. * * * On the other hand, it must also be conceded that, in determining what is reasonably essential to the protection of the Indians, Congress is invested with a wide discretion, and its action, unless purely arbitrary must be accepted and given full effect by the courts.

In Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640 (1912), the Court said:

> * * * As in the instance of other tribal Indians, the members of this tribe were wards of the United States, which was fully empowered, whenever it seemed wise to do so, to assume full control over them and their affairs, to determine who were such members, to allot and distribute the tribal lands and funds among them, and to terminate the tribal government. * * * (Pp. 642–643.)

The Court said in United States v. Thomas, 151 U. S. 577 (1894):

> * * * The Indians of the country are considered as the wards of the nation, and whenever the United States set apart any land of their own as an Indian reservation, whether within a State or Territory, they have full authority to pass such laws and authorize such measures as may be necessary to give to these people full protection in their persons and property, and to punish all offences committed against them or by them within such reservations. (P. 585.)

The Court said in United States v. McGowan, 302 U. S. 535 (1938):

> * * * Congress alone has the right to determine the manner in which the country's guardianship * * * shall be carried out * * *. (P. 538.)

Also see Surplus Trading Co. v. Cook, 281 U. S. 647 (1930); United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591 (1916); United States v. Quiver, 241 U. S. 602 (1916); United States v. Hamilton, 233 Fed. 685 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1915); In re Lincoln, 129 Fed. 247 (D. C. N. D. Calif. 1904); United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432 (1903); In re Blackbird, 109 Fed. 139 (D. C. W. D. Wis. 1901).

[13] 118 U. S. 375 (1886). For a criticism of this decision see Willoughby, The Constitutional Law of the United States (1929), p. 386.

[14] Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515 (1832). And see Willoughby, The Constitutional Law of the United States (1929), pp. 379–402, 1327. 1368.

shackles imposed on this power, in the confederation, are discarded. (P. 559.)

Whatever view be taken of the possibility or danger of federal power arising from "necessity," it is clear that the powers mentioned by Chief Justice Marshall proved to be so extensive that in fact the Federal Government's powers over Indian affairs are as wide as state powers over non-Indians, and therefore one is practically justified in characterizing such federal power as "plenary." This does not mean, however, that congressional power over Indians is not subject to express limitations upon congressional power, such as the Bill of Rights.[15] In the pages that follow we shall attempt to survey the scope and limits of congressional power over Indian affairs. In later portions of this chapter we shall consider the secondary question of how far such power has been, or may be, validly delegated to administrative officials.

[15] Chief Justice Fuller of the Supreme Court in the case of Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 478 (1899), said that Congress possesses "plenary power of legislation" in regard to Indian tribes, "subject only to the Constitution of the United States."

SECTION 2. CONGRESSIONAL POWER—TREATY-MAKING

The first and chief foundation for the broad powers of the Federal Government over the Indians is the treaty-making provision[16] which received its most extensive early use in the negotiation of treaties with the Indian tribes. Beginning with an Indian treaty submitted to the Senate by President Washington on May 25, 1789, the President and the Senate entered into some treaty relations with nearly every tribe and band within the territorial limits of the United States.[17]

To carry out the obligations and execute the powers derived from these treaties became a principal responsibility of Congress,[18] which enacted many statutes relating to or supplementing treaties.[19]

The scope of the obligations assumed and powers conferred upon Congress by treaties with Indian tribes has been discussed in Chapter 3 of this volume and need not be reexamined at this point.

[16] Earlier treaties under the Articles of Confederation are discussed in Chapter 3, sec. 4B.

[17] See Marks v. United States, 161 U. S. 297, 302 (1896).

[18] The United States assumed many obligations towards the Indians, including the following:

> * * * to secure them in the title and possession of their lands, in the exercise of self-government, and to defend them from domestic strife and foreign enemies; and powers adequate to the fulfilment of those obligations are necessarily reserved. (P. 17.) H. Rept. No. 474, Comm. Ind. Aff., 23d Cong., 1st sess., May 20, 1834.

The view that tribal power has been conferred upon the Federal Government by treaty is upheld by United States v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U.S. 188 (1876).

[19] Act of January 9, 1837, 5 Stat. 135, 25 U. S. C. 152, 153, 157, 158, regulates the disposition of proceeds of lands ceded to the United States by treaty with the Indians. Also see Act of January 17, 1800, 2 Stat. 6; Act of March 30, 1802, 2 Stat. 139; Act of May 28, 1830, 4 Stat. 411; Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729. And see Chapter 4, secs. 1, 3. Numerous appropriation acts have been enacted to fulfill treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes. See Chapter 4, sec. 17.

SECTION 3. CONGRESSIONAL POWER—COMMERCE WITH INDIAN TRIBES

The power of Congress to regulate commerce with Indian tribes has for its field of action the entire nation, not just the Indian country. Commerce with tribal members anywhere, even wholly within a state, may be the subject of congressional regulation. While Congress has not usually exercised such sweeping regulation, its power has been completely demonstrated in the Indian liquor laws, which constituted one of the early examples of federal control over tribal Indians.[20]

The commerce clause[21] is the only grant of power in the Federal Constitution which mentions Indians. The congressional power over commerce with the Indian tribes plus the treaty-making power is much broader than the power over commerce between states.[22]

[20] These laws are discussed in Chapter 17. One of the reasons for the drastic liquor prohibition provisions in sections 20 and 21 of the Trade and Intercourse Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729, 732, 733 (R. S. § 2141, 25 U. S. C. 251; R. S. § 2150, 25 U. S. C. 223, amended by Act of May 21, 1934, 48 Stat. 787), was to enable administrative officials to prevent the manufacture of whiskey by Indians, who believed that they had the right to do as they pleased in their own country, and acknowledged no restraint beyond the laws of their own tribe. H. Rept. No. 474, Comm. Ind. Aff., 23d Cong., 1st sess., May 20, 1834, p. 103.

In United States v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 407 (1865), the Supreme Court held that Congress could forbid the sale of liquor to an Indian in charge of an agent in a state and outside of an Indian reservation. The Court declared:

> "Commerce," says Chief Justice Marshall, in the opinion in Gibbons v. Ogden, to which we so often turn with profit when this clause of the Constitution is under consideration, "commerce undoubtedly is traffic, but is something more; it is intercourse." The law before us professes to regulate traffic and intercourse with the Indian tribes. It manifestly does both. It relates to buying and selling and exchanging commodities, which is the essence of all commerce, and it regulates the intercourse between the citizens of the United States and those tribes, which is another branch of commerce, and a very important one.
>
> If the act under consideration is a regulation of commerce, as it undoubtedly is, does it regulate that kind of commerce which is placed within the control of Congress by the Constitution? The words of that instrument are: "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." Commerce with foreign nations, without doubt, means commerce between citizens of the United States and citizens or subjects of foreign governments, as individuals. And so commerce with the Indian tribes, means commerce with the individuals composing those tribes. The act before us describes this precise kind of traffic or commerce, and, therefore, comes within the terms of the constitutional provision.
>
> Is there anything in the fact that this power is to be exercised within the limits of a State, which renders the act regulating it unconstitutional?
>
> In the same opinion to which we have just before referred, Judge Marshall, in speaking of the power to regulate commerce with foreign states, says, "The power does not stop at the jurisdictional limits of the several States. It would be a very useless power if it could not pass those lines." "If Congress has power to regulate it, that power must be exercised wherever the subject exists." It follows from these propositions, which seem to be incontrovertible, that if commerce, or traffic, or intercourse, is carried on with an Indian tribe, or with a member of such tribe, it is subject to be regulated by Congress, although within the limits of a State. The locality of the traffic can have nothing to do with the power. The right to exercise it in reference to any Indian tribe, or any person who is a member of such tribe, is absolute, without reference to the locality of the traffic, or the locality of the tribe, or of the member of the tribe with whom it is carried on. It is not, however, intended by these remarks to imply that this clause of the Constitution authorizes Congress to regulate any other commerce, originated and ended within the limits of a single State, than commerce with the Indian tribes. (Pp. 417–418.)

[21] Article I, sec. 8, cl. 3 of the Constitution empowers Congress "To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." See Chapters 16 and 17.

[22] See 1 Op. A. G. 645 (1824). Prentice and Egan in The Commerce Clause of the Federal Constitution (1898) describe the purpose of this commerce clause as follows:

> * * * The purpose with which this power was given to Congress was not merely to prevent burdensome, conflicting or dis-

Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of Cherokee Nation v. Georgia,[23] said that it was the intention of the Constitutional Convention > * * * to give the whole power of managing those affairs to the government about to be instituted, the convention conferred it explicitly; and omitted those qualifications which embarrassed the exercise of it, as granted in the confederation. (P. 13.)

In United States v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whiskey[24] the Supreme Court declared:

> * * * Under the articles of confederation, the United States had the power of regulating the trade and managing all affairs with the Indians not members of any of the States; provided that the legislative right of a State within its own limits be not infringed or violated. Of necessity, these limitations rendered the power of no practical value. This was seen by the convention which framed the Constitution; and Congress now has the exclusive and absolute power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes,—a power as broad and as free from restrictions as that to regulate commerce with foreign nations. * * * (P. 194.)

The commerce clause in the field of Indian affairs was for many decades broadly interpreted to include not only transactions by which Indians sought to dispose of land or other property in exchange for money, liquor, munitions, or other goods,[25] but also aspects of intercourse which had little or no relation to commerce, such as travel,[26] crimes by whites against Indians or Indians against whites,[27] survey of land,[28] trespass and settlement by whites in the Indian country, [29] the fixing of boundaries,[30] and the furnishing of articles, services, and money by the Federal Government.[31]

The admission of a new state was held not to affect laws forbidding the sale of liquor to Indians living on the territory from which the state was formed.[32]

The Federal Government may constitutionally forbid the sale of liquor in an area adjoining an Indian reservation in order that Indians will not be tempted by the close proximity of this forbidden beverage.[33]

The Supreme Court, in the case of Dick v. United States[34] sustained federal liquor statutes protecting against the introduccriminating State legislation, but to prevent fraud and injustice upon the frontier, to protect an uncivilized people from wrongs by unscrupulous whites, and to guard the white population from the danger of savage outbreaks.

---

A grant made with such a purpose must convey a different power from one whose purpose was to insure the freedom of commerce. Congress has, in the case of the Indians, prohibited trade in certain articles, it has limited the right to trade to persons licensed under Federal laws, and in many ways asserted a greater control than would be possible over other branches of commerce. (P. 342.)

[23] 5 Pet. 1 (1831).

[24] 93 U. S. 188 (1876). Also see Article IX of the Articles of Confederation.

[25] See Chapter 17 and Chapter 18, sec. 2. See also United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591 (1916); Perrin v. United States, 232 U. S. 478 (1914). Mr. Knoepfler has said:

> * * * Commerce with the Indian tribes has been construed to mean practically every sort of intercourse with the Indians either in the tribes or as individuals. (Legal Status of American Indian & His Property (1922), 7 Ia. L. B. 232, 234.)

This regulation included the fixing of the prices of goods sold to the Indians. Act of April 18, 1796, sec. 4, 1 Stat. 452, 453. Licensed traders were prohibited from purchasing from Indians or receiving in barter or trade from them certain articles, such as "a gun, or other article commonly used in hunting, any instrument of husbandry, or cooking utensil, of the kind usually obtained by the Indians, in their intercourse with white people, or any article of clothing, excepting skins or furs. * * *" or "any horse." Act of May 19, 1796, secs. 9, 10, 1 Stat. 469, 471. For similar provisions see Act of April 21, 1806, sec. 7, 2 Stat. 402, 403; Act of March 3, 1799, secs. 9, 10, 1 Stat. 743, 746. Sec. 4 of the Act of July 26, 1866, 14 Stat. 255, 280, which requires traders on Indian reservations to furnish surety bond, is also applicable to Indians. Memo. Sol. I. D., November 20, 1934.

The Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729, which forms the basis for the present trade regulations, authorizes the President to prohibit trade with an Indian tribe "whenever in his opinion the public interest may require." Sec. 3. 25 U. S. C. 263, R. S. § 2132. The Circuit Court for the Ohio District, in United States v. Cisna, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,795 (C. C. Ohio, 1835), said:

> * * * The exercise of the power to prohibit any intercourse with the Indians, except under a license, must be considered within the power to regulate commerce with them, if such regulation could not be effectual short of an intercourse thus restricted. (P. 424.)

[26] For example, see Act of May 19, 1796, sec. 3, 1 Stat. 469, 470.

[27] See Act of July 22, 1790, sec. 5, 1 Stat. 137, 138; Act of March 1, 1793, secs. 4, 5, 10, 11, 1 Stat. 329 et seq.; Act of May 19, 1796, secs. 4, 6, 1 Stat. 469, 470; Act of March 3, 1799, secs. 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 1 Stat. 743 et seq.; Act of March 30, 1802, sec. 4, 2 Stat. 139, 141; Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 25, 4 Stat. 729, 733. Superintendents, agents, and subagents were empowered to procure the arrest and trial of all Indians accused of committing any crimes and of other persons who may have committed crimes or offenses within a state or territory and fled into the Indian country. Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 19, 4 Stat. 729, 732. The President was authorized to sanction other means of securing the arrest and trial of these Indians, including the employment of the military force of the United States.

[28] The survey of lands belonging to or reserved or granted by the United States to any Indian tribe was made a crime. Act of May 19, 1796, sec. 5, 1 Stat. 469, 470. Also see Act of March 3, 1799, sec. 5, 1 Stat. 743, 745, and Act of March 30, 1802, sec. 5, 2 Stat. 139, 141.

[29] Act of July 22, 1790, sec. 5, 1 Stat. 137, 138; Act of March 3 1799, sec. 4, 1 Stat. 743, 744; Act of March 30, 1802, sec. 4, 2 Stat. 139, 141. The Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 10, 4 Stat. 729, 730. R. S. § 2147, 25 U. S. C. 220, empowered the superintendents of Indian affairs and Indian agents and subagents to remove from the Indian country all persons found therein contrary to law, and authorized the President to direct the military force to be employed in such removal. The President was also authorized (sec. 11) to employ the military force to drive off persons making "settlement on any lands belonging, secured, or granted by treaty with the United States to any Indian tribe." R. S. § 2118, 25 U. S. C. 180. On the issuance of passports to enter the Indian country see Chapter 1, sec. 3, fn. 47; Chapter 4, sec. 5, fn. 73.

[30] The Trade and Intercourse Act of May 19, 1796, secs. 1, 20, 1 Stat. 469, 474 provides for the marking of the boundary lines described in the acts and treaties between the United States and various Indian tribes. Also see Act of March 30, 1802, sec. 1, 2 Stat. 139.

[31] Money was often appropriated for allowances for agents and for the purpose of trading with the Indian nations. Act of April 18, 1796, secs. 5, 6, 1 Stat. 452, 453; also see Act of March 3, 1795, 1 Stat. 443; Act of March 3, 1809, sec. 1, 2 Stat. 544. The President was empowered to furnish animals, implements of husbandry, and goods and moneys to the Indians. Act of March 1, 1793, sec. 9, 1 Stat. 329, 331; Act of March 30, 1802, sec. 13, 2 Stat. 139, 143.

[32] Ex parte Webb, 225 U. S. 663 (1912). A cession by Indians may be qualified by a stipulation that the land shall continue to be under the liquor prohibition laws, though within state boundaries. See Clairmont v. United States, 225 U. S. 551 (1912).

[33] United States v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U. S. 188 (1876). The Supreme Court, in the case of Johnson v. Gearlds, 234 U. S. 422 (1914), said:

> That it is within the constitutional power of Congress to prohibit the manufacture, introduction, or sale of intoxicants upon Indian lands, including not only lands reserved for their special occupancy, but also lands outside of the reservations to which they may naturally resort; and that this may be done even with respect to lands lying within the bounds of a State, are propositions so thoroughly established, and upon grounds so recently discussed, that we need merely cite the cases. Perrin v. United States, 232 U. S. 478, 483; United States v. Forty-three Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U. S. 188, 195, 197; Dick v. United States, 208 U. S. 340. (Pp. 438–439.)

[34] 208 U. S. 340 (1908). Congress has power to prohibit the sale of liquor to Indians living on land owned in fee by their tribe. (United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 28 (1913), and the introduction into an Indian reservation from a point within the state in which the reservation of intoxicants, for 25 years, lands ceded by, as well as lands allotted to, the Nez Perce Indians:

> If Congress has the power, as the case we have last cited decides, to punish the sale of liquor anywhere to an individual member of an Indian tribe, why cannot it also subject to forfeiture liquor introduced for an unlawful purpose into territory in proximity to that where the Indians live? There is no reason for the distinction; and, as there can be no divided authority on the subject, our duty to them, our regard for their material and moral well-being, would require us to impose further legislative restrictions, should country adjacent to their reservations be used to carry on the liquor traffic with them. (P. 357.)

The power over liquor traffic is not unlimited. The Supreme Court in Perrin v. United States,[35] said:

> As the power is incident only to the presence of the Indians and their status as wards of the Government, it must be conceded that it does not go beyond what is reasonably essential to their protection, and that, to be effective, its exercise must not be purely arbitrary, but founded upon some reasonable basis. Thus, a prohibition like that now before us, if covering an entire State when there were only a few Indian wards in a single county, undoubtedly would be condemned as arbitrary. And a prohibition valid in the beginning doubtless would become inoperative when in regular course the Indians affected were completely emancipated from Federal guardianship and control. A different view in either case would involve an unjustifiable encroachment upon a power obviously residing in the State. On the other hand, it must also be conceded that, in determining what is reasonably essential to the protection of the Indians, Congress is invested with a wide discretion, and its action, unless purely arbitrary, must be accepted and given full effect by the courts. (P. 486.)

tion is situated, though interstate commerce is not involved (United States v. Wright, 229 U. S. 226 (1913)). Also see United States v. Soldana, 246 U. S. 530 (1918); Robert C. Brown, The Taxation of Indian Property (1931), 15 Minn. L. Rev. 182.

[35] 232 U. S. 478 (1914).

SECTION 4. CONGRESSIONAL POWER—NATIONAL DEFENSE

Although comparatively little has been written about the war powers of Congress[36] and the Indian, these powers underlay much of the federal power exercised over Indian land and Indians during the early history of the Republic. In international law conquest brings legal power to govern.

At least 1,012 statutes, public and private, have been enacted by Congress to deal with matters arising out of Indian warfare.[37]

When the Constitution was adopted, the chief mode of dealing with Indians was warfare. Accordingly Indian affairs were entrusted to the War Department by the Act of August 7, 1789,[38] the first law of Congress relating to Indians.

The Congressional power "To * * * provide for the common defence * * * of the United States"[39] was again utilized by the Act of September 29, 1789,[40] which authorized the President to call into service from time to time such part of the militia of the states as he may judge necessary "for the purpose of protecting the inhabitants of the frontiers of the United States from the hostile incursions of the Indians." Many other early statutes indicate the seriousness with which Congress considered the danger of Indian invasion. Such laws authorize an appropriation for "preserving peace with the Indian tribes,"[41] the raising of three regiments which "shall be discharged as soon as the United States shall be at peace with the Indian tribes,"[42] and mustering the militia to repel "imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe."[43] Some early repressions of civil liberties sprang from attempts to attain peace with the Indians.[44]

The Act of July 20, 1867,[45] authorizes the appointment of a commission composed of three generals and four civilians to conclude peace with hostile Indian tribes in the path of the proposed railroads to the Pacific and secure their consent to remove to reservations. Provision was made in the event of failure of the commission for the services of mounted volunteers, not exceeding 4,000, for the suppression of Indian hostilities.[46] Military campaigns were frequently waged against Indians, ranging from expeditions of detachments of militia[47] to regiments carrying on wars against Indian tribes.[48]

The occupation of Florida by United States troops was justified on the basis of necessity to protect Georgia from hostile Indians from the peninsula.[49] Money[50] and ammunition[51] were supplied to territorial and state officials for defense against the Indians, and as late as August 5, 1876, a joint resolution was passed [36] Art. 1, sec. 8, cls. 1, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17.

Cf. Duerr, Course of Lectures on the Constitutional Jurisprudence of the United States (1856), pp. 285–286, said:

> The powers to regulate commerce, declare war, make peace, and conclude treaties, comprise all that is required for regulating our intercourse with the Indian tribes.

[37] Cf. Chapter 8, sec. 4B(4)(c).

[38] 1 Stat. 49.

[39] U. S. Constitution, Art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 1.

[40] 1 Stat. 95, 96.

[41] Act of July 22, 1790, 1 Stat. 136.

[42] Act of March 5, 1792, 1 Stat. 241, repealed Act of March 3, 1795, 1 Stat. 430.

[43] Act of May 2, 1792, 1 Stat. 264. A similar provision is contained in the Act of February 28, 1795, 1 Stat. 424. Early protective statutes against the Indians include Act of January 2, 1812, 2 Stat. 670; Act of March 3, 1813, 2 Stat. 829. The Act of May 28, 1830, sec. 6, 4 Stat. 411, 412, authorized the President to protect migrating Indians "against all interruption or disturbance from any other tribe or nation of Indians * * *." The Act of July 14, 1832, 4 Stat. 595, authorized the appointment by the President of three commissioners to treat with the Indians in order to insure the protection promised the Indians in this provision. Also see Act of May 23, 1836, 5 Stat. 32.

[44] Act of January 17, 1800, 2 Stat. 6, discussed in Chapter 8, sec. 10A(2) fn. 311.

[45] 15 Stat. 17.

[46] For further post-Civil War statutory evidence of hostility with the Indians, see Act of March 3, 1873, 17 Stat. 566; Jt. Res. of July 3, 1876, 19 Stat. 214; Act of August 15, 1876, 19 Stat. 204; Jt. Res. August 5, 1876, 19 Stat. 216; Act of June 7, 1878, 20 Stat. 252. And see Chapter 14, sec. 3.

[47] See Act of May 13, 1800, 2 Stat. 82; Act of April 10, 1812, 2 Stat. 704; Act of July 2, 1836, 5 Stat. 71.

[48] See Act of April 20, 1818, 3 Stat. 459; Act of May 4, 1822, 3 Stat. 676; Act of May 26, 1824, 4 Stat. 70.

[49] Joint Resolution of January 15, 1811, 2 Stat. 666; Joint Resolution of January 15, 1811, 3 Stat. 471; Act of February 12, 1812, 3 Stat. 472; Act of March 30, 1822, 3 Stat. 654. The Joint Resolution of March 3, 1881, 21 Stat. 520, deals with expenditures of the State of Florida in suppressing hostile Indians.

[50] Act of July 27, 1866, 14 Stat. 307. The State of California floated four Indian war bonds. See Act of March 3, 1881, 21 Stat. 510; Act of June 27, 1882, 22 Stat. 111; Act of January 6, 1883, 22 Stat. 399.

[51] Act of April 7, 1866, 14 Stat. 26; Act of May 21, 1872, 17 Stat. 138; Act of January 16, 1889, 25 Stat. 646; Joint Resolution of December 9, 1890, 26 Stat. 1111.

authorizing the President to prohibit the sale of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians.[52]

There are several statutes in force[53] which illustrate the exercise of the war power in relation to the Indians. The Act of July 5, 1862,[54] authorizes the abrogation of treaties with tribes engaged in hostilities; the Act of March 2, 1867,[55] authorizes the withholding of annuities from hostile Indians; the Act of February 14, 1873,[56] regulates the sale of arms to hostile Indians; and the Act of March 3, 1875,[57] forbids payments to Indian bands at war.

Apart from the specific statutes that mark the heritage of decades of military control, other less tangible relics of this control managed to persist long after the Indian Service was removed from the War Department.[58]

[52] 19 Stat. 216.

[53] See Chapter 14, sec. 3.

[54] 12 Stat. 512, 528, R. S. § 2080, 25 U. S. C. 72.

[55] 14 Stat. 492, 515, R. S. § 2100, 25 U. S. C. 127.

[56] 17 Stat. 437, 457, 459, R. S. § 467, 2136, 25 U. S. C. 266.

[57] 18 Stat. 420, 449, 25 U. S. C. 128.

[58] See Chapter 8, sec. 10A(3). See also Chapter 2, sec. 2.

SECTION 5. CONGRESSIONAL POWER—UNITED STATES TERRITORY AND PROPERTY

The principal Indian tribes lived on the national domain. By virtue of its control over the public domain and the United States' territories, the Federal Government was able to exercise broad dominion and control over the Indians, and to effectuate many Indian policies such as those predicated on westward removal, reservations and allotments.[59] Today the control over the Alaskan natives is partly based on this power.[60]

The control of land, water, and other property belonging to the United States is vested exclusively in Congress by the Constitution.[61] The Supreme Court has upheld a broad exercise of this power.

The power of Congress over a territory and its inhabitants is also exclusive and paramount, except as restricted by the Constitution,[62] and Congress can exercise all the sovereign and reserved powers of state governments subject to the provisions of the Constitution specifically restricting the power of the Federal Government.[63] The extent of this power of Congress over Indians is shown by many decisions of the Supreme Court. The Court in the case of United States v. Kagama[64] said:

> But these Indians are within the geographical limits of the United States. The soil and the people within these limits are under the political control of the Government of the United States, or of the States of the Union. There exist within the broad domain of sovereignty but these two. There may be cities, counties, and other organized bodies with limited legislative functions, but they are all derived from, or exist in, subordination to one or the other of these. The territorial governments owe all their powers to the statutes of the United States conferring on them the powers which they exercise, and which are liable to be withdrawn, modified, or repealed at any time by Congress. What authority the State governments may have to enact criminal laws for the Indians will be presently considered. But this power of Congress to organize territorial governments, and make laws for their inhabitants, arises not so much from the clause in the Constitution in regard to disposing of and making rules and regulations concerning the Territory and other property of the United States, as from the ownership of the country in which the Territories are, and the right of exclusive sovereignty which must exist in the National Government, and can be found nowhere else. Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 15, 44. (Pp. 379–380.)

The Supreme Court, in the case of United States v. Rogers,[65] said:

> * * * we think it too firmly and clearly established to admit of dispute, that the Indian tribes residing within the territorial limits of the United States are subject to their authority, and where the country occupied by them is not within the limits of one of the States, Congress may by law punish any offence committed there, no matter whether the offender be a white man or an Indian. (P. 572.)

A. TRIBAL LANDS

The control by Congress of tribal lands has been one of the most fundamental expressions, if not the major expression, of the constitutional power of Congress over Indian affairs,[66] and has provided most frequent occasion for judicial analysis of that power. From the wealth of judicial statement there may be [59] For example, large areas of the public domain have been withdrawn for Indian reservations.

[60] See Chapter 21, sec. 4. Also see Nelson v. United States, 30 Fed. 112, 116 (C. C. Ore. 1887) and Endelman v. United States, 86 Fed. 456 (C. C. A. 9, 1898).

[61] See Hallowell v. United States, 221 U. S. 317, (1911). Since the time when the necessity for the exercise of the authority arose, there has been almost no question as to the absolute power of Congress to determine the form of political and administrative control to be erected over the territories, and to fix the extent to which their inhabitants shall be admitted to a participation in their own government. Both by legislative practice and by judicial sanction, the principle has from the first been asserted that upon this matter the judgment of Congress is absolute. Willoughby, The Constitution of the United States (1929), p. 439.

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State. (Art. 4, sec. 3, cl. 2.)
>
> Congress can grant to Indians fishing privileges in waters connected with a reservation. (Op. Sol. I. D., M. 28978, April 19, 1937.)

[62] See Oklahoma v. A., T. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 220 U. S. 277, 285 (1911).

[63] Oklahoma K. & M. I. Ry. Co. v. Bowling, 249 Fed. 592 (C. C. A. 8, 1918).

[64] 118 U. S. 375 (1886).

[65] 4 How. 567 (1846).

[66] The plenary power over tribal relations and tribal property of the Indians has been frequently exercised by Congress. See Roff v. Burney, 168 U. S. 218 (1897); Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294 (1902); Blackfeather v. United States, 190 U. S. 368 (1903); Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665 (1912); Ex parte Webb, 225 U. S. 663 (1912); United States v. Osage County, 251 U. S. 128 (1919); Nadeau v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 253 U. S. 442 (1920).

The Attorney General said, in 34 Op. A. G. 171 (1924):

> * * * the Indian possession has always been recognized as complete and exclusive until terminated by conquest or treaty, or by the exercise of that plenary power of guardianship to dispose of tribal property of the Nation's wards without their consent. (P. 180.)

The United States has power to legislate concerning the distribution of tribal land. United States v. Boylan, 265 Fed. 165, 173 (C. C. A. 2, 1920), app. dism. 257 U. S. 614; Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413 (1912). Also see United States v. Candelaria, 271 U. S. 432 (1926) and United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 28, 48 (1913), and Chapter 11, sec. 1.

derived the basic principle that Congress has a very wide power to manage and dispose of tribal lands.

Examples of Supreme Court statements of the principle are the following:

Justice Brandeis, speaking for the United States Supreme Court in the case of Morrison v. Work,[67] declared:

> It is admitted that, as regards tribal property subject to the control of the United States as guardian of Indians, Congress may make such changes in the management and disposition as it deems necessary to promote their welfare. The United States is now exercising, under the claim that the property is tribal, the powers of a guardian and of a trustee in possession. (P. 485.)

The Supreme Court said in the case of Nadeau v. Union Pacific Railroad Company:[68]

> It seems plain that, at least, until actually allotted in severalty (1864) the lands were but part of the domain held by the Tribe under the ordinary Indian claim—the right of possession and occupancy—with fee in the United States. Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S. 517, 525. The power of Congress, as guardian for the Indians, to legislate in respect of such lands is settled. Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas Ry. Co., 135 U. S. 641, 633; United States v. Rowell, 243 U. S. 464, 468; United States v. Chase, 245 U. S. 89. (Pp. 445–446.)

A necessary corrollary to this principle is that control of tribal land is a political function not to be exercised by the courts.[69]

The Supreme Court in the case of Sioux Indians v. United States[70] said:

> * * * Jurisdiction over them [the Indians] and their tribal lands was peculiarly within the legislative power of Congress and may not be exercised by the courts in the absence of legislation conferring rights upon them such as are the subject of judicial cognizance. See Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, supra, 565; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294; Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 483. This the jurisdictional Act of April 11, 1916, plainly failed to do. (P. 437.)

In the case of Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock,[71] the Supreme court said:

> * * * The power existing in Congress to administer upon and guard the tribal property, and the power being political and administrative in its nature, the manner of its exercise is a question within the province of the legislative branch to determine, and is not one for the courts. (P. 308.)

The power of Congress extends from the control of the use of the lands,[72] through the grant of adverse interests in the lands,[73] to the outright sale and removal of the Indians' interests.[74] And this is true, whether or not the lands are disposed of for public or private purposes.[75]

To illustrate, the power of Congress to grant rights-of-way across tribal land is clearly established.[76] To quote the Supreme Court:[77]

---

[67] 266 U. S. 481 (1925), aff'g 290 Fed. 306 (App. D. C. 1923).

[68] 253 U. S. 442 (1920). The Attorney General wrote in 26 Op. A. G. 340 (1907):

> It is unnecessary to go into any detailed discussion of the power of Congress to alter, modify, or repeal the provisions of the agreement with the Seminole Nation ratified by the act of July 1, 1898, and otherwise provide for the administration of their property and funds, as provided by the act of April 26, 1906, because the question has been conclusively settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court. (Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294; Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553; Morris v. Hitchcock, 194 U. S. 384, 388; Wallace v. Adams, 204 U. S. 415).
>
> These decisions maintain the plenary authority of Congress to control the affairs and administer the property of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory and other Indian tribes. (P. 346.)

[69] The courts have usually denominated this power as political and not subject to the control of the judicial department of the government. See Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553, 565 (1903) sustaining the disposal of a reservation of an Indian tribe on the ground that it was a legitimate exercise of congressional power over tribal Indians and their property. This case is discussed in Oklahoma v. Texas, 258 U. S. 574, 592 (1922). Also see Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, 308 (1902).

[70] 277 U. S. 424 (1928), aff'g 58 C. Cls. 302 (1923). Also see Tiger v. Western Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286, 311–312 (1911).

[71] 187 U. S. 294 (1902).

The court cited with approval the following excerpt from Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445 (1899):

> It may be remarked that the legislation seems to recognize, especially the act of June 28, 1898, a distinction between admission to citizenship merely and the distribution of property to be subsequently made, as if there might be circumstances under which the right to a share in the latter would not necessarily follow from the concession of the former. But in any aspect, we are of opinion that the constitutionality of these acts in respect of the determination of citizenship cannot be successfully assailed on the ground of the impairment or destruction of vested rights. The lands and moneys of these tribes are public lands and public moneys, and are not held in individual ownership, and the assertion by any particular applicant that his right therein is so vested as to preclude inquiry into his status involves a contradiction in terms.

The court concluded:

> The holding that Congress had power to provide a method for determining membership in the five civilized tribes, and for ascertaining the citizenship thereof preliminary to a division of the property of the tribe among its members, necessarily involved the further holding that Congress was vested with authority to adopt measures to make the tribal property productive, and secure therefrom an income for the benefit of the tribe. (P. 307.)

[72] E.g. grazing. See Act of June 18, 1934, sec. 6, 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 466.

[73] E.g. rights-of-way. See Chapter 4, sec. 13. And see fn. 76, infra.

[74] Congress in dissolving a tribe may also provide for the liquidation and distribution of tribal property. United States v. Seminole Nation, 299 U. S. 417 (1937). See also United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591, 598 (1916); 14 Col. L. Rev. 587 589 (1914). But the court will not assume that Congress abdicated its powers over the tribe or its property, without an unequivocal expression of that intent. Chippewa Indians v. United States, 307 U. S. 1 (1939); United States v. Boylan, 265 Fed. 165, 171 (C. C. A. 2, 1920), ; pp. dism. 257 U. S. 614 (1921).

[75] But the land so managed and disposed of must be tribal land. Indians have frequently taken to court the complaint that the tribal property has become vested, by previous act or treaty, in individuals, and is no more subject to congressional control than the private property of other individuals. The courts, however, tend to construe such previous acts and treaties, wherever possible, against the vesting of private rights in tribal property. Chippewa Indians of Minnesota v. United States, 301 U. S. 358 (1937), aff'g 80 C. Cls. 410 (1935); United States v. Chase, 245 U. S. 89 (1917), rev'g 222 Fed. 593 (C. C. A. 8, 1915). Until property is allotted, Congress possesses plenary power to deal with tribal lands and funds as tribal property. Sizemore v. Brady, 235 U. S. 441 (1914). Also see United States v. Mille Lac Chippewas, 229 U. S. 498 (1913).

[76] Nadeau v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 253 U. S. 442 (1920).

Federal statutes provide for the taking of tribal lands by the United States. For example, the Act of May 23, 1908, 35 Stat. 268, created a national forest upon lands held by the Federal Government as a trustee for the Chippewa Indian Tribe. This law is discussed in Chippewa Indians v. United States, 305 U. S. 479 (1939). For other cases on eminent domain see Shoshone Tribe v. United States, 299 U. S. 476 (1937); United States v. Creek Nation, 295 U. S. 103 (1935), s. c. 302 U. S. 620 (1938). See, for example, Act of March 3, 1901, 31 Stat. 1058, 1084, discussed in 49 L. D. 396 (1923).

The right of eminent domain may be exercised by the Federal Government over land held by an Indian nation in fee simple under patent from the United States, without the consent of the tribe. Cherokee Nation v. Kansas Ry. Co., 135 U. S. 641 (1890), which rejected the contention that land was held by the Cherokees as a sovereign nation. Some treaties provided that railroads should have rights-of-way upon payment of just compensation to the Indian tribes. Treaty of June 5, 1854, with the Miamis, Art. 10, 10 Stat. 1093. See Chapter 15, sec. 1B.

The Act of March 2, 1899, 30 Stat. 990, authorized any railroad company or telegraph and telephone company to take and condemn a right-of-way in or through any lands which have been or may hereafter be allotted in severalty, but have not been conveyed to the allottee with full power of alienation. The Act of February 28, 1902, sec. 23, 32 Stat. 43, discussed in Oklahoma K. & M. I. Ry. Co. v. Bowling, 249 Fed. 592 (C. C. A. 8, 1918), made this statute inapplicable to the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory.

[77] Missouri, Kansas & Texas R'y Co. v. Roberts, 152 U. S. 114 (1894).

Even though an Indian tribe has granted a purported exclusive license to a telephone company, Congress may issue a similar license to another

> The United States had the right to authorize the construction of the road of the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Railway Company through the reservation of the Osage Indians, and to grant absolutely the fee of the two hundred feet as a right of way to the ocmpany. Though the lands of the Indians were reserved by treaty for their occupation, the fee was always under the control of the government; and when transferred, without reference to the possession of the lands and without designation of any use of them requiring the delivery of their possession, the transfer was subject to their right of occupancy; and the manner, time, and conditions on which that right should be extinguished were matters for the determination of the government, and not for legal contestation in the courts between private parties. This doctrine is applicable generally to the rights of Indians to lands occupied by them under similar conditions. It was asserted in Buttz v. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company, 119 U. S. 55, and has never, so far as we are aware, been seriously controverted. * * * Though the law as stated with reference to the power of the government to determine the right of occupancy of the Indians to their lands has always been recognized, it is to be presumed, as stated by this court in the Buttz case, that in its exercise the United States will be governed by such considerations of justice as will control a Christian people in their treatment of an ignorant and dependent race, the court observing, however, that the propriety or justice of their action towards the Indians, with respect to their lands, is a question of governmental policy, and is not a matter open to discussion in a controversy between third parties neither of whom derives title from the Indians. The right of the United States to dispose of the fee of land occupied by them, it added, has always been recognized by this court from the foundation of the government. (Pp. 116–118.)

Plenary authority does not mean absolute power, and the exercise of the power must be founded upon some reasonable basis.[78] Thus, plenary power does > * * * * not enable the United States to give the tribal lands to others, or to appropriate them to its own purposes, without rendering, or assuming an obligation to render, just compensation for them; for that "would not be an exercise of guardianship, but an act of confiscation." [79]

The Supreme Court, per Mr. Justice Van Devanter, recently said: [80]

> * * * Our decisions, while recognizing that the government has power to control and manage the property and affairs of its Indian wards in good faith for their welfare, show that this power is subject to constitutional limitations and does not enable the government to give the lands of one tribe or band to another, or to deal with them as its own.[11] * * * (P. 375–376.)

[11] Lane v. Santa Rosa, 249 U. S. 110, 113: United States v. Creek Nation, 295 U. S. 103, 109–110; Shoshone Tribe v. United States, 299 U. S. 476, 497.

Thus, while Congress has broad powers over tribal lands, the United States does not have complete immunity from liability for the actions of Congress. If Congress takes tribal land from the Indians without either their consent or the payment of compensation, the United States is liable under the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution for the payment of just compensation,[81] which must include payment for the minerals and timber.[82] But the right of the Indians to just compensation is legally imperfect unless Congress itself passes legislation permitting suit by the Indians against the United States as the United States is not liable to suit without its consent.[83] While there is general legislation permitting suits for just compensation, this does not embrace suits by Indian tribes, and thus far they have been authorized to sue only by jurisdictional acts applying only to individual tribal complaints.[84] company. The Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Muskogee Nat. Tel. Co. v. Hall, 118 Fed. 382 (C. C. A. 8, 1902), said:

---

> * * * It is well settled that, in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce among the several states and with the Indian tribes, Congress has full authority to grant rights of way through the land occupied by the five Indian tribes domiciled in the Indian Territory for the construction of railroads (Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kan. R. Co., 135 U. S. 641, 10 Sup. Ct. 965, 34 L. Ed. 295; Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 485, 19 Sup. Ct. 722, 43 L. Ed. 1041); and in the exercise of this power it has recently authorized the secretary of the interior to grant rights of way through the Indian Territory for the construction, operation, and maintenance of telephone and telegraph lines. 31 Stat. 1083, c. 832, § 3. It follows, of course, that none of these tribes had the power to declare that any one telephone company should have the sole right to construct and operate telephone lines within its borders, since the existence of such a monopoly would have a necessary tendency to prevent free communication between those who reside outside of, and those who reside within, the territory. To this extent the grant of such a franchise as the one in question operates to obstruct interstate commerce. (P. 385.)

The Solicitor of the Department of the Interior has said:

> About the plenary power of Congress over tribal Indian property there can be no doubt and in the absence of some controlling reason to the contrary Congress undoubtedly has the power to subject such property to taxation either by the State or Federal Government. (Op. Sol. I. D., M. 14237, December 23, 1924.)

[78] Wise, Indian Law and Needed Reforms (1926), 12 A. B. A. Jour. 37, 38–39.

[79] United States v. Creek Nation, 295 U. S. 103, 110 (1935).

Property rights can be conferred by treaty as well as by formal grant. United States v. Creek Nation, 295 U. S. 103 (1935); Morrow v. United States, 243 Fed. 854 (C. C. A. 8, 1917). Government liability on the conduct of Indian affairs arises only from statutes or treaties with the tribe. McCalib, Adm'r v. United States, 83 C. Cls. 79, 87 (1936). See Shoshone Tribe v. United States, 299 U. S. 476, 497 (1937), in which the Court said:

> * * * Power to control and manage the property and affairs of Indians in good faith for their betterment and welfare may be exerted in many ways and at times even in derogation of the provisions of a treaty.

Also see Op. Sol. I. D., M. 29616, February 19, 1938.

[80] Chippewa Indians v. United States, 301 U. S. 358 (1937), aff'g 80 C. Cls. 410 (1935). Also see Creek Nation v. United States, 302 U. S. 620 (1938).

[81] The portion of this amendment which prohibits confiscation reads: "* * * nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

"* * * It is fundamental that tribal assets cannot be disposed of by the United States without the consent of the tribe or without compensation." Op. Sol. I. D., M. 29616, February 19, 1938, p. 7.

If vested rights are created in a tribe by a treaty or agreement, the Federal Government becomes liable for its violation by Congress. As the Supreme Court said in the case of United States v. Mille Lac Chippewas, 229 U. S. 498 (1913):

> * * * That the wrongful disposal was in disobedience to directions given in two resolutions of Congress does not make it any the less a violation of the trust. The resolutions, unlike the legislation sustained in Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, 307, and Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, Id. 553, 564, 568, were not adopted in the exercise of the administrative power of Congress over the property and affairs of dependent Indian wards, but were intended to assert, and did assert, an unqualified power of disposal over the lands as the absolute property of the Government. Doubtless this was because there was a misapprehension of the true relation of the Government to the lands, but that does not alter the result. (Pp. 509–510.)

Accord: Blackfeet et al. Nations v. United States, 81 C. Cls. 101 (1935).

Typical jurisdictional acts provide for recovery by a tribe against the United States "if * * * the United States Government has wrongfully appropriated any lands belonging to the said Indians" (Act of May 26, 1920, sec. 3, 41 Stat. 623) (Klamath); or for "misappropriation of any of the * * * lands of said tribe" (Act of June 3, 1920, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 738) (Sioux); or "the loss to said Indians of their right, title, or interest, arising from occupancy and use, in lands or other tribal or community property, without just compensation therefor, shall be held sufficient ground for relief" (Act of June 19, 1935, 49 Stat. 388) (Tlingit and Haida).

[82] United States v. Shoshone Tribe, 304 U. S. 111 (1938). See Chapter 15, secs. 14, 15. Also see C. T. Westwood, Legal Aspects of Land Acquisition, Indians and the Land, Contributions by the delegation of the United States, First Inter-American Conference on Indian Life, Patzcuaro, Mexico, published by Office of Indian Affairs (April, 1940) p. 4.

[83] However, suits against officers of the United States based on alleged illegal acts require no such statutory authority. Lane v. Pueblo of Santa Rosa, 249 U. S. 110 (1919), wherein it was held that the Secretary of the Interior could be enjoined from disposing of certain Indian lands as public lands of the United States. See Chapter 20, sec. 7.

[84] See Chapter 14, sec. 6B.

B. TRIBAL FUNDS

The power of Congress over tribal funds is the same as its power over tribal lands, and is, historically speaking, a result of the latter power, since tribal funds arise principally from the use and disposition of tribal lands. The extent of congressional power has been expressed by the Attorney General as follows: [85]

> Now, as these royalties are tribal funds, it can not be seriously contended that Congress had not power to provide for their disbursement for such purposes as it might deem for the best interest of the tribe. That power resides in the Government as the guardian of the Indians, and the authority of the United States as such guardian is not to be narrowly defined, but on the contrary is plenary.
>
> Examples of the exercise of such power over the tribal property of Indians, and decisions sustaining it, are found in many of the adjudicated cases, among them Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294; Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553; Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640; Sizemore v. Brady, 235 U. S. 441; Chase v. United States, decided April 11, 1921. (P. 63.)

The congressional control over tribal funds was defined by Justice Van Devanter in the case of Sizemore v. Brady.[86]

As in the case of lands, Congress cannot divert tribal funds from tribal purposes in the absence of Indian consent or corresponding benefit without being liable, when suit is brought, for the amount diverted. Thus, there has been occasion, not infrequently, for judicial analysis of the manner of disposition of tribal funds. On the whole the tendency of the Court of Claims has been to uphold expenditures authorized by Congress as made for tribal purposes.[87]

C. INDIVIDUAL LANDS

The power of Congress over individual lands, while less sweeping than its power over tribal lands, is clearly broad enough to cover supervision of the alienation of individual lands.[88] In fact the exercise of congressional power over individual lands has been largely directed toward the release, extension, or reimposition of restrictions surrounding their alienation, depending on whether the policy of conserving or of opening up Indian lands was dominant in Congress.

As "an incident to guardianship" [89] Congress not only has the power to extend,[90] modify, or remove existing restrictions on the alienation of such lands [91] but while the Indian is still the ward of the nation it may reimpose restrictions on property already freed from restrictions or delegate such power to an executive officer.[92]

This power includes permitting alienation upon such terms as Congress or the federal officer delegated with the power deems advisable from the standpoint of the protection of the Indians.[93] Such restrictions must be expressed and are not implied merely because the owner of land is an Indian,[94] nor can such restrictions be made retroactive so as to invalidate a conveyance made by an Indian before the restriction was imposed.[95]

Congress may lift the restriction on alienation of allotments to mixed-blood Indians and continue the restrictions on full-blood Indians, until the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that such Indians are competent to handle their own affairs.[96] In deciding this question the Supreme Court said:

> * * * it is necessary to have in mind certain matters which are well settled by the previous decisions of this court. The tribal Indians are wards of the Government, and as such under its guardianship. It rests with Congress to determine the time and extent of emancipation. Conferring citizenship is not inconsistent with the continuation of such guardianship, for it has been held that even after the Indians have been made citizens the relation of guardian and ward for some purposes may continue. On the other hand, Congress may relieve the Indians from such guardianship and control, in whole or in part, and may, if it sees fit, clothe them with full rights and responsibilities concerning their property or give to them a partial emancipation if it thinks that course better for their protection. United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591, 598, and cases cited. (Pp. 459–460.)

The restrictions on alienation of land express a public policy designed to protect improvident people.[97] Hence under the statutes, despite the good faith or motives of a grantee of land conveyed in violation of the restrictions,[98] the conveyance is void.[99]

As in the case of private property generally, Congress cannot deprive an Indian of his land or any interest therein without due process of law or take such property for public purposes without just compensation. An outstanding decision on this subject is

---

[85] 33 Op. A. G. 60 (1921). Also see Chickasaw Nation v. United States, 87 C. Cls. 91 (1938), cert. den. 307 U. S. 646. Congress may appropriate tribal funds for the civilization and self-support of the Indian tribe. Lane v. Morrison, 246 U. S. 214 (1918). See Chapter 12, sec. 2.

[86] 235 U. S. 441 (1914). See sec. 6, infra.

The power of Congress over Osage tribal funds is upheld in Ne-kah-wah-she-tun-kah v. Fall, 290 Fed. 303 (App. D. C. 1923), app. dism. 266 U. S. 595 (1925).

[87] See Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640 (1912).

[88] Congress has not exerted authority over individual lands not in a trust or restricted category except in so far as to reimpose restrictions and restore them to the class of lands under its supervision.

[89] La Motte v. United States, 254 U. S. 570, 575 (1921).

[90] Tiger v. Western Inv. Co., 221 U. S. 286 (1911); Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413 (1912). Also see United States v. Jackson, 280 U. S. 183, 191 (1930), involving extension of trust period of homestead patent under Act of July 4, 1884, 23 Stat. 76, 96, on the ground that the Indians possessed no vested right until a fee patent was issued; and United States v. Pelican, 232 U. S. 442, 451 (1914) involving congressional retention of trusteeship of land thrown open to settlement.

For a list of reservations in which the trust or restricted period was extended, see 25 C. F. R., appendix to Chapter 1, pp. 480–483.

[91] Goat v. United States, 224 U. S. 458 (1912); Deming Inv. Co. v. United States, 224 U. S. 471 (1912); Jones v. Prairie Oil Co., 273 U. S. 195 (1927).

[92] Brader v. James, 246 U. S. 88 (1918), cited with approval in McCurdy v. United States, 246 U. S. 263, 273 (1918).

[93] Mullen v. United States, 224 U. S. 448 (1912). See United States v. Noble, 237 U. S. 74 (1915); Sunderland v. United States, 266 U. S. 226 (1924).

[94] Doe v. Wilson, 23 How. 457 (1859).

[95] Wilson v. Wall, 6 Wall. 83 (1867).

[96] United States v. Waller, 243 U. S. 452 (1917). From time to time Congress has by statute empowered the Secretary to remove restrictions or issue certificates of competency to Indians deemed capable of managing their own affairs. See Chapter 11, sec. 4.

[97] * * * In adopting the restrictions, Congress was not imposing restraints on a class of persons who were sui juris, but on Indians who were being conducted from a state of dependent wardship to one of full emancipation and needed to be safeguarded against their own improvidence during the period of transition. The purpose of the restrictions was to give the needed protection * * *. (Pp. 464–465.) Smith v. McCullough, 270 U. S. 456 (1926).

[98] United States v. Brown, 8 F. 2d 564 (C. C. A. 8, 1925), cert. den., 270 U. S. 644 (1926).

[99] Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413 (1912); Goat v. United States, 224 U. S. 458 (1912); Starr v. Long Jim, 227 U. S. 613 (1913); Monson v. Simonson, 231 U. S. 341 (1913), holding that a deed by an Indian of an allotment subject to restrictions against alienation was absolutely void if made before final patent, even if made after passage of an act of Congress permitting the Secretary of the Interior to issue such patent; and that the unrestricted title subsequently acquired by the allottee under the patent does not inure to the grantee. Also see Miller v. McClain, 249 U. S. 308 (1919); United States v. Reynolds, 250 U. S. 104 (1919); and Smith v. Stevens, 77 U. S. 321, 326 (1870), discussing the policy behind restrictions on sale of land in Treaty between United States and Kansas Indians of June 3, 1825, 7 Stat. 244, 245, and the Act of May 26, 1860, 12 Stat. 21. Also see Chapter 11, sec. 4H.

Choate v. Trapp,[100] which held that exemption from taxation established by Congress created in the Indian landholder a vested right not subject to impairment by later legislative act.[101]

The Supreme Court distinguished between the exemption from taxation and the restriction on alienation:[102]

> But the exemption and non-alienability were two separate and distinct subjects. One conferred a right and the other imposed a limitation. * * * The right to remove the restriction was in pursuance of the power under which Congress could legislate as to the status of the ward and lengthen or shorten the period of disability. But the provision that the land should be non-taxable was a property right, which Congress undoubtedly had the power to grant. That right fully vested in the Indians and was binding upon Oklahoma. Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, 756; United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432. (P. 673.)

As part of its supervision of alienation of individual lands, Congress has provided for the disposition and inheritance, by descent or devise, of trust and restricted lands,[103] and the exercise of this power has been sustained.[104] Congress has also vested jurisdiction in the county courts over probate proceedings of such property.[105]

D. INDIVIDUAL FUNDS

The power of Congress over individual funds is an outgrowth of its control over restricted lands and the same general principles are applicable to both.[106]

SECTION 6. CONGRESSIONAL POWER—MEMBERSHIP

The Indian tribes have original power to determine their own membership.[107] Congress has the power, however, to supersede that determination when necessary for the administration of tribal property, particularly its distribution among the members of the tribe.[108]

The United States may assume full control over Indian tribes and determine membership in the tribe for the purpose of adjusting rights in tribal property.[109] The assumption of power on the part of the Federal Government to distribute tribal funds and land among the individual members of the tribe required the preparation of payment or census rolls. Several treaties[110] and statutes[111] authorized the establishment of such rolls and the pro rata distribution of tribal or public property among the enrollees. Rarely (considering the multitude of individual grievances presented annually by individual Indians or alleged Indians) has Congress specifically provided for additions to tribal rolls in individual cases.[112]

In addition to its ultimate authority to determine tribal membership, Congress may, as part of its power to administer tribal property, alter the basic rule that tribal property may [100] 224 U. S. 665 (1912). Also see Morrow v. United States, 243 Fed. 854 (C. C. A. 8, 1917); Chapter 13, secs. 1, 5. 10; 49 L. D. 348, 352 (1922); Op. Sol. I. D., M. 13864, December 24, 1924; Op. Sol. I. D., M. 25737, March 3, 1930.

---

[101] The Supreme Court said:

> There have been comparatively few cases which discuss the legislative power over private property held by the Indians. But those few all recognize that he is not excepted from the protection guaranteed by the Constitution. His private rights are secured and enforced to the same extent and in the same way as other residents or citizens of the United States. In re Heff, 197 U. S. 488, 504; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, 307; Smith v. Goodell, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 188; Lowry v. Wearer, 4 McLean, 82; Whirlwind v. Von der Ahe, 67 Mo. App. 628; Taylor v. Drew, 21 Arkansas, 485, 487. His right of private property is not subject to impairment by legislative action, even while he is, as a member of a tribe and subject to the guardianship of the United States as to his political and personal status. This was clearly recognized in the leading case of Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1. * * *
>
> Nothing that was said in Tiger v. Western Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286, is opposed to the same conclusion here. For that case did not involve property rights, but related solely to the power of Congress, to extend the period of the Indian's disability. The statute did not attempt to take his land or any right, member or appurtenance thereunto belonging. It left that as it was. But, having regard to the Indian's inexperience, and desiring to protect him against himself and those who might take advantage of his incapacity, Congress extended the time during which he could not sell. On that subject, after calling attention to the fact that "Tiger was still a ward of the Nation, so far as the alienation of these lands was concerned, and a member of the existing Creek Nation," it was said that "Incompetent persons, though citizens, may not have the full right to control their property," and that there was nothing in citizenship incompatible with guardianship, or with restricting sales by Indians deemed by Congress incapable of managing their estates.
>
> But there was no intimation that the power of wardship conferred authority on Congress to lessen any of the rights of property which had been vested in the individual Indian by prior laws or contracts. Such rights are protected from repeal by the provisions of the Fifth Amendment. (Pp. 677, 678.)

A recognition of this restriction on Federal power appears in Article XI of the Treaty of April 1, 1850, with the Wyandots, 9 Stat. 987, 992, which provided:

> All former treaties between the United States and the Wyandot nation of Indians are abrogated and declared null and void by this treaty—except such provisions as may have been made for the benefit of private individuals of said nation, by grants of reservations of lands, or otherwise, which are considered as vested rights, and not to be affected by anything contained in this treaty.

[102] Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665, 673 (1912). Apparently the removal of the restriction against alienation does not vest any rights in the Indian landholder. See Brader v. James, 246 U. S. 88 (1918).

Congress may assent to a state tax levied on the production of oil and gas under a lease of tribal lands. British-American Co. v. Board, 299 U. S. 159 (1936).

[103] Also see Chapter 11, sec. 6.

[104] Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553 (1903); Brader v. James, 246 U. S. 88 (1918). See Chapter 10, sec. 10; Chapter 11, sec. 6.

[105] On jurisdiction of county courts over the Five Civilized Tribes, see Chapter 23, sec. 11C, and Act of May 27, 1908, 35 Stat. 312, amended by Act of April 10, 1926, 44 Stat. 239.

[106] For a discussion of congressional control of individual funds see Chapter 10, sec. 2.

[107] See Chapter 7, sec. 4.

[108] The Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Farrell v. United States, 110 Fed. 942 (C. C. A. 8, 1901), said:

> * * * It is the settled rule of the judicial department of the government, in ascertaining the relations of Indian tribes and their members to the nation, to follow the action of the legislative and executive departments, to which the determination of these questions has been especially intrusted. U. S. v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 407, 419, 18 L. Ed. 182; U. S. v. Earl (C. C.) 17 Fed. 75, 78. (P. 951.)

[109] Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445 (1899). See Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, 306, 307 (1902).

[110] See, for example, Treaty of July 8, 1817, with the Cherokees, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 156; Treaty of November 24, 1848, with the Stockbridge Tribe, Art. 2, 9 Stat. 955; Treaty of November 15, 1861, with the Pottawatomie Nation, Art. 2, 12 Stat. 1191; Treaty of June 24, 1862, with the Ottawa Indians, Art. 8, 12 Stat. 1237; Treaty of June 28, 1862, with the Kickapoo Indians, Art. 2, 13 Stat. 623; Treaty of October 14, 1865, with the Cheyenne and Arrapahoe Tribes, Art. 7, 14 Stat. 703.

The general rule is that "in the absence of [statutory] provision to the contrary, the right of individual Indians to share in tribal property, whether lands or funds, depends upon tribal membership, is terminated when the membership is ended, and is neither alienable nor descendible." Wilbur v. United States, 281 U. S. 206, 216 (1930); also see Halbert v. United States, 283 U. S. 753, 762, 763 (1931). For a fuller discussion, see Chapter 9, sec. 3; Chapter 7, sec. 4.

[111] See, for example, Act of March 3, 1873, sec. 4, 17 Stat. 631 (Miamie); Act of March 3, 1881, sec. 4, 21 Stat. 414, 433 (Miami); Act of July 1, 1902, sec. 1, 32 Stat. 636 (Kansas); Act of June 4, 1920, 41 Stat. 751 (Crow); Act of May 19, 1924, 43 Stat. 132 (Lac du Flambeau band of Chippewas). Also see Campbell v. Wadsworth, 248 U. S. 169 (1918).

[112] See, for example, Act of May 30, 1896, 29 Stat. 736 (a Sac and Fox woman); Joint Resolution of October 20, 1914, 38 Stat. 780 (Five Civilized Tribes); Act of May 31, 1924, c. 215, 43 Stat. 246 (Flathead), discussed in Op. Sol. I. D., M.14233, April 24, 1925; also see Gritts v Fisher, 224 U. S. 640, 648 (1912).

be distributed only to tribal members.[113] It may thus provide that all children born of a marriage between a white man and an Indian woman who was recognized by the tribe at the time of her death shall have the same rights and privileges to the property of the tribe to which the mother belonged as have members of the tribe.[114]

Congress may authorize an administrative body to make a roll descriptive of the persons thereon so that they might be identified, to take a census of the tribes and to adopt any other means deemed necessary by the commission. It may provide that such rolls, when approved by the Secretary, shall be final, and that persons thereon and their descendants born thereafter and such persons as intermarry according to tribal laws should alone constitute the several tribes they represent.[115]

Enrollment does not ordinarily give a vested right in tribal property.[116] Congress may disregard the existing membership rolls of a tribe and direct that the per capita distribution be made upon the basis of a new roll, even though such act may be inconsistent with prior legislation, treaties, or agreements with the tribe.[117] Thus, the Supreme Court in the case of Sizemore v. Brady,[118] said:

> * * * Like other tribal Indians, the Creeks were wards of the United States, which possessed full power, if it deemed such a course wise, to assume full control over them and their affairs, to ascertain who were members of the tribe, to distribute the lands and funds among them, and to terminate the tribal government. * * * (P. 447.)

The Supreme Court, in holding that Congress may add to a tribal roll even though it purports to be final said:[119]

> It is not proposed to disturb the individual allotments made to members living September 1, 1902, and enrolled under the act of 1902, and therefore we are only concerned with whether children born after September 1, 1902, and living on March 4, 1906, should be excluded from the allottment and distribution. The act of 1902 required that they be excluded, and the legislation in 1906, as we have seen, provides for their inclusion. It is conceded, and properly so, that the later legislation is valid and controlling unless it impairs or destroys rights which the act of 1902 vested in members living September 1, 1902, and enrolled under that act. As has been indicated, their individual allotments are not affected. But it is said that the act of 1902 contemplated that they alone should receive allotments and be the participants in the distribution of the remaining lands, and also of the funds, of the tribe. No doubt such was the purport of the act. But that, in our opinion, did not confer upon them any vested right such as would disable Congress from thereafter making provision for admitting newly born members of the tribe to the allotment and distribution. The difficulty with the appellants' contention is that it treats the act of 1902 as a contract, when "it is only an act of Congress and can have no greater effect." Cherokee Intermarriage Cases, 203 U. S. 76, 93. It was but an exertion of the administrative control of the Government over the tribal property of tribal Indians, and was subject to change by Congress at any time before it was carried into effect and while the tribal relations continued. Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 488; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294; Wallace v. Adams, 204 U. S. 415, 423. It is not to be overlooked that those for whose benefit the change was made in 1906 were not strangers to the tribe, but were children born into it while it was still in existence and while there was still tribal property whereby they could be put on an equal, or approximately equal, plane with other members. The council of the tribe asked that this be done, and we entertain no doubt that Congress in acceding to the request was well within its power. (Pp. 647–648.)

In the important case of Wallace v. Adams[120] the Supreme Court held that the Act of July 1, 1902,[121] creating the Choctaw-Chickasaw citizenship court and giving it power to examine the judgments of the Indian territorial courts and determine whether they should be annulled on account of irregularities, was a valid exercise of power. This and other cases in this field are based on the theory of the ultimate power of Congress over matters of membership of the tribes and its power to adopt any reasonable measures to ascertain who are entitled to its prerogatives. If the result of one of the methods which it adopts is unsatisfactory, it may try another.[122]

Congress may make the finding of an administrative commission, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, a final determination of tribal membership.[123] The Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Wildcat[124] said:

> * * * There was thus constituted a quasi-judicial tribunal whose judgments within the limits of its jurisdiction were only subject to attack for fraud or such mistake of law or fact as would justify the holding that its judgments were voidable. Congress by this legislation evidenced an intention to put an end to controversy by providing a tribunal before which those interested could be heard and the rolls authoritatively made up of those who were entitled to participate in the partition of the tribal lands. It was to the interest of all concerned that the beneficiaries of this division should be ascertained. To this end the Commission was established and endowed with authority to hear and determine the matter.
>
> A correct conclusion was not necessary to the finality and binding character of its decisions. It may be that the Commission in acting upon the many cases before it made mistakes which are now impossible of correction. This might easily be so, for the Commission passed upon the rights of thousands claiming membership in the tribe and ascertained the rights of others who did not appear before it, upon the merits of whose standing the Commission had to pass with the best information which it could obtain.
>
> When the Commission proceeded in good faith to determine the matter and to act upon information before it, not arbitrarily, but according to its best judgment, we think it was the intention of the act that the matter, upon the approval of the Secretary, should be finally concluded and the rights of the parties forever settled, subject to such attacks as could successfully be made upon judgments of this character for fraud or mistake.
>
> We cannot agree that the case is within the principles decided in Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, and kindred

---

[113] See Chapter 9, sec. 3.

[114] Vezina v. United States, 245 Fed. 411 (C. C. A. 8, 1917). And see Chapter 9, sec. 3.

[115] See Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 490, 491 (1899); Chapter 7, sec. 4.

Congress may also provide that for the purpose of determining the quantum of Indian blood possessed by members of these tribes, and their capacity to alienate allotted lands, the rolls of citizenship approved by the Secretary of the Interior are conclusive.

Act of April 26, 1906, 34 Stat. 137, and Act of May 27, 1908, 35 Stat. 312, interpreted in United States v. Ferguson, 247 U. S. 175 (1918). Accord: Cully v. Mitchell, 37 F. 2d 493 (C. C. A. 10, 1930).

It has been held that Congress is not bound by the tribal rule regarding membership and may determine for itself whether a person is an Indian from the standpoint of a federal criminal statute. United States v. Rogers, 4 How. 567 (1846).

[116] Wilbur v. United States ex rel. Kadrie, 281 U. S. 206 (1930).

[117] See Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 488 (1899); Op. Sol. I. D., M.27759, January 22, 1935. Cf. Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553 (1903).

[118] 235 U. S. 441 (1914).

[119] Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640 (1912), discussed in Chapter 9, sec. 3. An example of "final" pro rata distribution of tribal assets is found in the Appropriation Act of May 31, 1900, 31 Stat. 221, 233 (Siletz Reservation). Cf. Act of April 21, 1904, 33 Stat. 189, 201 (Otoe and Missouria, Stockbridge and others).

[120] 204 U. S. 415 (1907).

[121] 32 Stat. 641, 647.

[122] See Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445 (1899), and Wallace v. Adams, 204 U. S. 415, 423 (1907). Also see Chapter 19, sec. 4.

[123] United States v. Atkins, 260 U. S. 220 (1922).

[124] 244 U. S. 111 (1917).

> cases, in which it has been held that in the absence of a subject-matter of jurisdiction an adjudication that there was such is not conclusive, and that a judgment based upon action without its proper subject being in existence is void. * * * (Pp. 118–119.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * We think the decision of such tribunal, when not impeached for fraud or mistake, conclusive of the question of membership in the tribe, when followed, as was the case here by the action of the Interior Department confirming the allotment and ordering the patents conveying the lands, which were in fact issued. * * * (P. 120.)

SECTION 7. ADMINISTRATIVE POWER—INTRODUCTION

By necessity Congress has delegated much of its power over the Indians to administrative officials. This power is dependent upon and supplementary to the legislative power. Although rhetorical figures of speech, like "guardianship,"[125] have tended to blur the distinction between administrative and legislative powers, it is important to distinguish between the problem of whether Congress possesses the authority to pass certain legislation and the problem of whether Congress has vested its power in an administrative officer or department.

"We have no officers in this government," the Supreme Court said, in the case of The Floyd Acceptances,[126] "from the President down to the most subordinate agent, who does not hold office under the law, with prescribed duties and limited authority." (Pp. 676–677.)

Therefore, in seeking to trace the scope of administrative power in the field of Indian law, our primary concern must be with the statutes and treaties that confer such power.

The interplay of the legislative and administrative branches of Government in Indian affairs has caused the frequent application of two rules of administrative law. The first is that if properly promulgated pursuant to law the rules and regulations of an administrative body have the force and effect of statutes and the courts will take judicial notice of them.[127] The Supreme Court in Maryland Casualty Co. v. United States,[128] said:

> * * * It is settled by many recent decisions of this court that a regulation by a department of government, addressed to and reasonably adapted to the enforcement of an act of Congress, the administration of which is confided to such department, has the force and effect of law if it be not in conflict with express statutory provision. United States v. Grimaud, 220 U. S. 506; United States v. Birdsall, 233 U. S. 223, 231; United States v. Smull, 236 U. S. 405, 409, 411; United States v. Morehead, 243 U. S. 607. * * * (P. 349.)

The second principle is that courts and administrative authorities give great weight to a construction of a statute consistently given by an executive department charged with its administration,[129] especially if it is a rule affecting considerable property or a doubtful question.[130]

The Supreme Court has given great weight to an administrative interpretation even if not long continued.[131]

These rules are based on the theory that the failure of Congress by subsequent legislation to change the construction of administrative bodies charged with the administration of a statute constitutes acquiescence in the practical construction of a statute.

---

[125] See Chapter 8, sec. 9.

[126] 7 Wall. 666 (1868). Also see United States v. MacDaniel, 7 Pet. 1 (1883); United States v. McMurray, 181 Fed. 723, 728 (C. C. E. D. Okla., 1910); 34 Op. A. G. 320 (1924). The power of administrative authorities to carry out treaty promises is shown in 23 Op. A. G. 214 (1900). Also see Chapter 3, sec. 3.

[127] The Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Bridgeman v. United States, 140 Fed. 577 (C. C. A. 9, 1905) said:

> Counsel are agreed that the rules and regulations of the Indian Department promulgated under the authority of law have the force and effect of statutes, and that the court will take judicial notice of them. * * * (P. 583.)

[128] 251 U. S. 342 (1920). Also see Montana Eastern Limited v. United States, 95 F. 2d 897 (C. C. A. 9, 1938).

[129] United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80 (1907); 4 Op. A. G. 75 (1842); 38 L. D. 553 (1910); United States v. Jackson, 280 U. S. 183, 193 (1930).

> When the law has been so construed by Government Departments during a long period as to permit a certain course of action, and Congress has not seen fit to intervene, the interpretation so given is strongly persuasive of the existence of the power. * * * (34 Op. A. G. 320 326 (1924).)

The Supreme Court in Cramer v. United States, 261 U. S. 219 (1923), said:

> That such individual occupancy [by a non-reservation Indian] is entitled to protection finds strong support in various rulings of the Interior Department, to which in land matters this Court has always given much weight [citing cases]. (P. 227.)

[130] 4 Op. A. G. 75 (1842). Also see Wisconsin v. Hitchcock, 201 U. S. 202 (1906); Kindred v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 225 U. S. 582, 596 (1912).

[131] The Supreme Court in United States v. First National Bank, 234 U. S. 245 (1914), said:

> While departmental construction of the Clapp Amendment does not have the weight which such constructions sometimes have in long continued observance, nevertheless it is entitled to consideration, the early administration of that amendment showing the interpretation placed upon it by competent men having to do with its enforcement. * * * (P. 261.)

A recent administrative interpretation will sometimes be given weight, though conflicting with early interpretation. United States v. Reynolds, 250 U. S. 104, 109 (1919). Departmental sponsorship of legislation is also considered. The Supreme Court in Blanset v. Cardin, 256 U. S. 319 (1921), said:

> * * * And there can be no doubt that the act was the suggestion of the Interior Department, and its construction is an assistant, if not demonstrative criterion, of the meaning and purpose of the act. Swigart v. Baker, 229 U. S. 187; Jacobs v. Prichard, 223 U. S. 200; United States v. Cerecedo Hermanos, 209 U. S. 337. And the regulations of the Department are administrative of the act and partake of its legal force. (P. 326.)

SECTION 8. THE RANGE OF ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS

The specific functions of officials of the Indian Service and of other federal officials dealing with Indian affairs are necessarily discussed in various parts of this chapter and in other chapters.[132] It may be worth while, however, at this point, to indicate the scheme of authorities which Congress has conferred in this field.

In general, administrative powers in the field of Indian affairs have been conferred upon the President, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Administrative powers of the President include the consolidation of agencies, and, with the consent of the tribes, the consolidation of one or more tribes on reservations created by Executive order;[133] dispensing with unnecessary agents,[134] or transferring

---

[132] See especially Chapter 2. Chapters 9 to 11 deal largely with administrative powers over property. Chapter 12 discusses administrative duties regarding federal services for the Indians; Chapter 16 deals with licensing of traders; Chapter 17, sec. 5, covers administration of liquor laws.

[133] Act of May 17, 1882, sec. 6, 22 Stat. 68, 88, 25 U. S. C. 63; Act of July 4, 1884, sec. 6, 23 Stat. 76, 97, 25 U. S. C. 63.

[134] Act of June 22, 1874, sec. 1, 18 Stat. 146, 147, 25 U. S. C. 64; Act of March 3, 1875, sec. 1, 18 Stat. 420, 421, 25 U. S. C. 64, interpreted in 15 Op. A. G. 405 (1877).

any agent "from the place or tribe designated by law, to such other place as the public service may require." [135]

The Secretary of the Interior, who has been described by a Solicitor of his Department as "guardian of all Indian interests," [136] acts on behalf of the President in the administration of Indian affairs. His acts are presumed to be the acts of the President.[137]

Administrative powers of the Secretary of the Interior include the establishing of superintendencies, agencies, and subagencies by tribes or by geographical boundaries,[138] the appointment of members of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board,[139] and the appointment of various Indian Bureau employees.[140]

Other duties are expressly delegated to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, such as issuing trader's licenses [141] and publishing statutory provisions regulating the duties of Indian Bureau employees.[142]

Provisions in many statutes [143] and occasional treaties confer on the President [144] or the Secretary of the Interior [145] or the Commissioner of Indian affairs [146] or all three [147] power to make rules and regulations.[148] The wide range of regulations concerning Indians is shown by title 25 of the Code of Federal Regulations.[149] Important statutes providing for rule-making in relation to the Indian which are included in title 25 of the United States Code are discussed in various parts of this volume.[150] A brief description of the subject matter of some of them will therefore suffice to show the variety of statutes expressly conferring regulatory power on the Secretary of the Interior. He is authorized to make regulations governing the business of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board,[151] concerning the operation of various types of leases affecting restricted Indian lands,[152] concerning service fees from individual Indians,[153] to secure attendance at school,[154] to admit white children to Indian day

---

[135] Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 4, 4 Stat. 729, 735, 25 U. S. C. 62. The power given in this section is not affected by the Senate being in session. 15 Op. A. G. 405 (1877). Also see Morrison v. Fall, 290 Fed. 306 (App. D. C. 1923), aff'd 266 U. S. 481 (1925), which also discusses the power of the President over agents.

The early tendency to place administrative responsibility on the President is exemplified by the Act of July 22, 1790, 1 Stat. 137, and the Act of March 3, 1795, 1 Stat. 443, which appropriated $50,000 for the purchase of goods for the Indians, and provided "that the sale of such goods be made under the direction of the President of the United States."

The President delegated to Indian superintendents and agents his duty to disburse funds. 15 Op. A. G. 66 (1875).

Other Presidential powers of appointment are conferred by the Act of May 25, 1824, sec. 1, 4 Stat. 35, and the Act of July 20, 1867, 15 Stat. 17.

See Act of May 20, 1826, 4 Stat. 188, providing for commissioners to treat with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians; Joint Resolution of May 7, 1872; 17 Stat. 395, to inquire into depredations; Act of January 12, 1891, 26 Stat. 712, to arrange for selection of reservations for Mission Indians in California. Also see Act of March 3, 1797, 1 Stat. 498, 501; Act of February 19, 1799, 1 Stat. 618; Act of May 1, 1876, 19 Stat. 41; Act of September 30, 1890 (Southern Utes), 26 Stat. 504, 524; Act of September 25, 1890, 26 Stat. 468; Act of April 30, 1908, sec. 1, 35 Stat. 70, 73, 25 U. S. C. 12.

Other statutory powers granted to the President regarding the Indians are discussed in later sections of this Chapter. Also see 25 U. S. C. 27, 28, 51, 65, 72, 112, 139, 140, 141, 153, 174, 180, 263, 331–333. For examples of treaty powers see Chapter 3, sec. 3B(5).

[136] 42 L. D. 493, 499 (1913).

[137] Wolsey v. Chapman, 101 U. S. 755, 769 (1879). The action of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs must be presumed to be the action of the President. Belt v. United States, 15 C. Cls. 92 (1879). The same rule has been applied for other departments. Maxwell v. United States, 49 C. Cls. 262, 274 (1914). The direction of the President is generally presumed in instructions and orders issuing from competent federal departments. 7 Op. A. G. 453 (1855).

In the absence of statutory authority subordinate officials have no power with respect to the duties of an office involving the exercise of judgment and discretion. United States v. Watashe, 102 F. 2d 428 (C. C. A. 10, 1939). See also Robertson v. United States, 285 Fed. 911 (App. D. C., 1922); Turner v. Seep, 167 Fed. 646 (C. C. E. D. Okla., 1909), mod. 179 Fed. 74; Memo. Sol. I. D., December 11, 1937.

Administrative or ministerial functions may be delegated without statutory authorization. The Secretary of the Interior has delegated some of his regulatory power over Indians to other officials or bodies. For instance, he has delegated administrative authority to the judges of the Court of Indian Offenses and to tribal courts.

The Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, in an opinion dated September 29, 1921, 48 L. D. 455 (1921), wrote:

> * * * During earlier times the Indians were practically confined on reservations and controlled by the strong arm of the Military. The President as "The Great White Father" was looked to as the protector of their interests, and was charged with many responsibilities and duties in their behalf. Gradually, by specific statute in some cases, but more rapidly within comparatively recent times by general legislation, that responsibility and duty has been lodged elsewhere, notably in the Secretary of the Interior. * * * (P. 457.)

As late as 1895, the Attorney General was asked whether the President must personally approve depredation claims. 21 Op. A. G. 131 (1895).

Also see Chapter 3, sec. 3; 3 Op. A. G. 367 (1838) and 471 (1839); 6 Op. A. G. 49 (1853) and 462 (1854); 16 Op. A. G. 225 (1878); 17 Op. A. G. 258, 259, (1882), and 265 (1882); and Goodnow, Administrative Law of the United States (1905).

[138] Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 735, amended by Act of March 3, 1847, 9 Stat. 202, 25 U. S. C. 40.

[139] Act of August 27, 1935, sec. 1, 49 Stat. 891, 25 U. S. C. 305.

[140] Act of March 3, 1819, 3 Stat. 516, 25 U. S. C. 271; Act of March 2, 1889, sec. 10, 25 Stat. 980, 1003, 25 U. S. C. 272; Act of March 3, 1863, sec. 1, 12 Stat. 774, 792, 25 U. S. C. 41. Various special acts provide for agents for particular tribes, Act of May 18, 1824, 4 Stat. 25 (Osage); Act of February 25, 1831, 4 Stat. 445 (Winnebago); Act of July 1, 1862, 12 Stat. 498 (Grand River and Wintah).

The Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President, has been authorized to discontinue the services "of such agents, sub-agents, interpreters, and mechanics, as may, from time to time, become unnecessary, in consequence of the emigration of the Indians, or other causes." Act of July 9, 1832, sec. 5, 4 Stat. 564, amended by Act of February 27, 1877, sec. 1, 19 Stat. 240, 244, 25 U. S. C. 65.

[141] See Chapter 16.

[142] Act of May 17, 1882, sec. 7, 22 Stat. 68, 88, 25 U. S. C. 3.

[143] Act of July 31, 1854, 10 Stat. 315; Act of March 3, 1865, 13 Stat. 541; Act of May 8, 1872, 17 Stat. 85; Act of May 23, 1876, 19 Stat. 55; Act of February 28, 1891, sec. 3, 26 Stat. 794, interpreted in 18 L. D. 497 (1894); also see 40 L. D. 211 (1911); Act of August 1, 1914, 38 Stat. 582, 583; Act of February 14, 1920, 41 Stat. 408, 410, 25 U. S. C. 282; Act of May 26, 1928, 45 Stat. 750, 25 U. S. C. 318a; Act of April 16, 1934, sec. 2, 48 Stat. 596, amended June 4, 1936, 49 Stat. 1458, 25 U. S. C. 454; Act of June 7, 1935, 49 Stat. 331; also see special statutes: Act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat, 819 (Sioux); Act of March 3, 1931, c. 414, 46 Stat. 1495 (Crow); Act of February 14, 1931, 46 Stat. 1107 (Chippewa).

[144] Treaty of October 14, 1864, with the Klamaths, 16 Stat. 707; Treaty of September 30, 1854, with the Chippewas, 10 Stat. 1109, 1110; unpublished treaty with the Creeks, Archives 17, August 7, 1790; Treaty of November 14, 1805, with the Creeks, 7 Stat. 96.

[145] Treaty of February 8, 1831, with the Menominee, 7 Stat. 342; Treaty of March 6, 1865, with the Omaha, 14 Stat. 667.

[146] Treaty of October 21, 1867, with the Kiowas and Comanches, Art. 9, 15 Stat. 581.

[147] Treaty of June 9, 1863, with the Nez Perce, Art. 3, 14 Stat. 647.

[148] The procedure adopted by the Office of Indian Affairs in drafting regulations is discussed in Monograph 20, Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure (1940).

[149] The subjects covered in this Code are noted in Chapter 2, sec. 3A.

[150] Chapters 2, 4, 8, 9, 10, 12, 15, 16.

[151] Act of August 27, 1935, sec. 3, 49 Stat. 891, 892, 25 U. S. 305b.

[152] Act of May 11, 1938, sec. 4, 52 Stat. 347, 348, 25 U. S. C. 396d; see Chapter 15, sec. 19.

[153] Act of May 9, 1938, sec. 1, 52 Stat. 291, 313 as amended by Act of May 10, 1939, sec. 1, 53 Stat. 685, 708, 25 U. S. C. 561.

[154] Act of July 13, 1892, sec. 1, 27 Stat. 120, 143, 25 U. S. C. 284; Act of March 3, 1893, sec. 1, 27 Stat. 612, 628, 25 U. S. C. 283; Act of February 14, 1920, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 408, 410, 25 U. S. C. 282; Chapter 12, sec. 2.

schools [155] and Indian boarding schools,[156] for the conduct of an Indian reform school,[157] for disposal by will of restricted allotments,[158] governing the use of water on irrigation lands [159] and the apportionment of irrigation costs,[160] and covering trading licenses.[161]

In addition to those statutes which confer regulatory power for specific purposes, there are several general statutes which have sometimes been relied upon as the basis for the exercise of administrative power. Section 17 of the Act of June 30, 1834,[162] provides:

> * * * the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may think fit, for carrying into effect the various provisions of this act, and of any other act relating to Indian affairs, and for the settlement of the accounts of the Indian department.

This general statute fills the needs of practical administration arising from the fact that many acts of Congress require the issuance of regulations for their proper interpretation and enforcement, although such regulations are not expressly authorized.[163]

Section 1 of the Act of July 9, 1832,[164] as amended by the Act of March 3, 1849,[165] establishing the Department of the Interior, provides that a Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and "agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe, have the management of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations."

This statute, enacted in 1832, was obviously not intended to vest in the newly created office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the power to regulate Indian conduct generally. Since the acts of the Commissioner were expressly made subject to regulations prescribed by the President, the limits of which have already been outlined, the phrase "management of all Indian affairs" clearly does not mean "management of the affairs of the Indians," any more than the phrase "management of foreign affairs" means "management of the affairs of foreign nations or of foreigners." [166] The phrases "Indian affairs" and "Indian relations" are intended to cover the relations between the United States and the Indian tribes, which relations are commonly established either by treaty or by statute.[167]

Whether the President, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has "general supervisory authority" over Indians in the absence of specific legislation has been questioned in several cases.

In the case of Francis v. Francis [168] the President, pursuant to a treaty reserving land to individual Indians and their heirs, issued a patent conveying a title with restrictions upon conveyance. The Supreme Court held ineffectual the restrictive clause because the "President had no authority, in virtue of his office, to impose any such restriction; certainly not, without the authority of an act of Congress, and no such act was ever passed." (P. 242.)

The question of whether internal affairs of Indian tribes, in the absence of statute, are to be regulated by the tribe itself or by the Interior Department was squarely before the Supreme Court in the case of Jones v. Meehan.[169] One of the questions presented by that case was whether inheritance of Indian land, in the absence of statute, was governed "by the laws, usages, and customs of the Chippewa Indians" or by the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior.[170] In line with numerous decisions of lower courts, the Supreme Court held that the Secretary of the Interior did not have the power claimed, and that in the absence of statute such power rested with the tribe and not with the Interior Department.

In Romero v. United States,[171] a regulation of the President regarding the salaries of Indian Service officials was held invalid despite the claim that this might be justified under Revised Stat-

---

[155] Act of March 1, 1907, 34 Stat. 1015, 1018, 25 U. S. C. 288.

[156] Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 783, 25 U. S. C. 289.

[157] Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325, 328, 25 U. S. C. 302.

[158] Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 2, 36 Stat. 855, amended by Act of February 14, 1913, 37 Stat. 678, 25 U. S. C. 373; see Chapter 11, sec. 6B.

[159] Act of February 8, 1887, sec. 7, 24 Stat. 388, 25 U. S. C. 381; see Chapter 12, sec. 7.

[160] Act of April 4, 1910, secs. 1 and 3, 36 Stat. 269; Act of August 1, 1914, sec. 1, 38 Stat. 582, 25 U. S. C. 385; see Chapter 12, sec. 7.

[161] Act of July 31, 1882, 22 Stat. 179, 25 U. S. C. 264; also see Chapter 17; for other examples in 25 U. S. Code see secs. 14 (money accruing to Indians from governmental agencies); 192 (sale by agents of unnecessary cattle and horses); 275 (leaves of absence to certain employees of Indian Service); 292 (suspension of schools); 319 (rights-of-way); 454 (standard of state services). Many of the rules and regulations require the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to approve or disapprove specified transactions. See for example 25 Code of Federal Regulations (1940), secs. 21.13, 21.9, 21.46 and 28.35.

[162] 4 Stat. 735, 738, 25 U. S. C. 9.

[163] The Act of February 14, 1903, sec. 12, 32 Stat. 825, 830, as embodied in 5 U. S. C. 485, provides:

> The Secretary of the Interior is charged with the supervison of public business relating to the following subjects:
>
> * * * * *
>
> Second. The Indians.

[164] 4 Stat. 564, 25 U. S. C. 2.

[165] 9 Stat. 395. Also see Act of July 27, 1868, 15 Stat. 228.

[166] See the explanation of a similar phrase in Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 553 (1832), discussed in Chapter 3, sec. 4C. And see definition of duties of Commissioners and other department employees in Act of January 17, 1800, 2 Stat. 6, in terms of "facilitating or preserving a friendly intercourse with the Indians, or for managing the concerns of the United States with them, * * *."

[167] 5 U. S. C. 22, R. S. § 161, as derived from the Acts of July 27, 1789, 1 Stat. 28; August 7, 1789, 1 Stat. 49; September 2, 1789, 1 Stat. 65; September 15, 1789, 1 Stat. 68: April 30, 1798, 1 Stat. 553; March 3, 1849, 9 Stat. 393, 395; June 22, 1870, 16 Stat. 163; June 8, 1872, 17 Stat. 283, provides:

> Departmental regulations.—The head of each department is authorized to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the government of his department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it.

This statute is obviously directed to the regulation of internal matters within the various departments, such as the allocation of authority to officials, the forms to be used in departmental business, and other matters ejusdem generis. It cannot be reasonably construed as a grant of power to any administrative officer to promulgate regulations requiring obedience outside of the federal service.

[168] 203 U. S. 233 (1906).

[169] 175 U. S. 1 (1899). Similarly in other fields: The case of United States v. George, 228 U. S. 14 (1913) holds that a regulation of the Interior Department relating to public lands is invalid where not authorized by any act of Congress. The argument that general power to prescribe reasonable regulations governing public lands is conferred by Revised Statutes, section 441, and by other similar statutes, was rejected by the Supreme Court in this case with the following comment:

> It will be seen that they confer administrative power only. This is undubitably so as to sections 161, 441, 453, and 2478; and certainly under the guise of regulation legislation cannot be exercised. United States v. United Verde Copper Co., 196 U. S. 207. (P. 20.)

Also see Morrill v. Jones, 106 U. S. 466, 467 (1882).

Unless empowered by statute, the Secretary of the Interior is not authorized to issue regulations granting an extension of time for the payment of certain accrued water right charges, Op. Sol. I. D., M. 26034, July 3, 1930, nor to create a charge against the Indians on their lands, Op. Sol. I. D., M. 27512, February 20, 1935. Also see Romero v. United States, 24 C. Cls. 331 (1889); Leecy v. United States, 190 Fed. 289 (C. C. A. 8, 1911); app. dism. 232 U. S. 731 (1914); Mason v. Sams, 5 F. 2d, 255 (D. C. W. D. Wash. 1925), and Hale v. Wilder, 8 Kans. 545 (1871).

[170] 175 U. S. 1, 31.

[171] 24 C. Cls. 331 (1889).

utes, section 465.[172] The court declared that such regulations "must be in execution of, and supplementary to, but not in conflict with the statutes." The actual holding in this case may be explained on the theory that the regulation questioned conflicted with general provisions of law on tenure of office.

In the case of Leecy v. United States [173] the claim of the Department that Revised Statutes 441 [174] and 463 [175] were a grant of general regulatory powers was again rejected. In this case, as in the Romero case, it may be argued that the regulation in question was in derogation of the statutory rights of the Indians. A fair reading of the opinion, however, indicates that the supposed statutory rights invaded were so tenuous that every unauthorized regulation of the conduct of an Indian, or any other citizen, could similarly be regarded as a violation of statutory or constitutional rights. The real force of the decision is the holding that sections 441 and 463 of the Revised Statutes do not create independent powers.[176]

The claim of administrative officers to plenary power to regulate Indian conduct has been rejected in every decided case where such power was not invoked simply to implement the administration of some more specific statutory or treaty provision.

There is sometimes a tendency to regard the scope of administrative authority over Indians as broad enough to encompass almost every form of regulation. This idea, like the view of an omnipotent congressional power,[177] has been nurtured by descriptions of the extent of this power in dicta in decisions involving a specific legislative grant of administrative power.[178] Such language may influence later decisions in doubtful cases involving questions as to whether administrative power was implicit though not clearly delegated by the language of the statute.

The scope of administrative powers raises problems of particular importance in five fields: (a) tribal lands;[179] (b) tribal funds;[180] (c) individual lands;[181] (d) individual funds;[182] and (e) tribal membership.[183]

---

[172] Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 17, 4 Stat. 735, 738, 25 U. S. C. 9.

[173] 190 Fed. 289 (C. C. A. 8, 1911), app. dism. United States v. Leecy, 232 U. S. 731 (1914).

[174] Derived from Act of March 3, 1849, 9 Stat. 395, 5 U. S. C. 485.

[175] Derived from Act of July 9, 1832, 4 Stat. 564, 25 U. S. C. 2.

[176] In LaMotte v. United States, 254 U. S. 570 (1921), mod'g and aff'g 256 Fed. 5 (C. C. A. 8, 1919), the Supreme Court upheld the validity of regulations covering the leasing of restricted lands which were subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior by the Act of June 28, 1906, sec. 7, 34 Stat. 539, on the ground that "The regulations appear to be consistent with the statute, appropriate to its execution, and in themselves reasonable."

In United States v. Birdsall, 233 U. S. 223 (1914), rev'g 206 Fed. 818 (D. C. N. D. Iowa 1913), the regulation challenged and upheld dealt with the conduct of departmental employees, and was authorized by Revised Statutes § 2058, 25 U. S. C. 31, derived from Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 7, 4 Stat. 736, Act of June 5, 1850, sec. 4, 9 Stat. 437, and Act of February 27, 1851, sec. 5, 9 Stat. 587.

[177] See secs. 1–6, supra.

[178] Chief Justice Hughes (then associate justice), in describing the functions of the Office of Indian Affairs, said in United States v. Birdsall, 233 U. S. 223 (1914), rev'g 206 Fed. 818 (D. C. N. D. Iowa 1913):

> * * * The object of the establishment of the office was to create an administrative agency with broad powers adequate to the execution of the policy of the Government, as determined by the acts of Congress, with respect to the Indians under its guardianship. * * * (P. 232.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * In executing the powers of the Indian Office there is necessarily a wide range for administrative discretion and in determining the scope of official action regard must be had to the authority conferred; and this, as we have seen, embraces every action which may properly constitute an aid in the enforcement of the law. (P. 235.)

In upholding the power of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to require bill collectors to remain away from the Indian agency on the days when payments were being made, Mr. Justice Van Devanter, then on the Circuit Court of Appeals, wrote in Rainbow v. Young, 161 Fed. 835 (C. C. A. 8, 1908):

> * * * we turn to the statutes bearing upon the authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and in considering them it is well to remember, as was said in United States v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. 1, 14, 8 L. Ed. 587, that:
>
> "A practical knowledge of the action of any one of the great departments of the government must convince every person that the head of a department, in the distribution of its duties and responsibilities, is often compelled to exercise his discretion. He is limited in the exercise of his powers by the law; but it does not follow that he must show statutory provision for everything he does. No government could be administered on such principles. To attempt to regulate by law the minute movements of every part of the complicated machinery of government would evince a most unpardonable ignorance on the subject. Whilst the great outlines of its movements may be marked out, and limitations imposed on the exercise of its powers there are numberless things which must be done, that can neither be anticipated nor defined, and which are essential to the proper action of the government." (P. 837.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> In our opinion the very general language of the statutes makes it quite plain that the authority conferred upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was intended to be sufficiently comprehensive to enable him, agreeably to the laws of Congress and to the supervision of the President and the Secretary of the Interior, to manage all Indian affairs, and all matters arising out of Indian relations, with a just regard, not merely to the rights and welfare of the public, but also to the rights and welfare of the Indians, and to the duty of care and protection owing to them by reason of their state of dependency and tutelage. And, while there is no specific provision relating to the exclusion of collectors from Indian agencies at times when payments are being made to the Indians, it does not follow that the commissioner is without authority to exclude them; for by section 2149 he is both authorized and required, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to remove from any tribal reservation "any person" whose presence therein may, in his judgment, be detrimental to the peace and welfare of the Indians. This applies alike to all persons whose presence may be thus detrimental, and commits the decision of that question to the commissioner. Of course, it is necessary to the adequate protection of the Indians and to the orderly conduct of reservation affairs, that some such authority should be vested in someone, and it is in keeping with other legislation relating to the Indians that it should be vested in the commissioner. United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80, 27 Sup. Ct. 423, 51 L. Ed. 718. There is no provision for a re-examination by the courts of the question of fact so committed to him for decision, and, considering the nature of the question, the plenary power of Congress in the matter, and the obvious difficulties in the way of such a re-examination, we think it is intended that there shall be none. United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock, supra; Stanclift v. Fox, 81 C. C. A. 623, 152 Fed. 697 (pp. 838–839).

See also United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80 (1907); Memo. Sol. I. D., February 28, 1935, which refers to United States v. Clapox, 35 Fed. 575, 577 (D. C. Ore. 1888); Adams v. Freeman, 50 Pac. 135, 138 (1897); Memo. Sol. I. D., August 30, 1938; Op. Sol. I. D., M. 27750, July 14, 1934; 32 Op. A. G. 586 (1921).

[179] See sec. 9, infra.

[180] See sec. 10, infra.

[181] See sec. 11, infra.

[182] See sec. 12, infra.

[183] See sec. 13, infra.

SECTION 9. ADMINISTRATIVE POWER—TRIBAL LANDS

A. ACQUISITION

One of the most important powers granted to the Secretary of the Interior is the power to acquire land for tribes. Apart from the many special statutes in this field,[184] two provisions of general law deserve mention.

Section 3 of the Wheeler-Howard Act [185] provides:

> The Secretary of the Interior, if he shall find it to be in the public interest, is hereby authorized to restore to tribal ownership the remaining surplus lands of any Indian reservation heretofore opened, or authorized to be opened, to sale, or any other form of disposal by Presidential proclamation, or by any of the public-land laws > of the United States: Provided, however, That valid rights or claims of any persons to any lands so withdrawn existing on the date of the withdrawal shall not be affected by this Act: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to lands within any reclamation project heretofore authorized in any Indian reservation: * * *

[184] See Chapter 15, secs. 6–8.

[185] Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984, 985, 25 U. S. C. 463.

This provision was originally framed in mandatory language, but was amended to make the restoration a discretionary act.[186] The administrative determination of this question may be guided by the fact, among others, that the protection of the property rights of the tribes is a federal function in which the public at large is interested.[187]

A second method by which the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to acquire lands for Indian tribes is set forth in section 5 of the Wheeler-Howard Act.[188] This section authorizes the Secretary:

> * * * in his discretion, to acquire, through purchase, relinquishment, gift, exchange, or assignment, any interest in lands, water rights, or surface right to lands, within or without existing reservations, including trust and otherwise restricted allotments, whether the allottee be living or deceased, for the purpose of providing land for Indians.

The procedure followed under this authority and the status of lands thereby acquired are elsewhere discussed.[189]

B. LEASING

The Secretary of the Interior has no power to enter into or approve a lease without authority from either a treaty[190] or a statute.[191] A few statutes permit the Secretary alone to make tribal leases for land rights,[192] but the law covering the leasing of most tribal land permits the tribal council to lease the lands subject to the approval of the Secretary.[193] Some of these statutes have been recently summarized by the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior.[194] Under existing laws,[195] and under many tribal charters[196] adopted pursuant to the Wheeler-Howard Act,[197] the tribal council has a right to make leases and permits on its own initiative subject to the approval of the Department. Under most of the statutes it is held that the Secretary acts in a quasi-judicial capacity in acting upon the recommendations of the superintendent and the actions of the tribal council regarding these leases, and hence cannot delegate this function to the superintendent.[198] It has been administratively held that the determination of the council should be conclusive upon the Department of the Interior, at least in the absence of evidence of mistake, fraud, or undue influence.[199]

C. ALIENATION

The general prohibition against alienation of tribal lands is elsewhere analyzed.[200] These restraints upon alienation apply to federal administrative officers, as well as to tribal authorities, and to interests less than a fee as well as to conveyances in fee simple.[201] Thus, in the absence of express statutory authorization, the Secretary of the Interior has no power to diminish the tribal estate by withdrawing a right-of-way for the construction of irrigation ditches.[202] Congress, however, has conferred upon administrative authorities various statutory powers to alienate interests in tribal land less than a fee, particularly easements and rights-of-way.[203] Generally these statutes do not make tribal consent a condition to the validity of the alienation, but as a practical administrative matter tribal consent is frequently made a condition of the grant.[204]

---

[186] Memo. Sol. I. D., September 29, 1937; Op. Sol. I. D., M. 29798, June 15, 1938. See also Op. Sol. I. D., M. 29616, February 19, 1938.

Even prior to the passage of this section, the Secretary of the Interior had adequate authority to withdraw lands from the public domain for public purposes.

See Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 836, 847, relating to "public lands." The authority to make temporary withdrawals was expressly preserved by sec. 4 of the Act of March 3, 1927, 44 Stat. 1347, which provides:

> That hereafter changes in the boundaries of reservations created by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise for the use and occupation of Indians shall not be made except by Act of Congress: Provided, That this shall not apply to temporary withdrawals by the Secretary of the Interior.

Memo. Sol. I. D., September 17, 1934.

[187] For discussion of tribal property see Chapter 15.

[188] 48 Stat. 984, 985, 25 U. S. C. 465.

[189] See Chapter 15, sec. 8. See also Memo. Sol. I. D., August 14, 1937; Memo. Sol. I. D., September 29, 1937.

[190] See 23 Op. A. G. 214, 220 (1900).

[191] 18 Op. A. G. 235 (1885); 18 Op. A. G. 486 (1886). It has been customary to utilize revocable permits on tribal lands which could not be leased under the statutes in order to preserve the value of the lands and to obtain a revenue from them rather than allowing them to lie idle. Memo. Sol. I. D., January 12, 1937.

[192] Act of June 28, 1898, sec. 13, 30 Stat. 495 (Indian Terr.). Statutes of this nature concerning mineral leasing are described in Chapter 15, sec. 19.

[193] Act of February 28, 1891, 26 Stat. 794, sec. 3, 25 U. S. C. 397, extended by Act of August 15, 1894, sec. 1, 28 Stat. 286, 305, 25 U. S. C. 402. Alse see Act of May 11, 1938, sec. 1, 52 Stat. 347, 25 U. S. C. 396a, and Chapter 15, sec. 19.

[194] Memo. Sol. I. D., October 21, 1938:

> Leases or permits covering use of tribal lands, entry or residence thereon, or removal of resources therefrom, may be executed through the concurrent action of the tribe and the Secretary of the Interior, or his duly authorized representative, under the following statutes and regulations: United States Code, title 25, sections 179, 397, 398, and 402; regulations governing the leasing of tribal lands for mining purposes, approved May 31, 1939, section 2; general grazing regulations, approved December 23, 1935, section 6; see 55 Decisions, Department of Interior 14, at pages 50–56.
>
> * * * * *
>
> The tribe may, with departmental approval, assign certain tracts of tribal land to individual members of the tribe or to particular families.
>
> Such assignments may be purely for personal use and occupancy or they may permit leasing to outsiders under departmental supervision. * * *
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * The tribe has no right to lease any part of the reservation without departmental approval. So, too, the individual Indian has no right to make a lease covering any part of the reservation without departmental approval.
>
> The Department may withhold its approval from any lease, permit or assignment which does not do substantial justice to the claims of the tribe as a whole and the individual Indians who may have built improvements in particular areas.

Also see Chapter 15, secs. 19 and 20. On the power of the President to authorize the sale or other disposition of dead timber on reservations, see Act of February 16, 1889, 25 Stat. 673, 25 U. S. C. 196.

[195] See Act of June 7, 1924, sec. 17, 43 Stat. 636; Act of May 29, 1924, 43 Stat. 244, 25 U. S. C. 398, interpreted in British-American Co. v. Board, 299 U. S. 159 (1936).

[196] See Chapter 15, secs. 19 and 20. Some tribal charters require departmental approval of leases but not of permits. Ibid. sec. 20.

[197] 48 Stat. 984.

[198] Memo. So. I. D., March 25, 1939. Some permits, like grazing permits for tribal lands, are frequently issued by the superintendent and then approved by the governing body of the tribe.

[199] Memo. Sol. I. D., May 22, 1937, containing a discussion of the principles which should guide administrative practice. Also see White Bear v. Barth, 61 Mont. 322, 203 Pac. 517 (1921).

Although an original lease of tribal lands was signed by the Secretary and a lessee, it has been administratively held that after the passage of the Wheeler-Howard Act and the adoption of a tribal constitution conferring power to prevent any lease affecting tribal land without the consent of the tribe, the Secretary of the Interior cannot modify such lease without securing the approval of the Indian tribe. Memo. Sol. I. D., July 19, 1937.

[200] See Chapter 15, sec. 18.

[201] See Memo. Sol. I. D., September 2, 1936; Memo. Sol. I. D., September 6, 1934, and Memo. Sol. I. D., March 11, 1935. See also 25 C. F. R. 256.83.

[202] Memo. Sol. I. D., April 12, 1940 (Flathead).

[203] See 25 U. S. C. 311–322.

[204] See 25 C. F. R. 256.24, 256.53, 256.83.

Where statutory authority for the issuance of a right-of-way exists, it has been administratively held that such authority is not repealed by section 4 of the Act of June 18, 1934.[205] In thus construing the Act of June 18, 1934, the Solicitor for the Interior Department declared:[206]

> * * * The only limitations which the Reorganization Act imposes upon the exercise of authority conferred by such specific acts of Congress are: (a) a tribe organized under section 16 may veto the grant under the broad power given it by that section "to prevent the sale, disposition, lease, or encumbrance of tribal lands, interests in lands, or other tribal assets without the consent of the tribe" and (b) a tribe incorporated under section 17 may be given the power to make such grants without restriction.

Although the grant of an easement is held to be outside the prohibition of section 4 of the Act of June 18, 1934, it would appear that section 16 of the act[207] requires the consent of an organized tribe to any grant of right-of-way which the Secretary is authorized to make.[208] Tribal consent is likewise required where the Secretary of the Interior seeks to set aside tribal lands for reservoir purposes for an irrigation project.[209]

> * * * It is true that the United States in its sovereign capacity may condemn tribal land for certain purposes and may even appropriate tribal land by act of Congress subject to constitutional requirements of compensation. But the rights and powers with respect to tribal property granted by the Constitution and Charter of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes are effective against officers of the United States not acting under direct mandate of Congress. Indeed, unless officers of the Department can be restrained by the Tribe from disposing of tribal property, all meaning has vanished from the provision in section 16 of the Indian Reorganization Act granting to an organized tribe the power "to prevent the sale, disposition, lease, or encumbrance of tribal lands, interests in lands, or other tribal assets without the consent of the tribe." The only persons against whom this provision can be directed are officers of the United States. Private individuals never have had the power to sell tribal land or to dispose of tribal assets. If then * * * the restrictions contained in the above-quoted provision do not run against the United States, they are meaningless and the constitutional provisions enacted in accordance therewith are a false promise.

[205] 48 Stat. 984, 985, 25 U. S. C. 464.
[206] Memo. Sol. I. D., September 2, 1936.
[207] 48 Stat. 986, 25 U. S. C. 476.
[208] See 25 C. F. R. 256.83.
[209] Memo. Sol. I. D., July 8, 1936. And see 25 C. F. R. 256.44.

SECTION 10. ADMINISTRATIVE POWER—TRIBAL FUNDS[210]

In defining the scope of federal administrative power over tribal funds it is important to bear in mind certain distinctions between various classes of funds, all of which are, in some sense of the word, tribal.

Funds which an Indian tribe has derived from its own members or from third parties without the interposition of the Federal Government, as where tribal authorities hold a fair or dance and charge admission, are, in a very real sense, "tribal," yet it has never been held that federal administrative authorities have any control over such funds.[211]

A second class of funds which may be called "tribal" comprises those funds held in the treasury of a tribe which has become incorporated under section 17 of the Act of June 18, 1934,[212] or organized under section 16 of that act.[213] In both cases the scope of departmental power with respect to such funds is marked out by the provisions of tribal constitution or charter. Typically, departmental review is required where the financial transactions exceed a fixed level of magnitude or importance, but not in lesser matters. In the case of incorporated tribes, such departmental supervisory powers are generally temporary.[214]

A third class of funds consists of moneys held in the Treasury of the United States in trust for an Indian tribe. It is this class of funds which is customarily referred to under the phrase "tribal funds." These funds arise from two sources, in general:

1. Payments promised by the Federal Government to the tribe for lands ceded or other valuable consideration,[215] usually arising out of a treaty, and
2. Payments made to federal officials by lessees, land purchasers, or other private parties in exchange for some benefit, generally tribal land or interests therein.[216]

In view of the fact that the land itself was subject to a considerable measure of control, it was natural to find a similar control placed over the funds into which tribal lands were transmuted. Congress has, in general, reserved complete power over the disposition of these funds, requiring that each expenditure of such funds be made pursuant to an appropriation act, although this strict rule has been relaxed for certain favored purposes.[217] Thus it has developed that administrative authority for any disbursement of "tribal funds," in the strict sense, must be derived from the language of some annual appropriation act or from those statutes which are, in effect, permanent appropriations of tribal funds for specified purposes.[218]

[210] The Act of April 1, 1880, c. 41, 21 Stat. 70, provided:

> That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to deposit, in the Treasury of the United States, any and all sums now held by him, or which may hereafter be received by him, as Secretary of the Interior and trustee of various Indian tribes, on account of the redemption of United States bonds, or other stocks and securities belonging to the Indian trust-fund, and all sums received on account of sales of Indian trust lands, and the sales of stocks lately purchased for temporary investment, whenever he is of the opinion that the best interests of the Indians will be promoted by such deposits, in lieu of investments; and the United States shall pay interest semi-annually, from the date of deposit of any and all such sums in the United States Treasury, at the rate per annum stipulated by treaties or prescribed by law, and such payments shall be made in the usual manner, as each may become due, without further appropriation by Congress.

Previous to the enactment of this law, the Secretary of the Interior invested tribal funds in various kinds of bonds, including state bonds, some of which were defaulted.

[211] It has been suggested that the Federal Government might bring suit on behalf of an Indian to insure a fair distribution of such funds, but there are no decisions on this point. See Memo. Sol. I. D., November 18, 1936 (Palm Springs).
[212] See Chapter 15, secs. 23 and 24.
[213] See Chapter 15, sec. 23.
[214] Ibid., secs. 23 and 24.
[215] See Chapter 1, sec. 1; Chapter 2, sec. 2; Chapter 3, sec. 3C(3); Chapter 15, sec. 23. The payment of annuities and distribution of goods is a ministerial duty, enforceable by mandamus, if the Secretary is arbitrary or capricious. Work v. United States, 18 F. 2d 820 (App. D. C. 1927). Cf. United States ex rel. Coburn v. Work, 18 F. 2d 822 (App. D. C. 1927); United States ex rel. Detling v. Work, 18 F. 2d 822 (App. D. C. 1927).
[216] See Chapter 15, sec. 23.
[217] Ibid.
[218] The Act of May 18, 1916, sec. 27, 39 Stat. 123, 158, 159, requires specific congressional appropriation for expenditure of tribal funds except as follows:

> * * * Equalization of allotments, education of Indian children in accordance with existing law, per capita and other payments, all of which are hereby continued in full force and effect: * * *

See Chapter 15, sec. 23. Provisions relating to the deposit or investment of funds are numerous. For example, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to "invest in a manner which shall be in his judgment most safe, and beneficial for the fund, all moneys that may be received under treaties containing stipulations for the payment to the Indians, annually, of interest upon the proceeds of the lands ceded by them; and he shall make no investment of such moneys, or of any portion, at a lower rate

Among the most important of the permanent authorizations for the disbursement of tribal funds are the various statutes providing for the division and apportionment of tribal funds among the members of the tribe.[219]

While any administrative control over these funds must be based on statutory authority, it is not necessary, nor is it indeed possible, that every detail of the expenditure shall be expressly covered by statute.[220]

The Court of Claims in the case of Creek Nation v. United States[221] said:

> * * * The Secretary of the Interior has only such authority over the funds of Indian tribes as is confided in him by Congress. He cannot legally disburse and pay out Indian funds for purposes other than those authorized by law. This rule is the test by which the legal right of the Secretary of the Interior to make the disbursements involved must be determined. The contention, however, that the Secretary of the Interior could legally make only such disbursements as were expressly authorized by Congress cannot be conceded. The authorities cited in plaintiff's brief in support of this contention, when considered in the light of the precise questions presented, do not sustain it. The opinion of Attorney General Mitchell of October 5, 1929 (36 Op. Attys. Gen. 98–100), in fact, refutes the contention, and in effect lays down the rule that the authority of the Secretary of the Interior over Indian property may arise from the necessary implication as well as from the express provisions of a statute. We think this is the correct rule and will apply it in determining whether the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to make the payments in question. The authority of the Secretary of the Interior to make the payments, or his lack of authority to make them, must be found in the treaties between the United States and the Creek Nation, and the various acts of Congress dealing with Creek tribal affairs. (P. 485.)

Quite apart from the necessity of finding some statutory source for authority to expend funds held in the United States Treasury in trust for an Indian tribe, there are certain positive statutory limitations upon the ways in which such funds may be disbursed. These statutes, which are elsewhere listed,[222] limit the administrative authority derived from appropriation acts construed in conjunction with section 17 of the Act of June 30, 1834,[223] which gave the President power to "prescribe such rules and regulations as he may think fit, for carrying into effect the various provisions of this act, and of any other act relating to Indian affairs, and for the settlement of the accounts of the Indian department."

Perhaps the most important of these statutory limitations in effect today is that imposed by section 16 of the Act of June 18, 1934,[224] which gives an organized tribe the right to prevent any disposition of its assets without the consent of the proper officers of the tribe. This includes the right to prevent disbursements of tribal funds by departmental officials, where the tribe has not consented to such disbursements. Unless an act of Congress authorizing disbursements of tribal funds expressly repeals relevant provisions of the Indian Reorganization Act, such appropriation legislation does not nullify the power of the tribe to prevent such expenditure.[225]

There is a fourth category of funds which may be called "tribal funds" but which are subject neither to the uncontrolled tribal power pertaining to the first class of funds discussed; to the defined tribal power of the second class, nor to the detailed congressional control pertaining to the third class. This fourth category includes funds which have accrued to administrative officials as a result of various Indian activities not specially recognized or regulated by act of Congress.

The Act of March 3, 1883,[226] as amended, provides:

> The proceeds of all pasturage and sales of timber, coal, or other product of any Indian reservation, except those of the five civilized tribes, and not the result of the labor of any member of such tribe, shall be covered into the Treasury for the benefit of such tribe under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe; and the Secretary shall report his action in detail to Congress at its next session.

The Comptroller General in a report on Indian funds dated February 28, 1929,[227] stated:

> * * * The absolute control and almost indiscriminate use of these funds, through authority delegated to the several Indian agents by the Commissioner of Indian of interest than 5 per centum per annum." (25 U. S. C. 158, R. S. § 2096, derived from Act of June 14, 1836, 5 Stat. 36, 47, as amended by Act of January 9, 1837, sec. 4, 5 Stat. 135.)

---

There are many special statutes relating to the disposition of tribal funds. For example, the Act of June 20, 1936, 49 Stat. 1543, provides:

> That tribal funds now on deposit or later placed to the credit of the Crow Tribe of Indians, Montana, may be used for per-capita payments, or such other purposes as may be designated by the tribal council and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. * * *

The Comptroller General has differentiated between two types of tribal funds:

> There are several classes of trust funds provided for by law, the moneys in which are held in trust for certain beneficiaries specified therein. The following may serve as examples:
>
> * * * * *
>
> (b) Section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat., 645), provides that the net proceeds of sales of lands ceded to the United States by the Chippewa Indians shall be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians as a permanent fund, which shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per centum per annum, principal and interest to be expended for the benefit of said Indians.
>
> (c) Section 5 of the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat., 204), in consideration of lands ceded to the United States, provides as follows:
>
> "That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, set apart, and hold as a perpetual trust-fund for said Ute Indians, an amount of money sufficient at four per centum to produce annually fifty thousand dollars, which interest shall be paid to them per capita in cash. annually. * * *"
>
> The moneys in the general fund and also those in special funds are available for public expenditures. There is, however, an important distinction in these two classes of funds. Moneys in the general fund can only be withdrawn from the Treasury in pursuance of an appropriation made by law; but moneys in special funds, having been dedicated by Congress for expenditure for specified objects before they were covered into the Treasury, in which they have been placed for safe-keeping only, are subject to withdrawal from the Treasury for expenditure for those objects without an appropriation (13 Comp. Dec. 219, 700). It is true that in some instances, as in that of the special fund called the "reclamation fund" (3, supra), Congress has used the term "appropriation" in constituting certain moneys to be collected special funds; but as the term is so applied to the moneys before they are collected it is obvious that the term is so used in a general sense only, for which the term "dedicated" appears to be more appropriate.
>
> Moneys in trust funds are not properly available for expenditures of the Government. They are payable to or for the use of the beneficiaries only. The beneficiaries may be either a single person or a class of persons. In the three classes of trust funds given above, the trust moneys in the first class (a) were received directly from the donors; those in the second class (b) were collected as revenues of the United States charged with the trust; those in the third class (c) were a grant of moneys in the general fund of the Treasury in pursuance of a treaty obligation. (14 Decisions Comptroller Treasury, 361, 365–366 (1907).)

[219] These statutes are discussed in Chapter 9, sec. 6; Chapter 10, sec. 5; Chapter 15, sec. 23.

[220] Act of May 18, 1916, sec. 27, 39 Stat. 123, 158, requires with a few exceptions specific congressional appropriation for tribal expenditures of tribal moneys. The Act of May 25, 1918, secs. 27 and 28, 40 Stat. 561, authorizes the Secretary to invest restricted funds, tribal or individual, in United States Government bonds. Also see Chapter 15, sec. 22F.

[221] 78 C. Cls. 474 (1933). On the lack of power of the Secretary to restore to the Creek orphan fund the funds erroneously expended for general benefit of tribe, see 16 Op. A. G. 31 (1878).

[222] See Chapter 9, sec. 6; Chapter 10, sec. 5; Chapter 15, sec. 23.

[223] 4 Stat. 735, 738, 25 U. S. C. 9, construed to cover disbursement of tribal funds in 5 Op. A. G. 36 (1848).

[224] 48 Stat. 984.

[225] Memo. Sol. I. D., October 5, 1936.

[226] 22 Stat. 582, 590; amended Act of March 2, 1887, 24 Stat. 449, 463; Act of May 17, 1926, sec. 2, 44 Stat. 560; Act of May 29, 1928, sec. 68, 45 Stat. 986, 991, 25 U. S. C. 155.

[227] Sen. Doc. 263, 70th Cong., 2d sess., 1928–29. For a discussion see American Indian Life, Bull. No. 14 (May 1929), American Defense Association, Inc., p. 19.

> Affairs pursuant to section 463, Revised Statutes, is apparently causing complaint on the part of groups of Indians. (P. 40.)

The report also contained some evidence justifying the discontent of the Indians.

> * * * "Indian moneys, proceeds of labor," were being used for such purposes as the purchase of adding machines and office equipment, furniture, rugs, draperies, etc., for employees' quarters, papering and painting the superintendent's house, and the purchase of automobiles for the field units. (P. 40.)[228]

The Comptroller General concluded that—

> * * * This condition has through the years of practice brought about a very broad interpretation of what constitutes "the benefit" of the Indian. (P. 39.)[229]

The Act of June 13, 1930,[230] provides:

> SEC. 2. All tribal funds arising under the Act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. 590), as amended by the Act of May 17, 1926 (44 Stat. 560), now included in the fund 'Indian Money, Proceeds of Labor,' shall, on and after July 1, 1930, be carried on the books of the Treasury Department in separate accounts for the respective tribes, and all such funds with account balances exceeding $500 shall bear simple interest at the rate of 4 per centum per annum from July 1, 1930.
>
> SEC. 3. The amount held in any tribal fund account which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, is not required for the purpose for which the fund was created, shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury; and so much thereof as is found to be necessary for such purpose may at any time thereafter be restored to the account on books of the Treasury without appropriation by Congress.

The extent to which funds which are still called "I. M. P. L." are subject to the statutory limitations applicable to tribal funds in the strict sense is an intricate problem upon which no opinion will be here ventured.[231]

[228] Sen. Doc. 263, op. cit.

[229] Ibid.

[230] C. 483, 46 Stat. 584. There are 300 tribal "funds of principal" held in trust by the United States in the Treasury (Department of the Treasury, Combined Statement of Receipts and Expenditures, Balances, etc., of the United States for Fiscal Year ended June 30, 1939, pp. 417–427), and 266 interest accounts, which are classified by the Treasury as general funds (Ibid., pp. 260–269). The Department of the Interior breaks down many of the principal funds into subordinate classifications.

[231] See Chapter 15, sec. 23A.

SECTION 11. ADMINISTRATIVE POWER—INDIVIDUAL LANDS

Administrative power over individual Indian lands is of particular importance at five points:

(a) Approval of allotments,
(b) Release of restrictions,
(c) Probate of estates,
(d) Issuance of rights-of-way,
(e) Leasing.

A. APPROVAL OF ALLOTMENTS

The statutes and treaties which confer upon individual Indians rights to allotments are elsewhere discussed,[232] as is the legislation governing jurisdiction over suits for allotments.[233] Within the fabric of rights and remedies thus defined there is a certain scope of administrative discretion[234] which is described in a recent ruling of the Solicitor for the Interior Department in these terms:[235]

> * * * The Secretary may for good reason refuse to approve an allotment selection, but he may not cancel his approval of an allotment except to correct error or to relieve fraud. Cf. Corneleus v. Kessel (128 U. S. 456) (public land entry). It is very doubtful whether the Secretary would be privileged to return allotment selections to tribal ownership simply on the ground that the Wheeler-Howard Act possibly forbids the trust patenting of such selections.
>
> * * * * *
>
> (2) Where the Secretary has approved an allotment, the ministerial duty arises to issue a patent. With approval his discretion is ended except, of course, for such reconsideration of his approval as he may find necessary (24 L. D. 264). Since only the routine matter of issuing a patent remains, the allottee after his allotment is approved is considered as having a vested right to the allotment as against the Government. Raymond Bear Hill (42 L. D. 689 (1929)). (Cf. Where a certificate of approval has issued as in the Five Civilized Tribe cases, Ballinger v. Frost (216 U. S. 240); and where right to a homestead is involved, Stark v. Starre (6 Wall. 402).) And then the allottee may bring mandamus to obtain the patent. See Vachon v. Nichols-Chisolm Lumber Co. (126 Minn. 303, 148 N. W. 288, 290 (1914).) Cf. Lane v. Hoglund (244 U. S. 174); Butterworth v. United States (112 U. S. 50); Barney v. Dolph (97 U. S. 652, 656).
>
> * * * * *
>
> (3) Where an allotment has not been approved, on the other hand, approval and the issuance of a patent cannot be compelled by mandamus. West v. Hitchcock (205 U. S. 80); United States v. Hitchcock (190 U. S. 316). But it is recognized that an allottee acquires rights in land with some of the incidents of ownership when the allotting agents have set apart allotments and he has made his selection. Until that time an Indian eligible for allotment has only a floating right which is personal to himself and dies with him. La Roque v. United States (239 U. S. 62). See Philomme Smith (24 L. D. 323, 327). The owner of an allotment selection, even before its approval, has an inheritable interest (United States v. Chase (245 U. S. 89); Smith v. Bonifer (166 Fed. 846) (C. C. A. 9th, 1909)); which will be protected from the outside world (Smith v. Bonifer, supra); and which he can transfer within limits (Henkel v. United States, supra; United States v. Chase, supra); and which is sufficient to confer on him the privileges of State citizenship as granted to all "allottees" by the act of 1887 (State v. Norris, supra). Moreover, where the Government has issued an erroneous patent for the allotment selections, the owner of such selection will be protected in his right against the adverse interests possessing the patent (Hy-Yu-Tse-Mil-Kin v. Smith (194 U. S. 401); Smith v. Bonifer (132 Fed. 889 (C. C. Ore. 1904), 166 Fed. 846 (C. C. A. 9th, 1909)), and against the Government itself. Conway v.

[232] See Chapter 11, sec. 2.

[233] See Chapter 19, sec. 2.

[234] The Act of March 3, 1885, sec. 6, 23 Stat. 340 (Cayuse and others) which authorizes the Secretary to determine all disputes and questions arising between Indians regarding their allotments, exemplifies one of the many administrative powers over allotments. The Supreme Court in Hy-Yu-Tse-Mil-Kin v. Smith, 194 U. S. 401 (1904) said that if two Indians claim the same land, the allotment should be "made in favor of the one whose priority of selection and residence and whose improvements on the land equitably entitled such person to the land." (P. 414.)

The Court in the case of La Roque v. United States, 239 U. S. 62 (1915) said:

> * * * The regulations and decisions of the Secretary of the Interior, under whose supervision the act was to be administered, show that it was construed by that officer as confining the right of selection to living Indians and that he so instructed the allotting officers. While not conclusive, this construction given to the act in the course of its actual execution is entitled to great respect and ought not to be overruled without cogent and persuasive reasons. (P. 64.)

On the scope of discretion of the Secretary of the Interior in allotting lands, see Chase, Jr., v. United States, 256 U. S. 1 (1921).

[235] Op. Sol., I. D., M. 28086, July 17, 1935. And see Memo. Sol., I. D., September 17, 1934.

United States (149 Fed. 261) (C. C. Neb. 1907). In these cases the courts lay down the principle that where an Indian has done all that is necessary and that he can do to become entitled to land and fails to attain the right through the neglect or misconduct of public officers, the courts will protect him in such right. Again, where the claimant does all required of him he acquires a right against the Government for the perfection of his title, and the right is to be determined as of the date it should have been perfected. Payne v. New Mexico (255 U. S. 367); Raymond Bear Hill, supra.

Further, where the right to the allotment has failed to become vested through the neglect of public officers to attach approval to the selection, one court has indicated that the right to the allotment would be considered as already vested so as to be beyond the reach of a later act of Congress. Lemieux v. United States (15 Fed. (2d) 518, 521 (C. C. A. 8th, 1926)). In the Lemieux case the Secretary's approval under the act of 1887 would have had to include determination of the qualifications of the applicants but in the Fort Belknap situation, no question of qualifications arises since previous enrollment on the allotment list is made by statute conclusive evidence of the enrollee's right to allotment. Thus the position of the Fort Belknap allottee compels even more strongly to the conclusion suggested in the Lemieux case. It has also been suggested that where the Indian possesses all the qualifications entitling him to an allotment, the Secretary has no longer any discretion to refuse approval. See State v. Norris, supra (55 N. W. at 1089.)

In ruling that the Secretary of the Interior could disapprove allotment selections on a reservation which had voted to exclude itself from the Wheeler-Howard Act, the Solicitor of the Department of Interior said:[236]

* * * the owners of allotment selections have certain rights and interests which will be protected against outside interests and errors by Government agents. United States v. Chase (245 U. S. 89); Hy-Yu-Tsc-Mil-Kin v. Smith (194 U. S. 401); Smith v. Bonifer (166 Fed. 846, C. C. A. 9th, 1909); Conway v. United States (149 Fed. 261, C. C. Neb. 1907). But they ordinarily have no vested right to approval or to a patent. In other words, they cannot prevent Congress from annuling their selection (Lemieux v. United States, 15 Fed. (2d) 518, 521 (C. C. A. 8th, 1926)), nor force the Secretary to grant approval. West v. Hitchcock (205 U. S. 80).

Decidedly, the conservation of Indian land in tribal ownership when as imperative as in the Ft. Peck situation, if it can be accomplished, would appear to be sufficient justification for the exercise of the discretion of the Secretary to refuse approval to allotment selections. Precedent is not available for guidance here since cases dealing with the discretion of the Secretary to refuse approval to allotments have dealt only with his power as applied to particular applications for allotment and resulting from certain defects in the application. However, in one of these cases, West v. Hitchcock (205 U. S. 80), the stewardship of the Secretary over tribal property was recognized as a source of power to refuse allotments injurious to the tribe. The power would seem at least as great when applied on a large scale as in a single instance. Accordingly, I conclude that the Secretary is privileged to disapprove the Ft. Peck selections upon the grounds of policy.

The Solicitor of the Department of the Interior has further described the power of the Secretary over allotment selections in a subsequent opinion dealing with the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. He declared:[237]

Where allotment selections have been duly made under authority of the Department and pursuant to its official instructions and in accordance with a course of allotment on the reservation, in my opinion it is probable that a court would hold that the Secretary cannot decline to approve particular selections because of a subsequent change in land policy. His authority to disapprove such selections would be limited to disapproving particular selections not entitled to approval because of error or the ineligibility of the applicant or other such reason. I base my opinion on the fact that when an official allotment selection has been duly made in accordance with the laws and regulations at the time of the selection, in ordinary circumstances the selector acquires a certain property interest in the land and a right to the perfection of his title which courts will protect.

An Indian eligible for allotment who has not properly selected an allotment under the instructions of the Interior Department has only a floating right to an allotment which is not inheritable and which gives him no vested interest in any land. La Roque v. United States, 239 U. S. 62; Woodbury v. United States, 170 Fed. 302, C. C. A. 8th, 1909. After proper selection of an allotment, however, an Indian has been held to have an individual interest in the land with many of the incidents of individual ownership. His interest is inheritable, transferable within limits, and deserving of protection against adverse claims by third persons. United States v. Chase, 245 U. S. 89; Henkel v. United States, 237 U. S. 43; Hy-Yu-Tsc-Mil-Kin v. Smith, 194 U. S. 401; Bonifer v. Smith, 166 Fed. 846, C. C. A. 9th, 1909; see 55 I. D. 295, at 303.

The cases before the Interior Department and before the courts which are of most concern in this problem are the cases dealing with the protection of an allotment selection against adverse action by the Government, either by Congress or by the Executive. The Department has taken the view that acts of Congress limiting allotment rights in "undisposed of" tribal lands do not apply to allotment selections even though they have not been approved. Fort Peck and Uncompahgre Allotments, 53 I. D. 538; Raymond Bear Hill, 52 L. D. 689. In these decisions it was held that the filing and recording of an allotment selection segregates the land from other disposal, withdraws the land from the mass of tribal lands, and creates in the Indian an individual property right.

* * * * *

* * * a judicial determination of whether or not an allotment selection merits protection against adverse governmental action involves a weighing of the equities in the light of the intent of Congress and the history of administrative action. In the Palm Springs case the act contemplated that no allotments should be made until the Secretary of the Interior was satisfied of their advisability. No allotments were in fact made and the Secretary was clearly not satisfied of their advisability. If a court attempted to force the recognition and completion of tentative selections in the field, it would encroach upon executive discretion. In the Payne and Leecy cases, however, whatever discretion had been given to the Executive as to the advisability of allotments had been exercised and a course of allotment had been established. Thereafter, individual allotment selections were approved or disapproved according to their individual merits. In this situation a court could properly prevent, as an abuse of discretion, the failure to approve an individual allotment selection, not because of its own demerits, but because of extraneous policies.

B. RELEASE OF RESTRICTIONS

Perhaps the most important power vested in administrative officials with respect to allotted land is the power to pass upon the alienation of such lands. We have elsewhere noted the rigid restrictions placed upon the alienation of tribal lands from early times.[238] Allotments carried the obvious risk that the land given to the individual allottee would be speedily alienated.[239] Accordingly restrictions of various kinds were imposed upon allotments for the purpose of controlling alienation. Such restrictions were [237] Op. Sol. I. D., M. 30256, May 31, 1939. In reaching his conclusion, the Solicitor discussed, among other cases, the following: United States v. Payne, 264 U. S. 446 (1924); Leecy v. United States, 190 Fed. 289 (C. C. A. 8, 1911), app. dism. United States v. Leecy, 232 U. S. 731 (1914); and the Palm Springs Reservation case, St. Marie v. United States, 24 F. Supp. 237 (D. C. S. D. Cal. 1938), aff'd 108 F. 2d 876 (C. C. A. 10, 1940).

[236] Memo. Sol. I. D., July 17, 1935.

[238] See Chapter 15, sec. 18.

[239] See Chapter 11, sec. 1.

embodied in various treaties [240] and statutes [241] that preceded the General Allotment Act.

At the present time restrictions upon alienation of allotments are in general of two kinds: (1) the "trust patent" and (2) the "restricted fee."

(1) Under the General Allotment Act and related legislation,[242] the allottee receives what is called a "trust patent", the theory being that the United States retains legal title to the land. Alienation of the land, therefore, requires either the consent of the United States to the alienation or, as a prerequisite to a valid conveyance, the issuance of a fee patent to the allottee.

Section 5 of the General Allotment Act [243] provided that at the expiration of 25 years the trust should terminate and a fee patent should be issued.[244] The President, however, was given discretionary authority to extend this period,[245] and by the Act of May 8, 1906,[246] the Secretary of the Interior was given power to issue a patent in fee simple "whenever he shall be satisfied that any Indian allottee is competent and capable of managing his or her affairs." Finally, the Act of June 25, 1910,[247] authorized the Secretary to sell trust patented lands in heirship status.

The Act of May 8, 1906, did not in terms require the consent of the Indian allottee as a condition to the issuance of a patent in fee simple by the Secretary of the Interior. Under a deliberate policy of hastening the "emancipation" of the Indian, many fee patents were issued without Indian application and even over Indian protest.[248] Many years later the courts held that the Act of May 8, 1906, had not been properly construed, that no patent could properly issue prior to the expiration of the trust period without the consent of the Indian, and that taxes paid by the Indians upon lands thus patented without Indian consent might be recovered.[249] In the case of United States v. Ferry County, Wash.,[250] the court declared, after reviewing numerous authorities:

> The United States as trustee may not liquidate the trust without the consent of the allottees and the Act of May 8, 1906, on which defendants rely must have so intended, U. S. v. Benewah County, Idaho, 9 Cir., 290 F. 628. (P. 400.)

Congress has taken cognizance of the error involved in the assumption by the Interior Department of power to issue fee patents without Indian consent and has authorized appropriations to repay to Indians taxes paid on such lands and to repay to county authorities judgments obtained in favor of Indians paying such taxes.[251]

The Secretary's authority to sell trust patented lands was revoked, except for sales to Indian tribes and exchanges of land of equal value, by section 4 of the Act of June 18, 1934,[252] on those reservations to which that statute applies. The Secretary of the Interior, however, still has power to issue a fee patent to the holder of a trust patent in advance of the expiration of the 25-year period, at least where the allottee makes application therefor. Section 2 of the same act extended the trust period "until otherwise directed by Congress."

A second form of restriction upon the alienability of allotments involves the holding of a legal fee by the allottee under a deed which prevents alienation without the consent of some administrative officer, usually the Secretary of the Interior.[253] Such tenure, for instance, is provided by various statutes dealing with allotments among the Five Civilized Tribes.[254] The acquisition of land by federal authorities for individual Indians has frequently been effected by means of these restricted deeds.[255] Section 2 of the Act of June 18, 1934,[256] extends the period of such restrictions indefinitely until Congress shall otherwise provide, but does not prohibit the termination of such period by mutual agreement between the Indian and the appropriate administrative official. Alienation of allotments held in fee simple subject to restrictions on alienation may be authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, prior to the expiration of the statutory period, under the Act of March 1, 1907.[257] Issuance of a "certificate of competency" prior to the expiration of the statutory period is authorized by the Act of June 25, 1910.[258] As in the case of trust-

---

[240] Thus, for example, Article 3 of the Treaty of September 30, 1854, with the Chippewas, 10 Stat. 1109, 1110, authorized the President to impose restrictions upon allotted lands. In Starr v. Campbell, 208 U. S. 527 (1908), it was held that these restrictions covered the disposition of timber.

[241] See Chapter 11, sec. 1.

[242] See Chapter 11, sec. 1. Also see Chapter 4, sec. 11.

[243] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 389, amended, Act of March 3, 1901, sec. 9, 31 Stat. 1058, 1085, 25 U. S. C. 348.

[244] To the effect that upon the expiration of the trust period there then remains nothing to be done but the purely ministerial duty of casting the legal title on the person or persons to whom such title belongs, see Op. Sol. I. D. M. 5379, July 14, 1921; Op. Sol. I. D. M. 5702, April 27, 1922. But cf. 30 L. D. 258 (1900).

[245] Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325, 326, 25 U. S. C. 391. In United States v. Jackson, 280 U. S. 183 (1930), the Supreme Court held that presidential power under this provision extended to Indian public domain homesteads.

It has been held that when the trust period has expired it cannot be reimposed in the guise of an "extension" without express statutory authority. Reynolds v. United States, 252 Fed. 65 (C. C. A. 8, 1918), revd. sub nom. United States v. Reynolds, 250 U. S. 104 (1919), on another ground; Op. Sol. I. D. M. 27939, April 9, 1935. Cf. McCurdy v. United States, 246 U. S. 263 (1918). For an example of such a statute see Act of February 26, 1927, 44 Stat. 1247, 25 U. S. C. 352.

[246] 34 Stat. 182, 25 U. S. C. 349.

[247] Sec. 1, 36 Stat. 855, amended, Act of March 3, 1928, 45 Stat. 161, amended, Act of April 30, 1934, 48 Stat. 647, 25 U. S. C. 372.

[248] See Chapter 2, sec. 3E.

[249] See Chapter 13, sec. 3B.

[250] 24 F. Supp. 399 (D. C. E. D. Wash. 1938).

[251] Act of June 11, 1940 (Pub. No. 590—76th Cong.). See, for a history of this erroneous departmental interpretation and its consequences in the field of taxation, H. Rept. No. 669, 76th Cong., 1st sess. (1939).

[252] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 464.

[253] The power delegated to the Secretary of the Interior to approve the alienation of restricted property cannot generally be transferred or delegated to any other governmental agency. Op. Sol. I. D. M. 25258, June 26, 1929. United States v. Watashe, 102 F. 2d 428 (C. C. A. 10, 1939).

[254] See Chapter 23, sec. 8A.

[255] The Secretary of the Interior may impose restrictions on land purchased by him for an Indian from restricted money. United States v. Brown, 8 F. 2d 564 (C. C. A. 8, 1925), cert. den. 270 U. S. 644 (1926), discussed in 39 Harv. L. R. 780 (1926) (money paid under lease of allotted lands). The underlying theory is that the Secretary's control over the funds embraces the power to invest them in land subject to the condition against alienation. A similar theory is advanced to justify the power of the Secretary to restrict lands purchased with money paid for allotted lands. See Sunderland v. United States, 266 U. S. 226 (1924) (money paid for allotted lands).

On the problem of taxation raised thereby, see Chapter 13, sec. 3D.

[256] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 462.

[257] 34 Stat. 1015, 1018, 25 U. S. C. 405. On the effective date of Secretarial approval of a deed, see 53 I. D. 412 (1931).

[258] Sec. 1, 36 Stat. 855, 25 U. S. C. 372.

The Circuit Court of Appeals in Ex parte Pero, 99 F. 2d 28 (C. C. A. 7, 1938), cert. den. 306 U. S. 643 (1939), in holding that the issuance of a certificate of competency under the Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, does not satisfy the requirement for the issuing of a patent in fee simple, said:

> The scope and expressed purpose of the Act of 1910 is narrow and definitely stated. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue a certificate of competency to any Indian ("or in case of his death to his heirs") to whom a patent in fee containing restrictions on alienation has been, or may be issued. "And such certificate shall have the effect of removing the restrictions on alienation contained in such patent." Since the effect of removing the restrictions on a restricted patent in fee is to put the holder in the condition of one who has received a patent in fee simple "under any law or treaty." * * * Since Congress expressly provided that the Secretary of the Interior should first be satisfied that a trust allottee was competent and capable of managing his own affairs as a condition precedent to the issuance of patent in fee simple, it would seem to be doing violence to legislative intent for this court to substitute a certificate of competency for both patented lands, however, the power of the Secretary to permit alienation was terminated with respect to tribes covered by section 4 of the Act of June 18, 1934.[259]

We have elsewhere noted how the Federal Government, through the leverage of its veto power over the alienation of tribal land, was able to impose various conditions upon the use of "tribal funds" derived therefrom.[260] In the same way, the power of administrative officials to approve or veto the alienation of allotments has been used to impose various conditions upon the manner and terms of such alienation and upon the disposition of the individual Indian moneys derived therefrom.[261]

C. PROBATE OF ESTATES

(1) Intestate succession.—The Secretary of the Interior is vested with statutory power to determine heirs in inheritance proceedings affecting restricted allotted lands and other restricted property [262] of an Indian to whom an allotment of land has been made (except Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osage Nation). The Secretary may issue patents in fee to heirs whom he deems "competent to manage their own affairs" [263] in cases of allottees dying intestate; may sell land in heirship status; or may partition it, if he finds that partitioning would be for the benefit of the heirs, and sell the portions of the incompetent heirs.[264]

The Secretary is, in general, not bound by decree or decision of any court in inheritance proceedings affecting restricted allotted lands.[265]

The determination by the Secretary of the heirs of Indians is "final and conclusive." In the comparatively few instances in which his decision has been attacked the courts have refused to look behind his determination.[266]

In Red Hawk v. Wilbur [267] the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia held that under the provisions of the Act of June 25, 1910, the Secretary's exercise of power is not subject to review by the courts in the absence of fraud or a showing of a want of jurisdiction, and that consequently his decision respecting the distribution of allotted lands of an Indian dying before the issuance of a patent in fee was not reviewable by the court.

In ruling that the power of the Secretary to determine the descent of lands extends to lands purchased with Indian trust funds, even though they were unrestricted prior to the purchase, the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior said: [268]

> It is clearly within the power of the Secretary of the Interior to attach conditions to sales of Indian allotted lands because such power is expressly conferred in acts authorizing such sales; that is, they are to be made subject to his approval and on such terms and conditions and under such regulations as he may prescribe. It was held in the case of United States v. Thurston County, Nebraska, et al. (143 Fed. 287), that the proceeds of sales of allotted lands are held in trust for the same purposes as were the lands; that no change of form of property divests it of the trust; and that the substitute takes the nature of the original and stands charged with the same trust. From this situation arose the practice of inserting in deeds of conveyance covering property purchased for an Indian with trust funds the nonalienation clause referred to, which is merely a continuation over the new property of the trust declared for the old or original property. For sanction of this practice see 13 Ops. A. A. G., 109; Jackson v. Thompson et al. (80 Pac., 454); and Beck v. Flournoy Live-Stock and Real-Estate Co. (65 Fed. 30).
>
> It thus being established that lands purchased with trust funds continue under the trust as originally declared and that power exists to insert in deeds covering such lands a condition against alienation and incumbrance, it follows that upon the death of an Indian for whom the property is held in trust his heirs are to be determined by the Department the same as in the case of the original property from the sale of which the purchase funds are derived. Apparently no question is raised as to the authority of the Department to determine the descent of property purchased with trust funds derived from the sale of lands previously held in trust or restricted. The question submitted has reference to lands that were unrestricted prior to purchase. The theory on which the Department and the courts have proceeded in this matter is that property purchased with trust funds becomes impressed with the trust nature of the purchase money. In this view it can make no difference whether the purchased lands are restricted or unrestricted; the authority to determine heirs is coexistent with the continuation of the trust. By the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 855), Congress conferred exclusive jurisdiction upon the Secretary of the Interior to determine the heirs of deceased Indian allottees, and this power extends not only to property held in trust but also to property on which restricted fee patents have issued, under legislation providing for "determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees having any right, title, or interest, in any

---

the determination of competency and the final and essential act of issuing the patent in fee simple. And special force is added to the foregoing since the issuance of a patent in fee simple by the Secretary is not mandatory upon his being satisfied that a trust allottee is competent and capable of managing his own affairs. (P. 34.)

See also the Act of May 8, 1906, 34 Stat. 182; 38 L. D. 427 (1910). For a discussion of incompetency, see Chapter 8, sec. 8.

[259] 48 Stat. 984, 985, 25 U. S. C. 464.

[260] See Chapter 1, sec. 1D(2); Chapter 3, sec. 3B(2); Chapter 12, sec. 1; Chapter 15, sec. 23A.

[261] United States v. Brown, 8 F. 2d 564 (C. C. A. 8, 1925), cert. den. 270 U. S. 644 (1926); Sunderland v. United States, 266 U. S. 226 (1924).

[262] On inheritance of real property see Chapter 11, sec. 6. On inheritance of personal property see Chapter 10, sec. 10.

The power to determine the inheritance of allotted lands was inferred from section 5 of the General Allotment Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 389, which imposed upon the Secretary the duty to convey a fee patent to the heirs of a deceased allottee.

The Act of August 15, 1894, 28 Stat. 286, was construed as conferring power to determine heirs upon the federal courts. See Hallowell v. Commons, 239 U. S. 506 (1916); see also McKay v. Kalyton, 204 U. S. 458, 468 (1907). This act was amended by the Act of February 6, 1901, sec. 2, 31 Stat. 760, 25 U. S. C. 346. Sec. 7 of the Act of May 27, 1902, 32 Stat. 245, 275, authorized the Secretary to approve transfer of restricted allotted lands by the heirs of such lands. This statute was construed in Hellen v. Morgan, 283 Fed. 433 (D. C. E. D. Wash. 1922) as giving the Secretary of the Interior final authority to determine heirs in such cases. See also Egan v. McDonald, 246 U. S. 227 (1918).

The Act of May 29, 1908, sec. 1, 35 Stat. 444, expressly authorized the Secretary to determine the heirs of restricted lands, except in Oklahoma, Minnesota, and South Dakota. This was amended by the Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, amended Act of March 3, 1928, 45 Stat. 161; Act of April 30, 1934, 48 Stat. 647, 25 U. S. C. 372, interpreted in 40 L. D. 120 (1910) (upheld as constitutional in Hallowell v. Commons, 239 U. S. 506 (1916)).

The Act of August 1, 1914, sec. 1, 38 Stat. 582, 586, 25 U. S. C. 374, empowered the Secretary to compel the attendance of witnesses in probate hearings. The Probate Regulations are expressly made inapplicable to tribes organized under the Wheeler-Howard Act insofar as they conflict with tribal constitutions and charters. 25 C. F. R. 81.62.

[263] Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, amended Act of March 3, 1928, 15 Stat. 161; Act of April 30, 1934, 48 Stat. 647, 25 U. S. C. 372, nterpreted in 40 L. D. 120 (1910).

[264] The power to effect a partition or sale of inherited Indian land is conferred on the Secretary by the Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 1, 36 Stat. 855, as amended Act of March 3, 1928, 45 Stat. 161; and Act of April 30, 1934, 48 Stat. 647, 25 U. S. C. 372; and Act of May 18, 1916, sec. 1, 39 Stat. 123, 127, 25 U. S. C. 378. The fact that one or more of the heirs is white does not affect the Secretary's power to sell or partition their land for all the heirs. Reed v. Clinton, 23 Okla. 610, 101 Pac. 1055 (1909).

[265] 42 L. D. 493 (1913).

[266] First Moon v. White Tail, 270 U. S. 243 (1926); cf. Nimrod v. Jandron, 24 F. 2d 613 (App. D. C. 1928).

[267] 39 F. 2d 293 (App. D. C. 1930).

Other decisions of the Secretary have also been held outside of the scope of judicial review, such as his determination of whether an Indian and his land were under federal control. Lane v. United States ex rel Mickadiet and Tiebault, 241 U. S. 201 (1916).

[268] 49 L. D. 414 (1923).

trust or restricted allotment, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior." (United States v. Bowling et al., 256 U. S. 484.) (Pp. 415–416.)

(2) Wills.—Prior to 1910 an Indian allottee could not by will devise his restricted land.

Section 2 of the Act of June 25, 1910,[269] as amended by the Act of February 14, 1913,[270] provides for the bequest of restricted funds by will, in accordance with rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the devise of allotments "prior to the expiration of the trust period and before the issue of a fee simple patent;" but in order to be valid, the will must be approved by the Secretary either before or after the testator's death.[271]

If, for some reason, the will should not be approved by the Secretary, the property descends to those who are found by him to be heirs under the laws of the state where it is located.[272] Death of the testator and approval of the will does not release the property from the trust. The Secretary may pay the moneys to the legatees either in whole or in part from time to time as he may deem advisable, or use it for their benefit.[273]

The decision in Blanset v. Cardin [274] holds that if the will is approved by the Secretary of the Interior and such approval remains uncancelled by him, the state law of descent and distribution does not apply and the state law cannot control as to the portions the will conveys or as to the objects of the testator's bounty.

D. ISSUANCE OF RIGHTS-OF-WAY [275]

Many statutes have granted the Secretary of the Interior various duties and powers in regard to rights-of-way through Indian lands. The Act of March 3, 1901,[276] authorized the Secretary to grant permission to the proper state or local authority for the establishment of public highways through any Indian reservation or through restricted Indian lands which had been allotted in severalty to any individual Indian under any law or treaty. The Act of March 2, 1899,[277] authorized the Secretary to grant rights-of-way for railway, telegraph, and telephone lines, and town-site stations.[278] It was required that the Secretary approve the surveys and maps of the line of route of the railroad and that compensation be made to each occupant or allottee for all property taken or damage done to his land, claim, or improvement, by reason of the construction of such railroad.[279] In the absence of amicable settlement with any such occupant or allottee, the Secretary was empowered to appoint three disinterested referees to determine the compensation.[280] An aggrieved party was permitted judicial review.[281] The Secretary was also authorized to grant a right-of-way in the nature of an easement for the construction of telephone and telegraph lines;[282] to acquire lands for reservoirs or material for railroads [283] and rights-of-way for pipe lines.[284]

The necessity for the consent of the Secretary has occasionally been a major point in judicial decisions. In such a case the Circuit Court of Appeals said: [285]

> The third question can be briefly disposed of. The United States, the holder of the title to the lands in question, was not made a party to the proceedings in the state court, and consequently is not bound by those proceedings had behind its back. Appalachian Electric Power Co. v. Smith (C. C. A. 4th) 67 F. (2d) 451, 456; Wood v. Phillips (C. C. A. 4th) 50 F. (2d) 714, 717. If a roadway over the Indian lands was desired, application should have been made to the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to provision of the Act of March 3, 1901, § 4, 31 Stat. 1058, 1084 (25 U. S. C. A. § 311). A right of way could no more be acquired over these lands by proceedings against the Indians than title to lands embraced in a government forest could be tried by suit against the forester, nor than post office property could be condemned for purposes of a street by proceedings against the postmaster. In Rollins v. Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, 87 N. C. 229, it was held that the courts of the state of North Carolina, without the consent of Congress, were without jurisdiction to entertain suit on contract against these Indians. A fortiori, the state courts, without such consent, have no jurisdiction of proceedings affecting land held by the United States in trust for the Indians. (Pp. 314, 315.)

E. LEASING

Approval of leases of restricted Indian lands is an important administrative function.[286] The Supreme Court said in Miller v. McClain: [287]

> By a course of legislation beginning in 1891 and extending to 1900, authority was conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior to sanction, when enumerated and exceptional conditions existed, leases of land allotted under the Act of 1887, and the power was given to the Secretary to adopt rules and regulations governing the exercise of the right [269] 36 Stat. 855, interpreted in 40 L. D. 120 (1911), 40 L. D. 212 (1911), and 48 L. D. 455 (1922).

---

[270] 37 Stat. 678.

[271] To facilitate the adjudication of heirship, Indians over the age of 21 may dispose of restricted property by will, but the approval of the Secretary of the will is necessary before it is regarded as a valid testamentary act. The final approval of the will is not given until after the death of the decedent. 25 C. F. R. 81.54, 81.55. Prior to the death of the maker the Secretary only passes on the form of the will. Before and after the death of the testator the authority of the Secretary of the Interior is limited to the approval or disapproval of an Indian will, and he lacks authority to change its provisions. Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, amended Act of February 14, 1913, 37 Stat. 678. On Secretary's power to grant a rehearing, see Nimrod v. Jandron, 24 F. 2d 613 (App. D. C. 1928).

[272] Act of June 25, 1910, as amended by Act of February 14, 1913, 37 Stat. 678.

[273] See Blanset v. Cardin, 256 U. S. 319 (1921).

[274] Ibid.

[275] On regulations relating to rights-of-way over Indian lands, see 25 C. F. R., pt. 256. On regulations relating to the construction and maintenance of roads on Indian lands, see 25 C. F. R., pt. 261. On regulations relating to establishment of roadless and wild areas on Indian reservations, see 25 C. F. R., pt. 281.

[276] Sec. 4, 31 Stat. 1058, 1084, 25 U. S. C. 311. For a statute requiring state authorities laying out roads across restricted Indian lands to secure consent of superintendent, see Act of March 4, 1915, 38 Stat. 1188.

[277] Sec. 1, 30 Stat. 990, as amended by Act of February 28, 1902, sec. 23, 32 Stat. 43, 50, Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 16, 36 Stat. 855, 859, 25 U. S. C. 312.

[278] The Secretary had also been given many powers and duties by numerous acts granting rights-of-way through Indian territory to specific railways. See e. g., Act of March 2, 1887, 24 Stat. 446.

[279] Act of March 2, 1899, sec. 3, 30 Stat. 990, 991, as amended by Act of February 28, 1902, sec. 23, 32 Stat. 43, 50, 25 U. S. C. 314. The Secretary lacks power to authorize the construction of a railroad across an Indian reservation prior to the ascertainment (and fixing) and payment of compensation as provided by statute. 19 Op. A. G. 199 (1888).

[280] Ibid.

[281] Ibid. For the power of the Secretary in the event of the failure of the railroad to complete the road on time, see Act of March 2, 1899, sec. 4, 30 Stat. 990, 991, 25 U. S. C. 315.

[282] Act of March 3, 1901, sec. 3, 31 Stat. 1058, 1083, 25 U. S. C. 319, interpreted in Swendig v. Washington Water Power Co., 265 U. S. 322 (1924); City of Tulsa v. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., 75 F. 2d 343 (C. C. A. 10, 1935), cert. den. 295 U. S. 744 (1935).

[283] Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, amended by Act May 6, 1910, 36 Stat. 349, 25 U. S. C. 320.

[284] Act of March 11, 1904, sec. 1, 33 Stat. 65, amended by Act of March 2, 1917, sec. 1, 39 Stat. 969, 25 U. S. C. 321.

[285] United States v. Colvard et al., 89 F. 2d 312 (C. C. A. 4, 1937). An extended discussion of administrative consent appears in United States v. Minnesota, 95 F. 2d 468 (C. C. A. 8, 1938) pp. 471–472. The Supreme Court, in affirming the decision, 305 U. S. 382 (1939), did not consider the question of administrative consent and affirmed the case on other grounds.

[286] The congressional delegation of this power to the Secretary of the Interior has been sustained. See Bunch v. Cole, 263 U. S. 250 (1923).

[287] 249 U. S. 308 (1919).

(Acts of February 28, 1891, c. 383, 26 Stat. 794, 795; August 15, 1894, c. 290, 28 Stat. 286, 305; June 7, 1897, c. 3, 30 Stat. 62, 85; May 31, 1900, c. 598, 31 Stat. 221, 229). The general scope of the legislation is shown by the following provision of the Act of 1900, which does not materially differ from the prior acts.

"That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that, by reason of age, disability, or inability, any allottee of Indian lands cannot personally and with benefit to himself, occupy or improve his allotment or any part thereof, the same may be leased upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary for a term not exceeding five years, for farming purposes only."

The regulations for the purpose of carrying out the power given prescribed a general form of lease to be used under the exceptional circumstances which the statute contemplated and subjected its execution and the subjects connected with it to the scrutiny of the Indian Bureau and to the express or implied approval of the Secretary. (See "Amended rules and regulations to be observed in the execution of leases of Indian Allotments," approved by the Secretary of the Interior March 16, 1905.)

The foregoing provisions were enlarged by the Act of June 25, 1910, c. 431, 36 Stat. 855, 856, as follows:

"That any Indian allotment held under a trust patent may be leased by the allottee for a period not to exceed five years, subject to and in conformity with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and the proceeds of any such lease shall be paid to the allottee or his heirs, or expended for his or their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

And the regulations of the Secretary which were adopted under this grant of power in express terms modified the previous regulations on the subject "so far as to permit Indian allottees of land held under a trust patent, or the heirs of such allottees who may be deemed by the superintendent in charge of any competency commission to have the requisite knowledge, experience, and business capacity to negotiate lease contracts, to make their own contracts for leasing their lands." * * * (Pp. 310–311.)

The right of an administrative official to withhold his consent to a contract includes, it has been held, the right to impose conditions on his approval.[288]

In discussing the approval of leases, the Supreme Court said:[289]

> The statute is plain in its provisions—that no lease, of the character here in question, can be valid without the approval of the Secretary. Such approval rests in the exercise of his discretion; unquestionably this authority was given to him for the protection of Indians against their own improvidence and the designs of those who would obtain their property for inadequate compensation. It is also true that the law does not vest arbitrary authority in the Secretary of the Interior. But it does give him power to consider the advantages and disadvantages of the lease presented for his action, and to grant or withhold approval as his judgment may dictate.
>
> * * * * *
>
> We find nothing in this record to indicate that the Secretary of the Interior has exceeded the authority which the law vests in him. The fact that he has given reasons in the discussion of the case, which might not in all respects meet with approval, does not deprive him of authority to exercise the discretionary power with which by statute he is invested. United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80, 85, 86.

Although powers expressly entrusted to the Secretary of the Interior to approve the alienation of restricted property cannot generally be transferred or delegated to any other governmental agency,[290] certain leasing statutes provide that the power of approval may be delegated by the Secretary to superintendents or other officials in the Indian Service,[291] and other statutes permit approval by such officials as may be designated in regulations issued by the Secretary of the Interior.[292]

In general, the consent of the Indian allottees to the leasing of land is necessary.[293] As the Assistant Secretary has said:[294]

> * * * While the powers of the Secretary of the Interior are broad, under the principle of guardianship referred to in the letter, there is no statutory provision which enables the Department to execute leases for the Indian owner of an allotment without his consent. Such consent is required, on the contrary, by statute and by the regulations for the leasing of Indian allotments. (Section 395, title 25 U. S. C.; section 3, Regulations Governing the Leasing of Indian Allotments for Farming, Grazing, and Business Purposes.) This is not a case where the heirs have not been determined, and leasing by the Superintendent is permitted by the regulations due to uncertainty in the ownership of the land, nor is it a case where a minority of the heirs refuses to lease inherited land and the Government is authorized to intervene in order that the land may be of some economic value to the Indians (section 7, Leasing Regulations). * * *

---

[288] Sunderland v. United States, 266 U. S. 226 (1924); United States v. Brown, 8 F. 2d 564 (C. C. A. 8, 1925), cert. den. 270 U. S. 644 (1926); United States v. Pumphrey, 11 App. D. C. 44 (1897); La Motte v. United States, 254 U. S. 570 (1921).

The consent of the Indian owner is generally required by statute and regulations for the leasing of Indian allotments. 25 U. S. C. 395; 25 C. F. R., subchapter Q. But see Memo. Asst. Sec'y. I. D., August 23, 1938.

[289] Anicker v. Gunsburg, 246 U. S. 110, 119, 120 (1918).

[290] Op. Sol. I. D., M. 25258, June 26, 1929. Under the Act of April 21, 1904, 33 Stat. 189, 204, a deed executed by an Indian to sell lands which had been purchased for her with restricted funds was ineffectual, and the grantees acquired no estate in the land when the deed was approved only by an assistant superintendent and not by the Secretary. United States v. Watashe, 102 F. 2d 428 (C. C. A. 10, 1939). On limits upon alienation of property, see Chapters 9, 10, and 11.

[291] Act of May 11, 1938, sec. 5, 52 Stat. 347, 348, 25 U. S. C. 396e. The Circuit Court of Appeals regarded this provision as indicative of congressional belief that his authorization was necessary for the delegation of this authority. United States v. Watashe, 102 F. 2d 428, 431 (C. C. A. 10, 1939).

R. S. § 439 provides:

> The Assistant Secretary of the Interior shall perform such duties in the Department of the Interior as shall be prescribed by the Secretary, or may be required by law.

This provision was declared constitutional in Robertson v. United States, 285 Fed. 911, 915 (App. D. C. 1922).

The Circuit Court of Appeals, in Turner v. Seep, 167 Fed. 646 (C. C. E. D. Okla. 1909), in holding that the Secretary may delegate to the Assistant Secretary authority to approve leases of Indian lands and assignments thereof said:

> * * * so long as the powers so delegated to the Assistant Secretary of the Interior by his superior remain unrevoked, the authority of the Assistant Secretary is co-ordinate and concurrent with that of the Secretary. * * * (P. 650.)

In referring to this function of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, the Supreme Court said, in Wilbur v. United States ex rel. Kadrie, 281 U. S. 206 (1930):

> The powers and duties of such an office are impersonal and unaffected by a change in the person holding it. (P. 217.)

[292] See e. g., Act of March 3, 1921, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 1225, 1232, 25 U. S. C. 393 (leasing of restricted allotments).

[293] In holding that the superintendent of an agency cannot compel a nonconsenting heir to sign leases, the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior said:

> The letter purports to authorize the Superintendent to sign the name of nonconsenting heirs owning less than a majority in interest of the estate, in two cases: (1) Where the nonconsenting heirs "by reason of their absence from the reservation, or unknown whereabouts, cannot be reached after a reasonable effort has been made"; and (2) where the nonconsenting heirs "refuse to sign without giving good and sufficient reason for refusing."
>
> In the first mentioned case, legal authority for action by the Superintendent can probably be derived from a relation of agency between the absent heir and the Superintendent. No objection is raised to this portion of the letter. In the second case, however, such special legal justification is lacking, and full weight must therefore be given to the governing leasing statute which provides that restricted allotments "may be leased for farming and grazing purposes by the allottee or his heirs, subject only to the approval of the Superintendent * * *." (Act of March 3, 1929, 41 Stat. 1232, 25 U. S. C., sec. 393.) Unless special circumstances exist to provide a legal justification for signature by the Superintendent on behalf of protesting heirs, it appears that the statute probibits such action on his part. (Memo. Sol. I. D., August 10, 1936.)

[294] Memo of Asst. Sec'y. I. D., August 23, 1938.

In some cases Congress has laid down a policy requiring the consent of Indians to modifications of contracts affecting them.[295]

Some statutes[296] empower the Secretary to renew leases "upon such reasonable terms and conditions" as he may prescribe. In construing a provision in such a statute, the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior said:[297]

> * * * Such power obviously cannot be taken away by any act of the lessee through contract or otherwise. The only limitation to which the power is subject is that the conditions of renewal must be reasonable. The authority to determine the reasonableness of the conditions is also committed to the Secretary and in its exercise he is necessarily invested with broad discretion. That this power and authority extend to the imposition as a condition for renewal, a requirement that the operating royalty shall not exceed a figure to be determined by the Secretary to be the maximum economic royalty, I have little doubt.

[295] Timber contracts, Act of March 4, 1933, 47 Stat. 1568; Op. Sol. I. D., M. 27499, August 8, 1933.

[296] See, for example, Act of August 21, 1916, 39 Stat. 519 (Shoshone Indian Reservation).

[297] Memo. Sol. I. D., June 3, 1938.

SECTION 12. ADMINISTRATIVE POWER—INDIVIDUAL FUNDS

Statutes restricting the Indian in the use of his funds may provide for the investment of his funds under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.[298] The statute may specify certain investments or may be more general, giving the official selective powers. In any case, he is bound strictly by the authority granted in the statute.

If the Secretary of the Interior is empowered to handle the Indian's money, he cannot create trusts transferring such property from his authority to a private agency without the specific authority of Congress.[299] > * * * while it has been the purpose of Congress to place the supervising control over Indian funds in the Secretary of the Interior, his control is not unlimited, but is based upon directions contained in the various statutes of Congress. I find no provision or implication in any statute to the effect that the Secretary of the Interior may delegate control of these Indian funds, while held under restrictions, to outside agencies.

On this point Attorney General Mitchell ruled:[300]

>
> I regard the control and supervision over Indian funds so committed to the Secretary of the Interior and the Department of the Interior as an imposition of a specific duty by Congress, and am of the opinion that it cannot lawfully be transferred by the Secretary of the Interior to agencies outside of his Department. The suggested creation of a trust, in which the custody and control of the trust funds would be in a private trustee, would be an abdication on the part of the Secretary of the control of restricted Indian funds with which Congress has vested him. I believe that this would be improper in the absence of specific congressional authority to that end, and I do not find that such authority has been given by Congress by existing statutes. (P. 100.)

The Secretary is not authorized to make donations or gifts of Indian property,[301] nor to purchase single premium annuity policies, unless for assenting adult Indians capable of understanding the nature of the investment.[302]

The Court of Appeals after quoting with approval from the Sunderland[303] case said:[304]

> If Congress, in the exercise of its guardianship, can go to the extent approved in the Sunderland Case, we find no difficulty in applying the act here in question to the disposition of the funds in the possession of the Secretary. They came into his possession in the lawful course of his supervisory power over the lands in question, and were still in his possession at the time the act of Congress was passed. Assuming, therefore, without deciding, that technically the jurisdiction over this fund passed to the Oklahoma court with the removal of the restrictions upon the land, the court had not acquired such jurisdiction as to place the fund beyond the control and power of Congress to further restrict it in the hands of the Secretary. (P. 982.)

The authority of the Interior Deartment over individual Indian moneys is, generally a derivative authority. By virtue of the control which the Department exercises over the alienation of Indian lands and interests therein, conditions have been imposed upon the manner in which proceeds derived from such lands are to be handled. In some cases the statutes providing for the leasing or alienation of individual lands specify that the proceeds "shall be paid to the allottee or disposed of for his benefit under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."[305] Other statutes do not refer specifically to the proceeds of transactions subject to the approval of the Interior Department, but contain broad language authorizing regulations covering the transaction which is construed to permit a comprehensive supervision of the proceeds derived therefrom.[306]

Ordinarily the method of disbursement of restricted individual Indian money is governed by the regulations issued by the Department of the Interior.[307] In a few instances Congress prescribes the method and permissible purposes of such disbursement.[308] For example, the Act of March 3, 1933,[309] regulating the disbursement of restricted individual money of members of the Ute Indians of Utah was designed to direct the expenditures of the Indian moneys so as to assure permanent improvements or other expenditures which will enable the Indians to become self-supporting. It also provides:

> That in cases of the aged, infirm, decrepit, or incapacitated members their shares may be used for their proper maintenance and support in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.[310]

[298] See Chapter 10.

[299] Memo. Sol. I. D., September 19, 1931. See also Op. Sol. I. D., M.25258, June 26, 1929; 55 I. D. 500 (1936). The Act of January 27, 1933, 47 Stat. 777, placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior the funds and securities of Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of one-half or more Indian blood until April 26, 1956. Sec. 2 authorizes the Secretary to permit, > * * * in his discretion and subject to his approval, any Indian of the Five Civilized Tribes, over the age of twenty-one years, having restricted funds or other property subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, to create and establish, out of the restricted funds or other property, trusts for the benefits of such Indian, his heirs, or other beneficiaries designated by him, such trusts to be created by contracts or agreements by and between the Indian and incorporated trust companies or such banks as may be authorized by law to act as fiduciaries or trustees: * * *

For a discussion of this Act see Chapter 23, sec. 10.

[300] 36 Op. A. G. 98 (1929). If the Secretary, in violation of a statute, invests funds due to a certain class of Indians, and a loss occurs, Congress and not the Secretary may provide for a reimbursement. 16 Op. A. G. 31 (1878).

[301] Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855. Mott v. United States, 283 U. S. 747, 751–752 (1931).

[302] 36 Op. A. G. 98 (1929).

[303] Sunderland v. United States, 266 U. S. 226 (1924).

[304] King v. Ickes, 64 F. 2d 979 (App. D. C. 1933).

[305] Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 8, 36 Stat. 855, 857, 25 U. S. C. 407 (sale of timber on allotments). And see sec. 4, 36 Stat. 855, 856, 25 U. S. C. 403 (leases of trust allotments).

[306] See, for example, Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 783, 25 U. S. C. 396 (mining leases).

[307] See Chapter 10, sec. 8.

[308] Memo. Sol. I. D., September 12, 1934.

[309] 47 Stat. 1488.

[310] Ibid., p. 1489.

SECTION 13. ADMINISTRATIVE POWER—MEMBERSHIP

A. AUTHORITY OVER ENROLLMENT

At various times Congress has delegated to the Department of the Interior much of its sweeping power over the determination of tribal membership.[311] During the periods when the federal policy was designed to break up the tribal organization, this power was one of the most important administrative powers, since the sharing in tribal property usually depended upon being placed upon a roll prepared by the Department or subject to its approval. At present, under the policy of encouraging tribal organization, membership problems are not usually as crucial as formerly.[312] However, they may be important for other purposes, such as determining the right to vote in a tribal election. The most important limitation on the Secretary's power [313] when the tribe is still in existence is the principle that in the absence of express congressional legislation to the contrary an Indian tribe has complete authority to determine all questions of its own membership.[314]

The power of the Secretary to determine tribal membership [315] for the purpose of segregating the tribal funds was granted by section 163 of title 25 of the United States Code,[316] which reads as follows:

> The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, wherever in his discretion such action would be for the best interest of the Indians, to cause a final roll to be made of the membership of any Indian tribe; such rolls shall contain the ages and quantum of Indian blood, and when approved by the said Secretary are declared to constitute the legal membership of the respective tribes for the purpose of segregating the tribal funds * * *, and shall be conclusive both as to ages and quantum of Indian blood: Provided, That the foregoing shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes or to the Osage Tribe of Indians, or to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, or the Menominee Indians of Wisconsin.

Treaties often provide for the payment of money to an Indian of a tribe whose membership is ascertained by an administrative authority which shall examine and determine questions of fact concerning the identity of the members.[317] Statutes also impose such duty upon the Secretary [318] or a quasi judicial tribunal,[319] whose determinations are subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Such enrollments are presumptively correct,[320] and unless impeached by very clear evidence of fraud, mistake, or arbitrary action they are conclusive upon the courts.[321]

B. REMEDIES

Where the determination of membership in a tribe is left to the Secretary of the Interior, his decision is final and cannot be controlled by mandamus unless his act is arbitrary and in excess of the authority conferred upon him by Congress.[322]

It has also been held that the duty imposed upon him to restore names to the tribal roll is not a mere ministerial act, but calls for the determination of issues of fact and interpretations of law, and that his decisions are not ordinarily subject to review or controlled by mandamus, even though he is wrong or may change his mind within the period allowed.[323]

For example, the Secretary of the Interior was empowered by section 2 of the Act of April 26, 1906,[324] to complete the rolls of the Creek Nation, and his jurisdiction to approve the enrollment ceased on the last day set by the statute. In United States ex rel. Johnson v. Payne,[325] the Secretary had approved the decision of the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes and then reversed it and ordered the name of the petitioner stricken from the rolls. The Supreme Court said:

> * * * While the case was before him he was free to change his mind, and he might do so none the less that he had stated an opinion in favor of one side or the other. He did not lose his power to do the conclusive act, ordering and approving an enrollment, Garfield v. Goldsby, 211 U. S. 249, until the act was done. New Orleans v. Paine, 147 U. S. 261, 266. Kirk v. Olson, 245 U. S. 225, 228. The petitioners' names never were on the rolls. The Secretary was the final judge whether they should be, and they cannot be ordered to be put on now, upon a suggestion that

---

[311] See Chapter 19, sec. 4.

[312] See Chapter 10, sec. 4.

[313] The limitations on administrative power over membership are indicated by an opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals in Ex parte Pero, 99 F. 2d 28 (C. C. A. 7, 1938):

> * * * Only Indians are entitled to be enrolled for the purpose of receiving allotment and the fact of enrollment would be evidence that the enrollee is an Indian. But the refusal of the Department of Interior to enroll a certain Indian as a member of a certain tribe is not necessarily an administrative determination that the person is not an Indian. Moore's mother failed to be enrolled as a St. Croix Indian because she was too young, not because she was not an Indian. (Pp. 31–32.)

[314] See Chapter 7, sec. 4. In matters affecting the distribution of tribal funds and other property under the supervisory authority of the Secretary, tribal action on membership is subject to the supervisory authority of the Secretary. See Chapter 7, sec. 4; Sol. Memo. October 12, 1937; Sol. Memo. March 24, 1936. According to administrative practice, in doubtful cases the tribal action is regarded as controlling.

The Circuit Court of Appeals in Vezina v. United States, 245 Fed. 411, 415 (C. C. A. 8, 1917), said

> The law did not call for the consent of the Indians to the making of the list for allotment. That power was solely vested in the commissioners, but they wisely in the main decided to take the advice of an Indian council, * * *.

[315] Citizenship in a tribe and tribal membership are sometimes used synonymously. Seminole Nation v. United States, 78 C. Cls. 455 (1933).

The agent has the duty of preparing certain statistics concerning Indians under his charge. Sec. 4 of the Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 420, 449, 25 U. S. C. 133, provides:

> That hereafter, for the purpose of properly distributing the supplies appropriated for the Indian service, it is hereby made the duty of each agent in charge of Indians and having supplies to distribute, to make out, at the commencement of each fiscal year, rolls of the Indians entitled to supplies at the agency, with the names of the Indians and of the heads of families or lodges, with the number in each family or lodge, and to give out supplies to the heads of families, and not to the heads of tribes or bands, and not to give out supplies for a greater length of time than one week in advance.

Sec. 9 of the Act of July 4, 1884, 23 Stat. 76, 98, 25 U. S. C. 298, provides that the Indian agent shall submit in his annual report a census of the Indians at his agency or upon the reservation under his charge, and the number of school children between the ages of 6 and 16, the number of school houses at his agency, and other data concerning the education of the Indians.

[316] Act of June 30, 1919, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 3, 9.

[317] 5 Op. A. G. 320 (1851).

[318] Act of June 4, 1920, 41 Stat. 751 (Crow). See Cully v. Mitchell, 37 F. 2d 493 (C. C. A. 10, 1930); United States v. Wildcat, 244 U. S. 111 (1917).

[319] United States v. Wildcat, 244 U. S. 111 (1917).

[320] Unless Congress confers authority upon the Secretary to inquire into the validity of the enrollment of a person whose name appears on the final rolls, the rolls must be regarded as determinative of legal membership in the tribe at the time the rolls were completed and closed. See Op. Sol. I. D., M.27759, January 22, 1935.

[321] United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80 (1907). The Secretary has been held not to have the power to strike names from the roll without giving notice and an opportunity to be heard. Garfield v. United States ex rel. Goldsby, 211 U. S. 249 (1908). It has been held that he has power, after such notice and hearing, to strike from the rolls names which have been placed thereon through fraud or mistake. Lowe v. Fisher, 223 U. S. 95 (1912).

Determinations of the Dawes Commission were subject to attack for extrinsic fraud or mistake. Tiger v. Twin State Oil Co., 48 F. 2d 509 (C. C. A. 10, 1931).

[322] Garfield v. United States ex rel. Goldsby, 211 U. S. 249 (1908). See United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80 (1907).

[323] Stookey v. Wilbur, 58 F. 2d 522 (App. D. C., 1932).

[324] 34 Stat. 137.

[325] 253 U. S. 209 (1920).

the Secretary made a mistake or that he came very near to giving the petitioners the rights they claim. (P. 211).

In the absence of fraud, or arbitrary action, the courts will not issue a mandamus directed against the Secretary of the Interior if the question involves the exercise of judgment and discretion. The Supreme Court, in the case of Wilbur v. United States ex rel. Kadrie,[326] decided that the duty of determining to whom payments shall be made of certain interest annuities accruing to the Chippewa Indians rested with the Secretary of the Interior and not with the courts.

Where the Secretary has nothing but a ministerial duty to perform, the court in a proper case will award a writ of mandamus.[327]

---

[326] 281 U. S. 206 (1930). Mr. Justice Van Devanter, speaking for the Supreme Court, said:

> If at the time of the decision in 1927 the Secretary of the Interior was without power to reconsider and revoke the decision of 1919, it well may be that the relators would be entitled to the relief by mandamus which they seek.[5] But there was no such want of power. The decision in 1919 was, not a judgment pronounced in a judicial proceeding, but a ruling made by an executive officer in the exertion of administrative authority. That authority was neither exhausted nor terminated by its exertion on that occasion, but was in its nature continuing. Under it the Secretary who made the decision could reconsider the matter and revoke the decision if found wrong; and so of his successor. The latter was charged, no less than the former had been, with the duty of supervising the payment of the interest annuities and of causing them to be distributed among those entitled to them and no others; and if he found that individuals not so entitled were sharing in the annuities by reason of a mistaken or erroneous ruling of the former his authority to revoke that ruling and stop further payments under it was the same as if it had been his own act.[6] The powers and duties of such an office are impersonal and unaffected by a change in the person holding it. (Pp. 216–217.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> Mandamus is employed to compel the performance, when refused, of a ministerial duty, this being its chief use. It also is employed to compel action, when refused, in matters involving judgment and discretion, but not to direct the exercise of judgment or discretion in a particular way nor to direct the retraction or reversal of action already taken in the exercise of either.[7]
>
> The duties of executive officers, such as the Secretary of the Interior, usually are connected with the administration of statutes which must be read and in a sense construed to ascertain what is required. But it does not follow that these administrative duties all involve judgment or discretion of the character intended by the rule just stated. Where the duty in a particular situation is so plainly prescribed as to be free from doubt and equivalent to a positive command it is regarded as being so far ministerial that its performance may be compelled by mandamus, unless there be provision or implication to the contrary.[8] But where the duty is not thus plainly prescribed but depends upon a statute or statutes the construction or application of which is not free from doubt, it is regarded as involving the character of judgment or discretion which cannot be controlled by mandamus.[9] (Pp. 218–219.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> The questions mooted before the Secretary and decided by him were whether the fund is a tribal fund, whether the tribe is still existing and whether the distribution of the annuities is to be confined to members of the tribe, with exceptions not including the relators. These are all questions of law the solution of which requires a construction of the act of 1889 and other related acts. A reading of these acts shows that they fall short of plainly requiring that any of the questions be answered in the negative and that in some aspects they give color to the affirmative answers of the Secretary. That the construction of the acts insofar as they have a bearing on the first and third questions is sufficiently uncertain to involve the exercise of judgment and discretion is rather plain. The second question is more easily answered, for not only does the act of 1889 show very plainly that the purpose was to accomplish a gradual rather than an immediate transition from the tribal relation and dependent wardship to full emancipation and individual responsibility, but Congress in many later acts—some near the time of the decision in question—has recognized the continued existence of the tribe.[10] This recognition was respected by the Secretary and is not open to question here.[11] With the tribe still existing the criticism by counsel for the relators of the Secretary's decision in other particulars loses much of its force. (Pp. 221–222.)
>
> [5] United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 402–403; Noble v. Union River Logging R. R., 147 U. S. 167, 171; Garfield v. Goldsby, 211 U. S. 249, 261–262.
>
> [6] West v. Standard Oil Co., 278 U. S. 200, 210; Beley v. Naphtaly, 169 U. S. 353, 364; Knight v. U. S. Sand Association, 142 U. S. 161, 181–182; New Orleans v. Paine, 147 U. S. 261, 266; Greenameyer v. Coate, 212 U. S. 434, 442; Parcher v. Gillen, 26 L. D. 34, 43; Aspen Consolidated Mining Co. v. Williams, 27 L. D. 1, 10–11. And see Pearsons v. Williams, 202 U. S. 281, 284–285.
>
> [7] Commissioner of Patents v. Whiteley, 4 Wall. 522, 534; United States ex rel. v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 48; Riverside Oil Co. v. Hitchcock, 190 U. S. 316, 324–325; Louisiana v. McAdoo, 234 U. S. 627, 633; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Waste Merchant Ass'n, 260 U. S. 32, 34.
>
> [8] Roberts v. United States, 176 U. S. 221, 231; Lane v. Hoglund, 244 U. S. 174, 181; Work v. McAlester-Edwards Co., 262 U. S. 200, 208; Work v. Lynn, 266 U. S. 161, 168, et seq., Wilbur v. Krushnic, 280 U. S. 306.
>
> [9] Riverside Oil Co. v. Hitchcock, 190 U. S. 316, 324–325; Ness v. Fisher, 223 U. S. 683, 691; Knight v. Lane, 228 U. S. 6, 13; Lane v. Mickadiet, 241 U. S. 201, 208, 209; Alaska Smokeless Coal Co. v. Lane, 250 U. S. 549, 555; Hull v. Payne, 254 U. S. 343, 347; Work v. Rives, 267 U. S. 175, 183–184. And see United States ex rel. v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80, 86.
>
> [10] Acts of August 1, 1914, c. 222, 38 Stat. 592; May 18, 1916, c. 125, 39 Stat. 135; March 2, 1917, c. 146, 39 Stat. 979; May 25, 1918, c. 86, 40 Stat. 572; June 30, 1919, c. 4, 41 Stat. 14; February 14, 1920, c. 75, 41 Stat. 419; November 19, 1921, c. 135, 42 Stat. 221; January 30, 1925, c. 114, 43 Stat. 798; February 19, 1926, c. 22, 44 Stat., P. 2, 7; March 4, 1929, c. 705, 45 Stat. 1584.
>
> [11] United States v. Holiday, 3 Wall. 407, 419; United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432, 445; Tiger v. Western Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286, 315.

The same principle has been applied to many discretionary acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 24 L. D. 323 (1897). See also Lane v. Morrison, 246 U. S. 214 (1918); Quick Bear v. Leupp, 210 U. S. 50 (1908).

Generally a suit will fail if a subordinate officer and not the Secretary of Interior is made defendant. Moore v. Anderson, 68 F. 2d 191 (C. C. A. 9, 1933). Hence a suit to compel the superintendent of an agency to supplement the tribal rool will be dismissed because the Secretary is a necessary party. Webster v. Fall, 266 U. S. 507 (1925).

[327] Garfield v. United States ex rel. Goldsby, 211 U. S. 249 (1908).

CHAPTER 6

THE SCOPE OF STATE POWER OVER INDIAN AFFAIRS

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. INTRODUCTION

That state laws[1] have no force within the territory of an Indian tribe in matters affecting Indians is a general proposition that has not been successfully challenged, at least in the United States Supreme Court, since that Court decided, in Worcester v. Georgia,[2] that the State of Georgia had no right to imprison a white man residing on an Indian reservation, with the consent of tribal and federal authorities, who refused to conform to state laws governing Indian affairs. In that case the court declared, per Marshall, C. J.:

> The Cherokee nation, then, is a distinct community, occupying its own territory, with boundaries accurately described, in which the laws of Georgia can have no force, and which the citizens of Georgia have no right to enter, but with the assent of the Cherokees themselves, or in conformity with treaties, and with the acts of congress. (P. 560.)

The State of Georgia never did carry out the mandate of the Supreme Court in this case,[3] and many other state courts and state legislatures since the decision in this case have likewise refused to acknowledge the implications of the decision. Nevertheless, when critical cases have been presented to the United States Supreme Court, the principles laid down in Worcester v. Georgia have been repeatedly reaffirmed.[4]

The reasons judicially advanced for this incapacity of the states to legislate on Indian affairs have been variously formulated in different cases, although the actual decisions of the Supreme Court have followed a consistent pattern. One of the most persuasive considerations as to the lack of state power is the inclusion in enabling acts and state constitutions of express disclaimers of state jurisdiction over Indian lands.[5] One of the most famous statements explanatory of the limitations upon state power in this field is the statement in United States v. Kagama,[6] a case which upheld the constitutionality of congressional legislation on offenses between Indians committed on an Indian reservation:

> It seems to us that this is within the competency of Congress. These Indian tribes are the wards of the nation. They are communities dependent on the United States. Dependent largely for their daily food. Dependent for their political rights. They owe no allegiance to the States, and receive from them no protection. Because of the local ill feeling, the people of the States where they are found are often their deadliest enemies. From their very weakness and helplessness, so largely due to the course of dealing of the Federal Government with them,[7] and the treaties in which it has been promised, there arises the duty of protection, and with it the power. This has always been recognized by the Executive and by Congress, and by this court, whenever the question has arisen.
>
> * * * * *

[1] Specific bodies of state law are dealt with in other chapters of this work. Thus, state laws involving questions of discrimination against Indians, in the matter of franchise or in other respects, are dealt with in Chapter 8. State laws of inheritance are considered in Chapters 10 and 11. State laws on taxation are analyzed in Chapter 13. Those state laws which deal with Indian hunting and fishing rights are treated in Chapter 14, sec. 7. Chapter 15 touches upon state laws relating to recognition or protection of tribal property. Chapters 18 and 19 deal respectively with criminal and civil jurisdiction of state courts as well as federal and tribal courts.

[2] 6 Pet. 515 (1832).

[3] See Chapter 7, sec. 2. Cf. Report and Remonstrance of the Legislature of Georgia, Sen. Doc. No. 98, 21st Cong., 1st sess. (March 8, 1830).

[4] For an analysis of these cases, see F. S. Cohen, Indian Rights and the Federal Courts (1940), 24 Minn. L. Rev. 145.

[5] "* * * said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States * * *." Act of July 16, 1894, sec. 3, 28 Stat. 107, 108 (Utah). Accord: Act of June 20, 1910, secs. 2, 20, 36 Stat. 557 (New Mexico and Arizona). And cf. Act of June 16, 1906, sec. 28, 34 Stat. 267, 281 (Oklahoma).

[6] 118 U. S. 375 (1886).

[7] The omission of this comma in the official United States Report has created some confusion as to the meaning of this sentence. Without the comma, the sentence seems to suggest that the weakness and helplessness of the Indians is due in part to treaties and that it is because of the weakness and helplessness of the Indians that the Federal Government may exercise the power of protection. With the comma, the sentence suggests rather that the factual situation of weakness and helplessness is only part of the basis of legal power, the other, and legally more important, basis being the obligations assumed by the United States towards Indian tribes by treaty. This comma is found in the Supreme Court Reporter edition of the opinion (6 Sup. Ct. 1109).

> The power of the General Government over these remnants of a race once powerful, now weak and diminished in numbers, is necessary to their protection, as well as to the safety of those among whom they dwell. It must exist in that government, because it never has existed anywhere else, because the theater of its exercise is within the geographical limits of the United States, because it has never been denied, and because it alone can enforce its laws on all the tribes. (Pp. 383–385.)

Insofar as this argument relies upon treaties it is legally unassailable, for the treaties made between the Federal Government and the Indian tribes are part of the supreme law of the land[8] and, as we have already noted, these treaties quite generally promised the tribes, either expressly or by implication, that they would not be subject to the sovereignty of the individual states, but would be subject only to the Federal Government.

On the other hand, insofar as the opinion in the Kagama case relies upon the factual helplessness of the Indians, the enmity of the state populations, and the impossibility of state control, serious questions may be raised both as to the validity of the argument and as to its scope and application, when the factual premises noted no longer correspond to the facts. It would, however, be a digression at this point to analyze the various doctrines advanced in support of the conclusion that, within the Indian country in matters affecting Indians, federal law applies to the exclusion of state law.[9]

It is enough for the present to note that the domain of power of the Federal Government over Indian affairs marked out by the federal decisions is so complete that, as a practical matter, the federal courts and federal administrative officials now generally proceed from the assumption that Indian affairs are matters of federal, rather than state, concern, unless the contrary is shown by act of Congress or special circumstance. Thus, without questioning the constitutional doctrine that states possess original and complete sovereignty over their own territories save insofar as such sovereignty is limited by the Federal Constitution, a sense of realism must compel the conclusion that control of Indian affairs has been delegated, under the Constitution, to the Federal Government and that state jurisdiction in any matters affecting Indians can be upheld only if one of two conditions is met: either that Congress has expressly delegated back to the state, or recognized in the state, some power of government respecting Indians; or that a question involving Indians involves non-Indians to a degree which calls into play the jurisdiction of a state government. Of these two situations, the former is undoubtedly more definite and therefore simpler to analyze. Such an analysis requires a listing of the acts of Congress which confer upon the states, or recognize in the states, specific powers of government with respect to Indians.

[8] United States v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U. S. 188 (1876); Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515 (1832); Fellows v. Blacksmith, 19 How. 366 (1856); United States v. New York Indians, 173 U. S. 464 (1899). See United States v. Winans, 198 U. S. 371, 379, 384 (1905). Cf. United States v. Rio Grande Dam and Irrigation Co., 174 U. S. 690, 703 (1899); United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432, 437, 438 (1903); United States v. Seminole Nation, 299 U. S. 417, 428 (1937), cert. granted 299 U. S. 526; Wallace v. Adams, 204 U. S. 415 (1907). See Chapter 3, sec. 3.

[9] For further discussion of these doctrines see Chapter 4, secc. 2, and Chapter 5.

SECTION 2. FEDERAL STATUTES ON STATE POWER

It will be convenient to group the federal statutes which grant or recognize state power over Indian affairs into two categories: (a) Those that apply throughout the United States; and (b) those that apply only to particular tribes or areas.

A. GENERAL STATUTES

The most important field in which state laws have been applied to Indians by congressional fiat is the field of inheritance. In the absence of federal legislation, it is established that all questions relating to descent and distribution of the property of individual Indians are governed by the laws and customs of the tribe to which the Indians belong.[10] A given tribe may, of course, adopt such state laws as it considers suitable, and it may do this either by ordinance,[11] or, in conjunction with the Federal Government, by treaty.[12] Without such action of the tribal or the Federal Government, state laws of inheritance have no application to Indians residing on an Indian reservation.

This situation, however, has been greatly changed by congressional legislation affecting Indians to whom reservation lands have been allotted in severalty. The most important portion of this congressional legislation is contained in Section 5 of the General Allotment Act,[13] providing:

> That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allot-

[10] See Chapter 7, sec. 6 and Chapter 11, sec. 6.

[11] See 55 I. D. 14, 42 (1934). See also Chapter 7, sec. 6.

[12] Thus, e. g., Article 8 of the Treaty of February 27, 1867, with the Pottawatomie Indians, 15 Stat. 531, 533 provides:

> Where allottees under the treaty of eighteen hundred and sixty-two shall have died, or shall hereafter decease, if any dispute shall arise in regard to heirship to their property, it shall be competent for the business committee to decide such question, taking for their rule of action the laws of inheritance of the State of Kansas * * *.

[13] 24 Stat. 388, 389; amended Act of March 3, 1901, sec. 9, 31 Stat. 1058, 1085; 25 U. S. C. 348.

This section as originally enacted, also provided:

> That the law of descent and partition in force in the State or Territory where such lands are situate shall apply thereto after patents therefor have been executed and delivered, except as herein otherwise provided; and the laws of the State of Kansas regulating the descent and partition of real estate shall, so far as practicable, apply to all lands in the Indian Territory which may be allotted in severalty under the provisions of this act.

The General Allotment Act expressly exempted from its operation the territory occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes and the Miamies and Peorias, and Sacs and Foxes in the Indian Territory, now a part of the State of Oklahoma, and also the reservation of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians in the State of New York, as to which see United States ex rel. Kennedy v. Tyler, 269 U. S. 13 (1925), aff'g. United States ex rel. Pierce v. Waldow, 294 Fed. 111 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1923). See also New York v. Dibble, 21 How. 366 (1858).

The Confederated Wea, Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Western Miamies were allotted under the Act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. 1013, but by that Act, the provisions of the General Allotment Act were extended to these tribes. The same is true as to other tribes allotted under special acts of Congress, such for instance as the Chippewas of Minnesota, who were allotted under the Act of January 14, 1889, 25 Stat. 642, in accordance with the provisions of the General Allotment Act. The Quapaw Indians were allotted under the Act of March 2, 1895, 28 Stat. 876, 907, without reference to the General Allotment Act, and would seem to have been excluded from the provisions of that Act, so that the laws of Kansas did not apply to them.

The Sacs and Foxes were allotted under the Act of February 13, 1891, 26 Stat. 749, and under the provisions of that Act they became subject > tees, which patents shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever. [Italics supplied.]

As will be readily perceived, these provisions entirely withdraw from the operation of tribal laws and customs all matters of descent and partition concerning allotments made to Indians under the General Allotment Act, and the laws of the state in which the land is situated must govern such matters, except insofar as these matters are otherwise covered by federal statutes.

The scope of state power in the matter of inheritance of allotments has been considerably limited however, by legislation which confers upon the Secretary of the Interior full power to determine heirs and to partition allotments.[14] Thus, for example, the Supreme Court has held[15] that a will made by an Indian woman in accordance with departmental regulations, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, devising her restricted land to others than her husband, was valid, notwithstanding a provision in the Oklahoma law prohibiting a married woman from bequeathing more than two-thirds of her property away from her husband.

The Court said:

> The Secretary of the Interior made regulations which were proper to the exercise of the power conferred upon him and the execution of the act of Congress, and it would seem that no comment is necessary to show that § 8341 [Oklahoma Code] is excluded from pertinence or operation. (P. 324.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> In a word, the act of Congress is complete in its control and administration of the allotment and of all that is connected with or made necessary by it, and is antagonistic to any right or interest in the husband of an Indian woman in her allotment under the Oklahoma Code. (P. 326.)

In a later case approving this decision,[16] the Court sustained the validity of a lease made by an Indian on his family homestead which violated an Oklahoma statute requiring execution by both spouses. The Court said:

> Nor is the validity of the extension lease affected by the provision in the Oklahoma constitution that nothing in the laws of the United States shall deprive any Indian or other allottee of the benefit of the homestead laws of the State. Whether or not this provision was intended to do more than to protect the allottees from the enforced seizure of their homesteads, it is sufficient to say that, whatever its purpose, it can have no more effect than the Oklahoma statute in giving validity to laws of the State repugnant to the reserved power of the United States in legislating in respect to the lands of Indians. Neither the constitution of a State nor any act of its legislature, whatever rights it may confer on Indians or withhold from them, can withdraw them from the operation of an act which Congress passes concerning them in the exercise of its paramount authority. United States v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 407, 419. (P. 497.)

A second field in which state law has been extended to Indian reservations by congressional fiat is the realm of laws covering "inspection of health and educational conditions" and the enforcement of "sanitation and quarantine regulations" as well as "compulsory school attendance." By the Act of February 15, 1929,[17] Congress authorized the enforcement of such laws upon Indian reservations by state officials "under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

A third body of state laws is extended over Indian reservations by section 289 of the Criminal Code[18] which makes offenses by non-Indians against Indians and by Indians against non-Indians punishable in the federal courts in accordance with state laws existing at the time of the federal enactment in question.[19]

It will be noted that the foregoing statute is expressly made inapplicable to any offense committed by and against an Indian, by the terms of section 218 of title 25 of the U. S. Code.[20]

Apart from these three fields there has been no general congressional legislation authorizing the extension of state laws to Indians on Indian reservations.[21]

Within those three fields it is probable that any devolution of authority from Congress to the states may be revoked at such time as Congress sees fit.[22]

B. SPECIAL STATUTES

Apart from the general statutes noted in the preceding section, a number of acts of Congress dealing with particular tribes or areas confer various powers upon state courts, state legislatures, and state administrative officials. These statutes deal most commonly with such subjects as crimes,[23] taxation,[24] proto the laws of the Territory of Oklahoma. And the Osages, were allotted under the Act of June 28, 1906, 34 Stat. 539, and under the provisions of that Act became subject to the laws of that Territory. See, however, sec. 6 of the Act of 1906, supra. See also sec. 3 of the Act of April 18, 1912, 37 Stat. 86, subjecting the persons and property of Osage Indians to the jurisdiction of the county courts of Oklahoma in probate matters. As to the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma, see Stewart v. Keyes, 295 U. S. 403 (1935), pet. for rehearing den., 296 U. S. 661 (1935).

[14] Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, 25 U. S. C. 371; Act of May 18, 1916, 39 Stat. 123, 127, 25 U. S. C. 321. See Chapter 10, sec. 10; Chapter 11, sec. 6; Chapter 5, sec. 10.

[15] Blanset v. Cardin, 256 U. S. 319 (1921).

[16] Sperry Oil Co. v. Chisholm, 264 U. S. 488 (1924).

[17] 45 Stat. 1185, 25 U. S. C. 231. And see Taylor Grazing Act of June 28, 1934, 48 Stat. 1269, amended June 26, 1936, 49 Stat. 1976, discussed in 56 I. D. 38 (1936).

[18] 18 U. S. C. 468; derived from: R. S. § 5391; Act of July 7, 1898, sec. 2, 30 Stat. 717; Act of June 15, 1933, 48 Stat. 152.

[19] Congress has not attempted to give force to state laws later enacted, apparently having in mind the possibility that such legislation might be considered an unconstitutional delegation of power or a violation of Constitutional requirements of certainty in penal legislation. Cf. Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1 (1825); Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649 (1891); Wichita Railroad v. Public Utilities Com., 260 U. S. 48 (1922); Hampton & Co. v. United States, 276 U. S. 394 (1928); Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, 293 U. S. 388 (1935).

[20] R. S. § 2146, amended by Act of February 18, 1875, 18 Stat. 316, 318. See Chapter 7, sec. 9; Chapter 18, sec. 3.

[21] Note, however, the legalization of state-federal administrative cooperation by the Johnson-O'Malley Act of April 16, 1934, 48 Stat. 596, amended Act of June 4, 1936, 49 Stat. 1458, 25 U. S. C. 452 et seq. And see Chapter 4, sec. 15; Chapter 12, sec. 1.

[22] See Truskett v. Closser, 236 U. S. 223 (1915); Rice v. Maybee, 2 F. Supp. 669 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1933); People ex rel. Cusick v. Daly, 212 N. Y. 183, 196–197, 105 N. E. 1048 (1914).

[23] Act of February 21, 1863, sec. 5, 12 Stat. 658, 660 (Winnebago); Act of June 8, 1940 (Pub. No. 565, 76th Cong.) (State of Kansas).

[24] Act of March 3, 1921, 41 Stat. 1249, 1251, authorizing State of Oklahoma to tax oil and gas production from Indian lands (upheld in 33 Op. A. G. 60 (1921) discussed in Op. Sol. I. D., M.26672, September 22, 1931); Act of May 10, 1928, 45 Stat. 495, 496 (subjecting mineral production from Five Civilized Tribes' lands in Oklahoma to state taxes). Cf. Act of June 26, 1936, sec. 1, 49 Stat. 1967. See Chapter 13, secs 2, 5; Chapter 23, sec. 9.

bate,[25] acquisition of water rights,[26] recording laws,[27] and liens upon cut timber.[28]

In Oklahoma there has been a particularly broad devolution of powers to the state government.[29] The organs of the state government however, in exercising such powers have been considered federal agencies. Thus in Parker v. Richard[30] the Supreme Court, in referring to the authority of the county courts of Oklahoma under section 9 of the Act of May 27, 1908,[31] said:

> * * * That the agency which is to approve or not is a state court is not material. It is the agency selected by Congress and the authority confided to it is to be exercised in giving effect to the will of Congress in respect of a matter within its control. Thus in a practical sense the court in exercising that authority acts as a federal agency; and this is recognized by the Supreme Court of the State. Marcy v. Board of Commissioners, 45 Oklahoma 1. (P. 239.)

[25] Act of April 30, 1888, 25 Stat. 94, 98 (Sioux); Act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. 888, 891 (Sioux); Act of January 12, 1891, 26 Stat. 712 (Mission); Act of February 13, 1891, 26 Stat. 749, 751 (Sac and Fox); Act of June 28, 1906, 34 Stat. 539 (Osage); Act of April 18, 1912, 37 Stat. 86 (Osage); Act of June 14, 1918, 40 Stat. 606 (Five Civilized Tribes); Act of February 27, 1925, 43 Stat. 1011 (Osage). For a discussion of the provisions of these acts see Op. Sol. I. D., M.18008, December 18, 1925; Op. Sol. I. D., October 4, 1926; Op. Sol. I. D., D-46929, September 30, 1922; Op. Sol. I. D., M.24293, June 19, 1928.

[26] Act of March 3, 1905, 33 Stat. 1016, 1017 (Shoshone) discussed In re Parkins, 18 F. 2,. 642, 643 (D. C. D. Wyo. 1926).

[27] Act of February 19, 1875, 18 Stat. 330, 331 (Seneca).

[28] Act of March 31, 1882, 22 Stat. 36, 37 (Wisconsin).

[29] See Chapter 23, secs. 3–10.

[30] 250 U. S. 235 (1919).

[31] 35 Stat. 312, 315.

SECTION 3. RESERVED STATE POWERS OVER INDIAN AFFAIRS

While the general rule, as we have noted, is that plenary authority over Indian affairs rests in the Federal Government to the exclusion of state governments, we have likewise noted two major exceptions to this general rule: First, where Congress has expressly declared that certain powers over Indian affairs shall be exercised by the states, and second, where the matter involves non-Indian questions sufficient to ground state jurisdiction.

In proceeding to analyze this latter exception to the generel rule, we may note that in point of constitutional doctrine, the sovereignty of a state over its own territory[32] is plenary and therefore the fact that Indians are involved in a situation, directly or indirectly, does not ipso facto terminate state power. State power is terminated only if the matter is one that falls within the constitutional scope of exclusive federal authority.[33]

A case in which the factors of situs, person and subject matter all point to exclusive federal jurisdiction, as, for example, in a transaction involving a transfer of restricted property between Indians on an Indian reservation, the basis of exclusive federal power is clear. On the other hand, where all three factors point away from federal jurisdiction, the power of the state is clear. There exists, however, a broad twilight zone in which one or two of the three elements noted—situs, person and subject matter—point to federal power and the remainder to state power. These are the situations which require analysis and the various combinations of these factors present six situations for consideration.

(A) Indian outside Indian country engaged in non-federal transaction.
(B) Indian outside Indian country engaged in federal transaction.
(C) Indian within Indian country engaged in non-federal transaction.
(D) Non-Indian outside Indian country engaged in federal transaction.
(E) Non-Indian in Indian country engaged in federal transaction.
(F) Non-Indian in Indian country engaged in non-federal transaction.

A brief discussion of these six type-situations is in order.

A. INDIAN OUTSIDE INDIAN COUNTRY ENGAGED IN NON-FEDERAL TRANSACTION

It is undoubtedly true, as a general rule, that an Indian who is "off the reservation" is subject to the laws of the state or territory in which he finds himself, to the same extent that a non-Indian citizen or alien would be subject to those laws.[34]

B. INDIAN OUTSIDE INDIAN COUNTRY ENGAGED IN FEDERAL TRANSACTION

To the general rule set forth in the preceding paragraph, an exception must be noted. If the subject matter of the transaction is a subject matter over which Congress has asserted its constitutional power, the state must yield to the superior power of the nation.[35] For example, Congress has taken the position that its constitutional concern with Indian tribes requires a prohibition of sales of liquor to all "ward" Indians, even outside of Indian reservations, and the courts have upheld this exercise of power.[36] Under the circumstances, any state interference with this prohibition would undoubtedly be held invalid.

A second example may be found in the realm of restricted personal property of Indians. Where, for example, a herd of cattle is held by an Indian or an Indian tribe subject to federal restrictions upon alienation,[37] it seems clear that the removal of the property from the reservation would not free it from such federal restrictions, and any state laws or proceedings inconsistent with federal control would be clearly unconstitutional.[38]

The line between federal transactions which are of such concern to the Federal Government that the state cannot legislate in the matter and other transactions on which the state is permitted to legislate, is not always easy to draw. Where, for [32] Ordinarily an Indian reservation is considered part of the territory of the state. Utah and Northern Railway v. Fisher, 116 U. S. 28 (1885). But in some cases, the enabling act or other congressional legislation, or the state constitution itself, declares that Indian reservations shall not be deemed part of the territory of the state. See, for example, The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737 (1866); Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U. S. 476 (1878), qualified in Langford v. Monteith, 102 U. S. 145 (1880).

[33] See sec. 1, supra; and see Chapter 5.

[34] Hunt v. State, 4 Kan. 60 (1866) (murder of Indian by Indian); In re Wolf, 27 Fed. 606, 610 (D. C. Ark. 1886) (conspiracy by Indians to obtain money by false pretences from Indian nation in D. C.); State v. Williams, 13 Mont. 335, 43 Pac. 15 (1895) (murder of Indian by Indian); Pablo v. People, 23 Colo. 134, 46 Pac. 636 (1896) (murder of Indian by Indian); State v. Spotted Hawk, 22 Mont. 33, 55 Pac. 1026 (1899) (murder of white man by Indian); State v. Little Whirlwind, 22 Mont. 425, 56 Pac. 820 (1899) (murder of white man by Indian); Ex parte Moore, 28 S. D. 339, 133 N. W. 817 (1911) (murder of Indian by Indian on public domain allotment), commented on in Ann. Cas. 1914 B, 648, 652. And see state cases collected in Note 13, Ann. Cas. 192.

[35] See Chapter 7, sec. 9, fn. 213; and see Chapter 18, sec. 2. Cf. The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, 755, 756 (1866), "If under the control of Congress, from necessity there can be no divided authority. * * * There can be no question of State sovereignty in the case, * * *."

[36] See Chapter 17, sec. 3.

[37] See Chapter 10, sec. 12.

[38] Cf. United States v. Cook, 19 Wall. 591 (1873); Pine River Logging Co. v. United States, 186 U. S. 279 (1902) (tribal timber illegally alienated); discussed in Chapter 15, sec. 15.

example, hunting or fishing rights off the reservation have been promised to Indians, the question has arisen whether such rights may be controlled by state conservation statutes. In the present state of the law, no simple answer can be given to the question.[39] Likewise, the question of whether taxable land purchased for Indians, outside of a reservation, and held subject to federal restrictions upon alienation, is immune from the tax laws of the state, has given rise to considerable litigation.[40] In this situation it seems that, despite the federal concern in the subject matter, the state may levy property taxes if Congress is silent, but may not do so if Congress prohibits such legislation.[41]

C. INDIAN WITHIN INDIAN COUNTRY ENGAGED IN NON-FEDERAL TRANSACTION

It is well settled that the state has no power over the conduct of Indians within the Indian country, whether or not the conduct is of special concern to the Federal Government.[42] Thus Indian marriage and divorce, offenses between Indians, and sales of personal property between Indians are matters over which the state cannot exercise control, so long as the Indians concerned remain within the reservation.[43] This disability has generally been explained in terms of tribal sovereignty and a federal policy of protecting such tribal sovereignty against state invasion. Thus, in denying state jurisdiction over adultery among Indians on an Indian reservation, the Supreme Court declared in United States v. Quiver,[44] per Van Devanter, J.:

> At an early period it became the settled policy of Congress to permit the personal and domestic relations of the Indians with each other to be regulated, and offenses by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian to be dealt with, according to their tribal customs and laws. * * * (Pp. 603–604.)

Whether the local state laws may be applied to the Indians of a tribe with their consent, expressed through agreement or otherwise, is a question which the Supreme Court does not seem to have passed upon squarely.[45] There is no doubt that many tribes in the past have accepted state laws.[46] Indeed, in the early years of the Republic, it appears that various treaties were made between Indian tribes and the various states.[47] The validity, however, of such formal or informal arrangements, has not been definitely established. It would seem that if state laws are adopted by Indian tribes, they have effect as tribal laws and not simply as exercises of state sovereignty.[48]

[39] See Chapter 14, sec. 7; and Chapter 15, sec. 21.

[40] See Chapter 13.

[41] Ibid.

[42] See Chapter 7.

[43] Ibid., and see Chapter 13, sec. 5. And see Memo. Sol. I. D., April 26, 1939, holding that the State of California is without jurisdiction to compel Indians residing on rancherias within the state to take out licenses for dogs owned by them.

[44] 241 U. S. 602 (1916).

[45] Cf. United States ex rel. Kennedy v. Tyler, 269 U. S. 13 (1925).

[46] See, for example, the discussion of New York Indians in Chapter 22, and the comments on the Eastern Cherokee of North Carolina in Chapter 14, sec. 2.

[47] See Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, (1831); Seneca Nation v. Christy, 126 N. Y. 122, 27 N. E. 275 (1891); 2 Op. A. G. 110 (1828); Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States (1934), 16 J. Comp. Leg. 78, 85. While the Constitution forbids a state's entering into any treaty, alliance, or confederation (Art. 1, sec. 10, discussed in Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 579 (1832)), the position has been taken by at least one state court that this did not prevent treaties or compacts for the extinguishment of Indian title between states and Indian tribes. Seneca Nation v. Christy, supra.

[48] "An Indian tribe may, if it so chooses, adopt as its own the laws of the State in which it is situated and may make such modifications in these laws as it deems suitable to its peculiar conditions." 55 I. D. 14, 42 (1934).

D. NON-INDIAN OUTSIDE INDIAN COUNTRY ENGAGED IN FEDERAL TRANSACTION

Although ordinarily a non-Indian outside of Indian country is in no way subject to federal law governing Indian affairs, and is wholly subject to state law, there are certain subject matters in which the federal interest is so strong that even with respect to non-Indians outside the Indian country, federal law will supersede state law. Such a matter, for instance, is the transfer from one non-Indian to another of restricted property unlawfully taken from an Indian reservation.[49] Another example may be found in the realm of transactions between an employee of the Indian Bureau and a third party, consummated outside of the Indian country, which involve a personal interest in Indian trade.[50] This class of transactions in which non-Indians outside of the Indian country must take account of federal Indian law, is extremely limited in scope, applying primarily to matters involving property in which the Federal Government has an interest,[51] and to the personnel of the Indian Service itself.[52]

E. NON-INDIAN IN INDIAN COUNTRY ENGAGED IN FEDERAL TRANSACTION

If, where the subject matter is of federal concern, a non-Indian is subject to federal, rather than state jurisdiction, even for acts occurring outside of an Indian reservation, a fortiori he is subject to federal jurisdiction for acts of federal concern committed within an Indian reservation. Indeed, there is a very broad realm of conduct in which non-Indians on an Indian reservation are subject to federal rather than state power. With respect to all offenses committed by whites against Indians on an Indian reservation, state jurisdiction yields to federal jurisdiction,[53] although in fact the Federal Government has adopted state laws in providing for the punishment of such offenses by the federal courts.[54] Likewise, there are various reservation offenses for which Congress has prescribed penalties enforceable in federal courts, which are applicable to non-Indians, and in some instances to Indians as well.[55] It has been administratively held that even a state officer cannot claim the protection of state law if he enters an Indian reservation without congressional authorization for the purpose of searching an Indian's home for property thought to be in the unlawful possession of the Indian.[56]

Although the federal constitutional jurisdiction over matters affecting Indian affairs on an Indian reservation has generally been viewed as an exclusive jurisdiction, excluding all state legislation, an exception to the general rule has been recognized where the state legislation supplements the protection of Indians provided by federal law. Such state legislation, which may be termed "ancillary" to federal law, is upheld in State of

[49] See fn. 38, supra.

[50] See Chapter 2, sec. 3B.

[51] See Oregon v. Hitchcock, 202 U. S. 60, 68–69 (1906); Naganab v. Hitchock, 202 U. S. 473 (1906); Winters v. United States, 207 U. S. 564 (1908); United States v. Winans, 198 U. S. 371 (1905); Morrison v. Work, 266 U. S. 481, 487–488 (1925); United States v. Morrison, 203 Fed. 364 (C. C. Colo. 1901).

[52] See Chapter 2, sec. 3B, and Chapter 16.

[53] See Chapter 18, sec. 5. There may be situations, however, in which a concurrent jurisdiction may be exercised by the state to protect Indians against non-Indians. State of New York v. Dibble, 62 U. S. 366 (1858), discussed in Chapter 15, sec. 10C.

[54] See sec. 2A, supra.

[55] See Chapter 18, sec. 3.

[56] 56 I. D. 38 (1936).

New York v. Dibble,[57] where the Supreme Court, in upholding a state prohibition against trespass upon Indian lands, declared:

> The statute in question is a police regulation for the protection of the Indians from intrusion of the white people, and to preserve the peace. It is the dictate of a prudent and just policy. Notwithstanding the peculiar relation which these Indian nations hold to the Government of the United States, the State of New York had the power of a sovereign over their persons and property, so far as it was necessary to preserve the peace of the Commonwealth, and protect these feeble and helpless bands from imposition and intrusion. The power of a State to make such regulations to preserve the peace of the community is absolute, and has never been surrendered. The act is therefore not contrary to the Constitution of the United States. (P. 370.)

Other cases have applied this rule to state laws forbidding sale of liquor to Indians,[58] and to other protective and ancillary legislation.[59]

F. NON-INDIAN IN INDIAN COUNTRY ENGAGED IN NON-FEDERAL TRANSACTION

The mere fact that the locus of an event is on an Indian reservation does not prevent the exercise of state jurisdiction where the parties involved are not Indians and the subject matter of the transaction is not of federal concern. Thus, it has been held that murder of a non-Indian by a non-Indian on an Indian reservation, in the absence of express federal legislation to the contrary, is a matter of exclusive state jurisdiction.[60] Likewise the validity of state taxation of personalty of a non-Indian within Indian country has been sustained.[61]

G. SUMMARY

The rules applicable to each of the foregoing types of situations are not established beyond the possibility of doubt, and they leave much room for debate in defining the three factors in terms of which these rules have been formulated: "Indian," [62] "Indian country," [63] and "transaction of federal concern." [64] But these are questions elsewhere treated,[65] and the views above expressed on the various combinations of factors necessary to support state jurisdiction on Indian matters are probably as close to the actual decisions as any simple scheme can come. The foregoing sections may be summarized in two propositions:

(1) In matters involving only Indians on an Indian reservation, the state has no jurisdiction in the absence of specific legislation by Congress.

(2) In all other cases, the state has jurisdiction unless there is involved a subject matter of special federal concern.

---

[57] 21 How. 366 (1858). See Chapter 15, sec. 10C.

[58] State v. Kenney, 145 Pac. 450 (Wash. 1915); State v. Mamlock, 58 Wash. 631, 109 Pac. 47 (1910).

[59] See State v. Wolf, 145 N. C. 440, 59 S. E. 40 (1907) (upholding state law requiring school attendance of Eastern Cherokee Indians), commented on in Note, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 371.

[60] United States v. McBratney, 104 U. S. 621 (1881); Draper v. United States, 164 U. S. 240 (1896); and see Chapter 7, sec. 9 and Chapter 18, sec. 6.

[61] Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S. 264 (1898). And see Chapter 13, sec. 4.

[62] The definition of "Indian" is considered in Chapter 1, sec. 2. On the question of the applicability of state laws, special importance should be assigned to the cases which suggest that when tribal existence ceases, Indians cease to be under federal jurisdiction and become subject to state control.

See opinion of Mr. Justice Johnson in Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch. 87, 146 (1810), and opinion of Mr. Justice McLean in Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 580 (1832). See also Scott v. Sanford, 19 How. 393 (1857), where the Supreme Court, with reference to the Indians, said:

> * * * and if an individual should leave his nation or tribe, and take up his abode among the white population, he would be entitled to all the rights and privileges which would belong to an emigrant from any other foreign people. (P. 404.)

See also dicta in The Cherokee Trust Funds, 117 U. S. 288, 309 (1886) to the effect that the so-called Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians who separated themselves from the main body of the Cherokee Nation in its migration to the West, became "bound" to the state laws of North Carolina. See also and cf. United States v. Boyd, 83 Fed. 547 (C. C. A. 4, 1897); United States v. Wright, 53 F. 2d 300 (C. C. A. 4, 1931); and United States v. Colvard, 89 F. 2d 312 (C. C. A. 4, 1937), to the effect that these Indians having been recognized and treated by the Federal Government as a tribe must be regarded as such. For a more extended discussion of tribal existence and its termination see Chapter 14, secs. 1 and 2. On the right of expatriation see Chapter 8, sec. 10B(1).

Also see Ex parte Kenyon, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7720 (C. C. W. D. Ark., 1878):

> * * * When the members of a tribe of Indians scatter themselves among the citizens of the United States, and live among the people of the United States, they are merged in the mass of our people, owing complete allegiance to the government of the United States and of the states where they may reside, and, equally with the citizens of the United States and of the several states, subject to the jurisdiction of the courts thereof. Ex parte Reynolds [Case No. 11,719]; United States v. Elm [Id. 15,048] * * * opinion by Wallace, J. (Senate Report 268, 41st Cong. 3d sess.) p. 11; 2 Story Const. § 1933, Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. [60 U. S.] 404.

And see cases collected in Note 13 Ann. Cas. 192,193.

A unique situation exists with respect to the Sac and Fox Indians of Iowa. The State of Iowa, which had exercised jurisdiction over these Indians and which held title to their land in trust for them, transferred to the Federal Government "exclusive jurisdiction of the Sac and Fox Indians residing in Iowa and retaining the tribal relation, and of all other Indians dwelling with them * * *." (Act of February 14, 1896, Acts 26th General Assembly, p. 114.) The state, however, reserved from such transfer jurisdiction of crimes against the state laws committed within the reservation by Indians or others. In Peters v. Malin, 111 Fed. 244 (C. C. Iowa, 1901) it was held that this reservation of authority in the state did not affect the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government over the relation of the Indians among themselves. See, on this question, Memo. Sol. I. D. June 15, 1940.

Also see In re Now-ge-zhuck, 69 Kans. 410, 76 Pac. 877 (1904); State v. Big Sheep, 75 Mont. 219, 243 Pac. 1067 (1926); State v. Williams, 13 Wash. 335, 43 Pac. 15 (1895); State v. Howard, 33 Wash. 250, 74 Pac. 382 (1903); State v. Nimrod, 30 S. D. 239, 138 N. W. 377 (1912).

Indians residing in Maine, while they have a communal organization for tenure of property and local affairs, are deemed by the courts of the state to be without political organization and to be subject, like other individuals, to game laws of the state. State v. Newell, 84 Maine 465, 24 Atl. 943 (1892).

It was believed at one time that the grant of citizenship to individual Indians, whether by an act of Congress or by the provisions of a treaty, had the effect of terminating tribal relations, placing the Indians beyond the power of Congress, and subjecting them to state jurisdiction. This view was taken by the United States Supreme Court in the famous case, Matter of Heff, 197 U. S. 488 (1905). Later, however, this ruling was ignored in Hallowell v. United States, 221 U. S. 317 (1911) and United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 28 (1913), and finally expressly overruled in United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591 (1916). See, in this connection, Chapter 8, secs. 2C and 10B(1).

[63] See Chapter 1, sec. 3; Chapter 18, sec. 2.

[64] See Chapter 13, sec. 1A; Chapter 14, sec. 7. As noted in the discussion above, the term "transactions of federal concern" is used to cover matters over which the power of the Federal Government has been exercised, whether through legislation, through authorized administrative action, or in any other valid manner. The content of the term is therefore to be found in the materials discussed in various other chapters, particularly Chapters 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19.

[65] See fns. 62, 63, and 64, supra.

CHAPTER 7

THE SCOPE OF TRIBAL SELF-GOVERNMENT[1]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. INTRODUCTION

The Indian's right of self-government is a right which has been consistently protected by the courts, frequently recognized and intermittently ignored by treaty-makers and legislators, and very widely disregarded by administrative officials. That such rights have been disregarded is perhaps due more to lack of acquaintance with the law of the subject than to any drive for increased power on the part of administrative officials.

The most basic of all Indian rights, the right of self-government, is the Indian's last defense against administrative oppression, for in a realm where the states are powerless to govern and where Congress, occupied with more pressing national affairs, cannot govern wisely and well, there remains a large no-man's-land in which government can emanate only from officials of the Interior Department or from the Indians themselves. Self-government is thus the Indians' only alternative to rule by a government department.

Indian self-government, the decided cases hold, includes the power of an Indian tribe to adopt and operate under a form of government of the Indians' choosing, to define conditions of tribal membership, to regulate domestic relations of members, to prescribe rules of inheritance, to levy taxes, to regulate property within the jurisdiction of the tribe, to control the conduct of members by municipal legislation, and to administer justice.

Perhaps the most basic principle of all Indian law, supported by a host of decisions hereinafter analyzed, is the principle that those powers which are lawfully vested in an Indian tribe are not, in general, delegated powers granted by express acts of Congress, but rather inherent powers of a limited sovereignty which has never been extinguished. Each Indian tribe begins its relationship with the Federal Government as a sovereign power, recognized as such in treaty and legislation. The powers of sovereignty have been limited from time to time by special treaties and laws designed to take from the Indian tribes control of matters which, in the judgment of Congress, these tribes could no longer be safely permitted to handle. The statutes of Congress, then, must be examined to determine the limitations of tribal sovereignty rather than to determine its sources or its positive content. What is not expressly limited remains within the domain of tribal sovereignty.

The acts of Congress which appear to limit the powers of an Indian tribe are not to be unduly extended by doubtful inference.[2]

[1] This chapter is so largely based upon the opinion of Solicitor Margold, Powers of Indian Tribes (Op. Sol. I. D., M.27781, October 25, 1934, 55 I. D. 14), and on the article of F. S. Cohen, Indian Rights and the Federal Courts (1940), 24 Minn. L. Rev. 145, that quotation marks have been dispensed with, as superfluous, in incorporating considerable portions of these works in the present chapter.

[2] See In re Mayfield, Petitioner, 141 U. S. 107, 115, 116 (1891).

SECTION 2. THE DERIVATION OF TRIBAL POWERS

From the earliest years of the Republic the Indian tribes have been recognized as "distinct, independent, political communities,"[3] and, as such, qualified to exercise powers of self-government, not by virtue of any delegation of powers from the Federal Government, but rather by reason of their original tribal sovereignty. Thus treaties and statutes of Congress have been looked to by the courts as limitations upon original tribal powers, or, at most, evidences of recognition of such powers, rather than as the direct source of tribal powers. This is but an application of the general principle that "It is only by positive enactments, even in the case of conquered and subdued nations, that their laws are changed by the conqueror."[4]

In point of form it is immaterial whether the powers of an Indian tribe are expressed and exercised through customs handed down by word of mouth or through written constitutions and statutes. In either case the laws of the Indian tribe owe their force to the will of the members of the tribe.

[3] Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 559 (1832).

[4] Wall v. Williamson, 8 Ala. 48, 51 (1845), upholding tribal law of divorce. And see Wharton, Conflict of Laws (3d ed. 1905), vol. 1, sec. 9; Wheaton, Elements of International Law (5th ed. by Phillipson, 1916) 66–68.

The earliest complete expression of these principles is found in the case of Worcester v. Georgia.[5] In that case the State of Georgia, in its attempts to destroy the tribal government of the Cherokees, had imprisoned a white man living among the Cherokees with the consent of the tribal authorities. The Supreme Court of the United States held that his imprisonment was in violation of the Constitution, that the state had no right to infringe upon the federal power to regulate intercourse with the Indians, and that the Indian tribes were, in effect, subjects of federal law, to the exclusion of state law, and entitled to exercise their own inherent rights of sovereignty so far as might be consistent with such federal law. The court declared, per Marshall, C. J.: > * * * * * * * * * and the settled doctrine of the law of nations is, that a weaker power does not surrender its independence—its right to self-government—by associating with a stronger, and taking its protection. A weak state, in order to provide for its safety, may place itself under the protection of one more powerful, without stripping itself of the right of government, and ceasing to be a state. Examples of this kind are not wanting in Europe. "Tributary and feudatory states," says Vattel, "do not thereby cease to be sovereign and independent states, so long as self-government, and sovereign and independent authority, are left in the administration of the state." At the present day, more than one state may be considered as holding its right of self-government under the guarantee and protection of one or more allies.

> The Indian nations had always been considered as distinct, independent, political communities, * * *. (P. 559.)
>
>
> The Cherokee nation, then, is a distinct community, occupying its own territory, with boundaries accurately described, in which the laws of Georgia can have no force, and which the citizens of Georgia have no right to enter, but with the assent of the Cherokees themselves, or in conformity with treaties, and with the acts of congress. The whole intercourse between the United States and this nation, is, by our constitution and laws, vested in the government of the United States. The act of the state of Georgia, under which the plaintiff in error was prosecuted, is, consequently void, and the judgment a nullity. * * * (P. 560.)

John Marshall's analysis of the basis of Indian self-government in the law of nations has been consistently followed by the courts for more than a hundred years. The doctrine set forth in this opinion has been applied to an unfolding series of new problems in scores of cases that have come before the Supreme Court and the inferior federal courts. The doctrine has not always been so highly respected in state courts and by administrative authorities. It was of the decision in Worcester v. Georgia that President Jackson is reported to have said, "John Marshall has made his decision; now let him enforce it."[6] As a matter of history, the State of Georgia, unsuccessful defendant in the case, never did carry out the Supreme Court's decision, and the "successful" plaintiff, a guest of the Cherokee Nation, continued to languish in a Georgia prison, under a Georgia law which, according to the Supreme Court decision, was unconstitutional.

The case in which the doctrine of Indian self-government was first established has a certain prophetic character. Administrative officials for a century afterwards continued to ignore the broad implications of the judicial doctrine of Indian self-government. But again and again, as cases came before the federal courts, administrative officials, state and federal, were forced to reckon with the doctrine of Indian self-government and to surrender powers of Indian tribes which they sought to usurp. Finally, after 101 years, there appeared an administration that accepted the logical implications of Indian self-government.[7]

The whole course of judicial decision on the nature of Indian tribal powers is marked by adherence to three fundamental principles: (1) An Indian tribe possesses, in the first instance, all the powers of any sovereign state. (2) Conquest renders the tribe subject to the legislative power of the United States and, in substance, terminates the external powers of sovereignty of the tribe,[8] e. g., its power to enter into treaties with foreign nations, but does not by itself affect the internal sovereignty of the tribe, i. e., its powers of local self-government. (3) These powers are subject to qualification by treaties and by express legislation of Congress,[9] but, save as thus expressly qualified, full powers of internal sovereignty are vested in the Indian tribes and in their duly constituted organs of government.

A striking affirmation of these principles is found in the case of Talton v. Mayes.[10] The question was presented in that case whether the Fifth Amendment of the Federal Constitution operated as a limitation upon the legislation of the Cherokee Nation. A law of the Cherokee Nation authorized a grand jury of five persons to institute criminal proceedings. A person indicted upon this procedure and held for trial in the Cherokee courts sued out a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that the law in question violated the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, since a grand jury of five was not a grand jury within the contemplation of the Fifth Amendment. The Supreme Court held that the Fifth Amendment applied only to the acts of the Federal Government; that the sovereign powers of the Cherokee Nation, although recognized by the Federal Government, were not created by the Federal Government; and that the judicial authority of the Cherokees was, therefore, not subject to the limitations imposed by the Bill of Rights:

> The question, therefore, is, does the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution apply to the local legislation of the Cherokee nation so as to require all prosecutions for offences committed against the laws of that nation to be initiated by a grand jury organized in accordance with the provisions of that amendment. The solution of this question involves an inquiry as to the nature and origin of the power of local government exercised by the Cherokee nation and recognized to exist in it by the treaties and statutes above referred to. Since the case of Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. 243, it has been settled that the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is a limitation only upon the powers of the General Government, that is, that the amendment operates solely on the Constitution itself by qualifying the powers of the National Government which the Constitution called into being. * * *
>
> The case in this regard therefore depends upon whether the powers of local government exercised by the Cherokee

[5] 6 Pet. 515 (1832).

[6] Greeley, American Conflict (1864), vol. 1, p. 106.

[7] The most comprehensive piece of Indian legislation since the Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 735, is the Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C., 461–479, entitled "An Act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes," and commonly known as the Wheeler-Howard Act or Indian Reorganization Act. Since its enactment, this statute has been amended in minor particulars (Act of June 15, 1935, 49 Stat. 378, 25 U. S. C. 478a, 478b; Act of August 12, 1935, sec. 2, 49 Stat. 571, 596, 25 U. S. C. 475a; Act of August 28, 1937, 50 Stat. 862, 25 U. S. C. 463–463c), and its more important provisions have been extended to Alaska (Act of May 1, 1936, 49 Stat. 1250, 48 U. S. C. 362) and Oklahoma (Act of June 26, 1936, 49 Stat. 1967, 25 U. S. C. 501–509).

[8] Certain external powers of sovereignty, such as the power to make war and the power to make treaties with the United States, have been recognized by the Federal Government. See Chapter 14, sec. 3.

[9] See for example, Bell v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 63 Fed. 417 (C. C. A. 8, 1894). And see Chapter 5, sec. 6.

[10] 163 U. S. 376 (1896).

nation are Federal powers created by and springing from the Constitution of the United States, and hence controlled by the Fifth Amendment to that Constitution, or whether they are local powers not created by the Constitution, although subject to its general provisions and the paramount authority of Congress. The repeated adjudications of this court have long since answered the former question in the negative. * * *

* * * * *

True it is that in many adjudications of this court the fact has been fully recognized, that although possessed of these attributes of local self-government, when exercising their tribal functions, all such rights are subject to the supreme legislative authority of the United States. Cherokee Nation v. Kansas Railway Co., 135 U.S. 641, where the cases are fully reviewed. But the existence of the right in Congress to regulate the manner in which the local powers of the Cherokee nation shall be exercised does not render such local powers Federal powers arising from and created by the Constitution of the United States. It follows that as the powers of local self government enjoyed by the Cherokee nation existed prior to the Constitution, they are not operated upon by the Fifth Amendment, which, as we have said, had for its sole object to control the powers conferred by the Constitution on the National Government. * * * (Pp. 382–384.)

The decision in Talton v. Mayes does not mean that Indian tribes are not subject to the Constitution of the United States. It remains true that an Indian tribe is subject to the Federal Constitution in the same sense that the city of New Orleans, for instance, is subject to the Federal Constitution. The Federal Constitution prohibits slavery absolutely. This absolute prohibition applies to an Indian tribe as well as to a municipal government and it has been held that slave-holding within an Indian tribe became illegal with the passage of the Thirteenth Amendment.[11] It is, therefore, always pertinent to ask whether an ordinance of a tribe conflicts with the Constitution of the United States.[12] Where, however, the United States Constitution levies particular restraints upon federal courts or upon Congress, these restraints do not apply to the courts or legislatures of the Indian tribes.[13] Likewise, particular restraints upon the states are inapplicable to Indian tribes.

It has been held that the guaranty of religious liberty in the First Amendment of the United States Constitution does not protect a resident of New Orleans from religious oppression by municipal authorities.[14] Neither does it protect the Indian against religious oppression on the part of tribal authorities. As the citizen of New Orleans must write guaranties of religious liberty into his city charter or his state constitution, if he desires constitutional protection in this respect, so the members of an Indian tribe must write the guaranties they desire into tribal constitutions. In fact, many tribes have written such guaranties into tribal constitutions that are now in force.[15]

An extreme application of the doctrine of tribal sovereignty is found in the case of Ex parte Crow Dog,[16] in which it was held that the murder of one Sioux Indian by another upon an Indian reservation was not within the criminal jurisdiction of any court of the United States, but that only the Indian tribe itself could punish the offense.

The contention that the United States courts had jurisdiction in a case of this sort was based upon the language of a treaty with the Sioux, rather than upon considerations applicable generally to the various Indian tribes. The most important of the treaty clauses upon which the claim of federal jurisdiction was based provided:

> * * * And Congress shall, by appropriate legislation, secure to them an orderly government; they shall be subject to the laws of the United States, and each individual shall be protected in his rights of property, person, and life. (P. 568.)

Commenting upon this clause, the Supreme Court declared:

> It is equally clear, in our opinion, that the words can have no such effect as that claimed for them. The pledge to secure to these people, with whom the United States was contracting as a distinct political body, and orderly government, by appropriate legislation thereafter to be framed and enacted, necessarily implies, having regard to all the circumstances attending the transaction, that among the arts of civilized life, which it was the very purpose of all these arrangements to introduce and naturalize among them, was the highest and best of all, that of self-government, the regulation by themselves of their own domestic affairs, the maintenance of order and peace among their own members by the administration of their own laws and customs. They were nevertheless to be subject to the laws of the United States, not in the sense of citizens, but, as they had always been, as wards subject to a guardian; not as individuals, constituted members of the political community of the United States, with a voice in the selection of representatives and the framing

---

[11] In re Sah Quah, 31 Fed. 327 (D. C. Alaska, 1886).

[12] Cf. Roff v. Burney, 168 U. S. 218 (1897), discussed infra, sec. 4.

[13] In United States v. Seneca Nation of New York Indians, 274 Fed. 946 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1921), it was held that federal courts have no power to set aside action of a tribal council allegedly confiscatory of the property rights of a member of the tribe.

That the First Amendment guaranteeing religious liberty does not limit the action of a tribal council is the holding of Memo. Sol. I. D., August 8, 1938 (Lower Brule Sioux).

[14] Permoli v. First Municipality, 3 How. 589 (1845).

[15] A typical Indian bill of rights is the following, taken from the constitution of the Blackfeet Tribe, approved December 13, 1935, by the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to sec. 16 of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984, 987, 25 U. S. C. 476):

ARTICLE VIII—BILL OF RIGHTS

SECTION 1. Suffrage.—Any member of the Blackfeet Tribe, twenty-one (21) years of age or over, shall be eligible to vote at any election when he or she presents himself or herself at a polling place within his or her voting district.

SEC. 2. Economic rights.—All members of the tribe shall be accorded equal opportunities to participate in the economic resources and activities of the reservation.

SEC. 3. Civil liberties.—All members of the tribe may enjoy without hindrance freedom of worship, conscience, speech, press, assembly, and association.

SEC. 4. Rights of accused.—Any member of the Blackfeet Tribe accused of any offense shall have the right to a bond, open and public hearing, with due notice of the offense charged, and shall be permitted to summon witnesses on his own behalf. Trial by jury may be demanded by any prisoner accused of any offense punishable by more than thirty days' imprisonment. Excessive bail shall not be required and cruel punishment shall not be imposed.

Twenty-one other tribal constitutions adopted prior to June 1, 1940, contain more or less similar guaranties, as follows: Constitution of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Reservation, Article VII; Confederated Tribes of the Grand Ronde Community, Article VIII; Hopi Tribe, Article IX; Lower Brule Sioux Tribe. Article VII; Makah Tribe, Article VII; Muckleshoot Indian Tribe, Article VII; Northern Cheyenne Tribe, Article V; Papago Tribe, Article VI; Puyallup Tribe, Article VII; Quileute Tribe, Article VII; San Carlos Apache Tribe, Article VI; Shoshone-Bannock Tribes of the Fort Hall Reservation, Article VII; Shoshone-Paiute Tribes of the Duck Valley Reservation, Article VII; Swinomish Indians of the Swinomish Reservation, Article VII; Tulalip Tribes, Article VII; Ute Indian Tribe, Article VII; Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma, Article IX; Pawnee Indians of Oklahoma, Article VII; Caddo Indian Tribe of Oklahoma, Article X; Confederated Tribes of the Warm Springs Reservation of Oregon, Article VII; Tonkawa Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma, Article IX; Skokomish Indian Tribe of the Skokomish Reservation, Article VII. Absentee-Shawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma, Article IX; Alabama-Quassarte Tribal Town, Article IX; Citizen Band of Potawatomi Indians of Oklahoma, Article X; Thlopthlocco Tribal Town of Oklahoma, Article VII; Port Gamble Indian Community of Washington, Article V; Eastern Shawnee Tribe of Oklahoma, Article IX; Shivwits Band of Paiute Indians of Shivwits Reservation, Utah, Article VI.

[16] 109 U. S. 556 (1883). Also see Chapter 18.

> of the laws, but as a dependent community who were in a state of pupilage, advancing from the condition of a savage tribe to that of a people who, through the discipline of labor and by education, it was hoped might become a self-supporting and self-governed society. * * * (Pp. 568–569.)

In finally rejecting the argument for federal jurisdiction the Supreme Court declared:

> * * * It is a case where, against an express exception in the law itself, that law, by argument and inference only, is sought to be extended over aliens and strangers; over the members of a community separated by race, by tradition, by the instincts of a free though savage life, from the authority and power which seeks to impose upon them the restraints of an external and unknown code, and to subject them to the responsibilities of civil conduct, according to rules and penalties of which they could have no previous warning; which judges them by a standard made by others and not for them, which takes no account of the conditions which should except them from its exactions, and makes no allowance for their inability to understand it. * * * (P. 571.)

The force of the decision in Ex parte Crow Dog was not weakened, although the scope of the decision was limited, by subsequent legislation which withdrew from the rule of tribal sovereignty a list of 7 major crimes, only recently extended to 10.[17] Over these specified crimes jurisdiction has been vested in the federal courts. Over all other crimes, including such serious crimes as kidnaping, attempted murder, receiving stolen goods, and forgery, jurisdiction resides not in the courts of nation or state but only in the Indian tribe itself.

We shall defer the question of the exact scope of tribal jurisdiction for more detailed consideration at a later point. We are concerned for the present only in analyzing the basic doctrine of tribal sovereignty. To this doctrine the case of Ex parte Crow Dog contributes not only an intimation of the vast and important content of criminal jurisdiction inherent in tribal sovereignty, but also an example of the consistent manner in which the United States Supreme Court has opposed the efforts of lower courts and administrative officials to infringe upon tribal sovereignty and to assume tribal prerogatives without statutory justification. The legal powers of an Indian tribe, measured by the decisions of the highest courts, are far more extensive than the powers which most Indian tribes have been actually permitted by energetic officials to exercise in their own right.

The acknowledgment of tribal sovereignty or autonomy by the courts of the United States[18] has not been a matter of lip service to a venerable but outmoded theory. The doctrine has been followed through the most recent cases, and from time to time carried to new implications. Moreover, it has been administered by the courts in a spirit of wholehearted sympathy and respect. The painstaking analysis by the Supreme Court of tribal laws and constitutional provisions in the Cherokee Intermarriage Cases,[19] is typical, and exhibits a degree of respect proper to the laws of a sovereign state.[20]

The sympathy of the courts towards the independent efforts of Indian tribes to administer the institutions of self-government has led to the doctrine that Indian laws and statutes are to be interpreted not in accordance with the technical rules of the common law, but in the light of the traditions and circumstances of the Indian people. An attempt in the case of Ex parte Tiger[21] to construe the language of the Creek Constitution in a technical sense was met by the appropriate judicial retort:

> * * * If the Creek Nation derived its system of jurisprudence through the common law, there would be much plausibility in this reasoning. But they are strangers to the common law.[22] They derive their jurisprudence from an entirely different source, and they are as unfamiliar with common-law terms and definitions as they are with Sanskrit or Hebrew. With them, "to indict" is to file a written accusation charging a person with crime. * * *

So, too, in the case of McCurtain v. Grady,[23] the court had occasion to note that:

> * * * The Choctaw constitution was not drawn by geologists or for geologists, or in the interest of science, or with scientific accuracy. It was framed by plain people, who have agreed among themselves what meaning should be attached to it, and the courts should give effect to that interpretation which its framers intended it should have. * * *

The realm of tribal autonomy which has been so carefully respected by the courts has been implicitly confirmed by Congress in a host of statutes providing that various administrative acts of the President or the Interior Department shall be carried out only with the consent of the Indian tribe or its chiefs or council.[24]

The whole course of congressional legislation with respect to the Indians has been based upon a recognition of tribal autonomy, qualified only where the need for other types of governmental control has become clearly manifest. As was said in a report of the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1870:

> Their right of self-government, and to administer justice among themselves, after their rude fashion, even to the extent of inflicting the death penalty, has never been questioned.[25]

It is a fact that state governments and administrative officials have frequently trespassed upon the realm of tribal autonomy, presuming to govern the Indian tribes through state law or departmental regulation or arbitrary administrative fiat,[26] but these trespasses have not impaired the vested legal powers of local self-government which have been recognized again and again when these trespasses have been challenged by an Indian tribe. "Power and authority rightfully conferred do not nec-

---

[17] See sec. 9, infra.

[18] The doctrine of tribal sovereignty is well summarized in the following passage in the case of In re Sah Quah, 31 Fed. 327 (D. C. Alaska 1886):

> From the organization of the government to the present time, the various Indian tribes of the United States have been treated as free and independent within their respective territories, governed by their tribal laws and customs, in all matters pertaining to their internal affairs, such as contracts and the manner of their enforcement, marriage, descents, and the punishment for crimes committed against each other. They have been excused from all allegiance to the municipal laws of the whites as precedents or otherwise in relation to tribal affairs, subject, however, to such restraints as were from time to time deemed necessary for their own protection, and for the protection of the whites adjacent to them. Cherokee Nat. v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 16, 17; Jackson v. Goodell, 20 Johns. 193. (P. 329.)

And in the case of Anderson v. Mathews, 174 Cal. 537, 163 Pac. 902, 905 (1917), it was said:

> * * * The Indian tribes recognized by the federal government are not subject to the laws of the state in which they are situated. They are under the control and protection of the United States, but they retain the right of local self-government, and they regulate and control their own local affairs and rights of persons and property, except as Congress has otherwise specially provided by law. * * *

See, also, to the same effect, Story, Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States (1891), sec. 1099; Kent, Commentaries on American Law (14th ed., 1896), 383–386.

[19] 203 U. S. 76 (1906). And see Famous Smith v. United States, 151 U. S. 50 (1894); 8 Op. A. G. 300 (1857).

[20] And see sec. 3, infra.

[21] 2 Ind. T. 41, 47 S. W. 304, 305 (1898).

[22] See Waldron v. United States, 143 Fed. 413 (C. C. S. D. 1905); Henson v. Johnson, 246 Pac. 868 (1926).

[23] 1 Ind. T. 107, 38 S. W. 65, 71 (1896).

[24] See sec. 10, infra; 25 U. S. C. 130, 132, 159, 162, 184, 218, 225, 229, 371, 397, 398, 402. These provisions are discussed later under relevant headings.

[25] Sen. Rept. No. 268, 41st Cong., 3d sess., p. 10.

[26] See Oskison, In Governing the Indian, Use the Indian! (1917), 23 Case & Comment 722.

essarily cease to exist in consequence of long nonuser." [27] The Wheeler-Howard Act,[28] by affording statutory recognition of these powers of local self-government and administrative assistance in developing adequate mechanisms for such government, may reasonably be expected to end the conditions that have in the past led the Interior Department and various state agencies to deal with matters that are properly within the legal competence of the Indian tribes themselves.[29]

Neither the allotting of land in severalty nor the granting of citizenship has destroyed the tribal relationship upon which local autonomy rests.[30] The extent, however, to which the foregoing principles may apply to scattered Indian groups which have never exercised powers of self-government presents questions to which no authoritative answers have yet been given.[31]

[27] United States ex rel. Standing Bear v. Crook, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14891 (C. C. Neb. 1879).

[28] Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461 et. seq. See fn. 7, supra.

[29] On the subordination of departmental regulations to the provisions of tribal constitutions, see 25 C. F. R. 71.4, 161.1, 171.13. And see Memo. Sol. I. D., November 11, 1935 (re Grazing Regulations). The Secretarial order approving a tribal constitution regularly contains this statement:

> All rules and regulations heretofore promulgated by the Interior Department or by the Office of Indian Affairs, so far as they may be incompatible with any of the provisions of the said Constitution and Bylaws are hereby declared inapplicable to these Indians.

[30] See Chapter 8, sec. 2C, and Chapter 14, secs. 1, 2.

[31] See Goodrich, The Legal Status of the California Indians (1926), 14 Calif. L. Rev. 83, 157.

SECTION 3. THE FORM OF TRIBAL GOVERNMENT

Since any group of men, in order to act as a group, must act through forms which give the action the character and authority of group action, an Indian tribe must, if it has any power at all, have the power to prescribe the forms through which its will may be registered. The first element of sovereignty, and the last which may survive successive statutory limitations of Indian tribal power, is the power of the tribe to determine and define its own form of government. Such power includes the right to define the powers and duties of its officials, the manner of their appointment or election, the manner of their removal, the rules they are to observe in their capacity as officials, and the forms and procedures which are to attest the authoritative character of acts done in the name of the tribe.[32]

Such power also includes the power to interpret its own laws and ordinances, which interpretations will be followed by the federal courts.[33]

The question of whether action taken in the name of an Indian tribe is in truth tribal action, has been before state and federal courts on many occasions, and in every case the courts have held that the definition of the form of tribal government is a matter for the decision of the Indians themselves.

Such a decision for example is found in the case of Pueblo of Santa Rosa v. Fall.[34] Certain attorneys claimed to represent an Indian pueblo and asserted ownership of a large area which the Federal Government considered public domain. The Indians themselves, apparently, denied the authority of the attorneys in question to put forward such a claim, but the attorneys justified their action on the basis of an alleged agreement with the "captain" of the Pueblo. When the case came before the Supreme Court, that body found that according to the custom of the Pueblo the "captain" would have no authority to act for the Pueblo in a matter of this sort, and that such action without the approval of the Pueblo council would be void. On the issue of fact the court found:

> * * * That Luis was without power to execute the papers in question, for lack of authority from the Indian council, in our opinion is well established. (Pp. 319–320.)

The Supreme Court reversed the decision of the lower court, which had dismissed the suit on the merits, and held:

> * * * the cause must be remanded to the court of first instance with directions to dismiss the bill, on the ground that the suit was brought by counsel without authority, but without prejudice to the bringing of any other suit hereafter by and with the authority of the alleged Pueblo of Santa Rosa. (P. 321.)

Special statutes relating to particular tribes frequently designate the tribal council, committee, or official who is to pass upon [32] One of the current popular superstitions about Indians is the notion that every Indian male over the age of 30 is either a chief or a "Big Chief." This superstitution is of great help to those Indians or pseudo-Indians who seek to earn a respectable living by selling snake oil to the sick, or by selling their fellow-tribesmen's land to land speculators or to the Federal Government, or by lecturing to women's clubs and congressional committees, or by endowing indigent lawyers with tribal business. It is generally very difficult to persuade those who have paid for or profited by such transactions with Indian "chiefs" that the Indian in question was not an officer of his tribe and had no tribal lands, tribal suits, or tribal wisdom to give away. It is, therefore, a matter of some concern to an Indian tribe that it should have the right to define a framework of official action and to insist that acts of individuals and groups that do not fall within that framework are not acts of the tribe. This definition of a framework or government may take the form of a written constitution, or it may take the form of the British Constitution, a disorderly mass of practices shading off into parliamentary procedure and court etiquette but including at its core the essential canons that we invoke, consciously or unconsciously, to decide whether the acts of certain individuals are governmental or nongovernmental or antigovernmental.

On the form of tribal organization, a leading authority has this to say:

> The "tribe" is something we conceive of rather chaotically. Yet these native peoples were as neatly and elaborately organized politically as many civilized peoples * * *. (P. 181.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * The police of the Plains tribes are, one may say, merely one facet of an elaborate and highly complex bureaucratic political organization. (P. 200.) MacLeod, Police and Punishment among Native Americans of the Plains (1937), 28 J. Crim. Law and Criminology 181.

[33] Talton v. Mayes, 163 U. S. 376 (1896). This rule has been generally followed by administrative authorities. See for example Memo. Sol. I. D., July 5, 1940, holding that the choice between two reasonable interpretations of a provision of the Constitution of the San Carlos Apache Tribe should be made by the tribe or its tribal council rather than by the Interior Department.

[34] 273 U. S. 315 (1927). To the same effect, see 7 Op. A. G. 142 (1855); Memo. Sol. I. D., March 11, 1935.

In 5 Op. A. G. 79 (1849), the opinion is expressed that a release to be executed by the "Creek Indians" would be valid "provided, that the chiefs and headmen executing it are such chiefs and headmen, and constitute the whole or a majority of the council of the Creek nation."

In Rollins and Presbrey v. United States, 23 C. Cls. 106 (1888), the court finds that a chief's authority to act in the name of the tribe has been established by the tacit assent of the tribe and by their acceptance of the benefits of his acts.

On the general question of how a tribe may contract, see Chapter 14, sec. 5.

In the case of Mt. Pleasant v. Gansworth, 271 N. Y. Supp. 78 (1934), it is held that the Tuscarora tribal council has never been endowed with probate jurisdiction, that no other body has been set up by the tribe to exercise probate powers, and hence that state courts may step in to remedy the lack. Whether or not the final conclusion is justified, in the light of such cases as Patterson v. Council of Seneca Nation, 245 N. Y. 433, 157 N. E. 734 (1927), the opinion of the court indicates at least that the limitations which a tribe may impose upon the jurisdiction of its own governmental bodies and officers will be respected.

matters entrusted to the tribe by Congress.[35] Some statutes confer upon the President or the Secretary of the Interior supervisory powers over certain named tribal councils.[36] Numerous appropriation acts specify the tribal governing bodies or officers recognized by the Federal Government, in making provisions for tribal approval of various expenditures or in appropriating tribal or federal funds for salaries of Indian councils, courts, or chiefs.[37] And treaties with Indian tribes frequently declare in express language, or show by the manner of Indian ratification, the character of tribal government.[38] Other treaties guarantee that such tribal governments will not be subjected to state or territorial law.[39] Other treaties guarantee to various Indian tribes the right to establish their own form of government, appoint their own officers, and administer their own laws; subject, however, to the legislation of the Congress of the United States regulating trade and intercourse with the Indians."[40] Various other powers, including the power to pass upon various federal expenditures, the power to manage schools supported by the Federal Government, the power to allot land, and the power to designate missionaries to act in a supervisory capacity with respect to annuity distributions, are conferred or confirmed by special treaty provisions.[41]

In accordance with the rule applicable to foreign treaties, the courts have repeatedly indicated that they will not go behind the terms of a treaty to inquire whether the representatives of the tribe accepted as such by the President and the Senate were proper representatives.[42]

Treaties must be viewed not only as forms of exercising federal power, but equally as forms of exercising tribal power.[43] And from the standpoint of tribal law, a later ordinance may supersede a treaty, just as a later act of Congress may supersede a treaty, although in either case an international liability may result.[44]

Recognition of tribal governments and tribal powers may be found not only in acts of Congress and in treaties but also in state statutes, which, when adopted with the advice and consent of the Indians themselves, have been accorded special weight.[45]

Not only must officers presuming to act in the name of an Indian tribe show that their acts fall within their allotted function and authority, but likewise the procedural formalities which tradition or ordinance require must be followed in executing an act within the acknowledged jurisdiction of the officer or set of officers.[46]

---

[35] Act of March 3, 1839, 5 Stat. 349 (Brothertown), R. S. § 1765–1779; Act of March 3, 1843, 5 Stat. 645 (Stockbridge); Act of August 6, 1846, 9 Stat. 55 (Stockbridge); Act of May 23, 1872, 17 Stat. 159 (Pottawatomie and Absentee Shawnee); Act of August 7, 1882, 22 Stat. 349 (Indian Territory); Act of March 3, 1885, 23 Stat. 340 (Umatilla); Act of October 19, 1888, 25 Stat. 608 (Cherokee); Act of February 23, 1889, 25 Stat. 687 (Shoshones and Bannocks, etc.); Act of July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. 567 (Seminole); Act of July 1, 1902, 32 Stat. 636 (Kansas); Act of June 28, 1906, 34 Stat. 539 (Osage); Joint Res. of March 2, 1906, 34 Stat. 822 (Five Civilized Tribes); Act of February 8, 1918, 40 Stat. 433 (Choctaw and Chickasaw); Act of May 14, 1926, 44 Stat. 555 (Chippewa); Act of July 2, 1926, 44 Stat. 801 (Pottawatomie); Act of July 3, 1926, 44 Stat. 807 (Crow); Act of May 25, 1928, 45 Stat. 737 (Choctaw and Chickasaw); Act of March 1, 1929, 45 Stat. 1439 (Klamath); Act of March 2, 1929, 45 Stat. 1478 (Osage); Joint Res. of May 12, 1930, 46 Stat. 268 (Yankton Sioux Tribe); Act of June 19, 1930, 46 Stat. 788 (Choctaw and Chickasaw); Act of February 14, 1931, 46 Stat. 1105 (Klamath); Act of April 21, 1932, 47 Stat. 88 (Choctaw and Chickasaw); Act of April 25, 1932, 47 Stat. 137 (Cherokee); Act of April 27, 1932, 47 Stat. 140 (Seminole); Act of June 6, 1932, 47 Stat. 169, (L'Anse Band of Lake Superior); Act of June 30, 1932, 47 Stat. 420 (Crow and Fort Peck); Act of June 6, 1934, 48 Stat. 910 (Quinault); Act of June 19, 1935, 49 Stat. 388 (Tlingit and Haida Indians of Alaska); Act of August 19, 1937, 50 Stat. 699 (Cherokee); Act of June 25, 1938, 52 Stat. 1207 (Klamath).

[36] See Act of June 7, 1897, 30 Stat. 62, 84 (Five Tribes); Act of March 3, 1901, 31 Stat. 1058, 1077 (Five Tribes); Act of June 28, 1906, 34 Stat. 539, 545 (conferring power to remove members of Osage Council), upheld in United States ex rel. Brown v. Lane, 232 U. S. 598 (1914).

[37] Act of June 26, 1834, 4 Stat. 682, 685; Act of July 27, 1868, 15 Stat. 198, 210, 211; Act of July 15, 1870, 16 Stat. 335, 359; Act of March 3, 1871, 16 Stat. 544, 569; Act of May 29, 1872, 17 Stat. 165, 189; Act of February 14, 1873, 17 Stat. 437, 450; Act of June 22, 1874, 18 Stat. 146, 171; Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 420, 434, 444, 451; Act of March 3, 1877, 19 Stat. 271, 280; Act of May 15, 1886, 24 Stat. 29, 32; Act of June 7, 1897, 30 Stat. 62, 84, 92; Act of March 3, 1901, 31 Stat. 1058, 1077; Act of March 3, 1903, 32 Stat. 982, 1008; Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325, 342; Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 805; Act of March 3, 1911, 36 Stat. 1058, 1065; Act of June 30, 1913, 38 Stat. 77; Act of August 1, 1914, 38 Stat. 582; Act of May 18, 1916, 39 Stat. 123; Act of March 2, 1917, 39 Stat. 969; Act of May 25, 1918, 40 Stat. 561; Act of June 30, 1919, 41 Stat. 3; Act of February 14, 1920, 41 Stat. 408; Act of March 3, 1921, 41 Stat. 1225; Act of May 24, 1922, 42 Stat. 552; Act of January 24, 1923, 42 Stat. 1174; Act of June 5, 1924, 43 Stat. 390; Act of March 3, 1925, 43 Stat. 1141; Act of May 10, 1926, 44 Stat. 453, 458; Act of January 12, 1927, 44 Stat. 934, 939; Act of March 4, 1929, 45 Stat. 1562, 1566, 1584; Act of April 22, 1932, 47 Stat. 91, 94, 112; Act of February 17, 1933, 47 Stat. 820, 824, 839; Act of March 2, 1934, 48 Stat. 362, 366; Act of May 9, 1935, 49 Stat. 176, 182, 195; Act of June 22, 1936, 49 Stat. 1757, 1763; Act of May 9, 1938, 52 Stat. 291, 314, 315.

[38] Treaty of August 7, 1790, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 35; Treaty of September 14, 1816, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 148; Treaty of July 8, 1817, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 156; Treaty of February 12, 1825, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 237; Treaty of September 21, 1832, with the Sac and Fox Indians, 7 Stat. 374; Treaty of April 1, 1850, with the Wyandot Tribe, 9 Stat. 987; Treaty of May 10, 1854, with the Shawnee Indians, 10 Stat. 1053; Treaty of January 17, 1837, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, 11 Stat. 573; Treaty of July 31, 1855, with the Ottowa and Chippewa Indians, 11 Stat. 621; Treaty of August 2, 1855, with the Chippewa Indians, 11 Stat. 633; Treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokee Nation, 14 Stat. 799; Treaty of June 30, 1902, with the Creek Tribe, 32 Stat. 500. And see United States v. Anderson, 225 Fed. 825 (D. C. E. D. Wis. 1915).

[39] Art. IV of Treaty of September 27, 1830, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 333, 334; Art. XIV of the Treaty of March 24, 1832, with the Creek Tribe, 7 Stat. 366, 368; Art. V of the Treaty of December 29, 1835, with the Cherokee Tribe, 7 Stat. 478, 481.

[40] Art. IV of the Treaty of January 15, 1838, with the New York Indians, 7 Stat. 550, 551. Accord: Art. 7 of the Treaty of June 22, 1855, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, 11 Stat. 611, 612. Cf. 19 Op. A. G. 342 (1889) (holding establishment of national bank in Creek Nation unlawful). See Chapter 23, sec. 3.

[41] Treaty of January 31, 1786, with the Shawanoe Nation, 7 Stat. 26; Treaty of June 3, 1825, with the Kansas Nation, 7 Stat. 244; Treaty of January 24, 1826, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 286; Art. VIII of Treaty of July 20, 1831, with the Shawnees and Senecas, 7 Stat. 351, 353; Art. VI of the Treaty of March 28, 1836, with the Ottowas and Chippewas, 7 Stat. 491, 493; Art. III of the Treaty of April 23, 1836, with the Wyandots, 7 Stat. 502; Art. I of the Treaty of January 4, 1845, with the Creeks and Seminoles, 9 Stat. 821; Art. II of the Treaty of August 6, 1846, with the Cherokees, 9 Stat. 871; Art. VI, of the Treaty of June 22, 1852, with the Chickasaws, 10 Stat. 974, 975; Art. IV of the Treaty of March 17, 1842, with the Wyandott Nation, 11 Stat. 581, 582; Art. VI and Art. VII of the Treaty of June 22, 1855, with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, 11 Stat. 611, 612, 613; Art. III of the Treaty of February 5, 1856, with the Stockbridge and Munsee tribes, 11 Stat. 663, 665; Art. VI of the Treaty of August 7, 1856, with Creek and Seminole Indians, 11 Stat. 699, 703–704; Art. V of the Treaty of September 24, 1857, with the Pawnee Indians, 11 Stat. 729, 731; Art. VII of the Treaty of March 12, 1858, with the Ponca Tribe, 12 Stat. 997, 1000; Art. VII of the Treaty of May 7, 1864, with the Chippewa Indians, 13 Stat. 693, 694; Art. I of the Treaty of March 21, 1866, with the Seminole Indians, 14 Stat. 755, 756; Treaty of April 7, 1866, with the Bois Forte band of Chippewa Indians, 14 Stat. 765; Art. XXIV of the Treaty of April 28, 1866, with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, 14 Stat. 769, 776–777; Treaty of June 14, 1866, with the Creek Nation, 14 Stat. 785; Treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokee Nation, 14 Stat. 799; Treaty of February 19, 1867, with the Sissiton and Warpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, 15 Stat. 505; Art. VIII of the Treaty of February 23, 1867, with the Shawnees Indians, 15 Stat. 513, 515.

[42] United States v. New York Indians, 173 U. S. 464 (1899); Fellows v. Blacksmith, 19 How. 366 (1856). See Chapter 3, sec. 1.

[43] See Chapter 14, sec. 3.

[44] The Chickasaw Freedmen, 193 U. S. 115 (1904). See Chapter 3, sec. 1.

[45] United States ex rel. Kennedy v. Tyler, 269 U. S. 13 (1925). And see Chapter 3.

[46] Thus in Walker v. McLoud, 204 U. S. 302 (1907), the Supreme Court held invalid a claim of title under a sale by a sheriff of the Choctaw Nation,

The doctrine of de facto officers has been applied to an Indian tribe, in accordance with the rule applied to other governmental agencies, so as to safeguard from collateral attack acts and documents signed by officers acting under color of authority, though subject, in proper proceedings, to removal from office.[47]

Based upon the analogy of the constitutional law of the United States, the doctrine has been applied to Indian statutes and constitutional provisions that statutes deemed by the courts to be violative of constitutional limitations are to be regarded as void.[48]

The earlier statutes of Congress frequently recognized the authority of chiefs and headmen to act for a tribe.[49] In conformity with the policy of breaking down such authority, later statutes frequently contemplated action by general councils open to all male adult members of the tribe.[50]

Other congressional legislation has specifically recognized the propriety of paying salaries to tribal officers out of tribal funds.[51]

The power to define a form of government is one which has been exercised to the full, and it would be impossible within the compass of this chapter to analyze the forms of government that different Indian communities have established for themselves. Indeed, it may be said that the constitutional history of the Indian tribes covers a longer period and a wider range of variation than the constitutional history of the colonies, the states, and the United States. It was some time before the immigrant Columbus reached these shores, according to eminent historians, that the first Federal Constitution on the American Continent was drafted, the Gayaneshagowa, or Great Binding Law of the Five (later six) Nations (Iroquois).[52] It was in this constitution that Americans first established the democratic principles of initiative, recall, referendum, and equal suffrage.[53] In this constitution, also, were set forth the ideal of the responsibility of governmental officials to the electorate, and the obligation of the present generation to future generations which we call the principle of conservation.[54]

Between the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the Five Nations and the adoption by more than a hundred Indian tribes of written constitutions pursuant to the Act of June 18, 1934, there is a fascinating history of political development that has never been pieced together.[55] Students of Indian law know of the achievements of the Five Civilized Tribes in constitution making by reason of occasional references in the decided cases for the reason that the sheriff had failed to act in accordance with Choctaw laws governing such sales.

---

In 19 Op. A. G. 179 (1888), it is held that a decree of divorce which has not been signed by a judge or clerk of court, as required by the laws of the Choctaw Nation, is invalid.

In re Darch, 265 N. Y. Supp. 86 (1933), involves action of a special tribal council meeting to which only a few members of the council were invited. The action was declared invalid on the ground that the council's rules of procedure required due notice of a special meeting to be given to all the members of the council. Based on an analogy taken from corporation law, the rule was laid down that violation of this requirement rendered the acts of the council invalid.

In 25 Op. A. G. 308, 309, 312 (1904), it appeared that certain sums were to be paid to attorneys "only after the tribal authorities, thereunto duly and specifically authorized by the tribe, shall have signed a writing * * *." By resolution of the tribe the business committee had been authorized to sign the writing in question. The signatures of the business committee, in the opinion of the Attorney General, met the statutory requirement:

> The proceedings of the council were regular, and the motions were carried by a sufficient number of voters, though less than a majority of those present. (See State v. Vanoedal, 131 Ind., 388; Attorney-General v. Shepard, 62 N. H. 383; and Mount v. Parker, 32 N. J. Law, 341.)

[47] See Nofire v. United States, 164 U.S. 657 (1897); Seneca Nation of Indians v. John, 16 N. Y. Supp. 40 (1891).

[48] See Whitmire, Trustee v. Cherokee Nation, et al., 30 C. Cls. 138 (1895); Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, 38 C. Cls. 234 (1903), aff'd 193 U. S. 127 (1904); 19 Op. A. G. 229 (1889).

[49] 25 U. S. C. 130:

> Withholding of moneys or goods on account of intoxicating liquors. No annuities, or moneys, or goods, shall be paid or distributed to Indians * * * until the chiefs and headmen of the tribe shall have pledged themselves to use all their influence and to make all proper exertions to prevent the introduction and sale of such liquor in their country. (R. S. § 2087.)

25 U. S. C. 132:

> Mode of distribution of goods.—Whenever goods and merchandise are delivered to the chiefs of a tribe, for the tribe, such goods and merchandise shall be turned over by the agent or superintendent of such tribe to the chiefs in bulk, and in the original package, as nearly as practicable, and in the presence of the headmen of the tribe, if practicable, to be distributed to the tribe by the chiefs in such manner as the chiefs may deem best, in the presence of the agent or superintendent. (R. S. § 2090.)

And cf. Act of June 14, 1862, sec. 3, 12 Stat. 427, 25 U. S. C. 187, R. S. § 2121.

[50] See Klamath & Modoc Tribes v. United States, 296 U. S. 244, 248 (1935).

[51] 25 U. S. C. 162, after providing generally for the segregation, deposit, and investment of tribal funds, contains the following qualification:

> * * * That any part of tribal funds required for support of schools or pay of tribal officers shall be excepted from segregation or deposit as herein authorized and the same shall be expended for the purposes aforesaid: * * *

[52] A. C. Parker, "The Constitution of the Five Nations" (New York State Museum Bulletin, No. 184).

[53] 93. Whenever a specially important matter or a great emergency is presented before the Confederate Council and the nature of the matter affects the entire body of the Five Nations, threatening their utter ruin, then the Lords of the Confederacy must submit the matter to the decision of their people and the decision of the people shall affect the decision of the Confederate Council. This decision shall be a confirmation of the voice of the people.

94. The men of every clan of the Five Nations shall have a Council Fire ever burning in readiness for a council of the clan. When it seems necessary for a council to be held to discuss the welfare of the clans, then the men may gather about the fire. This council shall have the same rights as the council of the women.

95. The women of every clan of the Five Nations shall have a Council Fire ever burning in readiness for a council of the clan. When in their opinion it seems necessary for the interest of the people they shall hold a council and their decision and recommendation shall be introduced before the Council of Lords by the War Chief for its consideration.

96. All the Clan council fires of a nation or of the Five Nations may unite into one general council fire, or delegates from all the council fires may be appointed to unite in a general council for discussing the interests of the people. The people shall have the right to make appointments and to delegate their power to others of their number. When their council shall have come to a conclusion on any matter, their decision shall be reported to the Council of the Nation or to the Confederate Council (as the case may require) by the War Chief or the War Chiefs. (The Constitution of the Five Nations, translated and edited by A. C. Parker.)

[54] 28. When a candidate Lord is to be installed he shall furnish four strings of shells (or wampum) one span in length bound together at one end. Such will constitute the evidence of his pledge to the Confederate Lords that he will live according to the constitution of the Great Peace and exercise justice in all affairs.

When the pledge is furnished the Speaker of the Council must hold the shell strings in his hand and address the opposite side of the Council Fire and he shall commence his address saying: "Now behold him. He has now become a Confederate Lord. See how splendid he looks." An address may then follow. At the end it shall send the bunch of shell strings to the opposite side and they shall be received as evidence of the pledge. Then shall the opposite side say:

"We now do crown you with the sacred emblem of the deer's antlers, the emblem of your Lordship. You shall now become a mentor of the people of the Five Nations. The thickness of your skin shall be seven spans—which is to say that you shall be proof against anger, offensive actions and criticism. Your heart shall be filled with peace and good will and your mind filled with a yearning for the welfare of the people of the Confederacy. With endless patience you shall carry out your duty and your firmness shall be tempered with tenderness for your people. Neither anger nor fury shall find lodgment in your mind and all your words and actions shall be marked with calm deliberation. In all of your deliberations in the Confederate Council, in your efforts at law making, in all your official acts, self interest shall be cast into oblivion. Cast not over your shoulder behind you the warnings of the nephews and nieces should they chide you for any error or wrong you may do, but return to the way of the Great Law which is just and right. Look and listen for the welfare of the whole people and have always in view not only the present but also the coming generations, even those whose faces are yet beneath the surface of the ground—the unborn of the future Nation." (The Constitution of the Five Nations, translated and edited by A. C. Parker.)

[55] Descriptive accounts of various tribal governments will be found in: J. J. Thompson, Law Among the Aborigines (1924), 6 Ill. L. Q. 204; Hagan, Tribal Law of the American Indian (1917), 23 Case & Com. 735; E. L. Watson, The Indian as a Lawyer (1930), 7 Dicta, No. 9, p. 10.

to the Cherokee,[56] Creek,[57] and Choctaw [58] constitutions. What is not generally known is that many other Indian tribes have operated under written constitutions.[59] The writing of Indian constitutions under the Wheeler-Howard Act of June 18, 1934, is therefore no new thing in the legal history of this continent, and it is possible to hope that some of the political wisdom that has already stood the test of centuries of revolutionary change in Indian life has been embodied in the constitutions of the hundred or more tribes which have been organized under that act.[60]

While the Act of June 18, 1934,[61] had little or no effect upon the substantive powers of tribal self-government vested in the [56] The constitution of the Cherokees was a wonderful adapation to the circumstances and conditions of the time, and to a civilization that was yet to come. It was framed and adopted by a people some of whom were still in the savage state, and the better portion of whom had just entered upon that stage of civilization which is characterized by industrial pursuits; and it was framed during a period of extraordinary turmoil and civil discord, when the greater part of the Cherokee people had just been driven by military force from their mountains and valleys in Georgia, and been brought by enforced immigration into the country of the Western Cherokees; when a condition of anarchy and civil war reigned in the territory—a condition which was to continue until the two branches of the nation should be united under the treaty of 1846 (27 C. Cls. R., 1); yet for more than half a century it has met the requirements of a race steadily advancing in prosperity and education and enlightenment so well that it has needed, so far as they are concerned, no material alteration or amendment, and deserves to be classed among the few great works of intelligent statesmanship which outlive their own time and continue through succeeding generations to assure the rights and guide the destinies of men. And it is not the least of the successes of the constitution of the Cherokees that the judiciary of another nation are able, with entire confidence in the clearness and wisdom of its provisions, to administer it for the protection of Cherokee citizens and the maintenance of their personal and political rights. Journeycake v. Cherokee Nation and United States, 28 C. Cls. 281, 317–318 (1893).

---

[57] See Ex parte Tiger, 2 Ind. T. 41, 47 S. W. 304 (1898).

[58] See McCurtain v. Grady, 1 Ind. T. 107, 38 S. W. 65 (1896).

[59] As of December 13, 1934, constitutions or documents in the nature of constitutions were recorded in the Interior Department for the following tribes: Absentee Delaware; Absentee Shawnee; Annette Islands Reserve; Blackfeet; Cherokee; Cheyenne and Arapahoe; Cheyenne River; Chickasaw; Chippewas of Michigan; Choctaw; Choctaw (Mississippi); Colorado River; Creek or Muskogee; Crow; Eastern Cherokee; Flathead; Fort Belknap; Fort Bidwell; Fort Hall; Fort McDowell; Fort Peck; Fort Yuma; Grand Portage; Grand Ronde; Hoopa Valley; Hopi; Iroquois Confederacy; Kickapoo; Kiowa; Klamath; Lagunana Pueblo; Lovelock; Makah; Menominee; Mescalero; Mohican; Navajo; Osage; Pima; Pine Ridge; Potowatomie (Kansas); Potowatomie (Okla.); Pyramid Lake; Quinaielt; Red Lake; Rocky Boy; Rosebud; San Carlos; Seminole; Seneca (N. Y.); Seneca (Okla.); Shoshone-Arapahoe; Siletz; Sisseton; Standing Rock; Swinomish; Tongue River; Turtle Mountain; Uintah and Ouray; Warm Springs; Western Shoshone; White Earth; Winnebago; Yakima; Yankton.

[60] As of May 15, 1940, the following tribes had adopted constitutions or charters under the Act of June 18, 1934, as amended:

Arizona.—San Carlos Apache Tribe, constitution approved January 17, 1936; Gila River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community, May 14, 1936, charter ratified February 28, 1938; Fort McDowell Mohave-Apache Community, November 24, 1936, charter June 6, 1938; Hopi Tribe, December 19, 1936; Papago Tribe, January 6, 1937; Yavapai-Apache Indian Community, February 12, 1937; Colorado River Indian Tribes of the Colorado River Reservation, Arizona and California, August 13, 1937; White Mountain Apache Tribe, August 26, 1938; Hualapai Tribe of the Hualapai Reservation, December 17, 1938; Havasupai Tribe of the Havasupai Reservation, March 27, 1939.

California.—Big Valley Band of Pomo Indians of the Big Valley Rancheria, January 15, 1936; Upper Lake Band of Pomo Indians of the Upper Lake Rancheria, January 15, 1936; Me-wuk Indian Community of the Wilton Rancheria, January 15, 1936; Tule River Indian Tribe, January 15, 1936; Tuolumne Band of Me-wuk Indians of the Tuolumne Rancheria, January 15, 1936, charter November 12, 1937; Fort Bidwell Indian Community, January 28, 1936; Kashia Band of Pomo Indians of the Stewart's Point Rancheria, March 11, 1936; Manchester Band of Pomo Indians of the Manchester Rancheria, March 11, 1936, charter February 27, 1937; Covelo Indian Community, December 16, 1936, charter November 6, 1937; Quechan Tribe, December 18, 1936; Quartz Valley Indian Community, June 15, 1939, charter March 12, 1940.

Colorado.—Southern Ute Tribe of the Southern Ute Reservation, November 4, 1936, charter November 1, 1938.

Idaho.—Shoshone-Bannock Tribes of the Fort Hall Reservation, April 30, 1936, charter April 17, 1937.

Iowa.—Sac and Fox Tribe of the Mississippi in Iowa, December 20, 1937.

Kansas.—Iowa Tribe in Nebraska and Kansas, February 26, 1937, charter June 19, 1937; Kickapoo Tribe in Kansas, February 26, 1937, charter June 19, 1937; Sac and Fox Tribe of Missouri, March 2, 1937, charter June 19, 1937.

Michigan.—Hannahville Indian Community, July 23, 1936, charter August 21, 1937; Bay Mills Indian Community, November 4, 1936, charter November 27, 1937; Keweenaw Bay Indian Community, December 17, 1936, charter July 17, 1937; Saginaw Chippewa Indian Tribe of Michigan, May 6, 1937, charter August 28, 1937.

Minnesota.—Lower Sioux Indian Community in the State of Minnesota, June 11, 1936, charter July 17, 1937; Prairie Island Indian Community in the State of Minnesota, June 20, 1936, charter July 23, 1937; Minnesota Chippewa Tribe, July 24, 1936, charter November 13, 1937.

Montana.—Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Reservation, October 28, 1935, charter April 25, 1936; Chippewa Cree Tribe of the Rocky Boy's Reservation, November 23, 1935, charter July 25, 1936; Northern Cheyenne Tribe, November 23, 1935, charter November 7, 1936; Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, December 13, 1935, charter August 15, 1936; Fort Belknap Indian Community, December 13, 1935, charter August 25, 1937.

Nebraska.—Omaha Tribe of Nebraska, March 30, 1936, charter August 22, 1936; Ponca Tribe of Native Americans, April 3, 1936, charter August 15, 1936; Santee Sioux Tribe of Nebraska, April 3, 1936, charter August 22, 1936; Winnebago Tribe of Nebraska, April 3, 1936, charter August 15, 1936.

Nevada.—Reno-Sparks Indian Colony, January 15, 1936, charter January 7, 1938; Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe, January 15, 1936, charter November 21, 1936; Washoe Tribe, January 24, 1936, charter February 27, 1937; Shoshone-Paiute Tribes of the Duck Valley Reservation, April 20, 1936, charter August 22, 1936; Fort McDermitt Paiute and Shoshone Tribe, July 2, 1936, charter November 21, 1936; Yerington Paiute Tribe, January 4, 1937, charter April 10, 1937; Walker River Paiute Tribe, March 26, 1937, charter May 8, 1937; Te-Moak Bands of Western Shoshone Indians, August 24, 1938, charter December 12, 1938; Yomba Shoshone Tribe, December 20, 1939, charter December 22, 1939.

New Mexico.—Pueblo of Santa Clara, December 20, 1935; Apache Tribe of the Mescalero Reservation, March 25, 1936, charter August 1, 1936; Jicarilla Apache Tribe of New Mexico, August 4, 1937, charter September 4, 1937.

North Dakota.—Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation, June 29, 1936, charter April 24, 1937.

Oregon.—Confederated Tribes of the Grande Ronde Community, May 13, 1936, charter August 22, 1936; Confederated Tribes of the Warm Springs Reservation, February 14, 1938, charter April 23, 1938.

South Dakota.—Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, November 27, 1935, charter July 11, 1936; Rosebud Sioux Tribe, December 20, 1935, charter March 16, 1937; Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, December 27, 1935; Oglala Sioux Tribe of the Pine Ridge Reservation, January 15, 1936; Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe, April 24, 1936, charter October 31, 1936.

Texas.—Alabama-Coushatta Tribes of Texas, August 19, 1938, charter October 17, 1939.

Utah.—Ute Indian Tribe of the Uintah and Ouray Reservation, January 19, 1937, charter August 10, 1938; Shivwits Band of Paiute Indians of the Shivwits Reservation, March 21, 1940.

Washington.—Tulalip Tribes, January 24, 1936, charter October 3, 1936; Swinomish Indian Tribal Community, January 27, 1936, charter July 25, 1936; Puyallup Tribe, May 13, 1936; Muckleshoot Indian Tribe, May 13, 1936, charter October 31, 1936; Makah Indian Tribe, May 16, 1936, charter February 27, 1937; Quileute Tribe of the Quileute Reservation, November 11, 1936, charter August 21, 1937; Skokomish Indian Tribe of the Skokomish Reservation, May 3, 1938, charter July 22, 1939; Kalispel Indian Community of the Kalispel Reservation, March 24, 1938, charter May 28, 1938; Port Gamble Indian Community, September 7, 1939.

Wisconsin.—Red Cliff Band of Lake Superior Chippewa Indians, June 1, 1936, charter October 24, 1936; Bad River Band of the Lake Superior Tribe of Chippewa Indians of the State of Wisconsin, June 20, 1936, charter May 21, 1938; Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin, August 15, 1936, charter May 8, 1937; Oneida Tribe of Indians of Wisconsin, December 21, 1936, charter May 1, 1937; Forest County Potawatomi Community, February 6, 1937, charter October 30, 1937; Stockbridge-Munsee Community, November 18, 1937, charter May 21, 1938; Sokaogon Chippewa Community, November 9, 1938, charter October 7, 1939.

[61] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461, et. seq.

various Indian tribes,[62] it did bring about the regularization of the procedures of tribal government and a modification of the relations of the Interior Department to the activities of tribal government. Section 16 of the Act of June 18, 1934,[63] established a basis for the adoption of tribal constitutions approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which could not thereafter be changed except by mutual agreement or by act of Congress. This section was explained in a circular letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs sent out almost immediately after the approval of the Act of June 18, 1934, in the following terms:

> SEC. 16. Tribal Organization.—
>
> Under this section, any Indian tribe that so desires may organize and establish a constitution and by-laws for the management of its own local affairs.
>
> Such constitution and by-laws become effective when ratified by a majority of all the adult members of the tribe,[64] or the adult Indians residing on the reservation, at a special election. It will be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to call such a special election when any responsible group of Indians has prepared and submitted to him a proposed constitution and by-laws which do not violate any Federal Law, and are fair to all the Indians concerned. When such a special election has been called, all Indians who are members of the tribe, or residents on the reservation if the constitution is proposed for the entire reservation, will be entitled to vote upon the acceptance of the constitution. * * * If a tribe or reservation adopts the constitution and by-laws in this manner, such constitution and by-laws may thereafter be amended or entirely revoked only by the same process.
>
> The powers which may be exercised by an Indian tribe or tribal council include all powers which may be exercised by such tribe or tribal council at the present time, and also include the right to employ legal counsel (subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the choice of counsel and the fixing of fees), the right to exercise a veto power over any disposition of tribal funds or other assets, the right to negotiate with Federal, State and local governments, and the right to be advised of all appropriation estimates affecting the tribe, before such estimates are submitted to the Bureau of the Budget and Congress.
>
> The following Indian groups are entitled to take advantage of this section: Any Indian tribe, band, or pueblo in the United States (outside of Oklahoma) or Alaska, and also any group of Indians who reside on the same reservation, whether they are members of the same tribe or not.

The constitutions adopted pursuant to this section and those adopted pursuant to similar provisions of law applicable to Alaska[65] and Oklahoma[66] vary considerably with respect to the form of tribal government, ranging from ancient and primitive forms in tribes where such forms have been perpetuated, to models based upon progressive white communities.

The powers of self-government vested in these various tribes likewise vary in accordance with the circumstances, experience, and resources of the tribe.[67] The extent to which tribal powers are subject to departmental review is again a matter on which tribal constitutions differ from each other.

The procedure by which tribal ordinances are reviewed, where such review is called for, is a matter which in nearly all tribal constitutions has been covered in substantially identical terms. A typical provision is that of the constitution of the Blackfeet Tribe,[68] which reads as follows:

> ARTICLE VI. POWERS OF THE COUNCIL
>
> * * * * *
>
> SEC. 2. Manner of review.—Any resolution or ordinance which, by the terms of this constitution, is subject to review by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be presented to the superintendent of the reservation, who shall, within ten (10) days thereafter, approve or disapprove the same. If the superintendent shall approve any ordinance or resolution, it shall thereupon become effective, but the superintendent shall transmit a copy of the same, bearing his endorsement, to the Secretary of the Interior, who may, within ninety (90) days from the date of enactment, rescind the said ordinance or resolution for any cause, by notifying the tribal council of such decision. If the superintendent shall refuse to approve any resolution or ordinance submitted to him, within ten (10) days after its enactment, he shall advise the Blackfeet Tribal Business Council of his reason thereof. If these reasons appear to the council insufficient, it may, by a majority vote, refer the ordinance or resolution to the Secretary of the Interior, who may, within ninety (90) days from the date of its enactment, approve the same in writing, whereupon the said ordinance or resolution shall become effective.

Under the procedure thus established, positive action is required to validate an ordinance that is subject to departmental review. Failure of the superintendent to act within the prescribed period operates as a veto.[69] Failure of the superintendent or other departmental employees to act promptly in transmitting to the Secretary an ordinance validly submitted and approved does not extend the period allowed for secretarial veto.[70] On the other hand, where a superintendent vetoes an ordinance, failure of the tribe to act in accordance with the prescribed procedure of referring the ordinance, after a new vote, to the Secretary of the Interior, will preclude validation of the ordinance.[71]

Secretarial review of tribal ordinances, like Presidential review of legislation, involves judgments of policy as well as judgments of law and constitutionality. Only a small proportion of such ordinances have been vetoed. The reasons most commonly advanced for such action by the Secretary of the Interior are:

1. That the ordinance violates some provision of the tribal constitution;[72]
2. That the ordinance violates some federal law;
3. That the ordinance is unjust to a minority group within the tribe.

---

[62] See Memo. Sol. I. D., March 25, 1939. Undoubtedly, the act had some effect upon the attitude of administrative agencies towards powers which had been theoretically vested in Indian tribes but frequently ignored in practice. See, for instance, decision of the Comptroller General A–86599, June 30, 1937, upholding tribal power to collect rentals from tribal land and declaring:

> * * * having in view the broad purposes of the act, as shown by its legislative history, to extend to Indians the fundamental rights of political liberty and local self-government, and there having been shown the fact that some of the power so granted by the new act would require the use of tribal funds for their accomplishment—being necessary incidents of such powers—and the further fact that the act of June 25, 1936, 49 Stat. 1928, provides that section 20 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 48 Stat. 1233, shall not apply to funds held in trust for individual Indians, associations of individual Indians, or for Indian corporations chartered under the act of June 18, 1934, this office would not be required to object to the procedures suggested in your memorandum for the handling of tribal funds of Indian tribes organized pursuant to the said act of June 18, 1934.

[63] 48 Stat. 984, 987, 25 U. S. C. 476.

[64] This rule was modified by the Act of June 15, 1935, sec. 1, 49 Stat. 378, 25 U. S. C. 478a, which substituted the requirement of majority vote of those voting in an election where 30 percent of the eligible voters cast ballots.

[65] See Chapter 21, sec. 9.

[66] For a list of Oklahoma constitutions and charters, see Chapter 23, sec. 13.

[67] It has been administratively determined that constitutions of groups not previously recognized as tribes, in the political sense, cannot include powers derived from sovereignty, such as the power to tax, condemn land of members, and regulate inheritance. Memo. Sol. I. D., April 15, 1936. (Lower Sioux Indian Community; Prairie Island Indian Community.)

[68] Approved December 13, 1935.

[69] Memo. Sol. I. D., April 11, 1940 (Walker River Paiute).

[70] Memo. Sol. I. D., October 23, 1936 (San Carlos Apache).

[71] See Memo. Sol. I. D., April 11, 1940 (Walker River Paiute).

[72] See, for example, Memo. Sol. I. D., December 14, 1937 (Hopi).

During the 6 years following the enactment of the Act of June 18, 1934, Congress found no occasion to rescind any tribal constitution or ordinance, although it undoubtedly has power to do so,[73] nor was any tribal constitution adopted by an Indian tribe vetoed by the Secretary of the Interior. During this period, perhaps the chief threat to the integrity of tribal government has been the willingness of certain tribal officers to relinquish responsibilities vested in them by tribal constitutions. This tendency has been somewhat checked by rulings to the effect that the Interior Department will not approve or be party to such relinquishment of responsibility.[74]

An attempt to outline the probable future development of these Indian constitutions is made in a recent article on the subject How Long Will Indian Constitutions Last?[75]

> Any answer to this question that is more than mere guesswork must square with the recorded history of Indian constitutions. Tribal constitutions, after all, are not a radical innovation of the New Deal. The history of Indian constitutions goes back at least to the Gayaneshagowa (Great Binding Law) of the Iroquois Confederacy which probably dates from the 15th century. * * *
>
> So too, we have the written constitutions of the Creek, Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Osage nations, printed usually on tribal printing presses, which were in force during the decades from 1830 to 1900.
>
> These constitutions are merely historical records today. Other Indian constitutions, however, retain their vitality. A good many tribes have had rudimentary written constitutions, which simply recorded the procedure of their general council meetings, the method of electing or removing representatives or "business committees," and perhaps a brief statement of the duties of officers. Other tribes are governed by elaborate constitutions which have never been recorded. The difference between a written and an unwritten constitution should not be exaggerated. The rules concerning council procedure, selection of officers, and official responsibilities, which have been followed by the Creek towns, or by the Rio Grande Pueblos, without substantial alteration across four centuries, certainly deserve to be called constitutions. They do not lose their potency when they are reduced to writing, as the constitution of Laguna Pueblo was reduced to writing thirty years ago.
>
> In all the recorded history of Indian constitutions, two basic facts stand out.
>
> It is a fact of deep significance that no Indian constitution has ever been destroyed except with the consent of the governed. Congress has never legislated a tribal government out of existence except by treaty, agreement or plebiscite. Even the wholesale destruction of the governments of the Five Civilized Tribes in the old Indian Territory was accomplished only when the members of these tribes, by majority vote, had accepted the wishes of Congress. These governments ceased to exist as governments primarily because they had admitted to citizenship, and to rights of occupancy in tribal lands, so many white men that the original Indian communities could no longer maintain a national existence apart from the white settlers. The acts of Congress and the plebiscite votes of the tribes, which were dominated by the "squaw-men" and mixed-bloods, reflected an existing fact. The constitution of the Iroquois Confederacy likewise was broken only by the Indians themselves when the Six Nations could not agree on the question of whether to support the American revolutionaries or the British.
>
> The second basic fact that stands out in a survey of the life span of Indian constitutions is that the Indians themselves cease to want a constitution when their constituted government no longer satisfies important wants. When this happens, a tribal government, like any other government, either dissolves in chaos or yields place to some other governing agency that commands greater power or promises to satisfy in greater measure the significant wants of the governed.
>
> If we are to be realistic in seeking to answer the question, "How long will the new Indian Constitutions last?", we must focus attention on the human wants that tribal governments under these constitutions are able to satisfy rather than on guesses as to what future Congresses and future administrations may think of Indian self-government. * * * It is extremely likely that organized Indian tribes will continue to exist as long as American democracy exists and as long as the American people are unwilling to use the army to carry out Indian policies,—provided that the Indians themselves feel that tribal governments satisfy important human wants.
>
> What are the wants that a tribal government can help to satisfy?
>
> I
>
> The most fundamental of the goods which a tribe may bring to its members is economic security. Few things bind men so closely as a common interest in the means of their livelihood. No tribe will dissolve so long as there are lands or resources that belong to the tribe or economic enterprises in which all members of the tribe may participate. The young man who in the plastic years of adolescence, goes to his tribal government to obtain employment in a tribal lumber mill, cooperative store, hotel, mine, farm, or factory, gives that government the most enduring kind of recognition. The returned student who applies to a committee of his tribal council for permission to build up his herds on tribal grazing land, or for the chance to establish a farm, or to build a home and garden upon tribal lands assigned to his occupancy, cannot ignore this tribal government. * * *
>
> It follows that governmental credit policies in making loans to Indian tribes are of critical importance. If, in such loans, special attention is given to encouraging tribal enterprises, a real basis of social solidarity is provided: all members of the tribe are interested in the success of the enterprise, in the efficiency and honesty of its management; the development of a tribal enterprise becomes a course of adult education in economics and government. On the other hand, if credit operations are entirely confined to individual enterprises, no such common interest is created. The struggle for a lion's share of tribal loan funds may prove, on the contrary, a disintegrating and faction-producing drive. The tribal officials instead of being producers will be bankers. And there is no reason to believe that the bankers of an Indian tribe will be less cordially detested by their debtors than are bankers in any country of the world today.
>
> Second in importance only to the reservation credit program is the reservation land-acquisition program. A landless tribe can evoke no more respect, among farmers, than a landless individual. But more than paper ownership of tribal land is here in question. The issue is whether the tribe that "owns" land will be allowed to exercise the powers of a landowner, to receive rentals and fees, to regulate land use, to withdraw land privileges from those who flout its regulations, or whether the Federal Government will administer "tribal" lands for the benefit of the Indians as it administers National Monuments, for instance, for the benefit of posterity, with the Indians having perhaps as much actual voice in the former case as posterity has in the latter.
>
> The roots of any tribal constitution are likely to be as deep as the tribe's actual control over economic resources.

[73] On federal review of legislation of the Five Civilized Tribes, see Chapter 23, sec. 6.

[74] Memo. Sol. I. D., May 14, 1938 (veto of Oglala Sioux resolution delegating taxation powers to superintendent). See also Memo. Acting Sol. I. D., July 16, 1937 (disapproving proposal for indefinite review of actions of Business Committee of Chippewa-Cree Indians of the Rocky Boy's Reservation, affecting federally financed business but approving contractual provision for review of such ordinances during period of indebtedness); Memo. Sol. I. D., October 16, 1936 (terms of loan to Lower Brule Sioux Tribe); Memo. Sol. I. D., July 12, 1937 (Ft. Belknap; delegation of leasing power to superintendent disapproved); Memo. Sol I. D., May 28, 1936 (Ft. Hall; same).

[75] F. S. Cohen, How Long Will Indian Constitutions Last (1939), 6 Indians at Work, No. 10. The excerpts here quoted follow the cited publication except with respect to editorial abridgments and corrections made therein.

II

Less tangible than the possession of common property, but perhaps equally important in the continuity of a social group, is the existence of common enjoyments. In community life, as in marriage, community of interest in the useless and enjoyable things of life makes for stability and loyalty.

Any governmental organization must do a good many unpleasant jobs. Arresting law-breakers and collecting taxes are not activities that inspire gratitude and loyalty. Thus government comes to be looked upon as a necessary evil, at best, unless it actively sponsors some of life's every-day enjoyments. An Indian tribe that enriches the recreational life of its members through the development of community recreational facilities is building for itself a solid foundation in human loyalty.

There is no doubt that the remarkable tenacity of traditional government in the Pueblos of New Mexico derives in large part from the role which that government plays in the popular dances, communal hunts, and similar social activities. To relieve the barrenness of life on some of the northern reservations is a task hardly less important than the reestablishment of the economic basis of life. * * *

In this field, much will depend upon the attitude of Indian Service officials, and particularly upon the attitude of teachers, social workers, and extension agents. It will be hard for them to surrender the large measure of control that they now exercise over the recreational and social life of the reservations, but unless they are willing to yield control in this field to the tribal government, that government may find itself barred from the hearts of its people.

III

Outside of Indian reservations, local government finds its chief justification in the performance of municipal services, and particularly the maintenance of law and order, the management of public education, the distribution of water, gas, and electricity, the maintenance of health and sanitation, the relief of the needy, and activities designed to afford citizens protection against fire and other natural calamities. On most Indian reservations all of these functions, if performed at all, are performed not by the tribal councils but by employees of the Indian Service. Thus the usual reason for the maintenance of local government is lacking.

The cure for this situation is, obviously, the progressive transfer of municipal functions to the organized tribe. Already some progress has been made in this direction in the field of law and order. Codes of municipal ordinances are being adopted by several organized tribes; judges are removable, in some cases, by the Indians to whom they are responsible; and the czaristic powers of the Superintendent in this field have been substantially abolished. In the other fields of municipal activity no such change has yet taken place.

Where Indian schools are maintained, the Indians generally have nothing to say about school curricula, the appointment or qualifications of teachers, or even the programs to be followed in the commencement exercises. Many reasons will occur to the Indian Service employee why the tribal government should have nothing to say about Indian education. It will be said that the Federal Government pays for Indian education and should therefore exercise complete control over it—an ironic echo of the familiar argument that real-estate owners pay for public education and should therefore control it. It will be said that Indians are not competent to handle educational problems. It will be said that giving power to tribal councils will contaminate education with "politics."

None of these objections has any particular rational force. In several cases teachers are now being paid not out of Federal funds but out of tribal funds. So far as the law is concerned, an act of Congress that has been on the statute books since June 30, 1834, specifically provides that the direction of teachers, and other employees, even though they be paid out of Federal funds, may be given to the proper tribal authorities wherever the Secretary of the Interior (originally, the Secretary of War) considers the tribe competent to exercise such direction. Indians are considered competent enough to serve on boards of education where public schools have been substituted for Indian Service schools. And there is no good reason why tribal "politics" deserves to be suppressed, any more than national "politics." If these common arguments are without rational force, they are nevertheless significant because they symbolize the unwillingness of those who have power, positions, and salaries, to jeopardize the status quo.

This is true not only in the field of education. It is true in the field of health, community planning, relief, and all other municipal services. It is true of government outside of the Indian Service, and perhaps it is true of all human enterprise. The shift of control from a Federal bureau to the local community is likely to come not through gifts of delegated authority from the Federal bureau, but rather as a result of insistent demands from the local community that it be entrusted with increasing control over its own municipal affairs.

Where this demand for local autonomy is found, there is ground to hope that a tribal constitution will prove to be a relatively permanent institution as human institutions go. Where this demand is not found, there is reason to believe that the tribal government will not be taken very seriously by the governed, that Indian Service control of municipal functions will continue until superseded by state control, and that the tribe will disappear as a political organization.

IV

A fourth source of vitality in any tribal constitution is the community of consciousness which it reflects. Where many people think and feel as one, there is some ground to expect a stable political organization. Where, on the other hand, such unity is threatened either by factionalism within the tribe or by constant assimilation into a surrounding population, continuity of tribal organization cannot be expected.

* * * * *

V

A fifth source of potential strength for any tribal organization lies in the role which it may assume as protector of the rights of its members.

In most parts of the country, Indians are looked down upon and discriminated against by their white fellow-citizens. They are denied ordinary rights of citizenship—in several states even the right to vote—in a few states the right to intermarry with the white race or to attend white schools—in most states the right to use state facilities of relief, institutional care, etc. Discrimination against Indians in private employment is widespread. Social discrimination is almost universal. The story of Federal relations with the Indian tribes is filled with accounts of broken treaties, massacres, land steals, and practical enslavement of independent tribes under dictatorial rule by Indian agents.

It is not to be wondered at that this history of discrimination and oppression has left a bitter, rankling resentment in the hearts of most Indians. A responsible tribal government must express this resentment, and express it in more effective ways than are open to an individual; otherwise it has failed in one of its chief functions. Where there is a popular consciousness of grievances, the governing body of the community must seek their redress, whether against state officials, Indian Service employees, white traders, or any other group. To be in the pay of any such group is, on most reservations, a black mark against a popular representative.

In this field of activity, tribal governments can achieve significant results. A council, for instance, that employs an attorney to enjoin the enforcement of an unconstitutional statute depriving Indians of the right to vote is likely to secure a first lien on the respect of its constituency and materially increase the life expectancy of the tribal constitution. A tribal council that makes a determined fight to secure enforcement of laws—some of them more than a hundred years old—granting Indians preference in Indian Service employment will win Indian support even it it loses its immediate fight. So with many other common grievances on which collective tribal action is possible. A rubber stamp council that simply takes what the Indian Office gives it is not likely to establish permanent foundations for tribal autonomy. Rubber is a peculiarly perishable material, and it gives off a bad smell when it decays.

There is, then, no single answer that can be given to the question, "How long will Indian constitutions last?" We may be sure that different constitutions will perish at different ages. Some, no doubt, have been still-born. Such constitutions may exist in the eyes of the law but not in the hearts of the Indians, and at the first signal of official displeasure, they will disappear. Other constitutions represent realities as stable as the reality that is the United States of America or the City of St. Louis.

One who seeks a mathematical formula can perhaps measure the life expectancy of various tribal constitutions by assigning numbers to the factors we have discussed—the extent to which the organized tribe ministers to the common economic needs of the people, the degree in which the organized tribe satisfies recreational and cultural wants, the extent and efficiency of municipal services which the tribe renders, the general social solidarity of the community, and the vigor with which the tribal government expresses the dissatisfactions of the people and organizes popular resentment along rational lines.

More generally one can say that a constitution is the structure of a reality that exists in human hearts. An Indian constitution will exist as long as there remains in human hearts a community of interdependence, of common interests, aspirations, hopes, and fears, in realms of art and politics, work and play.

SECTION 4. THE POWER TO DETERMINE TRIBAL MEMBERSHIP [76]

The courts have consistently recognized that in the absence of express legislation by Congress [77] to the contrary, an Indian tribe has complete authority to determine all questions of its own membership.[78] It may thus by usage or written law, or by treaty with the United States or intertribal agreement,[79] determine under what conditions persons shall be considered members of the tribe. It may provide for special formalities of recognition, and it may adopt such rules as seem suitable to it, to regulate the abandonment of membership, the adoption of non-Indians or Indians of other tribes, and the types of membership or citizenship which it may choose to recognize. The completeness of this power receives statutory recognition in a provision that the children of a white man and an Indian woman by blood shall be considered members of the tribe if, and only if, "said Indian woman was * * * recognized by the tribe." [80] The power of the Indian tribes in this field is limited only by the various statutes of Congress defining the membership of certain tribes for purposes of allotment or for other purposes,[81] and by the statutory authority given to the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate a final tribal roll for the purpose of dividing and distributing tribal funds.[82]

The power of an Indian tribe to determine questions of its own membership derives from the character of an Indian tribe as a distinct political entity. In the case of Patterson v. Council of Seneca Nation [83] the Court of Appeals of New York reviewed the many decisions of that court and of the Supreme Court of the United States recognizing the Indian tribe as a "distinct political society, separated from others, capable of managing its own affairs and governing itself" [84] and, in reaching the conclusion that mandamus would not lie to compel the plaintiff's enrollment by the defendant council, declared:

> Unless these expressions, as well as similar expressions many times used by many courts in various jurisdictions, are mere words of flattery designed to soothe Indian sensibilities, unless the last vestige of separate national life has been withdrawn from the Indian tribes by encroaching state legislation, then, surely, it must follow that the Seneca Nation of Indians has retained for itself that prerequisite to their self-preservation and integrity as a nation, the right to determine by whom its membership shall be constituted. (P. 736.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> It must be the law, therefore, that, unless the Seneca Nation of Indians and the state of New York enjoy a relation inter se peculiar to themselves, the right to enrollment of the petitioner, with its attending property rights, depends upon the laws and usages of the Seneca Nation and is to be determined by that Nation for itself, without interference or dictation from the Supreme Court of the state. (P. 736.)

After examining the constitutional position of the Seneca Nation and finding that tribal autonomy has not been impaired by any legislation of the state, the court concludes:

> The conclusion is inescapable that the Seneca Tribe remains a separate nation; that its powers of self-government are retained with the sanction of the state; that the ancient customs and usages of the nation except in a few particulars, remain, unabolished, the law of the Indian land; that in its capacity of a sovereign nation the Seneca Nation is not subservient to the orders and directions of [76] For an analysis of congressional power over tribal membership, see Chapter 5, sec. 6. For an analysis of federal administrative power on the same subject, see chapter 5, sec. 13.

[77] There is no dispute as to the plenary power of Congress over the field of tribal membership. See Wallace v. Adams, 204 U. S. 415 (1907), and Chapter 5, sec. 6.

[78] It must be noted that property rights attached to membership are largely in the control of the Secretary of the Interior rather than the tribe itself. See, sec. 8, infra, and see Chapters 5, 9, and 15.

[79] See Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, 193 U. S. 127 (1904).

[80] 25 U. S. C. 184 declares:

> * * * all children born of a marriage heretofore solemnized between a white man and an Indian woman by blood and not by adoption, where said Indian woman is at this time, or was at the time of her death, recognized by the tribe shall have the same rights and privileges to the property of the tribe to which the mother belongs, or belonged at the time of her death, by blood, as any other member of the tribe, and no prior Act of Congress shall be construed as to debar such child of such right. (Act of June 7, 1897, c. 3, sec. 1, 30 Stat. 62, 90.)

The phrase "recognized by the tribe" is construed in Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305 (C. C. A. 8, 1909); Pape v. United States, 19 F. 2d 219 (C. C. A. 9, 1927); United States v. Rolfson, 38 F. 2d 806 (C. C. A. 9, 1930), rev'd 283 U. S. 753 (1931); 43 L. D. 149 (1914); 50 L. D. 551 (1924).

[81] Various enrollment statutes provide for enrollment by chiefs, with departmental approval. Act of March 3, 1881, sec. 4, 21 Stat. 414, 433 (Miami); Act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. 1013 (United Peorias and Miamies), construed in 12 L. D. 168 (1890); Act of February 13, 1891, 26 Stat. 749, 753 (Sac and Fox and others). Cf. Act of June 18, 1926, 44 Stat. 1609 (requiring the Secretary to enroll for allotment a person adopted by the Kiowa tribe); Act of June 28, 1898, sec. 21, 30 Stat. 495, 502 ("Cherokee * * * lawfully admitted to citizenship by the tribal authorities"). Other statutes provide for enrollment by the Secretary of the Interior, with the assistance of chiefs. Act of May 19, 1924, 43 Stat. 132 (Lac du Flambeau) and Act of June 15, 1934, 48 Stat. 965 (Menominee) (action by the Secretary after findings by Menominee Tribal Council).

Another procedure involved a commission including Indian members, acting with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. See Act of March 3, 1921, 41 Stat. 1355 (Ft. Belknap), construed in Stoockey v. Wilbur, 58 F. 2d 522 (App. D. C. 1932). Still other statutes provide for enrollment by the Secretary of the Interior. See Chapter 5, sec. 6.

Even in these cases, the Secretary sometimes utilized a roll prepared by officers of the tribe. See Jump v. Ellis, 100 F. 2d 130 (C. A. A. 10, 1938), cert. den. 306 U. S. 645 (1938).

Occasionally Congress has specifically required that the Interior Department recognize a tribal adoption. See Act of April 4, 1910, sec. 18, 36 Stat. 269, 280 (Kiowa).

[82] 25 U. S. C. 163. (June 30, 1919, c. 4, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 3, 9). See Chapter 5, secs. 12 and 13, Chapter 9, sec. 6, and Chapter 10, sec. 4.

[83] 245 N. Y. 433, 157 N. E. 734 (1927).

[84] Marshall, C. J., in Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 15 (1831).

> the courts of New York state; that, above all, the Seneca Nation retains for itself the power of determining who are Senecas, and in that respect is above interference and dictation. (P. 738.)

In the case of Waldron v. United States,[85] it appeared that a woman of five-sixteenth Sioux Indian blood on her mother's side, her father being a white man, had been refused recognition as an Indian by the Interior Department although, by tribal custom, since the woman's mother had been recognized as an Indian, the woman herself was so recognized. The court held that the decision of the Interior Department was contrary to law, declaring:

> In this proceeding the court has been informed as to the usages and customs of the different tribes of the Sioux Nation, and has found as a fact that the common law does not obtain among said tribes, as to determining the race to which the children of a white man, married to an Indian woman, belong; but that, according to the usages and customs of said tribes, the children of a white man married to an Indian woman take the race or nationality of the mother.[86] (P. 419.)

In the Cherokee Intermarriage Cases,[87] the Supreme Court of the United States considered the claims of certain white men, married to Cherokee Indians, to participate in the common property of the Cherokee Nation. After carefully examining the constitutional articles and the statutes of the Cherokee Nation, the court reached the conclusion that the claims in question were invalid, since, although the claimants had been recognized as citizens for certain purposes, the Cherokee Nation had complete authority to qualify the rights of citizenship which it offered to its "naturalized" citizens, and had, in the exercise of this authority, provided for the revocation or qualification of citizenship rights so as to defeat the claims of the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court declared, per Fuller, C. J.:

> The distinction between different classes of citizens was recognized by the Cherokees in the differences in their intermarriage law, as applicable to the whites and to the Indians of other tribes; by the provision in the intermarriage law that a white man intermarried with an Indian by blood acquires certain rights as a citizen, but no provision that if he marries a Cherokee citizen not of Indian blood he shall be regarded as a citizen at all; and by the provision that if, once having married an Indian by blood, he marries the second time a citizen not by blood, he loses all of his rights as a citizen. And the same distinction between citizens as such and citizens with property rights has also been recognized by Congress in enactments relating to other Indians that the Five Civilized Tribes. Act August 9, 1888, 25 Stat. 392, c. 818; act May 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 96, c. 182; act June 7, 1897, 30 Stat. 90, c. 3. (P. 88.)
>
> * * * The laws and usages of the Cherokees, their earliest history, the fundamental principles of their national policy, their constitution and statutes, all show that citizenship rested on blood or marriage; that the man who would assert citizenship must establish marriage; that when marriage ceased (with a special reservation in favor of widows or widowers) citizenship ceased; that when an intermarried white married a person having no rights of Cherokee citizenship by blood it was conclusive evidence that the tie which bound him to the Cherokee people was severed and the very basis of his citizenship obliterated. (P. 95.)[88]

An Indian tribe may classify various types of membership and qualify not only the property rights, but the voting rights of certain members.[89] Similarly, an Indian tribe may revoke rights of membership which it has granted. In Roff v. Burney,[90] the Supreme Court upheld the validity of an act of the Chickasaw legislature depriving a Chickasaw citizen of his citizenship, declaring:

> The citizenship which the Chickasaw legislature could confer it could withdraw. The only restriction on the power of the Chickasaw Nation to legislate in respect to its internal affair is that such legislation shall not conflict with the Constitution or laws of the United States, and we know of no provision of such Constitution or laws which would be set at naught by the action of a political community like this in withdrawing privileges of membership in the community once conferred. (P. 222.)

The right of an Indian tribe to make express rules governing the recognition of members, the adoption of new members, the procedure for abandonment of membership, and the procedure for readoption, is recognized in Smith v. Bonifer.[91] In that case the plaintiffs' right to allotments depended upon their membership in a particular tribe. The court held that such membership was demonstrated by the fact of tribal recognition, declaring:

> Indian members of one tribe can sever their relations as such, and may form affiliations with another or other tribes. And so they may, after their relation with a tribe has been severed, rejoin the tribe and be again recognized and treated as members thereof, and tribal rights and privileges attach according to the habits and customs of the tribe with which affiliation is presently cast. As to the manner of breaking off and recasting tribal affiliations we are meagerly informed. It was and is a thing, of course, dependent upon the peculiar usages and customs of each particular tribe, and therefore we may assume that no general rule obtains for its regulation.

---

[85] 143 Fed. 413 (C. C. S. D. 1905). Also see Chapter 1, sec. 2.

[86] To the effect that tribal action on recognition of members is conclusive "as there was no treaty, agreement, or statute of the United States imposing upon any officer of the United States the power to make a complete roll, and declaring that the acts of said officer should be conclusive upon the questions involved," see Sully v. United States, 195 Fed. 113, 125 (C. C. S. D. 1912) (suit for allotment).

The same view is maintained in 19 Op. A. G. 115 (1888), in a case in which exclusive power to determine membership was vested in the tribal authority by treaty:

> * * * It was the Indians, and not the United States, that were interested in the distribution of what was periodically coming to them from the United States. It was proper then that they should determine for themselves, and finally, who were entitled to membership in the confederated tribe and to participate in the emoluments belonging to that relation.
>
> The certificate of the chiefs and councillors referred to is possibly as high a grade of evidence as can be procured of the fact of the determination by the chiefs of the right of membership under the treaty of February 23, 1867, and seems to be such as is warranted by the usage and custom of the Government in its general dealings with these people and other similar tribes. (P. 116.)

See to the same effect: In re William Banks, 26 L. D. 71 (1898); Black Tomahawk v. Waldron, 19 L. D. 311 (1894); 35 L. D. 549 (1907); 43 L. D. 125 (1914); 20 Op. A. G. 711 (1894); Western Cherokees v. United States, 27 C. Cls. 1, 54 (1891), mod. 148 U. S. 427, 28 C. Cls. 557; United States v. Heyfron (two cases), 138 Fed. 964, 968 (C. C. Mont. 1905); Memo. Sol. I. D., May 14, 1935 (Red Lake Chippewa) and see Memo Sol. I. D., December 18, 1937 (Kansas and Wisconsin Pottawatomie). As was said in the last cited memorandum:

> * * * However, if the Prairie Band still refuses, in the light of this information, to accept the children into membership, the Department is without power to enroll the children of its own accord, and the Business Committee should be so informed. While the Department may approve or disapprove adoptions into the tribe and expulsions therefrom made by the tribal authorities, no case holds that the Department, in the absence of express statutory authorization, may grant a person tribal membership over the protest of the tribal authorities. Such action would be contrary to the rules enunciated in the cases and to the position taken by the Department in the drafting of tribal constitutions.

[87] 203 U. S. 76 (1906).

[88] See, to the same effect, 19 Op. A. G. 109 (1888).

[89] Thus in 19 Op. A. G. 389 (1889), the view is expressed that a tribe may by law restrict the rights of tribal suffrage, excluding white citizens from voting, although by treaty they are guaranteed rights of "membership." Accord: 8 Op. A. G. 300 (1857).

[90] 168 U. S. 218 (1897). And see Memo. Sol. I. D., February 18, 1938, to the effect that a tribal roll may be amended pursuant to a tribal constitution.

[91] 154 Fed. 883 (C. C. D. Ore. 1907), aff'd sub. nom. Bonifer v. Smith, 166 Fed. 846 (C. C. A. 9, 1909), s. c. 132 Fed. 889 (C. C. D. Ore. 1904).

Now, the first condition presented is that the mother of Philomme was a full-blood Walla Walla Indian. She was consequently a member of the tribe of that name. Was her status changed by marriage to Tawakown, an Iroquois Indian? This must depend upon the tribal usage and customs of the Walla Wallas and the Iroquois. It is said by Hon. William A. Little, Assistant Attorney General, in an opinion rendered the Department of the Interior in a matter involving this very controversy:

> "That inheritance among these Indians is through the mother and not through the father, and that the true test in these cases is to ascertain whether parties claiming to be Indians and entitled to allotments have by their conduct expatriated themselves or changed their citizenship."

But we are told that:

> "Among the Iroquoian tribes kinship is traced through the blood of the woman only. Kinship means membership in a family; and this in turn constitutes citizenship in the tribe, conferring certain social, political, and religious privileges, duties, and rights, which are denied to persons of alien blood." Handbook of American Indians, edited by Frederick Webb Hodge, Smithsonian Institute, Government Printing Office, 1907.

Marriage, therefore, with Tawakown would not of itself constitute an affiliation on the part of his wife with the Iroquois tribe, of which he was a member, and a renunciation of membership with her own tribe. * * * (P. 886.)

Considering a second marriage of the plaintiff to a white person, the court went on to declare:

> * * * But notwithstanding the marriage of Philomme to Smith, and her long residence outside of the limits of the reservation, she was acknowledged by the chiefs of the confederated tribes to be a member of the Walla Walla tribe. From the testimony adduced herein, read in connection with that taken in the case of Hy-yu-tse-mil-kin v. Smith, supra, it appears that Mrs. Smith was advised by Homily and Show-a-way, chiefs, respectively, of the Walla Walla and Cayuse tribes, to come upon the reservation and make selections for allotments to herself and children, and that thereafter she was recognized by both these chiefs, and by Peo, the chief of the Umatillas, as being a member of the Walla Walla tribe. It is true that she was not so recognized at first, but she was finally, and by a general council of the Indians held for the especial purpose of determining the matter. (P. 888.)

Where tribal laws have not expressly provided for some certificate of membership,[92] the courts, in cases not clearly controlled by recognized tribal custom, have looked to recognition by the tribal chiefs as a test of tribal membership.[93]

The weight given to tribal action in relation to tribal membership is shown by the case of Nofire v. United States.[94] In that case the jurisdiction of the Cherokee courts in a murder case, the defendants being Cherokee Indians, depended upon whether the deceased, a white man, had been duly adopted by the Cherokee Tribe. Finding evidence of such adoption in the official records of the tribe, the Supreme Court held that such adoption deprived the federal court of jurisdiction over the murder and vested such jurisdiction in the tribal courts.

A similar decision was reached in the case of Raymond v. Raymond[95] in which the jurisdiction of a tribal court over an adopted Cherokee was challenged. The court declared, per Sanborn, J.:

> * * * It is conceded that under the laws of that nation the appellee became a member of that tribe, by adoption, through her intermarriage with the appellant. It is settled by the decisions of the supreme court that her adoption into that nation ousted the federal court of jurisdiction over any suit between her and any member of that tribe, and vested the tribal courts with exclusive jurisdiction over every such action. Alberty v. U. S., 162 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. Ct. 864; Nofire v. U. S., 164 U. S. 657, 658, 17 Sup. Ct. 212. (P. 723.)

It is of course recognized throughout the cases that tribal membership is a bilateral relation, depending for its existence not only upon the action of the tribe but also upon the action of the individual concerned. Any member of any Indian tribe is at full liberty to terminate his tribal relationship whenever he so chooses,[96] although it has been said that such termination will not be inferred "from light and trifling circumstances."[97]

Apart from the foregoing cases, there are a number of decisions excluding from rights of tribal membership persons claiming to be members who have been recognized neither by the tribal nor by the federal authorities.[98] Such cases, of course, cast little light on the scope of tribal power.

The tribal power recognized in the foregoing cases is not overthrown by anything said in the case of United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock.[99] In that case, an adopted member of the Wichita tribe was refused an allotment by the Secretary of the Interior because the Department had never approved his adoption. Since the Secretary, according to the Supreme Court, had unreviewable discretionary authority to grant or deny an allotment even to a member of the tribe by blood, it was unnecessary for the Supreme Court to decide whether refusal of the Interior Department to approve the relator's adoption was within the authority of the Department. The court, however, intimated that the general authority of the Interior Department under section 463 of the Revised Statutes[100] was broad enough to justify a regulation requiring departmental approval of adoptions, but added that since the relator would have no legal right of appeal even if his adoption without Department approval were valid, "it hardly is necessary to pass upon that point."[101]

While the actual court decisions in the field of tribal membership are all consistent with the view that complete power over tribal membership rests with the tribe, except where Congress otherwise provides, the opinion in the West case appears to diverge from this view. Several alternative ways of reconciling the apparent conflict of judicial views in this field have been suggested. The Interior Department has expressed its view in these terms:

> The power of an Indian tribe to determine its membership is subject to the qualification, however, that in the distribution of tribal funds and other property under the supervision and control of the Federal Government, the action of the tribe is subject to the supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior.[102] The original power to

---

[92] See 19 Op. A. G. 115 (1888).

[93] Hy-yu-tse-mil-kin v. Smith, 194 U. S. 401, 411 (1904); United States v. Higgins, 103 Fed. 348 (C. C. D. Mont. 1900).

[94] 164 U. S. 657 (1857).

[95] 83 Fed. 721 (C. C. A. 8, 1897). Accord: 7 Op. A. G. 174 (1855). But cf. 2 Op. A. G. 402 (1830).

[96] See Chapter 8, sec. 10B(1). And see Chapter 14, secs. 1 and 2, on termination of tribal relations by groups.

[97] See Vezina v. United States, 245 Fed. 411, 420 (C. C. A. 8, 1917) (suit for allotment). Accord: Wau-pe-man-qua v. Aldrich, 28 Fed. 489 (C. C. Ind. 1886). But cf. Sac and Fox Indians v. United States, 45 C. Cls. 287 (1910), aff'd 220 U. S. 481 (1911).

[98] See, for example, Reynolds v. United States, 205 Fed. 685 (D. C. S. D. 1913); Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305 (C. C. A. 8, 1909); 20 L. D. 167 (1895); 42 L. D. 489 (1913).

[99] 205 U. S. 80 (1907).

[100] Duties of Commissioner.—The Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe, have the management of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations. 25 U. S. C. 2.

[101] Accord: LaClair v. United States, 184 Fed. 128 (C. C. E. D. Wash. 1910) (declining to pass on necessity of departmental approval of adoption in allotment case).

[102] Citing: United States ex rel. West v. Hitchock, 205 U. S. 80 (1907); Mitchell v. United States, 22 F. 2d 771 (C. C. A. 9, 1927); United > determine membership, including the regulation of membership by adoption, nevertheless remains with the tribe * * *.[103] (pp. 39–40.)

An alternative formula for reconciling the cases in this field is suggested in the case of Sloan v. United States,[104] in which the distinction was drawn between adoption, which is a tribal matter, and departmental action in recognizing such adoption. The court declared:

> * * * claimants who cannot bring themselves within the provisions of the act of 1882 by showing that when that act took effect, they were residing on the reservation in the tribal relation, but who claim that, as a matter of fact, they were recognized by the tribe to be members thereof, cannot rightfully expect that the courts will refuse to accept and follow the ruling of the department upon the question of such recognition. The agents charged with the duty of making the allotments, who visit the tribe, have a much better knowledge of the action taken by the tribe than can be gained by the court; and their decision upon a fact of this nature, especially when duly affirmed by the officers of the interior department, should ordinarily be accepted as conclusive. In the numerous reports of the alloting agents introduced in evidence in these cases it is reported that none of the several claimants are recognized by the tribe as members entitled to allotments, and these findings of fact have been approved by the secretary of the interior, and they will, for the reasons stated, be accepted as final by this court in the further consideration of these suits. (p. 292.)

Another basis, not radically different from the two views above suggested, that would permit a reconciliation of all the cases and dicta, is the idea of tribal membership as a relative affair, existing in some cases for certain purposes and not for others. Precedent for this idea may be found in United States v. Rogers,[105] where Chief Justice Taney held that although a white man, by arrangement with an Indian tribe, might become a member thereof, he could not thereby divest the federal courts of jurisdiction over him as a "white man." On this view it might be said that for purposes in which the tribe has the last word, tribal adoption is valid without reference to departmental approval,[106] while for those purposes in which departmental action is authorized, the department may demand the right to approve or disapprove adoption.

Whatever may be the exact extent of departmental power in this field, in view of the broad provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act it has been administratively held that the Secretary of the Interior may define and confine his power of supervision in accordance with the terms of a constitution adopted by the tribe itself and approved by him.

The written constitutions of tribes which have organized under the Act of June 18, 1934, contain provisions on membership which vary considerably. Generally these constitutions provide that descendants of two parents, both of whom are members of the tribe, shall be deemed members of the tribe. With respect to the offspring of mixed marriages, constitutions differ. Some make the membership of such offspring dependent upon whether his degree of Indian blood is more than one-half or one-quarter. Others make the membership of such offspring depend upon whether its parents maintain a residence on the reservation. Nearly all tribal constitutions provide for adoption through special action by the tribe, subject to review by the Secretary of the Interior. The general trend of the tribal enactments on membership is away from the older notion that rights of tribal membership run with Indian blood, no matter how dilute the stream. Instead it is recognized that membership in a tribe is a political relation rather than a racial attribute. Those who no longer take part in tribal affairs, who do not live upon the reservation, who marry non-Indians, may retain their claims upon tribal property, but most Indian tribes now deny such individuals the opportunity to claim a share of tribal assets for each child produced. The trend is toward making the sharing in tribal property correlative with the obligations that fall upon the members of the Indian community.[107]

One conclusion is clear, from the cases and developments above discussed: that a number of generalities in common currency on the subject of tribal membership must be severely qualified before they can be accepted as sound statements of law. For it is clear that such power as rests in the tribes with respect to membership has been and is being exercised along widely divergent lines.

States v. Provoe, 38 F. 2d 799 (C. C. A. 9, 1930), rev'd. on other grounds, 283 U. S. 753 (1931). See also Wilbur v. United States, ex rel. Kadrie, 281 U. S. 206 (1930).

[103] 55 I. D. 14, 39 (1934).

[104] 118 Fed. 283 (C. C. D. Neb. 1902), app. dism. 193 U. S. 614 (1904).

[105] 4 How. 567 (1846). Accord: Westmoreland v. United States, 155 U. S. 545 (1895); United States v. Ragsdale, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,113 (C. C. Ark. 1847).

[106] This finds support in such cases as Katzenmeyer v. United States, 225 Fed. 523 (C. C. A. 7, 1915), holding that for purposes of applying federal liquor laws, application for adoption and approval by the tribe establish tribal membership. And cf. United States v. Higgins, 110 Fed. 609 (C. C. Mont. 1901).

Theoretical justification for this view is offered by Wharton, A Treatise on the Conflict of Laws or Private International Law (3d ed. 1905), vol. 1, sec. 252.

[107] Typical membership provisions in tribal constitutions are the following:

Article III of the Constitution of the Jicarilla Apache Tribe, approved August 4, 1937

> Membership in the Jicarilla Apache Indian Tribe shall extend to all persons of Indian blood whose names appear on the official census roll of the Jicarilla Apache Reservation of 1937; and to all children of one-fourth or more Indian blood, not affiliated with another tribe, born after the completion of the 1937 census roll to any member of the Tribe who is a resident of the Jicarilla Apache Reservation. Membership by adoption may be acquired by a three-fourths majority vote of the tribal council and the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Article II of the Constitution of the Hopi Tribe, approved December 19, 1936

> SECTION 1. Membership in the Hopi Tribe shall be as follows:
> (a) All persons whose names appear on the census roll of the Hopi Tribe as of January 1st, 1936, but within one year from the time that this Constitution takes effect corrections may be made in the roll by the Hopi Tribal Council with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.
> (b) All children born after January 1, 1936, whose father and mother are both members of the Hopi Tribe.
> (c) All children born after January 1, 1936, whose mother is a member of the Hopi Tribe, and whose father is a member of some other tribe.
> (d) All persons adopted into the Tribe as provided in Section 2.
> SEC. 2. Nonmembers of one-fourth degree of Indian blood or more, who are married to members of the Hopi Tribe, and adult persons of one-fourth degree of Indian blood or more whose fathers are members of the Hopi Tribe, may be adopted in the following manner: Such person may apply to the Kikmongwi of the village to which he is to belong, for acceptance. According to the way of doing established in that village, the Kikmongwi may accept him, and shall tell the Tribal Council. The Council may then by a majority vote have that person's name put on the roll of the Tribe, but before he is enrolled he must officially give up membership in any other tribe.

Article III of the Constitution of the Seneca-Cayuga Tribe of Oklahoma, ratified May 15, 1937

> The membership of the Seneca-Cayuga Tribe of Oklahoma shall consist of the following persons:
> 1. All persons of Indian blood whose names appear on the official census roll of the Tribe as of January 1, 1937.
> 2. All children born since the date of the said roll, both of whose parents are members of the Tribe.
> 3. Any child born of a marriage between a member of the Seneca-Cayuga Tribe and a member of any other Indian tribe who chooses to affiliate with the Seneca-Cayuga Tribe.
> 4. Any child born of a marriage between a member of the Seneca-Cayuga Tribe and any other person, if such child is admitted to membership by the Council of the Seneca-Cayuga Tribe.

Tribal constitutional provisions on membership are construed in Memo. Sol. I. D., April 12, 1938 (Rosebud Sioux), and Memo. Sol. I. D., July 12, 1938 (Rosebud Sioux).

Thus, for example, it is frequently said that a person cannot be a member of two tribes at once. This undoubtedly represents a well-established policy with respect to allotment and other distribution of tribal property or federal benefits.[108] It cannot, however, be validly inferred from this that two tribes could not formally recognize the membership of a single individual, for voting or other purposes. So, too, the generalities to be found in several cases as to the tribal membership of offspring of mixed marriages fail to correspond to the realities of tribal action. One may find, in the decided cases, two principles which, between them, cover the field: partus sequitur ventrem[109] and partus sequitur patrem.[110] This pair of principles is, of course, totally useless when it comes to reaching or predicting particular decisions.

[108] See Mandler v. United States, 49 F. 2d 201 (C. C. A. 10, 1931), rehearing den., 52 F. 2d 713 (C. C. A. 10, 1931); 19 L. D. 329 (1894).

[109] United States v. Sanders, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16220 (C. C. A. Ark. 1847); Alberty v. United States, 162 U. S. 499 (1896).

[110] Ex parte Reynolds, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11719 (D. C. W. D. Ark. 1879); United States v. Ward, 42 Fed. 320 (C. C. S. D. Cal. 1890); United States v. Hadley, 99 Fed. 437 (C. C. Wash. 1900); United States v. Higgins, 110 Fed. 609 (C. C. Mont. 1901).

SECTION 5. TRIBAL REGULATION OF DOMESTIC RELATIONS

The Indian tribes have been accorded the widest possible latitude in regulating the domestic relations of their members.[111] Indian custom marriage has been specifically recognized by federal statute, so far as such recognition is necessary for purposes of inheritance.[112] Indian custom marriage and divorce has been generally recognized by state and federal courts for all other purposes.[113] Where federal law or written laws of the tribe do not cover the subject, the customs and traditions of the tribe are accorded the force of law, but these customs and traditions may be changed by the statutes of the Indian tribes.[114] In defining and punishing offenses against the marriage relationship, the Indian tribe has complete and exclusive authority in the absence of legislation by Congress upon the subject. No law of the state controls the domestic relations of Indians living in tribal relationship,[115] even though the Indians concerned are citizens of the state.[116] The authority of an Indian tribal council to appoint guardians for incompetents and minors is specifically recognized by statute,[117] although this statute at the same time deprives such guardians of the power to administer federal trust funds. Property relations of husband and wife, or parent and child, are likewise governed by tribal law and custom.[118]

The case of United States v. Quiver[119] provided a critical test of the doctrine of Indian self-government in the field of domestic relations. The case arose through a prosecution for adultery in the United States District Court for South Dakota. Both of the individuals involved were Sioux Indians and the offense was alleged to have been committed on one of the Sioux reservations. The Department of Justice authorized prosecution on the theory that Congress had, by section 3 of the Act of March 3, 1887,[120] terminated the original tribal control over Indian domestic relations.

The question was: Did this statute, which applied to all areas within the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, apply to the conduct of Indians on an Indian reservation? The Supreme Court held that it did not. The analysis of the subject by Mr. Justice Van Devanter is illuminating, not only on the immediate question of jurisdiction over adultery, but on the broader question of the civil jurisdiction of an Indian tribe:

> At an early period it became the settled policy of Congress to permit the personal and domestic relations of the Indians with each other to be regulated, and offenses by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian to be dealt with, according to their tribal customs and laws. Thus the Indian Intercourse Acts of May 19, 1796, c. 30, 1 Stat. 469, and of March, 1802, c. 13, 2 Stat. 139, provided for the punishment of various offenses by white persons against Indians and by Indians against white persons, but left untouched those by Indians against each other; and the act of June 30, 1834, c. 161, Sec. 25, 4 Stat. 729, 733, while providing that "so much of the laws of the United States as provides for the punishment of crimes committed within any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States shall be in force in the Indian country," qualified its action by saying, "the same shall not extend to crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian." That provision with its qualification was later carried into the Revised Statutes as Secs. 2145 and 2146. This was the situation when this court, in Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556, held that the murder of an Indian by another Indian on an Indian reservation was not punishable under the laws of the United States and could be dealt with only according to the laws of the tribe. The first change came when, by the act of March 3, 1885, c. 341, Sec. 9, 23 Stat. 362, 385, now Sec. 328 of the Penal Code, Congress pro-

[111] On the application of tribal custom in domestic relations to the natives of Alaska, see 54 I. D. 39 (1932). And see Chapter 21, sec. 6.

[112] Sec. 5, Act of February 28, 1891, 26 Stat. 794, 795, as embodied in 25 U. S. C. 371, provides:

> Descent of land.—For the purpose of determining the descent of land to the heirs of any deceased Indian under the provisions of section 348, of this title, whenever any male and female Indian shall have cohabited together as husband and wife according to the custom and manner of Indian life the issue of such cohabitation shall be, for the purpose aforesaid, taken and deemed to be the legitimate issue of the Indians so living together * * *.

And see Act of March 3, 1873, sec. 11, 17 Stat. 566, 570 (pensions to "widows of colored or Indian soldiers").

[113] See Note (1904) 13 Yale L. J. 250, and cases cited.

[114] It has been held that a tribal ordinance authorizing divorce by tribal action does not by implication abolish tribal custom divorce. Barnett v. Prairie Oil & Gas Co., 19 F. 2d 504 (C. C. A. 8, 1927), aff'g sub. nom. Kunkel v. Barnett, 10 F. 2d 804, cert. den. 275 U. S. 563.

[115] In re Lelah-puc-ka-chee, 98 Fed. 429 (D. C. N. D. Iowa, 1899), holding state court without jurisdiction to appoint guardian of tribal Indian. See Chapter 12, sec. 2. Cf. Davison v. Gibson, 56 Fed. 443 (C. C. A. 8, 1893), holding law of forum applicable to question of married woman's property if tribal law is not shown.

[116] Yakima Joe v. To-is-lap, 191 Fed. 516 (C. C. D. Ore. 1910).

[117] R. S. § 2108, 25 U. S. C. 159.

Adoption on the Crow Reservation is governed by the Act of March 3, 1931, c. 413, 46 Stat. 1494.

Appointment of guardians among the Pottawatomies was governed by Art. 8 of the Treaty of February 27, 1867, 15 Stat. 531; among the Ottawas by Art. 8 of the Treaty of June 24, 1862, 12 Stat. 1237. And cf. Act of February 13, 1891, 26 Stat. 749, 752 (Sacs, Foxes, Iowas); Act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. 980, 994 (Peoria, etc.).

To the effect that state court action in the matter of adoptions is not entitled to departmental recognition if the tribe has set up its own procedure for adoption, see Memo. Sol. I. D., December 2, 1937.

The Interior Department has taken the position that guardians appointed by a Court of Indian Offenses are "legal guardians" within the meaning of such legislation as the Act of February 25, 1933, 47 Stat. 907, governing payments of funds by governmental agencies "to incompetent adult Indians or minor Indians, who are recognized wards of the federal government, for whom no legal guardians or other fiduciaries have been appointed." Memo. Sol. I. D., March 25, 1936.

[118] Hicks v. Butrick, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6458 (C. C. D. Kan. 1875).

[119] 241 U. S. 602 (1916).

[120] That section provides:

> That whoever commits adultery shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not exceeding three years: * * * (24 Stat. 635, 18 U. S. C. 516.)

vided for the punishment of murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, arson, burglary and larceny when committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian. In other respects the policy remained as before. After South Dakota became a State, Congress, acting upon a partial cession of jurisdiction by that State, c. 106, Laws 1901, provided by the act of February 2, 1903, c. 351, 32 Stat. 793, now Sec. 329 of the Penal Code, for the punishment of the particular offenses named in the act of 1885 when committed on the Indian reservations in that State, even though committed by others than Indians, but this is without bearing here, for it left the situation in respect of offenses by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian as it was after the act of 1885.

We have now referred to all the statutes. There is none dealing with bigamy, polygamy, incest, adultery or fornication, which in terms refers to Indians, these matters always having been left to the tribal customs and laws and to such preventive and corrective measures as reasonably could be taken by the administrative officers. (Pp. 603–605.)

Recognition of the validity of marriages and divorces consummated in accordance with tribal law or custom is found in numerous cases.[121]

Legal recognition has not been withheld from marriages by Indian custom, even in those cases where Indian custom sanctioned polygamy. As was said in Kobogum v. Jackson Iron Co.:[122]

* * * The testimony now in this case shows what, as matter of history, we are probably bound to know judicially, that among these Indians polygamous inarriages have always been recognized as valid, and have never been confounded with such promiscuous or informal temporary intercourse as is not reckoned as marriage. While most civilized nations in our day very wisely discard polygamy, and it is not probably lawful anywhere among English speaking nations, yet it is a recognized and valid institution among many nations, and in no way universally unlawful. We must either hold that there can be no valid Indian marriage, or we must hold that all marriages are valid which by Indian usage are so regarded. There is no middle ground which can be taken, so long as our own laws are not binding on the tribes. They did not occupy their territory by our grace and permission, but by a right beyond our control. They were placed by the constitution of the United States beyond our jurisdiction, and we had no more right to control their domestic usages than those of Turkey or India. * * * We have here marriages had between members of an Indian tribe in tribal relations, and unquestionably good by the Indian rules. The parties were not subject in those relations to the laws of Michigan, and there was no other law interfering with the full jurisdiction of the tribe over personal relations. We cannot interfere with the validity of such marriages without subjecting them to rules of law which never bound them. (Pp. 605–606.)

Despite a popular impression to the contrary, marriage in accordance with tribal law or custom has exactly the same validity that marriage by state license has among non-Indians. Many Indian tribes have a clearly defined marriage ritual.[123] Some tribes have provided for regular tribal marriage licenses, the validity of which has been affirmed by the United States Supreme Court.[124]

The jurisdiction of a tribal court over divorce actions has been recognized by federal and state courts.[125]

The basis of tribal jurisdiction over divorce was set forth with lucidity in the case of Wall v. Williamson:[126]

It is only by positive enactments, even in the case of conquered and subdued nations, that their laws are changed by the conqueror. (P. 51.)

The fact that Indians may obtain marriage licenses from state officials does not deprive the tribe of jurisdiction to issue a divorce where the parties are properly before tribal court. In this respect Indians are in the same position as persons who, after marrying under the law of one state, may be divorced under the law of another state or of a foreign nation.[127]

---

[121] Johnson v. Johnson, 30 Mo. 72 (1860); Boyer v. Dively, 58 Mo. 510 (1875); Earl v. Godley, 42 Minn. 361, 44 N. W. 254 (1890); People ex rel. LaForte v. Rubin, 98 N. Y. Supp. 787 (1905); Ortley v. Ross, 78 Nebr. 339, 110 N. W. 982 (1907); Yakima Joe v. To-is-lap, 191 Fed. 516 (C. C. Ore. 1910); Cyr v. Walker, 29 Okla. 281, 116 Pac. 931 (1911); Buck v. Branson, 34 Okla. 807, 127 Pac. 436 (1912); Butler v. Wilson, 54 Okla. 229, 153 Pac. 823 (1915); Carney v. Chapman, 247 U. S. 102 (1918); Hallowell v. Commons, 210 Fed. 793 (C. C. A. 8, 1914); Johnson v. Dunlap, 68 Okla. 216, 173 Pac. 359 (1918); Davis v. Reeder, 102 Okla. 106, 226 Pac. 880 (1924); Pompey v. King, 101 Okla. 253, 225 Pac. 175 (1924); Proctor v. Foster, 107 Okla. 95, 230 Pac. 753 (1924); Unussee v. McKinney, 133 Okla. 40, 270 Pac. 1096 (1928); and cf. Connolly v. Woolrich, 11 Lower Can. Jur. 197 (1867). See, also, Parr v. Colfax, 197 Fed. 302 (C. C. A. 9, 1912); Porter v. Wilson, 239 U. S. 170 (1915); and see Wharton, Conflict of Laws (3d ed. 1905), vol. 1, sec. 128a.

[122] 76 Mich. 498, 43 N. W. 602 (1889).

[123] Under Chapter 3, sec. 2, of the Law and Order Regulations approved by the Secretary of the Interior November 27, 1935, 25 C. F. R. 161.28, it became the duty of each tribal council to determine the procedure to be followed in tribal custom marriage. See fn. 130, infra.

[124] Nofire v. United States, 164 U. S. 657 (1897).

[125] Raymond v. Raymond, 83 Fed. 721 (C. C. A. 8, 1897); 19 Op. A. G. 109 (1888).

[126] 8 Ala. 48 (1845).

[127] In upholding the power of a tribal court to issue a divorce decree where one of the parties was a non-Indian, the Solicitor for the Interior Department declared (Memo. February 11, 1939):

A divorce action has been frequently described as an action in rem in which the res is the marital status of the parties. It is necessary for a court to have jurisdiction of the res in order to grant a divorce, although it need not have jurisdiction of both the parties. It is well established that a State court has the necessary jurisdiction of the marital status where the plaintiff is a resident of the State and the State is the location of the marital domicile, even though the State has no jurisdiction of the defendant spouse who is not a resident or a citizen of the State and can be reached only by constructive notice. Atherton v. Atherton, 181 U. S. 155; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562; Delanoy v. Delanoy, 13 Pac. (2d) 719 (Cal. 1932), 86 A. L. R. 1321.

The foregoing principles are based upon the interest of the State in the marital status of its residents, and this interest is considered sufficiently great to permit a State to act upon the marital status of a resident in certain cases even though the other party was never within the jurisdiction of the State. As said by one court:

"Every State or sovereignty has the right to determine the domestic relations of all persons having their domiciles within their [sic] territory and where the husband or wife is domiciled within a particular State, the courts of that State can take jurisdiction over the status, and for proper cause act on this rem and dissolve the relation." Coffey v. Coffey, 71 S. W. (2d) 141, 142 (Mo. 1934).

If the foregoing principles are applied to such a situation as that now presented, a tribal court could exercise jurisdiction to grant a divorce to a tribal member residing on the reservation whose spouse has abandoned the marital domicile on the reservation, regardless of the tribal membership or race or residence of the other spouse.

Reliance need not be placed entirely upon application of these general principles of jurisdiction, however, in order to sustain the jurisdiction of a tribal court to divorce tribal members from white spouses, since a number of cases have already recognized as valid marriages and divorces under tribal law between tribal members and white persons. Wall v. Williamson, 8 Ala. 48; Wall v. Williams, 11 Ala. 826; Morgan v. McGhee, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 14; Johnson v. Johnson's Administrator, 30 Mo. 72, 77 Am. Dec. 598; La Riviere v. La Riviere, 77 Mo. 512; Cyr. v. Walker, 29 Okla. 281, 116 Pac. 931; 35 L. R. A. (n. s.) 795; 14 R. C. L. 122. The foregoing cases determine that a white person who established a residence among an Indian tribe in its territory will be considered married to or divorced from a tribal member according to the law of the tribe. In the leading case of Cyr. v. Walker, supra, an adopted member of the tribe divorced his white wife on the reservation under tribal law and the validity of this divorce was recognized even though the parties had been married under State law. In all of these cases the divorce was an Indian custom divorce through separation by mutual consent or by abandonment by one of the parties. The principle, however, would not be affected because an Indian tribe may now require formal tribal court action in place of the earlier Indian custom.

The Cyr case would seem to go so far as to recognize a tribal divorce by a tribal member against a white person who did not consent to the divorce. However, it is not necessary to decide at this time whether such a principle would now be accepted so that a tribal member could obtain a divorce in a tribal court against a white spouse who objected to the jurisdiction of the

It is, however, a matter of state law whether state courts will recognize the validity of such divorces. In the absence of reported decisions on this point it is not possible to say with any certainty how states are likely to treat such tribal divorces in cases that come up in state courts. So far as the Federal Government is concerned, the validity of such divorces is conceded.[128] The current Law and Order Regulations of the Indian Service, approved by the Secretary of the Interior on November 27, 1935,[129] recognize the validity of Indian custom marriage and divorce and leave it to the governing authorities of each tribe to define what shall constitute such marriage and divorce.[130] These regulations also authorize decrees by Courts of Indian Offenses compelling payment for support,[131] and judgments on the issue of paternity.[132]

The constitutions for tribes organized under the Act of June 18, 1934, generally provide for the exercise by the tribal council and tribal court of general jurisdiction over domestic relations.[133] Generally no departmental review of such tribal action is required.

A few of these tribal constitutions provide that all marriages shall be in conformity with state law.[134] Several tribes have adopted special ordinances governing domestic relations.[135] court. All that need be decided at this time is that under the accepted divorce law a tribal member may obtain a tribal divorce from a white spouse who has consented to the jurisdiction of the tribal court or who has abandoned his tribal spouse and his marital domicile on the reservation. It might be pointed out than an unjustified abandonment is itself an implied consent to a divorce action by the abandoned spouse in the court of the latter's domicile. (See Delanoy v. Delanoy, supra, at 723.)

[128] The Comptroller General, however, ruled otherwise in a case where a divorce action was pending in a state court. Settlement Certificate, Claim No. 013388 (25), January 23, 1936.

[129] See 55 I. D. 401 (1935).

[130] Chapter 3, sec. 2.

Tribal Custom Marriage and Divorce.—The Tribal Council shall have authority to determine whether Indian custom marriage and Indian custom divorce for members of the tribe shall be recognized in the future as lawful marriage and divorce upon the reservation, and if it shall be so recognized, to determine what shall constitute such marriage and divorce and whether action by the Court of Indian Offenses shall be required. When so determined in writing, one copy shall be filed with the Court of Indian Offenses, one copy with the Superintendent in charge of the reservation, and one copy with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Thereafter, Indians who desire to become married or divorced by the custom of the tribe shall conform to the custom of the tribe as determined. Indians who assume or claim a divorce by Indian custom shall not be entitled to remarry until they have complied with the determined custom of their tribe nor until they have recorded such divorce at the agency office.

Pending any determination by the Tribal Council on these matters, the validity of Indian custom marriage and divorce shall continue to be recognized as heretofore. (55 I. D. 401, 407 (1935).)

[131] C. F. R. 161.30, 161.64. A superintendent may enforce such a judgment against the defendant's restricted funds. Memo. Sol. I. D., September 8, 1938.

[132] 25 C. F. R. 161.30.

[133] Thus, for example, the Constitution of the Fort Belknap Indian Community, Montana, approved on December 13, 1935, provides:

Article V, Section 1. Enumerated powers.—The council of the Fort Belknap Community shall have the following powers, the exercise of which shall be subject to popular referendum as provided hereafter: * * *

(o) To regulate the domestic relations of members of the community.

[134] See, e. g., the Constitution of the San Carlos Apache Tribe, approved January 17, 1936, which provides:

Article V, Section XII. Domestic relations.—The council shall have the power to regulate the domestic relations of members of the tribe, but all marriages in the future shall be in accordance with the State laws * * *"

[135] The Code of Ordinances of the Gila River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community (1936) provides:

CHAPTER 4. DOMESTIC RELATIONS

SEC. 1. Marriage.—The Community Court may issue marriage licenses to proper persons, both of whom are members of the Community. Any tribal custom marriage not so licensed shall not be recognized as valid.

SEC. 2. Divorce.—The Community Court may issue decrees of divorce for causes which it deems sufficient, where both parties are members of the Community.

SEC. 3. Recording of Marriages and Divorces.—All Indian marriages and divorces, whether consummated in accordance with the State law or in accordance with Community Ordinances, shall be recorded within thirty days at the agency.

SECTION 6. TRIBAL CONTROL OF DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION

It is well settled that an Indian tribe has the power to prescribe the manner of descent and distribution of the property of its members, in the absence of contrary legislation by Congress.[136] Such power may be exercised through unwritten customs and usages,[137] or through written laws of the tribe. This power extends to personal property as well as to real property. By virtue of this authority an Indian tribe may restrict the descent of property on the basis of Indian blood or tribal membership, and may provide for the escheat of property to the tribe where there are no recognized heirs. An Indian tribe may, if it so chooses, adopt as its own the laws of the state in which it is situated and may make such modifications in these laws as it deems suitable to its peculiar conditions.

The only general statutes of Congress which restrict the power of an Indian tribe to govern the descent and distribution of property of its members are section 5 of the General Allotment Act,[138] which provides that allotments of land shall descend "according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located," the Act of June 25, 1910,[139] which provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall have unreviewable discretion to determine the heirs of an Indian in ruling upon the inheritance of individual allotments issued under the authority of the General Allotment Law, and section 2 of the same act, as amended by the Act of February 14, 1913,[140] which gives the Secretary of the Interior final power to approve and disapprove Indian wills devising restricted property.

These statutes abolished the former tribal power over the descent and distribution of property, with respect to allotments of land made under the General Allotment Act, and rendered tribal rules of testamentary disposition subject to the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, when the estate includes restricted property. They do not, however, affect testamentary disposition of unrestricted property or intestate succession to personal property or to interests in land other than allotments (e. g., possessory interests in land to which title is retained by the tribe).[141] With respect to property other than allotments of land made under the General Allotment Act and similar special legislation, the inheritance laws and customs of the Indian tribe are still of supreme authority.[142]

[136] See Chapter 5, sec. 11; Chapter 11, sec. 6.

[137] See Beaglehole, Ownership & Inheritance in an Indian Tribe (1935), 20 Ia. L. Rev. 304; Hagan, Tribal Law of the American Indian (1917), 23 Case & Com. 735; and see authorities cited supra, sec. 3, fn. 55.

[138] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 389, 25 U. S. C. 348.

Treaties and special statutes occasionally stipulated that state laws were to apply to descent of allotments. See, for example, Article 8 of the Treaty of February 27, 1867, with the Pottawatomies, 15 Stat. 531, 533.

[139] Sec. 1, 36 Stat. 855, 25 U. S. C. 372.

[140] 37 Stat. 678. See 25 U. S. C. 373.

[141] Gooding v. Watkins, 142 Fed. 112 (C. C. A. 8, 1905). See Chapter 5, sec. 11 and Chapter 11, sec. 6.

[142] The foregoing general analysis is inapplicable to the Five Civilized Tribes, and Osages. Congress having expressly provided that state probate courts shall have jurisdiction over the estates of allotted Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes leaving restricted heirs (Act of June 14, 1918, c. 101, sec. 1, 40 Stat. 606, 25 U. S. C. 375), and over the estates of Osage Indians (Act of April 18, 1912, sec. 3, 37 Stat. 86). See Chapter 23, secs. 9, 12.

The authority of an Indian tribe in the matter of inheritance is clearly recognized by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Jones v. Meehan.[143] Land had been allotted to Chief Moose Dung. After his death, the Chief's eldest son, Moose Dung the Younger, leased the land in 1891 for 10 years, to two white men, the plaintiffs, on the assumption that he was, by the custom of his tribe, the sole heir to the property and entitled, in his own right, to dispose of it. Thereafter, in 1894, a second lease of the same land was executed in favor of another white man, the defendant. The Secretary of the Interior took the view that the earlier lease was invalid. The Secretary of the Interior approved the second lease, pursuant to a joint resolution of Congress specifically authorizing the approval of the second lease. Under the second lease, the Secretary of the Interior held, the rentals were to be divided among six descendants of the older Chief Moose Dung, and Moose Dung the Younger was to receive only a one-sixth share. Thus the Supreme Court was faced with a clear question: Did Moose Dung the Younger have the right, in 1891, to make a valid lease which neither the Secretary of the Interior nor Congress itself could thereafter annul? Faced with this question, the Court declared, per Gray, J.:

> The Department of the Interior appears to have assumed that, upon the death of Moose Dung the elder, in 1872, the title in his land descended by law to his heirs general, and not to his eldest son only.
>
> But the elder Chief Moose Dung being a member of an Indian tribe, whose tribal organization was still recognized by the Government of the United States, the right of inheritance in his land, at the time of his death, was controlled by the laws, usages and customs of the tribe, and not by the law of the State of Minnesota, nor by any action of the Secretary of the Interior. (P. 29.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> The title to the strip of land in controversy, having been granted by the United States to the elder Chief Moose Dung by the treaty itself, and having descended, upon his death, by the laws, customs and usages of the tribe, to his eldest son and successor as chief, Moose Dung the younger, passed by the lease executed by the latter in 1891 to the plaintiffs for the term of that lease; and their rights under that lease could not be divested by any subsequent action of the lessor, or of Congress, or of the Executive Departments. (P. 32.)

The opinion of the Supreme Court in Jones v. Meehan cites a long series of cases in federal and state courts which likewise uphold the validity of tribal laws and customs of inheritance.[144] The upshot of the cases cited is summarized in the words of a New York court:

> When Congress does not act no law runs on an Indian reservation save the Indian tribal law and custom.[145]

The decision of the Supreme Court in Jones v. Meehan is a clear refutation of the theory that in the absence of law plenary power over Indian affairs rests with the Interior Department.[146] The case holds not only that power over inheritance, in the absence of congressional legislation, rests with the Indian tribe, but that Congress itself cannot disturb rights which have vested under tribal law and custom.

Other decisions confirm the rule laid down in the Moose Dung case.[147]

In the case of Gray v. Coffman, [148] the court held that the validity of the will of a member of the Wyandot tribe depended upon its conformity with the written laws of the tribe. The court declared:

> The Wyandot Indians, before their removal from Ohio had adopted a written constitution and laws, and among others, laws relating to descent and wills. These are in the record, and are shown to have been copied from the laws of Ohio, and adopted by the Wyandot tribe, with certain modifications, to adapt them to their customs and usages. One of these modifications was that only living children should inherit, excluding the children of deceased children, or grandchildren. The Wyandot council, which is several times referred to in the treaty of 1855, was an executive and judicial body, and had power, under the laws and usages of the nation, to receive proof of wills, etc.; and this body continued to act, at least to some extent, after the treaty of 1855. * * * under the circumstances, the court must give effect to the well established laws, customs, and usages of the Wyandot tribe of Indians in respect to the disposition of property by descent and will. (Pp. 1005–1006.)

In the case of O'Brien v. Bugbee,[149] it was held that a plaintiff in ejectment could not recover without positive proof that under tribal custom he was lawful heir to the property in question. In the absence of such proof, it was held that title to the land escheated to the tribe, and that the tribe might dispose of the land as it saw fit.

Tribal autonomy in the regulation of descent and distribution is recognized in the case of Woodin v. Seeley [150] and in the case of Patterson v. Council of Seneca Nation.[151]

In the case of Y-Ta-Tah-Wah v. Rebock,[152] the plaintiff, a medicine-man imprisoned by the federal Indian agent and county sheriff for practicing medicine without a license, brought an action of false imprisonment against these officials, and died during the course of the proceedings. The court held that the action might be continued, not by an administrator of the decedent's estate appointed in accordance with state law, but by the heirs of the decedent by Indian custom.[153] The court declared, per Shiras, J.:

> If it were true that, upon the death of a tribal Indian, his property, real and personal, became subject to the laws of the state directing the mode of distribution of estates of decedents, it is apparent that irremediable confusion would be caused thereby in the affairs of the Indians * * *. (P. 262.)

In a case [154] involving the right of an illegitimate child to inherit property, the authority of the tribe to pass upon the status of illegitimates was recognized in the following terms:

> The Creek Council, in the exercise of its lawful function of local self-government, saw fit to limit the legal rights of an illegimate child to that of sharing in the estate of his putative father, and not to confer upon such child

---

[143] 175 U. S. 1 (1899).

[144] United States v. Shanks, 15 Minn. 369 (1870); Dole v. Irish, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 639 (1848); Hastings v. Farmer, 4 N. Y. 293, 294 (1850); The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737 (1866); Wau-pe-man-qua v. Aldrich, 28 Fed. 489 (C. C. Ind. 1886); Brown v. Steele, 23 Kans. 672 (1880); Richardville v. Thorp, 28 Fed. 52 (C. C. Kans. 1886).

[145] Woodin v. Seeley, 141 Misc. 207, 252 N. Y. Supp. 818 (1931).

[146] See 20 L. D. 157 (1895), mod. 29 L. D. 628 (1900). See Chapter 5, secs. 7, 8.

[147] See Chapter 10, sec. 10. And see Dembitz, Land Titles (1895), vol. 1, p. 498.

[148] 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,714 (C. C. Kan. 1874). Accord: Gooding v. Watkins, 142 Fed. 112 (C. C. A. 8, 1905).

[149] 46 Kan. 1, 26 Pac. 428 (1891).

[150] 141 Misc. 207, 252 N. Y. Supp. 818 (1931), discussed in Note (1932) 9 N. Y. U. L. Q. Rev. 498.

[151] 245 N. Y. 433, 157 N. E. 734 (1927).

[152] 105 Fed. 257 (C. C. N. D. Iowa 1900).

[153] Compare, however, the decision of the Supreme Court of New Mexico in Trujillo v. Prince, 42 N. M. 337, 78 P. 2d 145 (1938), holding that an administrator of a Pueblo Indian appointed by a state court was empowered to sue under a state wrongful death statute. The Solicitor for the Interior Department and the Special Attorney for the Pueblo Indians supported the position which the Supreme Court of New Mexico finally adopted, on the ground that the action was not an action over which the tribal courts would have jurisdiction, but was entirely a creature of state legislation operating on events that occurred outside of any reservation. Memo. Sol. I. D., September 21, 1937.

[154] Oklahoma Land Co. v. Thomas, 34 Okla. 681, 127 Pac. 8 (1912).

generally the status of a child born in lawful wedlock. (P. 13.) [155]

In the case of Dole v. Irish,[156] it was held that a surrogate of the State of New York has no power to grant letters of administration to control the disposition of personal property belonging to a deceased member of the Seneca tribe. The court declared:

> I am of the opinion that the private property of the Seneca indians is not within the jurisdiction of our laws respecting administration; and that the letters of administration granted by the surrogate to the plaintiff are void. I am also of the opinion that the distribution of indian property according to their customs passes a good title, which our courts will not disturb; and therefore that the defendant has a good title to the horse in question, and must have judgment on the special verdict. (Pp. 642–643.)

In United States v. Charles,[157] the distribution of real and personal property of the decedent through the Iroquois custom of the "dead feast" is recognized as controlling all rights of inheritance.

In the case of Mackey v. Coxe,[158] the Supreme Court held that letters of administration issued by a Cherokee court were entitled to recognition in another jurisdiction, on the ground that the status of an Indian tribe was in fact similar to that of a federal territory.

In the case of Meeker v. Kaelin,[159] the court recognized the validity of tribal custom in determining the descent of real and personal property and indicated that the tribal custom of the Puyallup band prescribed different rules of descent for real and for personal property.

The applicability of tribal law in matters involving determination of heirs [160] is recognized in the Law and Order Regulations of the Indian Service.[161] These regulations provide that when any member of a tribe dies, > leaving property other than an allotment or other trust property subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, any member claiming to be an heir of the decedent may bring a suit in the Court of Indian Offenses to have the Court determine the heirs of the decedent and to divide among the heirs such property of the decedent.[162]

In such suits, the regulations provide:

> In the determination of heirs, the Court shall apply the custom of the tribe as to inheritance if such custom is proved. Otherwise the Court shall apply State law in deciding what relatives of the decedent are entitled to be his heirs.[163]

A special provision covers the situation where the statutory jurisdiction of the Department attaches to part of an estate that is otherwise subject to tribal jurisdiction:

> Where the estate of the decedent includes any interest in restricted allotted lands or other property held in trust by the United States, over which the Examiner of Inheritance would have jurisdiction, the Court of Indian Offenses may distribute only such property as does not come under the jurisdiction of the Examiner of Inheritance, and the determination of heirs by the court may be reviewed, on appeal, and the judgment of the court modified or set aside by the said Examiner of Inheritance, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, if law and justice so require.[164]

The Law and Order Regulations of the Indian Service further provide that Courts of Indian Offenses shall have jurisdiction to probate wills of tribal Indians, > disposing only of property other than an allotment or other trust property subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.[165]

Tribal custom is recognized in the provision:

> If the Court determines the will to be validly executed, it shall order the property described in the will to be given to the persons named in the will or to their heirs; but no distribution of property shall be made in violation of a proved tribal custom which restricts the privilege of tribal members to distribute property by will.[166]

Indian Service regulations covering the determination of heirs and approval of wills [167] provide that the activity of examiners of inheritance in cases of intestate succession shall not extend to unallotted reservations.[168]

Tribal constitutions generally provide that the governing body of the tribe shall have power—> to regulate the inheritance of real and personal property, other than allotted lands, within the Territory of the Community.[169]

A typical tribal inheritance law, adopted by the Gila River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community on June 3, 1936, is set forth in the footnote below.[170]

---

[155] Accord: Butler v. Wilson, 54 Okla. 229, 153 Pac. 823 (1915).

[156] 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 639 (1848).

[157] 23 F. Supp. 346 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1938); accord: George v. Pierce, 148 N. Y. Supp. 230 (1914).

[158] 18 How. 100 (1855). See Chapter 14, sec. 3.

[159] 173 Fed. 216 (C. C. W. D. Wash. 1909).

[160] Recognition of tribal rules of descent is found in such special legislation as the Act of February 19, 1875, 18 Stat. 330, dealing with leases of Seneca lands, and the Act of March 1, 1901, 31 Stat. 861, dealing with Creek allotments.

To the effect that inheritance of a house on tribal land is governed by tribal rather than state law, see Memo. Sol. I. D., November 18, 1938.

[161] 25 C. F. R. 161.31–161.32.

[162] Law and Order Regulations, approved November 27, 1935, c. 3, sec. 5, 25 C. F. R. 161.31

[163] Ibid.

[164] Ibid.

[165] 25 C. F. R. 161.32.

[166] 25 C. F. R. 161.32.

[167] Approved by Secretary of the Interior May 31, 1935, 25 C. F. R., Part 81.

[168] 25 C. F. R. 81.13, 81.23.

[169] Constitution of the Fort Belknap Indian Community of the Fort Belknap Reservation, Mont., approved December 13, 1935, Art. V, Sec. 1(m).

[170] SEC. 6. Approval of Wills.—When any member of the tribe dies, leaving a will disposing only of property other than an allotment or other trust property subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, the Court shall, at the request of any member of the tribe named in the will or any other interested party, determine the validity of the will after giving notice and full opportunity to appear in court to all persons who might be heirs of the decedent. A will shall be deemed to be valid if the decedent had a sane mind and understood what he was doing when he made the will and was not subject to any undue influence of any kind from another person, and if the will was made in writing and signed by the decedent in the presence of two witnesses who also signed the will. If the Court determines the will to be validly executed, it shall order the property described in the will to be given to the persons named in the will or to their heirs, if they are dead.

SEC. 7. Determination of Heirs.—Property of members of the Community, other than allotted lands, if not disposed of by will shall be inherited according to the following rules:

1. The just debts and funeral expenses of the deceased shall be paid before the heirs take any property.
2. If the deceased leaves a surviving spouse, all the property shall go to the surviving spouse, who shall make such disposition as seems proper.
3. If the deceased leaves children or grandchildren, but no spouse, all the property shall go to them.
4. If the deceased leaves no spouse nor descendants, all the property shall go to his or her parents, if either or both is alive.
5. In any other case, the nearest relatives shall inherit.

Where there is more than one heir, all the heirs shall meet and agree among themselves upon the division of the property.

If no agreement can be reached among all the interested parties, any party may, upon depositing a fee of five dollars in the Community Court, require the Court to pass on the distribution of the estate.

Where the interested parties agree among themselves on the disposition of the estate, they shall file a report of such distribution with the Community Court.

SECTION 7. THE TAXING POWER OF AN INDIAN TRIBE

One of the powers essential to the maintenance of any government is the power to levy taxes. That this power is an inherent attribute of tribal sovereignty which continues unless withdrawn or limited by treaty or by act of Congress[171] is a proposition which has never been successfully disputed.

A landmark in this field is the case of Buster v. Wright.[172] The Creek Nation, one of the Five Civilized Tribes, had imposed a tax or license fee upon all persons, not citizens of the Creek Nation, who traded within the borders of that nation. The Interior Department sought the advice of the Attorney General as to the legality of this tax, and was advised that the tax was legal and that the Interior Department was under an implied duty to assist in its enforcement.[173] Thereupon the Interior Department promulgated appropriate regulations to assist the tribe in making collections of license fees. The plaintiffs in the case of Buster v. Wright were traders doing business on town sites within the boundaries of the Creek Nation, who sought to enjoin officers of the Creek Nation and of the Interior Department from closing down their business and ousting them for nonpayment of taxes. On demurrer, the plaintiffs' bill was dismissed by the trial court. The decision of the trial court was affirmed by the Court of Appeals of the Indian Territory,[174] again by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit,[175] and finally by the United States Supreme Court.[176] The learned opinion of Judge Sanborn in the Circuit Court of Appeals illuminates the entire subject:

> The authority of the Creek Nation to prescribe the terms upon which noncitizens may transact business within its borders did not have its origin in act of Congress, treaty, or agreement of the United States. It was one of the inherent and essential attributes of its original sovereignty It was a natural right of that people, indispensable to its autonomy as a distinct tribe or nation, and it must remain an attribute of its government until by the agreement of the nation itself or by the superior power of the republic it is taken from it. Neither the authority nor the power of the United States to license its citizens to trade in the Creek Nation, with or without the consent of that tribe, is in issue in this case, because the complainants have no such licenses. The plenary power and lawful authority of the government of the United States by license, by treaty, or by act of Congress to take from the Creek Nation every vestige of its original or acquired governmental authority and power may be admitted, and for the purposes of this decision are here conceded. The fact remains nevertheless that every original attribute of the government of the Creek Nation still exists intact which has not been destroyed or limited by act of Congress or by the contracts of the Creek tribe itself.
>
> Originally an independent tribe, the superior power of the republic early reduced this Indian people to a "domestic, dependent nation" (Cherokee Nation v. State of Georgia, 5 Pet. 1–20, 8 L. Ed. 25), yet left it a distinct political entity, clothed with ample authority to govern its inhabitants and to manage its domestic affairs through officers of its own selection, who under a Constitution modeled after that of the United States, exercised legislative, executive and judicial functions within its territorial jurisdiction for more than half a century. The governmental jurisdiction of this nation was neither conditioned nor limited by the original title by occupancy to the lands within its territory. * * * Founded in its original national sovereignty, and secured by these treaties, the governmental authority of the Creek Nation, subject always to the superior power of the republic, remained practically unimpaired until the year 1889. Between the years 1888 and 1901 the United States by various acts of Congress deprived this tribe of all its judicial power, and curtailed its remaining authority until its powers of government have become the mere shadows of their former selves. Nevertheless its authority to fix the terms upon which noncitizens might conduct business within its territorial boundaries guarantied by the treaties of 1832, 1856, and 1866, and sustained by repeated decisions of the courts and opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States, remained undisturbed.
>
> * * * It is said that the sale of these lots and the incorporation of cities and towns upon the sites in which the lots are found authorized by act of Congress to collect taxes for municipal purposes segregated the town sites and the lots sold from the territory of the Creek Nation, and deprived it of governmental jurisdiction over this property and over its occupants. But the jurisdiction to govern the inhabitants of a country is not conditioned or limited by the title to the land which they occupy in it, or by the existence of municipalities therein endowed with power to collect taxes for city purposes, and to enact and enforce municipal ordinances. Neither the United States, nor a state, nor any other sovereignty loses the power to govern the people within its borders by the existence of towns and cities therein endowed with the usual powers of municipalities, nor by the ownership nor occupancy of the land within its territorial jurisdiction by citizens or foreigners. (Pp. 950–952.)

The case of Buster v. Wright dealt with what may be called a license or privilege tax, but the principles therein affirmed are equally applicable to a tax on property. Such a tax was upheld in Morris v. Hitchcock.[177] This case dealt with a tax levied by the Chickasaw Nation on cattle owned by noncitizens of that nation and grazed on private land within the national boundaries. The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia declares:

> A government of the kind necessarily has the power to maintain its existence and effectiveness through the exercise of the usual power of taxation upon all property within its limits, save as may be restricted by its organic law. Any restriction in the organic law in respect of this ordinary power of taxation, and the property subject

---

[171] No treaty provisions or special statutes dealing with tribal taxation have been found. But cf. Act of August 2, 1882, 22 Stat. 181, empowering Congress to tax certain railroad rights-of-way for the benefit of tribal grantors.

[172] 135 Fed. 947 (C. C. A. 8. 1905), app. dism. 203 U. S. 599.

[173] * * * the legal right to purchase land within an Indian nation gives to the purchaser no right of exemption from the laws of such nation, nor does it authorize him to do any act in violation of the treaties with such nation. These laws requiring a permit to reside or carry on business in the Indian country existed long before and at the time this act was passed. And if any outsider saw proper to purchase a town lot under this act of Congress, he did so with full knowledge that he could occupy it for residence or business only by permission from the Indians. * * *

The treaties and laws of the United States make all persons, with a few specified exceptions, who are not citizens of an Indian nation or members of an Indian tribe, and are found within an Indian nation without permission, intruders there, and require their removal by the United States. This closes the whole matter, absolutely excludes all but the excepted classes, and fully authorizes these nations to absolutely exclude outsiders, or to permit their residence or business upon such terms as they may choose to impose, and it must be borne in mind that citizens of the United States have, as such, no more right or business to be there than they have in any foreign nation, and can lawfully be there at all only by Indian permission; and that their right to be or remain or carry on business there depends solely upon whether they have such permission.

As to the power or duty of your Department in the premises there can hardly be a doubt. Under the treaties of the United States with these Indian nations this Government is under the most solemn obligation, and for which it has received ample consideration, to remove and keep removed from the territory of these tribes, all this class of intruders who are there without Indian permission. The performance of this obligation, as in other matters concerning the Indians and their affairs, has long been devolved upon the Department of the Interior. * * *

Trespassers on Indian Lands, 23 Op. A. G. 214, 217–218 (1900).

[174] Buster v. Wright, 82 S. W. 855 (1904).

[175] 135 Fed. 947 (C. C. A. 8, 1905).

[176] 203 U. S. 599 (1906), app. dism. without opinion.

[177] 21 App. D. C. 565 (1903), aff'd 194 U. S. 384 (1904).

> thereto, ought to appear by express provision or necessary implication. Board Trustees v. Indiana, 14 How, 268, 272: Talbott v. Silver Bow Co., 139 U. S. 438, 448. Where the restriction upon this exercise of power by a recognized government, is claimed under the stipulations of a treaty with another, whether the former be dependent upon the latter or not, it would seem that its existence ought to appear beyond a reasonable doubt. We discover no such restriction in the clause of Article 7 of the Treaty of 1855, which excepts white persons from the recognition therein of the unrestricted right of self-government by the Chickasaw Nation, and its full jurisdiction over persons and property within its limits. The conditions of that exception may be fully met without going to the extreme of saying that it was also intended to prevent the exercise of the power to consent to the entry of noncitizens, or the taxation of property actually within the limits of that government and enjoying its benefits.[178] (P. 593.)

The power to tax does not depend upon the power to remove and has been upheld where there was no power in the tribe to remove the taxpayer from the tribal jurisdiction.[179] Where, however, the tribe does have power to remove a person from its jurisdiction, it may impose conditions upon his remaining within tribal territory, including the condition of paying license fees. An opinion of the Attorney General dated September 17, 1900, quoted with approval in Morris v. Hitchcock,[180] declares:

> "Under the treaties with the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, no person not a citizen or member of a tribe, or belonging to the exempted classes, can be lawfully within the limits of the country occupied by these tribes without their permission, and they have the right to impose the terms upon which such permission will be granted." (P. 391.)

It is therefore pertinent, in analyzing the scope of tribal taxing powers, to inquire how far an Indian tribe is empowered to remove nonmembers from its reservation. This question is the more important today because statutes authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to remove "undesirable" persons from Indian country were repealed, at the urging of the present administration, in the interests of civil liberty.[181] Because of its peculiar jurisdictional status an Indian reservation is sometimes infested with white criminals or simple trespassers, and the problem of what effective legal action can be taken by a tribe to remove such persons from its reservation is a serious one.

The law as to the power of a tribe to exclude nonmembers from its territory is clearly stated in a series of authorities running back to the earliest days of the Republic. We find in the first volume of the Opinions of the Attorney General the following answer to a question raised by the Secretary of War as to the right of the Seneca Nation to exclude trespassers from its lands:

> So long as a tribe exists and remains in possession of its lands, its title and possession are sovereign and exclusive; and there exists no authority to enter upon their lands, for any purpose whatever, without their consent.[182]

The present state of the law on the power to remove nonmembers is thus summarized in the Solicitor's Opinion of October 25, 1934, on "Powers of Indian Tribes":

> Over tribal lands, the tribe has the rights of a landowner as well as the rights of a local government, dominion as well as sovereignty. But over all the lands of the reservation, whether owned by the tribe, by members thereof, or by outsiders, the tribe has the sovereign power of determining the conditions upon which persons shall be permitted to enter its domain, to reside therein, and to do business, provided only such determination is consistent with applicable Federal laws and does not infringe any vested rights of persons now occupying reservation lands under lawful authority.[183]

The power of an Indian tribe to levy taxes upon its own members and upon nonmembers doing business within the reservations has been affirmed in many tribal constitutions approved under the Wheeler-Howard Act, as has the power to remove nonmembers from land over which the tribe exercises jurisdiction. The following clauses are typical statements of these tribal powers:

> (h) To levy taxes upon members of the tribe and to require the performance of reservation labor in lieu thereof, and to levy taxes or license fees, subject to review by the Secretary of the Interior, upon non-members doing business within the reservation.
>
> (i) To exclude from the restricted lands of the reservation persons not legally entitled to reside therein, under ordinances which shall be subject to review by the Secretary of the Interior.[184]

Under such provisions, tribal tax ordinances imposing poll taxes, vehicle and other license taxes on members of the tribe, and permit and license taxes on nonmembers occupying tribal property have been held valid by the Interior Department.[185] And as the payment of a tax or license fee may be made a condition of entry upon tribal land, it may also be made a condition to the grant of other privileges, such as the acquisition of a tribal lease.[186]

It has been held that the Fifth Amendment does not restrict tribal taxation of tribal members,[187] but tribal constitutional requirements were held violated when a tribal council tried to delegate its taxing powers to a reservation superintendent.[188]

---

[178] Other authorities supporting the power of an Indian tribe to levy taxes or license fees are: Crabtree v. Madden, 54 Fed. 426 (C. C. A. 8, 1893); Maxey v. Wright, 3 Ind. T. 243, 54 S. W. 807, aff'd 105 Fed. 1003 (C. C. A. 8, 1900); 18 Op. A. G. 34, 36 (1884); 23 Op. A. G. 214, 219, 220, (1900); ibid., p. 528 (1901).

[179] Buster v. Wright, supra.

[180] 194 U. S. 384 (1904).

[181] Act of May 21, 1934, 48 Stat. 787, repealing 25 U. S. C. 220 et seq.

[182] 1 Op. A. G. 465, 466 (1821). Accord: United States v. Rogers, 23 Fed. 658 (D. C. W. D. Ark. 1885). And see Chapter 15, sec. 10.

[183] 55 I. D. 14, 50, citing Morris v. Hitchcock, 194 U. S. 384 (1904), and other cases. See also Memo. Sol. I. D., August 7, 1937.

[184] Constitution of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, approved December 20, 1935, Art. IV, sec. 1.

[185] Memo. Sol. I. D., February 17, 1939 (Rosebud Sioux).

[186] Memo. Sol. I. D., March 28, 1939.

[187] Memo. Sol. I. D., February 17, 1939 (Rosebud Sioux).

[188] Memo. Sol. I. D., May 14, 1938 (Oglala Sioux).

SECTION 8. TRIBAL POWERS OVER PROPERTY

The powers of an Indian tribe with respect to property derive from two sources. In the first place, the tribe has, with respect to tribal property, certain rights and powers commonly incident to property ownership. In the second place, the Indian tribe has, among its powers of sovereignty, the power to regulate the use and disposition of individual property among its members. While the distinction between these two sorts of power must remain largely conventional[189] and, in most concrete situations, even academic, those rights and powers which Indian tribes

---

[189] M. R. Cohen, Property and Sovereignty, in Law and the Social Order (1934), 41.

share with other property owners are sufficiently distinguishable to deserve treatment in a separate chapter.[190] On this subject it will be sufficient for our present purposes to note that the powers of an Indian tribe with respect to tribal land are not limited by any rights of occupancy which the tribe itself may grant to its members, that occupancy of tribal land does not create any vested rights in the occupant as against the tribe,[191] and that the extent of any individual's interest in tribal property is subject to such limitations as the tribe may see fit to impose.[192]

The power of a tribe over hunting and fishing on tribal territory may be analyzed either in governmental or in proprietary terms.[193]

In holding that a Pueblo is a stockowner, within the Taylor Grazing Act, the Acting Solicitor for the Interior Department, after citing the foregoing cases, declared:[194]

> It thus is clear that a determination whether a Pueblo is a "stock owner" within the meaning of the Taylor Act and the Federal Range Code must be made by reference to the internal structure of the community and to its laws and customs. In his request for an opinion, the Commissioner states:
>
> > "It is impossible, realistically or pragmatically, to apply either to Pueblo livestock or to Pueblo range or water, concepts of ownership familiar in white life; the only way that realism can be achieved is by a concept treating all of these properties as properties of the community, whose keeping is vested by formal or informal community and/or religious decree in an individual or family."
>
> It appears that the custom is that certain individuals are designated by the governing body of the Pueblo to carry on the function of livestock raising. While in a limited sense and for certain purposes the livestock may be regarded as the personal property of these individuals, the livestock are subject to call by either the secular community, through the Governor and Council, the religious community, or the khiva or secret society organizations, indicating that the ultimate responsibility of the individuals is to the community and that the ultimate interest is that of the community. The individual's rights are basically usufructuary and always subject to the higher demand of the community itself. In these circumstances I am unable to see that any violence is done Anglo-Saxon legal concepts in holding that a Pueblo is an owner of livestock within the meaning of the Taylor Act and the Federal Range Code. (Pp. 13–14.)

The chief limitation upon tribal control of membership rights in tribal property is that found in acts of Congress guaranteeing to those who sever tribal relations to take up homesteads on the public domain,[195] and to children of white men and Indian women, under certain circumstances,[196] a continuing share in the tribal property. Except for these general limitations and other specific statutory limitations found in enrollment acts and other special acts of Congress, the proper authorities of an Indian tribe have full power to regulate the use and disposition of tribal property by the members of the tribe.

The authority of an Indian tribe in matters of property is not restricted to those lands or funds over which it exercises the rights of ownership. The sovereign powers of the tribe extend over the property as well as the person of its members.

Thus, in Crabtree v. Madden,[197] it is recognized that questions of the validity of contracts among members of the tribe are to be determined according to the laws of the tribe.[198]

In Jones v. Laney,[199] the question arose whether a deed of manumission freeing a Negro slave, executed by a Chickasaw Indian within the territory of the Chickasaw Nation was valid. The lower court had charged the jury "that their (Chickasaw) laws and customs and usages, within the limits defined to them, governed all property belonging to anyone domesticated and living with them." Approving this charge, upon the basis of [190] See Chapter 15. See also Chapters 9, 10, and 11.

---

[191] Sizemore v. Brady, 235 U. S. 441 (1914); Franklin v. Lynch, 233 U. S. 269 (1914); Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640 (1912); Journeycake v. Cherokee Nation and United States, 28 C. Cls. 281 (1893); Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi in Iowa v. Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi in Oklahoma, 220 U. S. 481 (1911) aff'g 45 C. Cls. 287 (1910); Hayes v. Barringer, 168 Fed. 221 (C. C. A. 8, 1909); Whitmire, Trustee v. Cherokee Nation et al., 30 C. Cls. 138 (1895); Dukes v. Goodall, 5 Ind. T. 145, 82 S. W. 702 (1904); In re Narragansett Indians, 20 R. I. 715, 40 Atl. 347 (1898); Terrance v. Gray, 156 N. Y. Supp. 916 (1916); Reservation Gas Co. v. Snyder, 88 Misc. 209; 150 N. Y. Supp. 216 (1914); Application of Parker, 237 N. Y. Supp. 134 (1929); McCurtain v. Grady, 1 Ind. T. 107, 38 S. W. 65 (1896); Myers v. Mathis, 2 Ind. T. 3, 46 S. W. 178 (1898).

In the case of Sizemore v. Brady, supra, the Supreme Court declared:

> lands and funds belonged to the tribe as a community, and not to the members severally or as tenants in common. (P. 446.)

Similarly, in Franklin v. Lynch, supra, the Supreme Court declared:

> As the tribe could not sell, neither could the individual members, for they had neither an undivided interest in the tribal land nor vendible interest in any particular tract. (P. 271.)

In the case of Hayes v. Barringer, supra, the court declared, in considering the status of Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal lands:

> * * * At that time these were the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, held by them, as they held all their lands, in trust for the individual members of their tribes in the sense in which the public property of representative governments is held in trust for its people. But those were public lands, and, while the enrolled members of these tribes undoubtedly had a vested equitable right to their just shares of them against strangers and fellow members of their tribes, they had no separate or individual right to or equity in any of these lands which they could maintain against the legislation of the United States or of the Indian Nations. Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 488, 19 Sup. Ct. 722, 43 L. Ed. 1041; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, 23 Sup. Ct. 115, 47 L. Ed. 183; Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553, 23 Sup. Ct. 216, 47 L. Ed. 299; Wallace v. Adams, 143 Fed. 716, 74 C. C. A. 540; Ligon v. Johnston (C. C. A.) 164 Fed. 670. (Pp. 222–223.)

So, too, in United States v. Lucero, 1 N. M. 422, (1869); title to lands within a pueblo is recognized to lie in the pueblo itself, rather than in the individual members thereof.

[192] In United States v. Chase, 245 U. S. 89 (1917), the Supreme Court held that assignments made pursuant to treaty might be revoked by congressional action taken at the instance of tribal authorities. And cf. Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640 (1912) and Chapter 5, sec. 5, Chapter 23, sec. 3.

In the case of McCurtain v. Grady, supra, a provision of the Choctaw Constitution conferring upon the discoverer of coal the right to mine all coal within a mile radius of the point of discovery was upheld as a valid exercise of tribal power.

In Whitmire, Trustee v. Cherokee Nation, supra, the Court of Claims held that the general property of the Cherokee Nation, under the provisions of the Cherokee Constitution, might be used for public purposes, but could not be diverted to per capita payments to a favored class.

On the power of the tribe with respect to assignments of tribal land to members, see Memo. Sol. I. D., October 20, 1937 (Mdewekanton Sioux); Memo. Sol. I. D., April 14, 1939 (Santa Clara Pueblo). And see Chapter 9, secs. 1, 5; Chapter 15, sec. 20.

[193] See Chapter 14, sec. 7.

[194] Op. Acting Sol. I D., M. 29797, May 14, 1938.

[195] 43 U. S. C. 189 (Act of March 3, 1875, c. 131, sec. 15, 18 Stat. 420) provides that an Indian severing tribal relations to take up a homestead upon the public domain "shall be entitled to his distributive share of all annuities, tribal funds, lands and other property, the same as though he had maintained his tribal relations." For a discussion of this and related statutes, see Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305 (C. C. A. 8, 1909); Halbert v. United States, 283 U. S. 753 (1931). And see sec. 4 supra, and Chapter 9, sec. 3.

[196] 25 U. S. C. 184.

[197] 54 Fed. 426 (C. C. A. 8, 1893).

[198] See, to the same effect, In re Sah Quah, 31 Fed. 327 (D. C. Alaska, 1886). Chattel mortgage forms approved by the Interior Department for use by tribes making loans to members regularly provide:

> This mortgage and all questions and controversies arising thereunder shall be subject to the laws of the United States and of the ———— Tribe. Any question or controversy which cannot be decided under such laws shall be dealt with according to the laws of the State of ————.

See Memo Sol. I. D., December 22, 1938; and see Memo. Asst. Sec. I. D., August 17, 1938.

[199] 2 Tex. 342 (1844).

which the jury had found the deed to be valid, the appellate court declared:

> Their laws and customs, regulating property, contracts, and the relations between husband and wife, have been respected, when drawn into controversy, in the courts of the State and of the United States. (P. 348.)

In the case of Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation,[200] it is said:

> The law of real property is to be found in the law of the situs. The law of real property in the Cherokee country therefore is to be found in the constitution and laws of the Cherokee Nation. (P. 251.)

In the case of James H. Hamilton v. United States,[201] it appeared that land, buildings, and personal property owned by the claimant, a licensed trader, within the Chickasaw Reservation, had been confiscated by an act of the Chickasaw legislature. The plaintiff brought suit to recover damages on the theory that such confiscation constituted an "Indian depredation." The Court of Claims dismissed the suit, declaring:

> The claimant by applying for and accepting a license to trade with the Chickasaw Indians, and subsequently acquiring property within the limits of their reservation, subjected the same to the jurisdiction of their laws. (P. 287.)

The authority of an Indian tribe to impose license fees upon persons engaged in trade with its members within the boundaries of the reservation is confirmed in Zevely v. Weimer,[202] as well as in the various cases cited under section 7 of this chapter dealing with "The Taxing Power of an Indian Tribe."

[200] 38 C. Cls. 234 (1903), decree mod. 193 U. S. 127.

[201] 42 C. Cls. 282 (1907). Cf. sec. 29 of Act of May 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 81, 93 (tribal law made applicable to contracts between Indian and non-Indian in Indian Territory).

[202] 5 Ind. T. 646, 82 S. W. 941 (1904).

The power of an Indian tribe to regulate the inheritance of individual property owned by members of the tribe likewise has been analyzed under a separate heading.[203]

Within the scope of local self-government, it has been held, fall such powers as the power to charter corporations.[204]

Repeatedly, in the situations above discussed, federal and state courts have declined to interfere with the decisions of tribal authorities on property disputes internal to the tribe.[205]

It clearly appears, from the foregoing cases, that the powers of an Indian tribe are not limited to such powers as it may exercise in its capacity as a landowner. In its capacity as a sovereign, and in the exercise of local self-government, it may exercise powers similar to those exercised by any state or nation in regulating the use and disposition of private property, save insofar as it is restricted by specific statutes of Congress.

The laws and customs of the tribe, in matters of contract and property generally (as well as on questions of membership, domestic relations, inheritance, taxation, and residence), may be lawfully administered in the tribunals of the tribe, and such laws and customs will be recognized by courts of state or nation in cases coming before these courts.[206]

[203] Sec. 6.

[204] See, for example, the Cherokee resolution of March 8, 1813, chartering a corporation, embodied in the Treaty of February 27, 1819, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 195. And see Memo. Sol. I. D., May 24, 1937 (Fort Hall); Memo. Sol. I. D., March 14, 1938 (Blackfeet).

[205] Washburn v. Parker, 7 F. Supp. 120 (D. C. W. D., N. Y., 1934); Mulkins v. Snow, 175 N. Y. Supp. 41 (1919), affd. 178 N. Y. Supp. 905, discussed in Note (1922) 31 Yale L. J. 331; accord: 7 Op. A. G. 174 (1855).

[206] See Pound, Nationals without a Nation (1922), 22 Col. L. Rev. 97; Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States (1934), 16 J. Comp. Leg. 78.

SECTION 9. TRIBAL POWERS IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

The powers of an Indian tribe in the administration of justice derive from the substantive powers of self-government which are legally recognized to fall within the domain of tribal sovereignty. If an Indian tribe has power to regulate the marriage relationships of its members, it necessarily has power to adjudicate, through tribunals established by itself, controversies involving such relationships.[207] So, too, with other fields of local government in which our analysis has shown that tribal authority endures. In all these fields the judicial powers of the tribe are coextensive with its legislative or executive powers.[208]

The decisions of Indian tribal courts, rendered within their jurisdiction and according to the forms of law or custom recognized by the tribe, are entitled to full faith and credit in the courts of the several states.

As was said in the case of Standley v. Roberts:[209]

> * * * the judgments of the courts of these nations, in cases within their jurisdiction, stand on the same footing with those of the courts of the territories of the Union and are entitled to the same faith and credit. (P. 845.)

And in the case of Raymond v. Raymond, the court declared:

> The Cherokee Nation * * * is a distinct political society, capable of managing its own affairs and governing itself. It may enact its own laws, though they may not be in conflict with the constitution of the United States. It may maintain its own judicial tribunals, and their judgments and decrees upon the rights of the persons and property of members of the Cherokee Nation as against each other are entitled to all the faith and credit accorded to the judgments and decrees of territorial courts. (P. 722.)[210]

The question of the judicial powers of an Indian tribe is particularly significant in the field of law and order. For in the fields of civil controversy the rules and decisions of the tribe and its officers have a force that state courts and federal courts will respect.[211] But in accordance with the well-settled principle that one sovereign will not enforce the criminal laws of another sovereign, state courts and federal courts alike must decline to enforce penal provisions of tribal law. Responsibility for the maintenance of law and order is therefore squarely upon the Indian tribe, unless this field of jurisdiction has been taken over by the states or the Federal Government.

It is illuminating to deal with the question of tribal criminal jurisdiction as we have dealt with other questions of tribal authority, by asking, first, what the original sovereign powers of [207] The power of an Indian tribe over the administration of justice has been held to include the power to prescribe conditions of practice in the tribal courts. Memo. Sol. I. D., August 7, 1937. And see 25 C. F. R. 161. 9.

[208] Washburn v. Parker, 7 F. Supp. 120 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1934); Raymond v. Raymond, 83 Fed. 721 (C. C. A. 8, 1897); 19 Op. A. G. 109 (1888); 7 Op. A. G. 174 (1855).

[209] 59 Fed. 836 (C. C. A. 8, 1894), app. dism. 17 Sup. Ct. 999 (1896); and see Chapter 14, sec. 3.

[210] 83 Fed. 721 (C. C. A. 8, 1897). Accord: Noftre v. United States, 164 U. S. 657 (1897); Mehlin v. Ice, 56 Fed. 12 (C. C. A. 8, 1893).

[211] Note, however, that courts have sometimes taken the position that tribal law or custom must be shown by the party relying thereon, and that otherwise the common law will be applied. See Hockett v. Alston, 110 Fed. 910 (C. C. A. 8, 1901); Wilson v. Owens, 86 Fed. 571 (C. C. A. 8, 1898); Pyeatt v. Powell, 51 Fed. 551 (C. C. A. 8, 1892). And see Chapter 14, sec. 5.

the tribes were, and then, how far and in what respects these powers have been limited.

So long as the complete and independent sovereignty of an Indian tribe was recognized, its criminal jurisdiction, no less than its civil jurisdiction, was that of any sovereign power. It might punish its subjects for offenses against each other or against aliens and for public offenses against the peace and dignity of the tribe. Similarly, it might punish aliens within its jurisdiction according to its own laws and customs.[212] Such jurisdiction continues to this day, save as it has been expressly limited by the acts of a superior government.

It is clear that the original criminal jurisdiction of the Indian tribes has never been transferred to the states. Sporadic attempts of the states to exercise jurisdiction over offenses between Indians, or between Indians and whites, committed on an Indian reservation, have been held invalid usurpation of authority.

The principle that a state has no criminal jurisdiction over offenses involving Indians committed on an Indian reservation is too well established to require argument, attested as it is by a line of cases that reaches back to the earliest years of the Republic.[213]

A state, of course, has jurisdiction over the conduct of an Indian off the reservation.[214] A state also has jurisdiction over some, but not all, acts of non-Indians within a reservation.[215] But the relations between whites and Indians in "Indian country" and the conduct of Indians themselves in Indian country are not subject to the laws or the courts of the several states.

The denial of state jurisdiction, then, is dictated by principles of constitutional law.[216]

In these respects the territories occupy a legal position similar to the states.[217]

On the other hand, the constitutional authority of the Federal Government to prescribe laws and to administer justice upon the Indian reservations is plenary. The question remains how far Congress has exercised its constitutional powers.[218]

The basic provisions of federal law with regard to Indian offenses are found in sections 217 and 218 of U. S. Code, title 25:

> SEC. 217. General laws as to punishment extended to Indian country.—Except as to crimes the punishment of which is expressly provided for in this title, the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of crimes committed in any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except the District of Columbia, shall extend to the Indian country.
>
> SEC. 218. Exceptions as to extension of general laws.—The preceding section shall not be construed to extend to crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian, nor to any Indian committing any offense in the Indian country who has been punished by the local law of the tribe, or to any case where, by treaty stipulations, the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes respectively.[219]

These provisions recognize that, with respect to crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian, the jurisdiction of the Indian tribe is plenary. These provisions further recognize that, in addition to this general jurisdiction over offenses between Indians, an Indian tribe may possess, by virtue of treaty stipulations, other fields of exclusive jurisdiction (necessarily including jurisdiction over cases involving non-Indians). "The local law of the tribe" is further recognized to the extent that the punishment of an Indian under such law must be deemed a bar to further prosecution under any applicable federal laws, even though the offense be one against a non-Indian.

Such was the law when the case of Ex parte Crow Dog,[220] which has been discussed in an earlier connection, arose. The United States Supreme Court there held that federal courts had no jurisdiction to prosecute an Indian for the murder of another Indian committed on an Indian reservation, such jurisdiction never having been withdrawn from the original sovereignty of the Indian tribe.

---

[212] This power is expressly recognized, for instance, in the Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokees, 7 Stat. 39, providing:

> If any citizen of the United States, or other person not being an Indian, shall settle on any of the Cherokees' lands, such person shall forfeit the protection of the United States, and the Cherokees may punish him or not, as they please. (Sec. 8.)

Other treaties acknowledging tribal jurisdiction over white trespassers on tribal lands are: Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Delawares, 7 Stat. 16; Treaty of January 10, 1786, with the Chickasaws, 7 Stat. 24; Treaty of January 9, 1789, with the Wiandots, Delawares, and others, 7 Stat. 28; Treaty of August 7, 1790, with the Creeks, 7 Stat. 35; Treaty of July 2, 1791, with the Cherokees, 7 Stat. 39; Treaty of August 3, 1795, with the Wyandots, Delawares, and others, 7 Stat. 49. Later provisions require the tribes to seize and surrender trespassers "without other injury, insult, or molestation" to designated federal officials. Treaty of November 10, 1808, with Osage Nations, 7 Stat. 107. Cf. Leak Glove Manuf'g Co. v. Necdles, 69 Fed. 68 (C. C. A. 8, 1895), and see Chapter 24.

[213] Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515 (1832); United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375 (1886); United States v. Thomas, 151 U. S. 577 (1894); Toy Toy v. Hopkins, 212 U. S. 542 (1909); United States v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278 (1909); Donnelly v. United States, 228 U. S. 243 (1913); United States v. Pelican, 232 U. S. 442 (1914); United States v. Ramsey, 271 U. S. 467 (1926); United States v. King, 81 Fed. 625 (D. C. E. D., Wis., 1897); In re Blackbird, 109 Fed. 139 (D. C. W. D., Wis., 1901); In re Lincoln, 129 Fed. 247 (D. C. N. D., Cal., 1904); United States ex rel. Lynn v. Hamilton, 233 Fed. 685 (D. C. W. D., N. Y., 1915); James H. Hamilton v. United States, 42 C. Cls. 282 (1907); Yohyowan v. Luce, 291 Fed. 425 (D. C. E. D., Wash., 1923); State v. Campbell, 53 Minn. 354, 55 N. W. 553 (1893); State v. Big Sheep, 75 Mont. 219, 243 Pac. 1067 (1926); Ex parte Cross, 20 Nebr. 417, 30 N. W. 428 (1886); People ex rel. Cusick v. Daly, 212 N. Y. 183, 105 N. E. 1048 (1914); State v. Cloud, 228 N. W. 611 (1930); State v. Rufus, 205 Wis. 317, 237 N. W. 67 (Wis.) (1931). And see United States v. Sa-coo-da-cot, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16212 (C. C. Nebr. 1870). See also Chapter 6.

[214] See Pablo v. People, 23 Colo. 134, 46 Pac. 636 (1896) (upholding state jurisdiction over murder of Indian by Indian outside of reservation). And see Chapters 6, 18.

[215] See United States v. McBratney, 104 U. S. 621 (1881) (declining federal jurisdiction over murder of non-Indian by non-Indian on reservation). And see Chapters 6, 18.

[216] See Willoughby, The Constitutional Law of the United States (2d ed. 1929), c. 21.

[217] United States v. Kie, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15528a (D. C. D. Alaska 1885). And see Chapter 21.

[218] See Chapter 5.

[219] These provisions are derived from the Act of March 3, 1817, 3 Stat. 383, which, in extending federal criminal laws to territory belonging to any Indian tribe, specifies:

> * * * That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect any treaty now in force between the United States and any Indian nation, or to extend to any offence committed by one Indian against another, within any Indian boundary.

Similar provisions were contained in sec. 25 of the Act of June 30, 1834, c. 161, 4 Stat. 729, 733; sec. 3 of the Act of March 27, 1854, 10 Stat. 269, 270; and R. S. §§ 2145–2146, amended by sec. 1 of the Act of February 18, 1875, 18 Stat. 316, 318.

[220] 109 U. S. 556 (1883). Shortly before the decision in this case, an opinion had been rendered by the Attorney General in another Indian murder case holding that where an Indian of one tribe had murdered an Indian of another tribe on the reservation of a third tribe, even though it was not shown that any of the tribes concerned had any machinery for the administration of justice, the federal courts had no right to try the accused. The opinion concluded:

> If no demand for Foster's surrender shall be made by one or other of the tribes concerned, founded fairly upon a violation of some law of one or other of them having jurisdiction of the offense in question according to general principles, and by forms substantially conformable to natural justice, it seems that nothing remains except to discharge him. (17 Op. A. G. 566, 570. (1883).)

A similar decision had been reached in state courts. See State v. McKenney, 18 Nev. 182, 2 Pac. 171 (1883). See also, Anonymous, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 447 (C. C. D. Mo. 1843) (robbery).

Although the right of an Indian tribe to inflict the death penalty had been recognized by Congress,[221] so much consternation was created by the Supreme Court's decision in Ex parte Crow Dog that within 2 years Congress had enacted a law making it a federal crime for one Indian to murder another Indian on an Indian reservation.[222] This law also prohibited manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, and larceny. In later years notorious cases of robbery, incest, and assault with a dangerous weapon resulted in the piece-meal addition of these three offenses to the federal code of Indian crimes.[223] There are thus, at the present time, 10 major offenses for which federal jurisdiction has displaced tribal jurisdiction. Federal courts also have jurisdiction over the ordinary federal crimes applicable throughout the United States (such as counterfeiting, smuggling,[224] and offenses relative to the mails), over violations of special laws for the protection of Indians,[225] and over offenses committed by an Indian against a non-Indian or by a non-Indian against an Indian which fall within the special code of offenses for territory "within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States." [226] All offenses other than these remain subject to tribal law and custom and to tribal courts.

Although the statute covering the "10 major crimes" does not expressly terminate tribal jurisdiction over the enumerated crimes, and may be interpreted as conferring only a concurrent jurisdiction upon the federal courts, it is arguable that the statute removes all jurisdiction over the enumerated crimes from the Indian tribal authorities.

Some support is given this argument by the decision in United States v. Whaley.[227] In this case, which arose soon after the passage of the statute in question, it had appeared fitting to the tribal council of the Tule River Reservation that a medicine man who was believed to have poisoned some 21 deceased patients should be executed, and he was so executed. The four tribal executioners were found guilty of manslaughter, in the federal court, on the theory, apparently, that the Act of March 3, 1885, had terminated tribal jurisdiction over murder cases. Whether tribal authorities may still inflict the death penalty for offenses other than the enumerated 10 major crimes is a matter of some doubt.

In opposition to the argument that the 1885 act limits tribal jurisdiction over crimes, it may be said that concurrent jurisdiction of federal and tribal authorities is clearly recognized by section 218 of title 25 of the United States Code, above set forth, which exempts from federal punishment otherwise merited persons who have "been punished by the local law of the tribe," and that the current Indian Law and Order Regulations recognize concurrent federal-tribal jurisdiction over crime.[228]

The lacunae in this brief criminal code of 10 commandments are serious, and indicate the importance of tribal jurisdiction in the field of law and order.

"Assault" cases that do not involve a "dangerous weapon" or where "intent to kill" cannot be proven, cannot be prosecuted in the federal court, no matter how brutal the attack may be, or how near death the victim is placed, if death does not actually ensue; men brutally beating their wives and children are, therefore, exempt from prosecution in the federal courts, and as above shown, the state courts do not have jurisdiction. Even assault with intent to commit rape or great bodily injury is not punishable under any federal statute.[229]

Aside from rape and incest, the various offenses involving the relation of the sexes (e. g., adultery, seduction, bigamy, and solicitation), as well as those involving the responsibility of a man for the support of his wife and children, are not within the cases that can be prosecuted in federal courts.[230]

Other offenses which may be mentioned, to which no state or federal laws now have application, and over which no state or federal court now has any jurisdiction, are: kidnaping, receiving stolen goods, poisoning (if the victim does not die), obtaining money under false pretenses, embezzlement, blackmail, libel, forgery, fraud, trespass, mayhem, bribery, killing of another's livestock, setting fire to prairie or timber, use of false weights and measures, carrying concealed weapons, gambling, disorderly conduct, malicious mischief, pollution of water supplies, and other offenses against public health.[231]

The difficulties of this situation have prompted agitation for the extension of federal or state laws over the Indian country, which has continued for at least five decades, without success.[232] The propriety of the objective sought is not here in question, but the agitation itself is evidence of the large area of human conduct which must be left in anarchy if it be held that tribal authority to deal with such conduct has disappeared.

Fortunately, such tribal authority has been repeatedly recognized by the courts, and although it has not been actually exercised always and in all tribes, it remains a proper legal basis

---

[221] See report cited above, fn. 25.

[222] Act of March 3, 1885, 23 Stat. 362, 385, 18 U. S. C. 548.

Earlier attempts to extend federal criminal laws to crimes by Indians against Indians (e. g. Letter from Secretary of the Interior, March 31, 1874, Sen. Misc. Doc., No. 95, 43d Cong., 1st sess.) had failed. On May 20, 1874, the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, rejecting the proposed bills, declared:

> * * * The Indians, while their tribal relations subsist, generally maintain laws, customs, and usages of their own for the punishment of offenses. They have no knowledge of the laws of the United States, and the attempt to enforce their own ordinances might bring them in direct conflict with existing statutes and subject them to prosecutions for their violation. (Sen. Rept. No. 367, 43d Cong., 1st sess., vol. 2.)

This same report condemned other provisions of the proposed bill as vesting in Indian agents "a very dangerous and formidable discretion." Cf. Chapter 2, sec. 2C.

[223] Act of March 4, 1909, sec. 328, 35 Stat. 1088, 1151; Act of June 28, 1932, 47 Stat. 336, 337.

[224] See Bailey v. United States, 47 F. 2d 702 (C. C. A. 9, 1931), confirming conviction of tribal Indian for offense of smuggling.

[225] See 18 U. S. C. 104 (Timber depredations on Indian lands), 107 (Starting fires on Indian lands), 110 (Breaking fences or driving cattle on inclosed public lands), 115 (Inducing conveyances by Indians of trust interests in lands); 25 U. S. C. 83 (Receipt of money under prohibited contracts), 177 (Purchases or grants of land from Indians), 179 (Driving stock to feed on Indian lands), 180 (Settling on or surveying lands belonging to Indians by treaty), 195 (Sale of cattle purchased by Government to nontribal members), 212 (Arson), 213 (Assault with intent to kill), 214 (Disposing or removing cattle), 216 (Hunting on Indian lands), 241 (Intoxicating liquors; sale to Indians or introducing into Indian country), 241a (Sale, etc., of liquors in former Indian territory), 244 (Possession of intoxicating liquors in Indian country), 251 (Setting up distillery), 264 (Trading without license, 265 (Prohibited purchases and sales), 266 (Sale of arms).

[226] See 18 U. S. C., chaps. 11 and 13.

[227] 37 Fed. 145 (C. C. S. D. Cal. 1888). See also dictum in United States v. Cardish, 145 Fed. 242 (D. C. E. D. Wis. 1906).

[228] Memo. Sol. I. D., November 17, 1936 (Ft. Hall).

[229] United States v. King, 81 Fed. 625 (D. C. E. D. Wis. 1897).

[230] See United States v. Quiver, 241 U. S. 602 (1916), discussed above under sec. 5.

[231] Cf. statements of Assistant Commissioner Meritt, before House Committee on Indian Affairs, 69th Cong., on H. R. 7826. Hearings (Reservation Courts of Indian Offenses), p. 91.

[232] See Harsha, Law for the Indians (1882), 134 N. A. Rev. 272; Thayer, A People Without Law (1891), 68 Atl. Month. 540, 676; Austin Abbott, Indians and the Law (1888), 2 Harv. Law Rev. 167; Hornblower, Legal Status of Indians (1891), 14 A. B. A. Rept. 261; Report of Comm. on Law and Courts for Indians (1892), 15 A. B. A. Rept. 423; Pound, Nationals Without a Nation (1922), 22 Col. L. Rev. 97; Meriam and Associates, Problem of Indian Administration (1928), chap. 13; Ray A. Brown, The Indian Problem and the Law (1930), 39 Yale L. J. 307; Report of Brown, Mark, Cloud, and Meriam on "Law and Order on Indian Reservations of the Northwest." Hearings Sen. Subcom. of Comm. on Ind. Aff., 72d Cong., 1st sess., pt. 26, p. 14137, et seq. (1932).

for the tribal administration of justice wherever an Indian tribe desires to make use of its legal powers.

The recognition of tribal jurisdiction over the offenses of tribal Indians accorded by the Supreme Court in Ex parte Crow Dog, supra, and United States v. Quiver, supra, indicates that the criminal jurisdiction of the Indian tribes has not been curtailed by the failure of certain tribes to exercise such jurisdiction, or by the inefficiency of its attempted exercise, or by any historical changes that have come about in the habits and customs of the Indian tribes. Likewise it has been held that a gap in a tribal criminal code does not confer jurisdiction upon the federal courts.[233] Only specific legislation terminating or transferring such jurisdiction can limit the force of tribal law.

A recent writer,[234] after carefully analyzing the relation between federal and tribal law, concludes:

> This gives to many Indian tribes a large measure of continuing autonomy, for the federal statutes are only a fragment of law, principally providing some educational, hygienic, and economic assistance, regulating land ownership, and punishing certain crimes committed by or upon Indians on a reservation. Where these statutes do not reach, Indian custom is the only law. As a matter of convenience, the regular courts (white men's courts) tacitly assume that the general law of the community is the law in civil cases between Indians; but these courts will apply Indian custom whenever it is proved. (P. 90.)

A careful analysis of the relation between a local tribal government and the United States is found in an early opinion of the Attorney General,[235] in which it is held that a court of the Choctaw Nation has complete jurisdiction over a civil controversy between a Choctaw Indian and an adopted white man, involving rights to property within the Choctaw Nation:

> On the other hand, it is argued by the United States Agent, that the courts of the Choctaws can have no jurisdiction of any case in which a citizen of the United States is a party * * *.
>
> In the first place, it is certain that the Agent errs in assuming the legal impossibility of a citizen of the United States becoming subject, in civil matters, or criminal either, to the jurisdiction of the Choctaws. It is true that no citizen of the United States can, while he remains within the United States, escape their constitutional jurisdiction, either by adoption into a tribe of Indians, or any other way. But the error in all this consists in the idea that any man, citizen or not citizen, becomes divested of his allegiance to the United States, or throws off their jurisdiction or government, in the fact of becoming subject to any local jurisdiction whatever. This idea misconceives entirely the whole theory of the Federal Government, which theory is, that all the inhabitants of the country are, in regard to certain limited matters, subject to the federal jurisdiction, and in all others to the local jurisdiction, whether political or municipal. The citizen of Mississippi is also a citizen of the United States; and he owes allegiance to, and is subject to the laws of, both governments. So also an Indian, whether he be Choctaw or Chickasaw, and while subject to the local jurisdiction of the councils and courts of the nation, yet is not in any possible relation or sense divested of his allegiance and obligations to the Government and the laws of the United States. (Pp. 177–178.)

In effect, then, an Indian tribe bears a relation to the Government of the United States similar to that which a territory bears to such government, and similar again to that relationship which a municipality bears to a state. An Indian tribe may exercise a complete jurisdiction over its members and within the limits of the reservation,[236] subordinate only to the expressed limitations of federal law.

Some tribes have exercised a similar jurisdiction, under express departmental authorization, over Indians of other tribes found on the reservation.[237] This has been justified on the ground that the original tribal sovereignty extends over visiting Indians and also on the ground that the Department of the Interior may transfer the jurisdiction vested in the Courts of Indian Offenses to tribal courts, so far as concerns jurisdiction over members of recognized tribes.[238]

On the other hand, attempts of tribes to exercise jurisdiction over non-Indians, although permitted in certain early treaties,[239] have been generally condemned by the federal courts since the end of the treaty-making period, and the writ of habeas corpus has been used to discharge white defendants from tribal custody.[240]

Recognition of tribal authority in the administration of justice is found in the statutes of Congress, as well as in the decisions of the federal courts.

U. S. Code, title 25, section 229, provides that redress for a civil injury committed by an Indian shall be sought in the first instance from the "Nation or tribe to which such Indian shall belong."[241] This provision for collective responsibility evidently assumes that the Indian tribe or nation has its own resources for exercising disciplinary power over individual wrongdoers within the community.

We have already referred to title 25, section 218, of the United States Code, with its express assurance that persons "punished by the law of the tribe" shall not be tried again before the federal courts.

What is even more important than these statutory recognitions of tribal criminal authority is the persistent silence of Congress on the general problem of Indian criminal jurisdiction. There is nothing to justify an alternative to the conclusion that the Indian tribes retain sovereignty and jurisdictions over a vast area of ordinary offenses over which the Federal Government has never presumed to legislate and over which the state governments have not the authority to legislate.

Attempts to administer a rough-and-ready sort of justice through Indian courts commonly known as Courts of Indian Offenses, or directly through superintendents, cannot be held to have impaired tribal authority in the field of law and order. These agencies have been characterized, in the only reported case squarely upholding their legality, as "mere educational and disciplinary instrumentalities by which the Government [233] In re Mayfield, 141 U. S. 107 (1891).

---

[234] Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States (1934), 16 J. Comp. Leg. (3d series), pt. 1, 78.

[235] 7 Op. A. G. 174 (1855).

[236] The jurisdiction of the Indian tribe ceases at the border of the reservation (see 18 Op. A. G. 440 (1886), holding that the authority of the Indian police is limited to the territory of the reservation), and Congress has never authorized appropriate extradition procedure whereby an Indian tribe may secure jurisdiction over fugitives from its justice. See Ex parte Morgan, 20 Fed. 298 (D. C. W. D. Ark., 1883).

[237] See Memo. Sol. I. D., February 17, 1939 (Rocky Boy's Blackfeet). But cf. Memo. Sol. I. D., October 15, 1938 (Ft. Berthold). For a fuller discussion of the question of jurisdiction of the person, raised in such cases as Ex parte Kenyon, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7720 (C. C. W. D. Ark., 1878); see Chapter 18.

[238] Ibid.

[239] See Chapter 1, sec. 3.

[240] Ex parte Kenyon, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7720 (C. C. W. D. Ark., 1878), and see Chapter 18.

[241] This provision was apparently first enacted as sec. 14 of the Trade and Intercourse Act of May 19, 1796, 1 Stat. 469, 472; reenacted as sec. 14 of the Trade and Intercourse Act of March 3, 1799, 1 Stat. 743, 747; reenacted as sec. 14 of the Trade and Intercourse Act of March 30, 1802, 2 Stat. 139, 143; and finally embodied in sec. 17 of the Trade and Intercourse Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729, 731.

Of a similar character are treaty provisions in which tribes undertake to punish certain types of Indian offenders. See, e. g., Art. 7 of Treaty of the United States is endeavoring to improve and elevate the condition of these dependent tribes to whom it sustains the relation of guardian" [242] Perhaps a more satisfactory defense of their legality is the doctrine put forward by a recent writer that the Courts of Indian Offenses "derive their authority from the tribe, rather than from Washington." [243]

Whichever of these explanations be offered for the existence of the Courts of Indian Offenses, their establishment cannot be held to have destroyed or limited the powers vested by existing law in the Indian tribes over the province of law and order and the administration of civil and criminal justice.

Today the administration of law and order is being taken over as a local responsibility by most of the tribes that since the enactment of the Wheeler-Howard Act of June 18, 1934, have adopted constitutions for self-government.[244]

Faced with a tremendous problem, the Indian tribes have done an admirable job of maintaining law and order, wherever they have been permitted to function.[245] There are some reservations in which the moral sanctions of an integrated community are so strong that apart from occasional drunkenness and accompanying violence, crime is unknown. Crime is more of a problem on reservations where the social sanctions based on tribal control of property have been broken down through the allotment system, and the efforts of these tribes to me ' their law and order problem through tribal codes, tribal courts, and tribal police, are worthy of serious attention.

The earliest codes adopted by tribes which have organized under the Act of June 18, 1934, generally differ from comparable state penal codes in the following respects:

1. The number of offenses specified in a tribal code generally runs between 40 and 50, whereas a state code (exclusive of local municipal ordinances) generally specifies between 800 and 2,000 offenses.[246]

2. The maximum punishment specified in the Indian penal codes is generally more humane, seldom exceeding imprisonment for 6 months, even for offenses like kidnapping, for which state penal codes impose imprisonment for 20 years or more, or death.

3. Except for fixing a maximum penalty, the Indian penal codes leave a large discretion to the court in adjusting the penalty to the circumstances of the offense and the offender.

4. The form of punishment is typically forced labor for the benefit of the tribe or of the victim of the offense, rather than imprisonment.

5. The tribal penal codes, for the most part, do not contain the usual catch-all provisions to be found in state penal codes (vagrancy, conspiracy, criminal syndicalism, etc.), under which almost any unpopular individual may be convicted of crime.

6. The tribal penal code is generally put into the hands of every member of the tribe, and widely read and discussed, which is not the case with state penal codes.

On the basis of this comparison it seems fair to say that the confidence which the United States Supreme Court indicated, in the Crow Dog case,[247] in the ability of Indian tribes to master "the highest and best of all * * * the arts of civilized life * * * that of self-government * * * the maintenance of order and peace among their own members by the administration of their own laws and customs" has been amply justified in the half century that has passed since that case was heard.

of November 15, 1865, with Confederated Tribes of Middle Oregon, 14 Stat. 751, 752; Art. 12 of Treaty of February 5, 1856, with Stockbridges and Munsees, 11 Stat. 663, 666.

Tribal responsibility for surrender or extradition of Indian horse thieves, murderers, or "bad men" generally was imposed by various treaties: Treaty of January 21, 1785, with Wiandots, Delawares, and others, 7 Stat. 16; Treaty of January 10, 1786, with the Chickasaws, 7 Stat. 24; Treaty of January 9, 1789, with Wiandots, Delawares, and others, 7 Stat. 28; Treaty of August 7, 1790, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 35; Treaty of July 2, 1791, with Cherokee Nation, 7, Stat. 39; Treaty of November 3, 1804, with Sacs and Foxes, 7 Stat. 84; Treaty of November 10, 1808, with Great and Little Osage Nations, 7 Stat. 107; Treaty of September 30, 1809, with Delawares and others, 7 Stat. 113; Treaty of May 15, 1846, with Comanches and others, 9 Stat. 844.

[242] United States v. Clapox, 35 Fed. 575 (D. C. Ore., 1888); and cf. Ex parte Bi-a-lil-le, 12 Ariz. 150, 100 Pac. 450 (1909).

[243] Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States (1934), 16 J. Comp. Leg. (3d Ser.), pt. 1, pp. 78, 93.

[244] See, for example, Code of Ordinances of the Gila River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community, adopted June 3, 1936, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior on August 24, 1936; Rosebud Code of Offenses, adopted April 8, 1937, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior July 7, 1937.

[245] See Meriam, op. cit., p. 17 ("* * * on the whole they work well."). On aboriginal police organizations, see MacLeod, Police and Punishment among Native Americans of the Plains (1937), 28 J. Crim. Law and Criminology 181.

[246] The Penal Code of New York State (39 McKinney's Cons. Laws of N. Y., 1936 supp.) lists 54 offenses under the letter "A." The Penal Code of Montana (Rev. Codes of Montana, 1921) contains 871 sections defining crimes.

[247] Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556 (1883).

SECTION 10. STATUTORY POWERS OF TRIBES IN INDIAN ADMINISTRATION

Within the field of Indian Service administration various powers have been conferred on Indian tribes by statute. These powers differ, of course, in derivation from those tribal powers which spring from tribal sovereignty. They are rather of federal origin, and no doubt subject to constitutional doctrines applicable to the exercise or delegation of federal governmental powers.

Potentially the most important of these statutory tribal powers is the power to supervise regular Government employees, subject to the findings of the Secretary of the Interior as to the competency of the tribe to exercise such control. Section 9 of the Act of June 30, 1834,[248] now embodied in U. S. Code, title 25, sec. 48, provides:

> Right of tribes to direct employment of persons engaged for them.—Where any of the tribes are, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, competent to direct the employment of their blacksmiths, mechanics, teachers, farmers, or other persons engaged for them, the direction of such persons may be given to the proper authority of the tribe.

Under the terms of this statute it is clearly within the discretionary authority of the Secretary of the Interior to grant to the proper authorities of an Indian tribe all powers of supervision and control over local employees which may now be exercised by the Secretary, e. g., the power to specify the duties, within a general range set by the nature of the employment, which the employee is to perform, the power to prescribe standards for appointment, promotion and continuance in office, and the power to compel reports, from time to time, of work accomplished or begun.

It will be noted that the statute in question is not restricted to the cases in which a federal employee is paid out of tribal funds. Senators are responsible to their constituents regardless of the source of their salaries, and heretofore most Indian Service employees have been responsible only to the Federal [248] 4 Stat. 735, 737, R. S. § 2072.

Government, though their salaries might be paid from the funds of the tribe.

In directing the employment of Indian Service employees, an Indian tribe may impose upon such employees the duty of enforcing the laws and ordinances of the tribe, and the authority of federal employees so acting has been repeatedly confirmed by the courts.[249]

The section in question has not, apparently, been extensively used by the Interior Department, and that Department at one time recommended its repeal. This recommendation was later withdrawn.[250]

Various other statutes make Indian Service administration dependent, in several respects, upon tribal consent.

Thus, U. S. Code, title 25, section 63,[251] provides that the President may "consolidate one or more tribes, and abolish such agencies as are thereby rendered unnecessary," but that such action may be undertaken only "with the consent of the tribes to be affected thereby, expressed in the usual manner."

Section 111 of the same title[252] provides that payments of moneys and distribution of goods for the benefit of any Indians or Indian tribes shall be made either to the heads of families and individuals directly entitled to such moneys or goods or else to the chiefs of the tribe, for the benefit of the tribe, or to persons appointed by the tribe for the purpose of receiving such moneys or goods. This section finally provides that such moneys or goods "by consent of the tribe" may be applied directly by the Secretary to purposes conducive to the happiness and prosperity of the tribe.

Section 115 of the same title[253] provides:

> The President may, at the request of any Indian tribe, to which an annuity is payable in money, cause the same to be paid in goods, purchased as provided in section 91.

Section 140[254] of the same title provides that specific appropriations for the benefit of Indian tribes may be diverted to other uses "with the consent of said tribes, expressed in the usual manner."

Perhaps the most important provision for tribal participation in federal Indian administration is found in the last sentence of section 16 of the Act of June 18, 1934, which, applying to all tribes adopting constitutions under that act, declares:

> The Secretary of the Interior shall advise such tribe or its tribal council of all appropriation estimates or Federal projects for the benefit of the tribe prior to the submission of such estimates to the Bureau of the Budget and the Congress.[255]

Under this section each organized tribe has the right to present its comments and criticisms on the budgetary plans of the Interior Department covering its own reservation prior to the time when such plans are considered by the Bureau of the Budget or by Congress. This is a power quite distinct from the tribal power to prevent the disposition of tribal funds without tribal consent, a power elsewhere discussed.[256]

While this provision imposes a legal duty upon administrative authorities, it is, of course, purely advisory so far as Congress is concerned.

---

[249] Morris v Hitchock, 194 U. S. 384 (1904); Buster v. Wright, 135 Fed. 947 (C. C. A. 8, 1905), app. dism. 203 U. S. 599; Maxey v. Wright, 3 Ind. T. 243, 54 S. W. 807 (1900), aff'd 105 Fed. 1003 (1900); Zevely v. Weimer, 5 Ind. T. 646, 82 S. W. 941 (1904); 23 Op. A. G. 528.

[250] See annotations to 25 U. S. C. 48 in various annual supplements to U. S. C. A.

[251] Act of May 17, 1882, sec. 66, 22 Stat. 68, 88, reenacted Act of July 4, 1884, sec. 6, 23 Stat. 76, 97.

[252] Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 11, 4 Stat. 735, 737; amended Act of March 3, 1847, sec. 3, 9 Stat. 203; amended Act of August 30, 1852, sec. 3, 10 Stat. 41, 56; amended Act of July 15, 1870, secs. 2–3, 16 Stat. 335, 360. See Chapter 15, secs. 22, 28.

[253] Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 12, 4 Stat. 735, 737.

[254] Act of March 1, 1907, 34 Stat. 1015, 1016.

[255] 48 Stat. 984, 987, 25 U. S. C. 476.

[256] See Chapter 5, sec. 5B, and Chapter 15, sec. 24.

CHAPTER 8

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES OF INDIANS

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. INTRODUCTION

To analyze the personal rights and liberties of Indians is to assume that Indians are persons. This proposition has not always been universally accepted. The first authoritative determination that Indians are human beings is to be found in the Bull Sublimis Deus of Pope Paul III, issued June 4, 1537. This Bull declared:

> The enemy of the human race, who opposes all good deeds in order to bring men to destruction, beholding > and envying this, invented a means never before heard of, by which he might hinder the preaching of God's word of Salvation to the people: He inspired his satellites who, to please him, have not hesitated to publish abroad that the Indians of the West and the South, and other people of whom We have recent knowledge should be treated as dumb brutes created for our service, pretending that they are incapable of receiving the catholic faith.

>
> We, who, though unworthy, exercise on earth the power of our Lord and seek with all our might to bring those sheep of His flock who are outside, into the fold committed to our charge, consider, however, that the Indians are truly men and that they are not only capable of understanding the catholic faith but, according to our information, they desire exceedingly to receive it. Desiring to provide ample remedy for these evils, we define and declare by these our letters, or by any translation thereof signed by any notary public and sealed with the seal of any ecclesiastical dignitary, to which the same credit shall be given as to the originals, that, notwithstanding whatever may have been or may be said to the contrary, the said Indians and all other people who may later be discovered by Christians, are by no means to be deprived of their liberty or the possession of their property, even though they be outside the faith of Jesus Christ; and that they may and should, freely and legitimately, enjoy their liberty and the possession of their property; nor should they be in any way enslaved; should the contrary happen, it shall be null and of no effect.[1]

Despite this pronouncement, doubts as to the human character of Indians have persisted until fairly recently, particularly among those charged with the administration of Indian affairs. These doubts are reflected in the statement on "Policy and Administration of Indian Affairs" contained in the "Report on Indians Taxed and Indians Not Taxed, at the Eleventh Census: 1890," which declares:

> An Indian is a person within the meaning of the laws of the United States. This decision of Judge Dundy, of the United States district court for Nebraska, has not been reversed; still, by law and the Interior Department, the Indian is considered a ward of the nation and is so treated.[1a]

The doubts that have existed as to whether an Indian is a person or something less than a person have infected with uncertainty much of the discussion of Indian personal rights and liberties. Clear thinking on the subject has been sacrificed in the effort to find ambiguous terms which will permit us, by appropriate juggling, to maintain three basic propositions:

(1) that Indians are human beings;

(2) that all human beings are created equal, with certain inalienable rights; and

(3) that Indians are an "inferior" class not entitled to these "inalienable rights."

Experience shows that it is possible to pay due deference to these three propositions, inconsistent though they are with each other, by means of a skillful juggling of words of many meanings, such as "wardship" and "incompetency."

In 1842, Attorney General Legare wrote:[1b]

> * * * There is nothing in the whole compass of our laws so anomalous—so hard to bring within any precise definition, or any logical and scientific arrangement of principles, as the relation in which the Indians stand towards this government, and those of the States. (P. 76.)

Eight decades later, when the eminent jurist, Judge Cuthbert Pound, wrote of "Nationals without a Nation,"[2] the anomalies attendant upon the legal status of the Indian had not disappeared.

In part, the difficulties of the subject derive from the unique international relationship existing between the United States and Indian tribes, treated as "domestic, dependent nations" with which we entered into treaties that continue in force to this day.

The complexity of the problem has been very much aggravated by the host of special treaties and special statutes assigning rights and obligations to the members of particular tribes, all of which creates a complex diversity that can be simplified only at the risk of ignoring facts and violating rights. Attempts have been made, of course, in some judicial opinions, as well as in less authoritative writings, to ride roughshod over the facts and to lay down certain simple rules of alleged universal applicability, most of which have turned out to be erroneous.

Whatever the causes of this confusion may be, the fact remains that erroneous notions on the legal status of the Indian are widely prevalent.[3] Large sections of our population still believe that Indians are not citizens, and recent instances have been reported of Indians being denied the right to vote because the electoral officials in charge were under the impression that Indians have never been made citizens. Indeed, some people have persuaded Indians themselves that they are not citizens and can achieve citizenship only by selling their land, by having the Indian Office abolished, or by performing some other act of benefit to those advisors who have volunteered aid in the achievement of American citizenship.

Another prevalent misconception is the notion that "ward Indians," whatever that term may mean, have no capacity at law to make contracts or to bring or defend law suits.

These are but two examples among a host of more or less widespread misconceptions that are woven about such terms as "citizenship," "wardship," and "incompetency."

We shall be concerned in this chapter to analyze the legal position of the Indian with respect to ten matters:

(a) Citizenship (sec. 2).
(b) Suffrage (sec. 3).
(c) Eligibility for public office and employment (sec. 4).
(d) Eligibility for state assistance (sec. 5).
(e) Right to sue (sec. 6).
(f) Right to contract (sec. 7).
(g) Incompetency (sec. 8).
(h) Wardship (sec. 9).
(i) Civil liberties (sec. 10).
(j) Status of freedmen and slaves (sec. 11).

---

[1] Translation from F. A. MacNutt, Bartholomew de Las Casas: His Life, His Apostolate, and His Writings (1909), pp. 429, 431.

[1a] H. R. Misc. Doc. No. 340, 52d Cong., 1st sess., part 15 (1894), p. 64.

[1b] 4 Op. A. G. 75 (1842).

[2] (1922), 22 Col. L. Rev. 97.

[3] Op. Sol., I. D., M.28869, February 13, 1937.

SECTION 2. CITIZENSHIP

Since June 2, 1924, all Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States have been citizens, by virtue of the act of that date.[4] This act provides:

> That all non-citizen Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States be, and they are hereby, declared to be citizens of the United States: Provided, That the granting of such citizenship shall not in any manner impair or otherwise affect the right of any Indian to tribal or other property.

The substance of this section was incorporated in the Nationality Act of October 14, 1940.[4a]

Prior to the Citizenship Act of 1924 approximately two-thirds of the Indians of the United States had already acquired citizenship in one or more of the following ways:

(a) Treaties with Indian tribes.
(b) Special statutes naturalizing named tribes or individuals.
(c) General statutes naturalizing Indians who took allotments.
(d) General statutes naturalizing other special classes.

A brief analysis of each of these methods of acquiring citizenship may suffice to explain those current misconceptions on the subject of Indian citizenship which are a survival of what was once actual law.

A. METHODS OF ACQUIRING CITIZENSHIP

(1) Treaties with Indian tribes.—Some early treaties between the United States and Indian tribes provided for the granting of citizenship.[5] In some cases, citizenship was made dependent upon acceptance of an allotment of land in severalty,[6] and sometimes the alternative to accepting an allotment was removal with the tribe to a new reservation.[7]

Implicit in this arrangement was the thought that citizenship was incompatible with continued participation in tribal government or tribal property. This supposed incompatibility, removed from its specific treaty context and generalized, has become one of the most fruitful sources of contemporary confusion on the question of Indian citizenship.

The later treaties usually require the submission of evidence of fitness for citizenship, and empower an administrative body or official to determine whether the applicant for citizenship conforms to the standards in the treaty. To illustrate, the Treaty of November 15, 1861,[8] with the Pottawatomies, requires the President of the United States to be satisfied that the male heads of families are "sufficiently intelligent and prudent to conduct their affairs and interests," and the Treaty of February 23, 1867,[9] forbids tribal membership to Wyandottes who had consented to become citizens under a prior treaty, unless they were found "unfit for the responsibilities of citizenship."[10]

(2) Special statutes.—Before and after the termination of the treaty-making period, the members of several tribes were naturalized collectively by statute.[11] The tribe was in a few cases dissolved at the same time and its land distributed to the members.[12] Sometimes other conditions were embodied in the statute, such as adopting the habits of civilized life, becoming self-supporting, and learning to read and speak the English language.[13]

After the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment, several acts were passed naturalizing Indians of certain tribes. Most of these statutes were similar to the Act of July 15, 1870.[14] By section 10 of this law a Winnebago Indian in the State of Minnesota could apply to the Federal District Court for citizenship. He was required to prove to the satisfaction of the court that he was sufficiently intelligent and prudent to control his affairs

---

[4] 43 Stat. 253, 8 U. S. C. 3. This act naturalized 125,000 native-born Indians. Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States (1934), 16 J. Comp. Leg. 78, 86; Hon. Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior, Indian Policies: Comments on Resolutions of the Advisory Council on Indian Affairs (U. S. Govt. Printing Office 1924, p. 6); cf. Fifty-fifth Annual Report of Board of Indian Commissioners (1924) pp. 1 and 2. On the legislative history of this act, see Chapter 4, sec. 15.

[4a] Pub. No. 853, 76th Cong., sec. 201 of which declares:

> The following shall be nationals and citizens of the United States at birth:
>
> * * * * *
>
> (b) A person born in the United States to a member of an Indian, Eskimo, Aleutian, or other aboriginal tribe.

[5] Treaty of September 27, 1830, with Choctaws, Art. 14, 7 Stat. 333, 335. For illustrations of treaties conferring citizenship on heads of families, see Treaty of July 8, 1817, with Cherokees, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 156, 159; Treaty of February 27, 1819, with Cherokees, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 195, 196.

[6] Treaty of June 28, 1862, with Kickapoos, Art. 3, 13 Stat. 623, 624; Treaty of July 4, 1866, with Delawares, Arts. 3 and 9, 14 Stat. 793, 794, 796. Treaty of February 23, 1867, with Senecas and others, Art. 13, 15 Stat. 513, 516, interpreted in Wiggan v. Connolly, 163 U. S. 56 (1896); Treaty of February 27, 1867, with Pottawatomies, Art. 6, 15 Stat. 531–533; Treaty of April 29, et seq., 1868, with Sioux, Art. 6, 15 Stat. 635, 637. Act of March 3, 1873, 17 Stat. 631 (Miamies). Also see Appropriation Act to effectuate this provision, Act of June 22, 1874, 18 Stat. 146–175; and 2 Op. A. G. 462 (1831). It was hoped to eliminate reservations and to cause the disintegration of the tribe. Varney, The Indian Remnant in New England (1901), 13 Green Bag 399, 401–402; Thayer, A People Without Law (1891), 68 Atl. Month. 540, 546–547; Kyle, How Shall the Indians Be Educated (1894), 159 N. A. Rev. 434; Krieger, Principles of the Indian Law and the Act of June 18, 1934 (1935), 3 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 279, 295; United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432, 437 (1903); Choteau v. Burnet, 283 U. S. 691 (1931); Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305 (C. C. A. 8, 1909).

[7] Treaty of September 27, 1830, with Choctaws, Arts. 14 and 16, 7 Stat. 333, 335–336.

[8] Art. 3, 12 Stat. 1191, 1192.

[9] Art. 13, 15 Stat. 513, 516 (Senecas and others); also see Arts. 17, 28, 34 for other provisions regarding citizenship.

[10] Also see Treaty of July 4, 1866, with Delawares, Arts. 3 and 9, 14 Stat. 793, 794, 796; Act of March 3, 1873, 17 Stat. 631 (Miamies). Unusual provisions are contained in the Treaty of February 27, 1867, with Pottawatomies, Arts. 4 and 6, 15 Stat. 531–533, which permits women who are heads of families or single women of adult age to become citizens in the same manner as males, and authorizes the Tribal Business Committee and the agent to determine the competency of an Indian to manage his own affairs. By the Treaty of June 24, 1862, Art. 4, 12 Stat. 1237, 1238, the Ottawa tribe, which was to be dissolved after 5 years, was given money to assist the members in establishing themselves in agricultural pursuits and thus gradually increase their preparation for assuming the responsibilities and duties of citizenship. Also see Treaty of July 31, 1855, with Ottowas and Chippewas, Art. 5, 11 Stat. 621.

[11] Act of March 3, 1839, 5 Stat. 349, 351 (Brothertown); Act of March 3, 1843, sec. 7, 5 Stat. 645, 647 (Stockbridge); Act of March 3, 1921, sec. 3. 41 Stat. 1249, 1250 (Osage). The right of the Cherokees to be naturalized was discussed in Raymond v. Raymond, 1 Ind. T. 334 (1896), reversed in 83 Fed. 721 (C. C. A. 8, 1897).

[12] Act of March 3, 1839, sec. 7, 5 Stat. 349, 351 (Brothertown); Act of March 3, 1843, sec. 7, 5 Stat. 645, 647 (Stockbridge).

[13] Act of March 3, 1865, sec. 4, 13 Stat. 541, 562, discussed in Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305 (C. C. A. 8, 1909); Act of August 6, 1846, 9 Stat. 55 (Stockbridge).

[14] Sec. 10, 16 Stat. 335, 361–362. By the Act of March 3, 1873, sec. 3, 17 Stat. 631, 632, similar provision was made for the naturalization of adult members of any of the Miami Tribe of Kansas and their minor children.

267785—41——12

and interests; that he had adopted the habits of civilized life and for the preceding 5 years supported himself and his family. If satisfied with the proof, the court would declare him a citizen and give him a certificate, which would enable the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent in fee with powers of alienation of the land already held by the Indian in severalty and to pay to him his share of tribal property.[15] Thenceforth, the Indian ceased to be a member of the tribe and his land was subject to levy, taxation and sale the same as that of other citizens. Again, the statutory formula seems to rest on the assumed incompatability between tribal membership and United States citizenship.

The same idea underlay the Indian Territory Naturalization Act,[16] which provided:

> * * * That any member of any Indian tribe or nation residing in the Indian Territory may apply to the United States court therein to become a citizen of the United States, and such court shall have jurisdiction thereof and shall hear and determine such application as provided in the statutes of the United States * * * Provided, That the Indians who become citizens of the United States under the provisions of this act do not forfeit or lose any rights or privileges they enjoy or are entitled to as members of the tribe or nation to which they belong.

(3) General statutes naturalizing allottees.—Prior to the Citizenship Act, the General Allotment Act,[17] generally known as the Dawes Act, was the most important method of acquiring citizenship.[18] This law conferred citizenship upon two classes of Indians born within the limits of the United States:

> (1) An Indian to whom allotments were made in accordance with this act, or any law or treaty.
>
> (2) An Indian who had voluntarily taken up within said limits, residence separate and apart from any tribe of Indians therein and adopted the habits of civilized life.

President Theodore Roosevelt described this important law in his message to Congress of December 3, 1901, as "a mighty pulverizing engine to break up the tribal mass" whereby "some sixty thousand Indians have already become citizens of the United States." [19]

By an amendment adopted May 8, 1906,[20] known as the Burke Act, the Indian became a citizen after the patent in fee simple was granted instead of upon the completion of his allotment and the issuance of a trust patent.[21] It has been administratively held that an Indian to whom an allotment was made subsequent to the Burke Act is a citizen upon the issuance of a patent in fee for part of his allotment,[22] because the conveyance was also an adjudication that the Indian allottee is "competent and capable" to manage his own affairs.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Celestine [23] suggested "that Congress in granting full rights of citizenship to Indians, believed that it had been too hasty." The purpose of the Burke Act was stated by the court in the case of United States v. Pelican: [24] "distinctly to postpone to the expiration of the trust period the subjection of allottees under that act to state laws."

(4) General statutes naturalizing other classes of Indians.—Indian women marrying citizens became citizens by the Act of August 9, 1888,[25] and Indian men who enlisted to fight in the World War could become citizens under the Act of November 6, 1919.[26]

B. NONCITIZEN INDIANS

Until the Citizenship Act of 1924 those Indians who had not acquired citizenship by marriage to white men, by military service, by receipt of allotments, or through special treaties or special statutes, occupied a peculiar status under Federal law. Not only were they noncitizens but they were barred from the ordinary processes of naturalization open to foreigners. Such remained the status of Indians living in the United States who were born in Canada, Mexico, or other foreign lands, since the 1924 Act referred only to "Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States." [27]

---

[15] Beginning with the Act of March 3, 1865, sec. 4, 13 Stat. 541, 562, the statutes granting citizenship to Indians abandoning their tribal relationships safeguarded their rights in tribal property. Act of February 8, 1887, sec. 6, 24 Stat. 388, 390, 25 U. S. C. 349; amended by Act of May 8, 1906, 34 Stat. 182; Act of August 9, 1888, sec. 2, 25 Stat. 392, 25 U. S. C. 182; also see Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305, 308–309 (C. C. A. 8, 1909); United States ex rel. Besaw v. Work, 6 F. 2d 694, 697 (App. D. C. 1925).

[16] Act of May 2, 1890, sec. 43, 26 Stat. 81, 99–100. This section also grants citizenship to the Confederated Peoria Indians residing in the Quapaw Indian Agency, who accept land in severalty.

[17] Act of February 8, 1887, sec. 4, 24 Stat. 388, 389; amended, Act of February 28, 1891, 26 Stat. 794. For other allotment acts see Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 420; Act of March 3, 1921, 41 Stat. 1355 (Fort Belknap); see also Chapter 11. In the Act of June 4, 1924, 43 Stat. 376 (Cherokees of North Carolina), providing for the allotment of land, which was enacted after the Citizenship Act, there was a provision in accordance with the old formula that each allottee shall become a citizen of the United States and of the state where he resides, with all the privileges of citizenship (sec. 19, p. 380). The Act of January 25, 1929, c. 101, 45 Stat. 1094, stated that it was not the purpose of the former act to abridge or modify the Citizenship Act. Also see Monson v. Simonson, 231 U. S. 341 (1913); United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432 (1903); 42 L. D. 489 (1913); 7 Yale L. J. 193 (1898). On policy of Osage Indian Allotment Act, Act of June 28, 1906, 34 Stat. 539, see Levindale Lead Co. v. Coleman, 241 U. S. 432 (1916) and Chapter 23, sec. 12A.

[18] Senator Orville H. Platt of Connecticut wrote: "Modern observation and thought have reached the conclusion that allotment of land in severalty, and citizenship, are the indispensable conditions of Indian progress." Problems in the Indian Territory (1895), 160 N. Am. Rev. 195, 200. See also Thayer, A People Without Law (1891), 68 Atl. Month. 540, 676, 680. Usually the children of tribal members who elected citizenship received a smaller allotment. The Treaty of July 4, 1866, with the Delaware Indians, 14 Stat. 793, 796, contained an unusual provision permitting a child reaching majority to elect whether he desired to become a citizen.

The Act of June 22, 1874, 18 Stat. 146, 175, appropriated money to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the children of the Delaware Indians who had become citizens of the United States their share of the tribal funds.

[19] 35 Congressional Record, Pt. 1, 57th Cong., 1st sess. (1901), p. 90. Cf. Kyle, How Shall the Indians be Educated? (1894), 159 N. Am. Rev. 434, 437. According to Wise, Indian Law and Needed Reforms (1926), 12 A. B. A. Jour. 37, there were about 150,000 Indians holding tribal lands not yet allotted.

[20] 34 Stat. 182.

[21] "This change was due largely to a misunderstanding as to the real legal significance. At that time it was the belief that wardship and citizenship were incompatible." Flickinger, A Lawyer Looks at the American Indian, Past and Present (1939), 6 Indians at Work, No. 8, pp. 24, 26.

[22] Op. Sol. I. D., M.4018, July 29, 1921.

[23] 215 U. S. 278, 291 (1909).

[24] 232 U. S. 442, 450 (1914).

[25] Sec. 2, 25 Stat. 392, 25 U. S. C. 182.

[26] 41 Stat. 350. This measure was endorsed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Only a few Indians acquired citizenship in this way. Annual Reports of Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1920), pp. 10–11; (1921), p. 33. Cf. special provision relating to honorably discharged alien veterans of foreign birth, Act of July 19, 1919, 41 Stat. 163, 222.

[27] See Morrison v. California, 291 U. S. 82, 95 (1934). This restriction was eliminated by sec. 303 of the Nationality Act of October 14, 1940 (Public No. 853, 76th Cong.), which declares:

> The right to become a naturalized citizen under the provisions of this Act shall extend only to white persons, persons of African nativity or descent, and descendants of races indigenous to the Western Hemisphere.

The naturalization laws applied only to free white persons and did not include Indians,[28] who were regarded as domestic subjects or nationals.[29] As members of domestic dependent nations, owing allegiance to their tribe, they were analogized to children of foreign diplomats, born in the United States.[30]

Thus noncitizen Indians were not able to secure passports, but were sometimes granted documents specifying that they were not citizens but requesting protection for them.[31]

Caleb Cushing, Attorney General of the United States, formulated the following theory of the status of Indians:[32]

> The fact, therefore, that Indians are born in the country does not make them citizens of the United States. The simple truth is plain, that the Indians are the subjects of the United States, and therefore are not, in mere right of home-birth, citizens of the United States.
>
> * * * * *
>
> But they cannot become citizens by naturalization under existing general acts of Congress. (ii Kent's Com., p. 72.)
>
> Those acts apply only to foreigners, subjects of another allegiance. The Indians are not foreigners, and they are in our allegiance, without being citizens of the United States. Moreover, those acts only apply to "white" men.
>
> * * * * *
>
> Indians, of course, can be made citizens of the United States only by some competent act of the General Government, either a treaty or an act of Congress. (Pp. 749–750.)

This theory was reiterated after the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, which first defined federal citizenship. At the time of its adoption, eminent lawyers differed on its effect on the Indians.[33] Hope that a liberal interpretation would make Indians citizens was shattered by an early case,[34] holding that the amendment was merely declaratory of the common-law rule of citizenship by birth and that Indians born in tribal allegiance were not born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, because:

> To be a citizen of the United States by reason of his birth, a person must not only be born within its territorial limits, but he must also be born subject to its jurisdiction—that is, in its power and obedience. * * * But the Indian tribes within the limits of the United States have always been held to be distinct and independent political communities, retaining the right of self-government, though subject to the protecting power of the United States. (Pp. 165, 166.)

This view was sustained by two leading naturalization opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the holding of Elk v. Wilkins,[35] and the dicta of United States v. Wong Kim Ark,[36] which excepted from its doctrine of citizenship by birth "children of Indian tribes owing direct allegiance to their several tribes."

Other theories have been advanced as additional justification for this unique status of the Indians, which departed from the common-law doctrine of ius soli.[37] One writer[38] believes that the economic interests of the land grabbers and Indian traders caused their opposition to citizenship for the Indians. They feared the destruction of their business with the coming of Indian suffrage, which was expected to accompany citizenship. Other writers maintained that citizenship should be denied Indians because they were strangers to our laws, customs, and privileges,[39] because they would add to burdens imposed by naturalization of aliens,[40] and because they enjoyed special privileges, such as exemption from taxation.[41]

The Indian question, which had been overshadowed after the Civil War by discussion of the economic welfare, freedom, and citizenship of the Negro, became a live issue toward the close of the nineteenth century. Many writers realized the incongruity of disenfranchisement and noncitizenship of Indians in a country founded on the principle of the equality of man and agreed that "the ultimate objective point to which all efforts for progress should be directed is to fix upon the Indian the same personal, legal, and political status which is common to all other inhabitants."[42]

The Indians, however, frequently did not welcome federal citizenship;[43] they often chose to leave their homes in order to retain their tribal membership.[44] A report of the Bureau of Municipal Research submitted in 1915 to a Joint Commission of Congress which requested its preparation, stated that "the Indian (except in rare individual cases) does not desire citizenship."[45]

The delegates of the Five Civilized Tribes opposed the grant of federal citizenship to their people because they feared it would terminate their tribal government.[46] Indians were often un-

---

[28] An Indian was not regarded as "a white person" within the naturalization laws. In re Camille, 6 Fed. 256 (C. C. Ore. 1880); In re Burton, 1 Alaska 111 (1900); 13 Yale L. J. 250, 252 (1904). In 1870 these laws were extended to include aliens of African nativity and to persons of African descent, Act of July 14, 1870, sec. 7, 16 Stat. 254, 256.

[29] 7 Op. A. G. 746 (1856).

[30] Pound, Nationals Without a Nation (1922), 22 Col. L. Rev. 97, 99; Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 102 (1884); cf. United States v. Elm, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15048 (D. C. N. D. N. Y., 1877).

[31] Hunt, The American Passport (1898), pp. 146–148. Manuscript instructions of the Department of State provided:

> Even if he [an Indian] has not acquired citizenship, he is a ward of the Government and entitled to the consideration and assistance of our diplomatic and consular officers. (P. 147.)

[32] 7 Op. A. G. 746 (1856).

[33] To clarify its effect, the Senate Judiciary Committee filed a report pursuant to Senate Resolution of April 7, 1870, concluding that the Indians did not attain citizenship by the Fourteenth Amendment; Sen. Rept. No. 268, 41st Cong., 3d sess. (1870), pp. 1–11.

[34] McKay v. Campbell, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8840 (D. C. Ore. 1871).

[35] 112 U. S. 94 (1884). The Court also held that citizenship was not acquired by abandonment of tribal membership. Also see United States v. Osborn, 2 Fed. 58 (D. C. Ore. 1880). On the effect of tribal membership upon citizenship see Katzenmeyer v. United States, 225 Fed. 523 (C. C. A. 7, 1915).

[36] 169 U. S. 649, 693 (1898).

[37] Krieger, Principles of the Indian Law and the Act of June 18, 1934 (1935), 3 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 279, 282–283.

[38] Abel, The Slaveholding Indians (1915), vol. 1, p. 170.

[39] Russell, The Indian Before the Law (1909), 18 Yale L. J. 328; Canfield, Legal Position of the Indian (1881), 15 Am. L. Rev. 21, 27–28, 37; cf. Lambertson, Indian Citizenship (1886), 20 Am. L. Rev. 183, 189; Harsha, Law for the Indians (1882), 134 N. Am. Rev. 272, 277; Blackmar, Indian Education (1892), 2 Am. Acad. Pol. & Soc. Sci. 813, 833; Labadie v. United States, 6 Okla. 400, 51 Pac. 666 (1897).

[40] Krieger, Principles of the Indian Law and the Act of June 18, 1934 (1935), 3 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 279, 286; Lambertson, Indian Citizenship (1886), 20 Am. L. Rev. 183, 187–189.

[41] Lambertson, Indian Citizenship, 20 Am. L. Rev. (1886), 183, 188. For a discussion of the discrimination against Indians because of exemption from taxation, see sec. 10; on tax exemption generally, see Chapter 13.

[42] Abbot, Indians and the Law (1888), 2 Harv. L. Rev. 167, 174. Also see Harsha, Law for the Indians (1882), 134 N. A. Rev. 272; Blackmar, Indian Education (1892), 2 Am. Acad. Pol. & Soc. Sci. 813, 834. U. S. Senator J. H. Kyle contended that the Indians have a good character for citizenship. How Shall the Indians be Educated? (1894), 159 N. A. Rev. 434, 441. Contra Canfield, Legal Position of the Indian (1881), 15 Am. L. Rev. 21, 36–37.

[43] Leupp, The Indian and His Problem (1910), p. 35. Sometimes Indians were made citizens willy-nilly, Willoughby, The Constitutional Law of the United States (1929), pp. 390–391.

[44] See Chapter 3, secs. 4E, 4G.

[45] Administration of the Indian Office (Bureau of Municipal Research Publication no. 65) (1915), p. 17.

[46] Memorial relating to the Indians, Choctaw delegates, Sen. Misc. Doc. No. 7, 45th Cong., 2d sess., December 10, 1877, vol. I; Memorial against bill to enable Indians to become citizens, Sen. Misc. Doc. No. 18, 45th Cong., 2d sess., January 14, 1877, vol. I. The Five Civilized Tribes were excluded from the General Allotment Act of February 8 1887, secs. 6 and 8, 24 Stat. 388, 390, 391.

familiar with the significance of federal citizenship and sometimes recanted choosing it.[47]

C. EFFECT OF CITIZENSHIP

Many people who know that Indians are citizens are unaware of the legal consequences of citizenship.[48] The more common errors in this field may be disposed of briefly.

1. By virtue of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, Indians, as citizens of the United States, automatically become citizens of the state of their residence.[49]

2. Except when a special statute or treaty has provided otherwise, citizenship does not impair the force of tribal law[50] or affect tribal existence.[51] Statutes or treaties naturalizing Indians often expressly permit those who become citizens to retain their tribal rights.[52] Citizenship and tribal membership are not incompatible.[53]

3. Citizenship, though it is today usually a prerequisite of suffrage, does not confer the right.[54] Before securing the franchise, a voter must comply with the requirements of the state law, which regularly include attainment of the age of majority and residence in the state for a specified period, and sometimes include payment of poll tax, literacy, or other special requirements.[55]

4. Citizenship is not incompatible with federal powers of guardianship.[56]

The United States Supreme Court has said :[57]

> It is thoroughly established that Congress has plenary authority over the Indians and all their tribal relations, and full power to legislate concerning their tribal property. The guardianship arises from their condition of tutelage or dependency; and it rests with Congress to determine when the relationship shall cease; the mere grant of rights of citizenship not being sufficient to terminate it. (Pp. 391–392.)

Citizenship does not affect the rights of the United States Government over the Indian. It retains jurisdiction over a citizen Indian for offenses committed within the reservation.[58] Citizenship does not impair the government's right to sue on behalf of a citizen allottee to protect his restricted lands,[59] nor affect its power to prevent state taxation of his property while he is living on the reservation,[60] or to exercise control over tribal property,[61] or to exclude bill collectors from coming on the reservation on days when payments are made to the Indians,[62] or to exempt unrestricted property from levy, sale, or forfeiture.[63] Many rights, such as the right to sue or contract, are not derived from or dependent on citizenship.[64]

It has been held that the citizenship of the Pueblos and many of the Alaskan Indians did not terminate their subjection to federal jurisdiction.[65] The conferring of citizenship does not

---

[47] This is shown by Art. 13 of the Treaty of February 23, 1867, with the Senecas and others, 15 Stat. 513, 516, which provides that a member who changes his mind after becoming a citizen shall not be allowed to rejoin the tribe unless the agent shall signify that he is "through poverty or incapacity, unfit to continue in the exercise of the responsibilities of citizenship of the United States, and likely to become a public charge."

[48] Op. Sol. I. D., M.28869, February 13, 1937, p. 5. When the Citizenship Act was passed in 1924, many tax officials in New Mexico thought that all Indians were subject to taxation. Goodrich, The Legal Status of the California Indian (1926), 14 Calif. L. Rev. 83, 157, 180–181. On taxation of Indians, see Chapter 13.

[49] Deere v. State of New York, 22 F. 2d 851, 852 (D. C. N. D. N. Y. 1927). Also see Porter v. Hall, 34 Ariz. 308, 271 Pac. 411 (1928).

[50] Yakima Joe v. To-is-lap, 191 Fed. 516 (C. C. Ore. 1910). Also see Chapter 7.

[51] See Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, 308 (1902); United States v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278, 288–290 (1909); Hallowell v. United States, 221 U. S. 317, 324 (1911); Tiger v. Western Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286 (1911); United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 28, 38 (1913); United States v. Noble, 237 U. S. 74 (1915); Williams v. Johnson, 239 U. S. 414 (1915); United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591 (1916); Winton v. Amos, 255 U. S. 373 (1921). Also see Knoepfler, Legal Status of American Indian and His Property (1922), 7 Ia. L. B. 232, 240–241; and Chapter 14, sec. 2.

[52] Act of May 2, 1890, sec. 43, 26 Stat. 81, 99, provides for the naturalization of the Indian tribes in the Indian Territory and states that Indians who become citizens retain their rights as tribal members.

[53] United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591 (1916); Halbert v. United States, 283 U. S. 753, 762–763 (1931), rev'g United States v. Halbert, 38 F. 2d 795 (C. C. A. 9, 1930), cert. granted 282 U. S. 818; United States v. Boylan, 265 Fed. 165, 171 (C. C. A. 2, 1920), aff'g 256 Fed. 468 (D. C. N. D. N. Y. 1919), app. dism. 257 U. S. 614 (1921); Farrell v. United States, 110 Fed. 942 (C. C. A. 8, 1901).

[54] See sec. 3, infra. Also see Act of June 19, 1930, 46 Stat. 787, 8 U. S. C. 3a (Cherokee Indians resident in North Carolina).

[55] See United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432, 445 (1903); 8 Op. A. G. 300 (1857). In some states citizenship is the only qualification. Calif. Const. (1879), Art. II, sec. 1, "Every native citizen of the United States * * * shall be entitled to vote at all elections * * *."

[56] The contrary opinion of the United States Supreme Court in Matter of Heff, 197 U. S. 488 (1905) holding that Congress could not regulate the sale of liquor to Indians who were citizens was expressly overruled by United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591, 598 (1916), which held:

> * * * Citizenship is not incompatible with tribal existence or continued guardianship, and so may be conferred without completely emancipating the Indians or placing them beyond the reach of congressional regulations adopted for their protection.

Bledsoe, Indian Land Laws, 2d ed. (1913), though recognizing that citizenship does not remove the restrictions on allotments, pp. 34–36, does not share this view, pp. 3–33.

See Op. Sol. I. D., M.28869, February 13, 1937, p. 5; 20 L. D. 157, 159 (1895); 31 L. D. 439 (1902), and 55 I. D. 14, 29 (1934). In rejecting a claim by courts of the State of New York to jurisdiction over certain Indians for acts committed on an Indian reservation, the court in United States v. Boylan, 265 Fed. 165 (C. C. A. 2, 1920), aff'g. 256 Fed. 468 (D. C. N. D. N. Y. 1919), app. dism. 257 U. S. 614 (1921), said:

> * * * even a grant of citizenship does not terminate the tribal status or relieve the Indian from the guardianship of the government. (P. 171.)

Accord: United States v. Abrams, 194 Fed. 82 (C. C. A. 8, 1912), aff'g 181 Fed. 847 (C. C. E. D. Okla., 1910); United States v. Noble, 237 U. S. 74, 79 (1915); Hallowell v. United States, 221 U. S. 317 (1911). Also see Williams v. Johnson, 239 U. S. 414 (1915); United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 28, 48 (1913), rev'g 198 Fed. 539 (D. C. N. M. 1912); Farrell v. United States, 110 Fed. 942 (C. C. A. 8, 1901); Renfrow v. United States, 3 Okla. 161, 41 Pac. 88 (1895). The last sentence of the Citizenship Act clearly shows the congressional intention to continue federal trusteeship despite the conferring of citizenship. Butte, The Legal Status of the American Indian (1912), p. 17, criticizes the dual relationship of citizenship and wardship.

[57] Winton v. Amos, 255 U. S. 373 (1921).

[58] Chapter 18. Also see United States v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278 (1909).

[59] Bowling v. United States, 233 U. S. 528 (1914), aff'g 191 Fed. 19 (C. C. A. 8, 1911); United States v. Sherburne Mercantile Co., 68 F. 2d 155 (C. C. A. 9, 1933). Also see Chapter 19, sec. 2A(1).

[60] See Chapter 13, sec. 3.

[61] Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, 308 (1902).

[62] Rainbow v. Young, 161 Fed. 835 (C. C. A. 8, 1908), rev'g. 154 Fed. 489.

[63] The Congressional intent must be clear. Goudy v. Meath, 203 U. S. 146 (1906).

[64] See secs. 6, 7. Exceptions to this rule are cases in the federal courts dependent upon diversity of citizenship.

[65] For discussion of the status of Pueblos of New Mexico, see Chapter 20; and of the Alaskan Indians, see Chapter 21.

"necessarily end the right or duty of the United States to pass laws in their interest as a dependent people." [66]

5. Citizenship is not inconsistent with restrictions on property and does not confer on incompetent persons, like minors, the right to control or dispose of their property.[67]

Although prior to the Citizenship Act [68] Indian citizenship was often associated with the possession of unrestricted property, there is no intrinsic relation between the two. It does not detract from the dignity or value of citizenship when a person possessed of an estate is deprived of the right of alienation.[69]

[66] Hallowell v. United States, 221 U. S. 317, 324 (1911). Even though the members of the Choctaw Nation were citizens of the United States and of the State of Mississippi, Congress by a series of acts from 1891 to 1908, cited in Houghton, The Legal Status of Indian Suffrage in the United States (1931), 19 Calif. L. Rev. 507, 515, fn. 39, rescued them from destitution, removed them to the Indian Territory, and equipped them with tools and food to last for 6 months.

[67] The Supreme Court in Tiger v. Western Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286 (1911), said:

> The privileges and immunities of Federal citizenship have never been held to prevent governmental authority from placing such restraints upon the conduct or property of citizens as is necessary for the general good. Incompetent persons, though citizens, may not have the full right to control their persons and property. The privileges and immunities of citizenship were said, in the Slaughter-House Cases, (16 Wall. 36, 76). to comprehend:
>
> "Protection by the Government with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety, subject, nevetheless, to such restraints as the Government may prescribe for the general good of the whole." (Pp. 315–316.)

Also see Brader v. James, 246 U. S. 88 (1918); United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591 (1916); United States v. Logan, 105 Fed. 240 (C. C. Ore. 1900); United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 28 (1913), rev'g 198 Fed. 539 (D. C. N. M. 1912); Beck v. Flournoy Live-Stock and Real Estate Co., 65 Fed. 30 (C. C. A. 8, 1894), app. dism. 163 U. S. 686; Contra: Territory of N. Mex. v. Delinquent Taxpayers, 12 N. M. 139 (1904).

[68] Act of June 2, 1924, 43 Stat. 253, 8 U. S. C. 3.

[69] Williams v. Steinmetz, 16 Okla. 104, 82 Pac. 986 (1905); Meriam, Problem of Indian Administration (1928), p. 753.

SECTION 3. SUFFRAGE

In a democracy suffrage is the most basic civil right, since its exercise is the chief means whereby other rights may be safeguarded.[70] The enfranchisement of the Indians has been a slow and is still an incomplete process. In most states Indians meeting the ordinary suffrage requirements can and do vote. In some of the sparsely settled western states, where they form a large proportion of the population, their vote is of considerable importance in close primaries and elections.[71] While at first it was asserted that unscrupulous whites could control the vote of the ignorant,[72] many Indians are becoming increasingly aware of their political power and responsibility, and are directing considerable attention to matters directly affecting them, such as tribal claims and water rights.[73]

A. INDIAN DISENFRANCHISEMENT

The term "Indians not taxed" has been frequently used in statutes excluding Indians from voting. It appears in one of the two places in the original Constitution relating specifically to the Indians: viz, Article 1, section 2, which declares that Indians not taxed shall not be counted as "free persons" in determining the representations of any state in Congress or in computing direct taxes to be levied by the United States. This phrase is used in the Act of March 1, 1790, providing for the first census,[74] reappears in section 2 of the Fourteenth Amendment and the Civil Rights Act of April 9, 1866,[75] declaring who shall be federal citizens, and was used to exclude Indians in the apportionment of representatives to a territorial or state legislature [76] or constitutional convention, or from participation in a referendum to determine whether the inhabitants of a territory desired statehood.[77]

Various state and federal laws enacted from the beginning of the nineteenth century to the early part of the twentieth disenfranchised "Indians not taxed," [78] or limited voters to white citizens.[79]

Though permitted to vote in their former country, Mexico, the California Indians were disenfranchised by the constitutional convention which established a government for the State of California.[80] In order to leave a loophole for compliance with the spirit of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo,[81] the new constitution [82] permitted the legislature, "by a two-thirds concurrent vote, to admit to the right of suffrage 'Indians, or the descendants of Indians, in such special cases as such a proportion of the legislative body may deem just or proper.'" As was expected, the first legislature restricted the vote to white citizens.[83]

Some state constitutions and statutes still reflect early legal theory that "Indians not taxed," being generally identified as persons born subject to the jurisdiction of the tribe of which they are members, were not citizens of the United States. The clearest cases of such racial discrimination are found in the constitutions of the States of Idaho,[84] New Mexico,[85] and Wash-

[70] See Thayer, A People Without Law (1891), 68 Atl. Month. 540, pp. 676, 682, 686.

[71] "* * * where they are a substantial element of the population, candidates for state office have found it worth while to hold rallies and barbecues, Democratic, Republican and Progressive, on the reservations." (Goodrich, The Legal Status of the California Indian (1926), 14 Calif. L. Rev. 83, 157, 179.)

[72] Leupp, The Indian and His Problem (1910), pp. 35, 64; also see pp. 358, 360.

[73] Meriam, Problem of Indian Administration (1928), pp. 756–757.

[74] 1 Stat. 101; also in subsequent census statutes. See Act of June 18, 1929, sec. 22, 46 Stat. 21, 26.

[75] Sec. 1, 14 Stat. 27.

[76] Act of June 19, 1878, 20 Stat. 178, 193; Act of March 3, 1887, sec. 22, 24 Stat. 635, 639; Act of March 3, 1891, 26 Stat. 908, 930; Act of July 16, 1894, 28 Stat. 107. For other terms of exclusion see Act of March 3, 1849, sec. 4, 9 Stat. 403, 404; Act of September 9, 1850, 9 Stat. 446; Act of June 3, 1880, sec. 5, 21 Stat. 154.

[77] Act of May 4, 1858, sec. 3, 11 Stat. 269, 271; Act of June 19, 1878, 20 Stat. 178, 193.

[78] See United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375, 378 (1886); Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 99 (1884); Act of June 16, 1906, sec. 25, 34 Stat. 267, 280. New Mexico still excludes Indians on this ground. This state was admitted to statehood under a special compact with the United States exempting Indian lands from taxation; and with a constitution excluding "Indians not taxed" from the electorate. New Mexico Constitution, Art. XII, sec. 1.

[79] Act of October 25, 1914, 3 Stat. 143; Act of March 2, 1819, sec. 4, 3 Stat. 489, 490; Act of April 20, 1836, c. 54, sec. 5, 5 Stat. 10, 12; Act of March 2, 1861, sec. 5, 12 Stat. 209, 211; Act of May 3, 1887, sec. 22, 24 Stat. 635, 639. By the Act of February 28, 1861, sec. 5, 12 Stat. 172, 173, whites and citizens recognized by Treaty with Mexico were eligible to vote and hold office.

[80] Goodrich, The Legal Status of the California Indian (1926), 14 Calif. L. Rev., 83–99.

[81] Signed February 12, 1848, ratification exchanged May 12, 1848, Treaty proclaimed July 4, 1848, 9 Stat. 922, discussed in Chapter 25, sec. 3. See United States v. Ritchie, 17 How. 525 (1854).

[82] Goodrich, op. cit., p. 91.

[83] Ibid.

[84] Idaho Constitution, Art. 6, sec. 3. This restriction is applicable to "Indians not taxed," who have not severed their tribal relations and adopted the habits of civilization.

[85] Art. 7. Cf. Act of June 20, 1910, sec. 2, 36 Stat. 557, providing that the Constitution of New Mexico shall make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color and shall not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence. Also Provision Fifth providing that the State shall not restrict the right of suffrage on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

ington,[86] which deny the right to vote to "Indians not taxed," while granting the ballot to whites not taxed.

The laws of a few other states, though not specifically discriminating against Indians, are construed and applied so as to result in discrimination. In Arizona, Indians are denied the right to vote on the ground that they are within the provisions[87] denying suffrage to "persons under guardianship."[88] The law of South Dakota excludes from voting Indians who maintain tribal relations, but has not been enforced for many years.

The Attorney General of Colorado rendered an opinion on November 14, 1936, that Indians had no right to vote under Colorado law because they were not citizens. This ruling is clearly erroneous.[89] The Utah Attorney General, on January 23, 1937, held that Indians residing on a reservation within the state were not residents and therefore not entitled to vote. This ruling conflicts with the opinion of the United States Supreme Court, holding that the land of an Indian reservation is part of the state within which the reservation is located.[90]

B. CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTION OF INDIAN VOTING RIGHTS[91]

On March 30, 1870, the Fifteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution was adopted, providing:

> SEC. 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.
>
> SEC. 2. The Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

With the passage of the Citizenship Act in 1924, considerations of disability because of allegiance to a tribe became irrelevant to the question of citizenship. The provisions of state constitutions and statutes based on these considerations which would operate to exclude Indian citizens from voting are probably void under the Fifteenth Amendment.[92]

The year following the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1870,[93] the United States District Court for Oregon stated[94] that "an Indian * * * who is a citizen of the United States * * * cannot be excluded from this privilege [of voting] on the ground of being an Indian, as that would be to exclude him on account of race." (P. 166.) As was said by the United States Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Reese,[95]

> If citizens of one race having certain qualifications are permitted by law to vote, those of another having the same qualifications must be. Previous to this amendment, there was no constitutional guaranty against this discrimination: now there is. It follows that the amendment has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right which is within the protecting power of Congress. That right is exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. This, under the express provisions of the second section of the amendment, Congress may enforce by "appropriate legislation." (P. 218.)

This doctrine was applied in the case of Neal v. Delaware,[96] which invalidated a provision of the Delaware Constitution restricting suffrage to the white race. The court declared:

> Beyond question the adoption of the Fifteenth Amendment had the effect, in law, to remove from the State Constitution, or render inoperative, that provision which restricts the right of suffrage to the white race. (P. 389.)

These cases leave no doubt that, under the Fifteenth Amendment, Indians are protected against all legislation which discriminates against them in prescribing the qualifications of voters, and that it is immaterial whether the disenfranchisement is direct or indirect. This view does not conflict with the theory of Elk v. Wilkins, supra, which held simply that a noncitizen Indian might be disenfranchised by state legislation along with noncitizens of other races.

On January 26, 1938, the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior issued an opinion on the question of whether a state can constitutionally deny the franchise to Indians. The opinion concluded:

> * * * I am of the opinion that the Fifteenth Amendment clearly prohibits any denial of the right to vote to Indians under circumstances in which non-Indians would be permitted to vote. The laws of Idaho, New Mexico, and Washington which would exclude Indians not taxed from voting in effect exclude citizens of one race from voting on grounds which are not applied to citizens of other races. For this reason I believe such laws are unconstitutional under the Fifteenth Amendment. Similarly, the laws of Idaho and South Dakota which would exclude Indians who maintain tribal relations from voting are believed to be unconstitutional as such laws exclude citizens from voting on grounds which apply only to one race.[97] (P. 8.)

Two Attorneys General of the State of Washington have ruled that the Indian disenfranchisement clause in the Constitution of Washington is invalid.[98]

The Attorney General of New York in 1928 rendered an opinion to the effect that Indians resident upon reservations in that state are entitled to vote the same as any other qualified citizen.[99]

Congress has implemented the provisions of the Fifteenth Amendment in various general and special statutes.

The Reconstruction Acts, providing for the admission of the Confederate states to the Union, prohibited these states from depriving of the right to vote any class of citizens of the United

---

[86] Art. 6.

[87] Arizona Laws, 1933, Chapter 62.

[88] Porter v. Hall, 34 Ariz. 308, 271 Pac. 411 (1928); discussed by N. D. Houghton, The Legal Status of Indian Suffrage in the United States (1931), 19 Calif. L. Rev. 507, 509, 518. The decision was based on the ground that Indians living on the reservations are "persons under guardianship" and hence "wards of the national Government" within the meaning of the Constitution of the State of Arizona. This opinion appears to be based on an erroneous conception of the status of Indians, especially of the relationship of guardian and wards. See contra: Swift v. Leach, 45 N. D. 437, 178 N. W. 437 (1920), cited in the dissenting opinion in the Porter case. Also see sec. 9, infra.

[89] See discussion of citizenship, sec. 2, supra.

[90] United States v. McBratney, 104 U. S. 621 (1881).

[91] No attempt is made in this chapter to treat of the rights of Indians to vote in tribal elections. This subject has been covered in Chapter 7. It may be noted, however, that many of the Indian constitutions contain bills of rights, including guarantees of the right of suffrage. Thus, for example, the Constitution of the Blackfeet Tribe, approved December 13, 1935, provides: "Any member of the Blackfeet Tribe, twenty-one (21) years of age or over, shall be eligible to vote at any election when he or she presents himself or herself at a polling place within his or her voting district." (Art. VIII, sec. 1.)

[92] Op. Sol. I. D., M.29596, January 26, 1938; Guinn v. United States, 238 U. S. 347 (1915), holding unconstitutional the grandfather clause in the Constitution of Oklahoma; Myers v. Anderson, 238 U. S. 368 (1915), invalidating a similar clause in a Maryland statute; and see Nixon v. Herndon, 273 U. S. 536 (1927).

[93] Act of May 31, 1870, 16 Stat. 140.

[94] McKay v. Campbell, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8840 (D. C. Ore. 1871).

[95] 92 U. S. 214 (1875).

[96] 103 U. S. 370 (1880).

[97] Op. Sol. I. D., M.29596, January 26, 1938.

[98] Op. A. G., W. V. Tanner, June 15, 1916, and Op. No. 4086 of G. W. Hamilton, April 1, 1936.

[99] Op. A. G. N. Y. (1928), p. 204. Informal opinions have also been rendered to the same effect by attorneys general of many other states. For example, the Attorney General of Florida in a letter dated March 13, 1923, to the Chairman of the County Commissioners, Everglades, Fla.

States who are entitled to vote under the Federal Constitution, dealing similarly with the right to hold office.[100] There are also many general civil rights laws which are applicable to the disenfranchisement of Indians because of their race. In 1906 the Enabling Act for the State of Oklahoma expressly permitted members of an Indian nation or tribe in the Indian Territory in Oklahoma to vote for delegates[101] and prohibited any law restricting the right of suffrage because of race or color.[102]

[100] Act of January 26, 1870, 16 Stat. 62, 63; Act of February 23, 1870, 16 Stat. 67; Act of March 30, 1870, 16 Stat. 80.

[101] Act of June 16, 1906, sec. 2, 34 Stat. 267, 268; also see Act of June 20, 1910, secs. 2 and 20, 36 Stat. 557, 559, 569 (N. M.).

[102] Act of June 16, 1906, secs. 2 and 3, 34 Stat. 267. Cf. sec. 25, p. 279, applying to New Mexico and permitting discrimination against "Indians not taxed."

SECTION 4. ELIGIBILITY FOR PUBLIC OFFICE AND EMPLOYMENT

A. PUBLIC OFFICE

The fact that one is an Indian is not, generally speaking, a disqualification for public office. Exclusionary statutes based on race are probably unconstitutional.[103] General Parker, a Seneca Indian, was qualified, according to an opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, to hold the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.[104]

Many early statutes disqualified noncitizen Indians from holding public offices by limiting incumbents to citizens of the United States[105] or to whites.[106] After the Civil War, the acts admitting the Confederate states to the Union prohibited the exclusion of elected officials because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.[107] These acts were implemented by the Act of April 20, 1871.[108] A number of Indians were elected as delegates to the Constitutional Convention of the Territory of Oklahoma.[109] Nevertheless, even now a few states still bar Indians from public office, by provisions which are probably unconstitutional. Idaho[110] prohibits from holding any civil office Indians not taxed who have not severed their tribal relations and adopted the habits of civilization. The law of South Dakota excludes Indians "while maintaining tribal relations."[111]

B. PREFERENCE IN INDIAN AND OTHER GOVERNMENTAL SERVICE.

(1) Extent of employment.—Congress has frequently manifested its intention to grant preferences to Indians in certain positions. Unfortunately, many such preferential statutes have become "dead letters," or been only partially fulfilled.[112] Officials have sometimes justified their failures in this respect by maintaining the impossibility of securing competent Indians, especially for the more important positions.[113] Some critics have ascribed this failure to the fact that many positions, like that of Indian agent, were regarded for decades as political plums,[114] and that the Indian Office comprised one of the largest fields for political plunder in the Federal Government.[115]

Some notable increases in Indian employment have been effected in recent years.[116] The number of Indians employed in the Washington office increased between 1934 and 1937 from 10 percent of the total staff to about 35 percent. By 1939 Indians occupied more than half of the regular positions of the Indian Service and more than 70 percent of the emergency positions.[117]

(2) Civil service.—The Indian Office was one of the first bureaus to be placed under civil service.[118] Indians entering the Office of Indian Affairs were required to qualify in regular civil service examinations, except that certain preferences were allowed in compliance with statutes providing that Indians shall be employed whenever practicable. The formulation of a competitive civil service for Indians under authority of the Indian Reorganization Act is now in progress.[119] Standards have been established and examinations conducted for nurses and organization field agents, and a number of appointments have been made from the registers established as a result of these examinations. Executive Order No. 8043 of January 31, 1939, permits the appointment of Indians of one-quarter or more Indian blood to any position in the Indian Service without examination.[120] By Executive Order No. 8383 of March 28, 1940, Indians in the Office

[103] See Nixon v. Herndon, 273 U. S. 536 (1927).

[104] 13 Op. A. G. 27 (1869). A later opinion held that an Indian, while a member of a tribe and subject to tribal jurisdiction and residing in the Indian Territory, was not competent to take the official oath as postmaster. The basis for this ruling was that the government could not enforce the required bond because the Indian would be immune to suit. 18 Op. A. G. 181 (1885).

[105] Act of September 9, 1850, sec. 6, 9 Stat. 446, 449; Act of May 30, 1854, sec. 5, 10 Stat. 277, 279; Act of August 18, 1856, sec. 21, 11 Stat. 52, 60, provided that noncitizens holding office in the Department of State shall not be paid.

[106] Act of August 14, 1848, sec. 5, 9 Stat. 323, 325; Act of March 3, 1849, sec. 5, 9 Stat. 403, 405; Act of March 2, 1853, sec. 5, 10 Stat. 172, 174; Act of December 22, 1869, sec. 6, 16 Stat. 59.

[107] Act of March 30, 1870, 16 Stat. 80, 81, admitting Texas to the Union.

[108] Act of April 20, 1871, sec. 2, 17 Stat. 5.

[109] Leupp, The Indian and His Problem (1910), pp. 341–342.

[110] Constitution of Idaho, Art. 6, sec. 3.

[111] Compiled Laws of S. D., sec. 92 (1929).

[112] See 3(b) infra.

[113] "* * * the policy of all administrations since Commissioner Morgan took office has been to give educated Indians every practicable chance to serve their people; but * * * the experiment of putting them into the places of highest responsibility has, except in rare instances, not worked so successfully, * * *." Leupp, The Indian and His Problem (1910), p. 110. Also see Schmeckebier, The Office of Indian Affairs. Its History, Activities, and Organization (1927), pp. 295–296, and 7 Indians at Work (September 1939), No. 1, p. 41.

[114] Leupp, The Indian and His Problem (1910), pp. 98–99.

[115] Administration of the Indian Office (Bureau of Municipal Research Publication No. 65) (1915), pp. 24–25.

[116] Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1937), pp. 241–242. In 1910 there were about 200 Indians in the Office of Indian Affairs. Leupp, The Indian and His Problem (1910), p. 96.

The Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior for 1938 states:

> On July 1, 1937, there were authorized in the Indian field service and Alaska 6,933 permanent year-round positions. On April 30, 1938, there were 3,916 Indians employed in the Indian Service, of whom 3,627 were in regular year-round positions. Approximately one-half of the regular employees of the Indian Service are Indians. Slightly more than 40 percent of the Indians employed are full-bloods. (P. XIV.)

Slightly more than 70 percent of the Indians employed were of one-half or more degrees Indian blood. (Ibid., p. 257.) The personnel records do not classify as Indians those with a smaller amount of Indian blood than one-fourth.

[117] Between July 1, 1933, and May 1, 1937, the number of Indians in the Washington office increased from 11 to 83. 4 Indians At Work, No. 20 (June 1, 1937), p. 39. According to data submitted by the Indian Office on November 7, 1939, 109 of the 384 employees of the Washington office were Indians.

[118] Administration of the Indian Office. (Bureau of Municipal Research Publication No. 65) (1915), p. 24.

[119] Aberle, Some Aspects of the Personnel Problem of the Indian Service in the United States in Indians of the United States, Contributions by the delegation of the United States First Inter-American Conference on Indian Life, Patzcuaro, Mexico, published by Office of Indian Affairs (April 1940), pp. 61, 64. Also see subsection 3(b) infra.

[120] There have been numerous Executive orders affecting the employment of Indians, e. g., Executive orders of August 14, 1928; July 2, 1930; April 14, 1934; July 26, 1936.

of Indian Affairs on February 1, 1939, who met certain requirements were given a classified civil-service status.

(3) Treaties and statutes.—With a few exceptions, throughout the history of the United States Indians have generally been granted preference in the actual hiring of employees for public positions in the Indian Service which require little or no skill or which, like the post of interpreter, can be filled only by them, or in the Army as scouts, because of their unusual qualifications,[121] or for laboring positions,[122] These positions, which were often created by appropriation acts, usually paid low wages,[123] and were sometimes supported by tribal funds.[124] Similarly today most Indians in the Government Service are employed in clerical, stenographic, or laboring work, though a few hold supervisory positions.[125]

(a) Treaties.—Treaties occasionally provided for preference in employment of Indians.[126] The Treaty of April 28, 1866,[127] between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations contains an interesting provision:

> And the United States agree that in the appointment of marshals and deputies, preference, qualifications being equal, shall be given to competent members of the said nations, the object being to create a laudable ambition to acquire the experience necessary for political offices of importance in the respective nations.

(b) General statutes.—The Act of June 30, 1834, the first important employment statute for Indians, gave them preference for positions as "interpreters or other persons employed for the benefit of the Indians," if "properly qualified for the execution of the duties."[128] Section 5 of the Act of March 3, 1875,[129] provided that "where Indians can perform the duties they shall be employed" in Indian agencies. Again in the Act of March 1, 1883,[130] Congress manifested its desire to increase the employment of Indians in the Indian Service, by providing: "* * * preference shall at all times, as far as practicable, be given to Indians in the employment of clerical, mechanical, and other help on reservations and about agencies."

A broader provision, which also includes positions outside the Indian Bureau, appears in the General Allotment Act.[131] Offered as an additional inducement to the abandonment of tribal relations, it provides:

> * * * And hereafter in the employment of Indian police, or any other employees in the public service among any of the Indian tribes or bands affected by this act, and where Indians can perform the duties required, those Indians who have availed themselves of the provisions of this act and become citizens of the United States shall be preferred.

Seven years later a law provided for preference for "herders, teamsters, and laborers, and where practicable in all other employments in connection with the agencies and the Indian service."[132]

Section 12 of the Wheeler-Howard Act,[133] the sixth major attempt in the space of a century, to give preference to Indians in the Indian Service, provides:

> The Secretary of the Interior is directed to establish standards of health, age, character, experience, knowledge, and ability for Indians who may be appointed, without regard to civil-service laws, to the various positions maintained, now or hereafter, by the Indian Office, in the administration of functions or services affecting any Indian tribe. Such qualified Indians shall hereafter have the preference to appointment to vacancies in any such positions.

This provision contemplates the establishment within the Interior Department of a special civil service for Indians alone. The failure of the Interior Department to complete such a system has been ascribed to lack of adequate appropriations.[134]

(4) Statutes of limited application.—

(a) Construction work on reservation.—Agreements with Indian tribes[135] or statutes appropriating money for the con-

---

[121] For a discussion of the policy of preferring Indians for appointment in the Indian Service, see Meriam and Associates, Problem of Indian Administration (1928), pp. 156–159.

[122] Act of April 27, 1904, 33 Stat. 352, 354 (Crows), "* * * nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the employment of such engineers or other skilled employees, or to prevent the employment of white labor where it is impracticable for the Crows to perform the same." Also see Act of June 7, 1924, c. 318, 43 Stat. 606 (Navajo); Act of March 1, 1926, 44 Stat. 135 (Quinaielts); Act of April 19, 1926, 44 Stat. 303 (Quinaielts); Act of July 3, 1926, 44 Stat. 888 (Chippewas); Act of May 12, 1928, c. 531, 45 Stat. 501 (Zuni); Act of May 27, 1930, c. 343, 46 Stat. 430 (Wind River) ("only Indian labor shall be employed except for engineering and supervision"); amended by Act of April 21, 1932, c. 123, 47 Stat. 88.

[123] Sec. 9 of the Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 735, provides that the pay of an agency interpreter shall be $300 annually (congressional statutes regarding the pay of interpreters are discussed in United States v. Mitchell, 109 U. S. 146 (1883)), while the Act of February 24, 1891, 26 Stat. 783, 784, provides for the employment of Indian scouts and guides without pay. In one of the treaties relating to the pensioning of Indians, the Treaty of September 27, 1830, with the Choctaws, Art. 21, 7 Stat. 333, 338, annual pensions of $25 were granted to a few surviving "Choctaw Warriors," not exceeding 20, "who marched and fought in the army with General Wayne." Provision was made for one of the few comparatively high-salaried Indians in the Treaty of August 7, 1790, unpublished treaty, Art. 3, Archives No. 17, which appoints McGillivray, Chief of the Creek Nation, as agent of the United States in said nation with the rank of brigadier general, and the annual salary of $1,200. Treaty of January 21, 1785, with the Wiandot, Delaware, Chippewa, and Ottawa Nations, 7 Stat. 16, Separate Article following Art. 10, which provides that two Delaware chiefs "who took up the hatchet" for the United States as lieutenant colonel and captain shall be restored to rank in the Delaware Nation as before the Revolutionary War. Also see Treaty of September 27, 1830, Art. 15, 7 Stat. 333, 335–336, providing that one chief of the Choctaw Nation when in military service shall receive the pay of a lieutenant colonel, and other chiefs the pay of majors and captains in the United States Army.

[124] Act of April 27, 1904, 33 Stat. 352, 354 (Crows); Act of March 3, 1905, Art. IV, 33 Stat. 1016, 1017 (Shoshones); Act of June 7, 1924, 43 Stat. 606 (Navajos); Act of March 1, 1926, c. 41, 44 Stat. 135 (Quinaielts); Act of April 19, 1926, c. 165, 44 Stat. 303 (Fort Peck and Blackfeet); Act of July 3, 1926, 44 Stat. 888 (Chippewas).

[125] Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1937), p. 241.

[126] Article 11 of the Treaty of March 11, 1863, with the Chippewas, 12 Stat. 1249, 1251: "Whenever the services of laborers are required upon the reservation, preference shall be given to full or mixed bloods, if they shall be found competent to perform them." Also see Treaty of May 7, 1864, with the Chippewas, Art. 11, 13 Stat. 693; Article 13 of the Treaty of October 21, 1867, with the Kiowas and Comanches, 15 Stat. 581, 585, provides: "The Indian agent, in employing a farmer, blacksmith, miller, and other employees herein provided for, qualifications being equal, shall give the preference to Indians."

[127] Art. 8, cl. 12, 14 Stat. 769.

[128] Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 9, 4 Stat. 735, 737.

[129] 18 Stat. 402, 449.

[130] Sec. 6, 22 Stat. 432, 451.

[131] Act of February 8, 1887, sec. 5, 24 Stat. 388, 389–390. The Act of February 14, 1923, 42 Stat. 1246 (Piutes), extended the provisions of this act, as amended, to lands purchased for Indians.

[132] Act of August 15, 1894, sec. 10, 28 Stat. 286, 313, 25 U. S. C. 44. Also see Act of May 17, 1882, 22 Stat. 68, 88; Act of July 4, 1884, 23 Stat. 76, 97.

[133] June 18, 1934, sec. 12, 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 472.

[134] 7 Indians at Work, No. 1, pp. 41–42 (1939); vol. 7, No. 5 p. 2 (1940).

[135] Act of June 10, 1896, Art. 3, 29 Stat. 321, 355: "It is agreed that in the employment of all agency and school employees preference in all cases be given to Indians residing on the reservation, who are well qualified for such positions." Also see Act of April 27, 1904, Art. 2, 33 Stat. 352, 354 (Crows); Act of March 3, 1905, Art. 4, 33 Stat. 1016, 1017 (Shoshones).

struction of roads[136] or for other public[137] or private work[138] on the reservations often require the employment of members of the tribe[139] or Indian labor.[140]

(b) Purchase of Indian products.—The Act of April 30, 1908,[141] provides that Indian labor shall be employed as far as practicable and that purchases of the products of Indian industry may be made in the open market in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. By subsequent amendments,[142] the portion of this provision regarding purchases was made applicable only to those purchases and contracts for supplies and services, except personal services, for the Indian Field Service, which exceed in amount $100 each.[143]

The Act of May 11, 1880,[144] authorizes the Secretary to purchase for use in the Indian Service articles manufactured at Indian manual and training schools.

(c) Military service.—The skill and bravery of Indians were utilized in fighting foreign foes[145] and other Indians.[146] Article III of the Treaty of September 17, 1778,[147] provided that the Delawares "* * * engage to join the troops of the United States aforesaid, with such a number of their best and most expert warriors as they can spare * * *." The Act of March 5, 1792,[148] provided for the employment of Indians to protect the frontiers of the nation. Some of the tribes agreed to furnish such warriors as "the president of the United States, or any officer having his authority therefor, may require," in prosecuting the War of 1812 against Great Britain.[149] A decade before the Civil War the Army contained a company of Shawnee and Delaware mounted volunteers,[150] Three full regiments of Indians were enlisted in the Union Army.[151] With the coming of peace, the President was authorized to employ in the territories and Indian country a maximum of 1,000 Indian scouts, to be paid like cavalry soldiers.[152] The Act of August 1, 1894,[153] permitted the enlistment of noncitizen Indians in the Army in times of peace.[154] Over 17,000 Indians served in the World War.[155] There are Indian scouts in the regular army of the United States.[156]

(d) Youth.—The Act of June 7, 1897,[157] requires the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to "employ Indian girls as assistant

---

[136] Act of May 1, 1888, Art. III, 25 Stat. 113, 114; Act of June 7, 1924, 43 Stat. 606, 607 (Navajos); Act of March 1, 1926, 44 Stat. 135. The Act of May 26, 1928, 45 Stat. 750, authorizes an appropriation for reservation roads not eligible for Government aid under the Federal Highway Act for which no other appropriation is available. $1,000,000 was appropriated for this purpose by the Act of July 21, 1932, sec. 301 (a)(2)(D), 47 Stat. 709, 717. The Act of May 27, 1930, c. 343, 46 Stat. 430, amended April 21, 1932, 47 Stat. 88, exempts from the requirement of employment of Indian labor roads built by funds provided by the State of Wyoming.

[137] Act of April 27, 1904, Art. 2, 33 Stat. 352, 354 (Crows), irrigation; Act of March 3, 1905, Art. 4, 33 Stat. 1016, 1017 (Shoshones); Act of April 19, 1926, 44 Stat. 303 (Quinaielts), water supply.

[138] Act of April 27, 1904, 33 Stat. 352, 354 (Crows), ditches, dams, canals, and fences; Act of June 28, 1906, 34 Stat. 547; Act of March 28, 1908, sec. 2, 35 Stat. 51, amended by Act of January 27, 1925, 43 Stat. 793, timber work on Menominee Indian reservation.

[139] Statutes cited in fn. 138, supra. Agreement with Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes on Shoshone reservation, Act of March 3, 1905, Art. 4, 33 Stat. 1016, 1017; Agreement with Indians of Crow Reservation, April 27, 1904, 33 Stat. 352, 354, "* * * no contract shall be awarded; nor employment given to other than Crow Indians, or whites intermarried with them, except that any Indian employed in construction may hire white men to work for him * * *."

[140] The Act of June 27, 1902, 32 Stat. 400, 402 (Chippewas), provides that purchasers of timber shall be required "when practicable, to employ Indian labor in the cutting, handling, and manufacture of said timber." The proceeds of such sales are received by the Indian Bureau and used for the benefit of the Indian children in the schools. 17 Op. A. G. 531 (1883). The Act of May 26, 1928, 45 Stat. 750, authorizes the employment of Indian labor on certain Shoshone Indian reservation roads; supplemented by Act of July 21, 1932, sec. 301(a)(2)(D), 47 Stat. 709, 717. The Act of May 27, 1930, c. 343, 46 Stat. 430, amended Act of April 21, 1932, 47 Stat. 88 (Wind River), excepts engineers and supervisors from the requirement for Indian labor.

[141] 35 Stat. 70.

[142] Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 23, 36 Stat. 855, 861, 25 U. S. C. 47, 93; Act of May 18, 1916, 39 Stat. 123, 126. Also see Act of January 12, 1927, 44 Stat. 934, 936, which creates an Indian Service supply fund.

[143] Sometimes appropriation acts contain special provisions empowering the Secretary of the Interior, when practicable, to buy Indian goods. For example, c. 290, sec. 3, of the Act of August 15, 1894, 28 Stat. 286, 312, and the Act of March 2, 1895, 28 Stat. 876, 907, contain the following provisions: "* * * That purchase [of supplies] in open market shall, as far as practicable, be made from Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. * * * That the Secretary of the Interior may, when practicable, arrange for the manufacture by Indians upon the reservation of shoes, clothing, leather, harness, and wagons."

[144] Sec. 1, 21 Stat. 114, 131.

[145] Treaty of September 27, 1830, with the Choctaws, Art. 21, 7 Stat. 333, 338.

[146] Treaty of September 24, 1857, with the Pawnees, Art. 11, 11 Stat. 729, 732, provides for compensation or replacement of property stolen from Pawnee scouts returning from an expedition with the American Army against the Cheyenne Indians.

[147] With the Delawares, 7 Stat. 13. The Treaty of December 2, 1794, with the Oneida, Tuscorora, and Stockbridge Indians, 7 Stat. 47, cites in its preamble the faithful assistance of a body of the Oneida, Tuscorora, and Stockbridge Indians who, because of their services during the Revolution, were driven from their homes, their houses and property destroyed. Arts. 1 and 5 of this treaty provided that $5,000 shall be distributed for individual losses and services in return for relinquishment of further claims. The Act of July 29, 1848, 9 Stat. 265, provided for the granting of a pension for widows of "Indian spies, who shall have served in the Continental line."

[148] 1 Stat. 241.

[149] Treaty of July 22, 1814, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 118. Also see Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandots and others, Art. 12, 7 Stat. 160, providing for payment for property destroyed during this war. Part of the Creeks assisted the British. See preamble to Treaty of August 9, 1814, with the Creeks, 7 Stat. 120. Other tribes did the same. For example see Treaty of September 8, 1815, with the Wyandots and others, 7 Stat. 131.

Cherokee warriors fought against Great Britain and the southern Indians. See Act of April 14, 1842, 5 Stat. 473. Shawnee warriors fought in the Florida War. See Joint Resolution March 3, 1845, 5 Stat. 800; and Treaty of October 18, 1820, with the Choctaws, Art. 11, 7 Stat. 210. The Navajos offered to fight the Apaches. See 16 Op. A. G. 451 (1880).

[150] Act of September 28, 1850, 9 Stat. 519.

[151] Bounties were provided for these regiments. Joint Resolution June 18, 1866, 14 Stat. 360. Also see Joint Resolution July 14, 1870, 16 Stat. 390; Abel, The Slaveholding Indians (1919), vol. 2, p. 76, stating that the Secretary of War was opposed to having Indians in the Army during the Civil War.

[152] Act of July 28, 1866, sec. 6, 14 Stat. 332, 333; Treaty of February 19, 1867, with the Dakotas and Sioux, Arts. 11–13, 15 Stat. 505, 507–508. Also see 16 Op. A. G. 451 (1880), and Act of August 12, 1876, 19 Stat. 131; Act of February 24, 1891, 26 Stat. 770, 774, and R. S. §1094, repealed by Act of March 3, 1933, 47 Stat. 1428.

[153] Sec. 2, 28 Stat. 215, 216, amended June 14, 1920, 41 Stat. 1077. Also see Act of April 22, 1898, sec. 5, 30 Stat. 364.

[154] Repealed by Act of June 14, 1920, 41 Stat. 1077.

[155] Flickinger, A Lawyer Looks at the American Indian, Past and Present, pt. 2 (1939), 6 Indians at Work, No. 9, pp. 26, 29.

[156] 10 U. S. C. 4, 786, R. S. § 1276, provides:

> Indians, enlisted or employed by order of the President as scouts, shall receive the pay and allowances of Cavalry soldiers.

10 U. S. C. 915 grants Indian scouts an allowance for horses. The Act of May 19, 1924, sec. 202(c), 43 Stat. 121, grants adjusted compensation, commonly called a bonus, to Indian scouts who were veterans of the World War.

[157] Indian Appropriation Act, fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, 30 Stat. 62–83. For similar provisions in previous appropriation acts see Act of June 10, 1896, 29 Stat. 321, 348, and Act of March 2, 1895, 28 Stat. 876, 906.

matrons and Indian boys as farmers and industrial teachers in all Indian schools when it is practicable to do so."

Sections 1 and 9 of the Act of June 28, 1937,[158] which establishes a permanent Civilian Conservation Corps, provide that camps may be established for a maximum of 10,000 Indian enrollees, who need not be unemployed or in need of employment, and who may be exempted from the requirement that part of the wages shall be paid to dependents.[159]

[158] 50 Stat. 319, 320. The original law, Act of March 31, 1933, c. 17, 48 Stat. 22, did not contain such a provision.

[159] Sec. 7, 50 Stat. 319. On regulations regarding operations of Indian Division of C. C. C., see 25 C. F. R. 18.1–18.29.

SECTION 5. ELIGIBILITY FOR STATE ASSISTANCE [160]

Some state administrators are unaware that Indians maintaining tribal relations or living on reservations are citizens,[161] or mistakenly assume that they are supported by the Federal Government,[162] and deny them relief. This discrimination in state aid has made more acute the economic distress of many Indians who are poor and live below any reasonable standard of health and decency.[163]

It has been administratively held that Indians are entitled to share in the aids and services provided by state laws, subsidized by federal grants-in-aid under the Social Security Act,[164] or direct or work-relief statutes.[165]

The Solicitor for the Department of the Interior in a memorandum dated April 22, 1936, holding that the Social Security Act was applicable to Indians, stated:

> * * * An Indian ward votes or is entitled to vote. United States v. Dewey County, supra; Anderson v. Mathews, 174 Cal. 537, 163 Pac. 902; Swift v. Leach, 45 N. D. 437, 178 N. W. 437. His children are entitled to attend public schools even though a Federal Indian school is available. LaDuke v. Melin, supra; United States v. Dewey County, supra; Piper v. Big Pine School Dist., 193 Cal. 664, 226 Pac. 926. He may sue and be sued in State courts. In re Celestine, 114 Fed. 551 (D. Wash. 1902); Swift v. Leach, supra, Brown v. Anderson, 61 Okla. 136, 160 Pac. 724. His ordinary contracts and engagements are subject to State law, Luigi Marre and Cattle Co. v. Roses, 34 P. (2) 195 (Cal. 1934), and his personal conduct is subject to State law except upon reserved land. State v. Morris, 136 Wis. 552, 117 N. W. 1006. He must pay State taxes on all non-trust property which he may own and all fees and taxes for the enjoyment of State privileges, such as driving on State highways, and all taxes, such as sales taxes, which reach the entire population. Where the taxes paid by the Indians are insufficient to provide necessary support for State schools, hospitals, and other institutions caring for Indians, the Federal Government often pays for such services with trust or tribal funds or with gratuity appropriations. (See, e. g., act of April 16, 1934, 48 Stat. 596). 17 Decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury 678. And Indian wards are constantly receiving care in State institutions either without charge or with payment from their unrestricted resources. Furthermore, the United States has not provided any old-age pension system for the Indians nor has it made any general provision for Indians for the types of services which it is assisting the States to render under the Security Act. (Pp. 5–6.)

Federal Relief Administration to State Emergency Relief Administration.

[160] For a discussion of their right to federal assistance, see Chapter 12, sec. 5; on right to rations, clothing, etc., under treaties, see Chapter 15, sec. 23. For a discussion of rations, see Schmeckebier, The Office of Indian Affairs, Its History, Activities, and Organization (1927), pp. 66–70; for a discussion of support of Indians, see pp. 252–255.

Often treaties provided that the United States would give an Indian tribe provisions and clothing. See Chapter 3, sec. 3C(3). This was generally a partial consideration for the cession of land by the Indians and sometimes a recognition of a moral obligation as guardian. Sometimes Congress provided food and clothing in lieu of annuities. For an example of a statute providing subsistence to Indians, see Act of April 29, 1902, 32 Stat. 177 (Choctaws and Chickesaws). On regulations regarding the operations of the Indian Division of the Civilian Conservation Corps, see C. F. R. 18.1–18.29.

[161] Op. Sol. I. D., M. 28869, February 13, 1937, p. 5.

[162] See Chapter 12.

[163] Annual Report of Secretary of Interior (1938), p. 237. "The income of the typical Indian family is low and the earned income extremely low"; Meriam, Problem of Indian Administration (1928), p. 4; for a discussion of the general economic condition of the Indians, see pp. 3–8, and pp. 430–546; on health conditions, pp. 189–345; also see Schmeckebier, op. cit. pp. 227–236.

[164] Memo. Sol. I. D., April 22, 1936; Act of August 13, 1935, 49 Stat. 612, 620, amended August 10, 1939, Public No. 379, 76th Cong., 1st sess. See Chapter 12, sec 5.

[165] Act of May 12, 1933, 48 Stat. 55; Resolution of April 8, 1935, 49 Stat. 115; Letters of July 17, 1933, and November 1, 1934, of the

SECTION 6. RIGHT TO SUE

Even before attaining citizenship, Indians had the capacity to sue and be sued in state and federal courts.[166] Though some writers [167] have sought to deny the right of reservation Indians to sue,[168] this view is rejected by the weight of authority [169]

[166] Ray A. Brown, the Indian Problem & the Law (1930), 39 Yale L. J. 307, 315. In Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 317, 332 (1892), the court said that there was no doubt that before he became a citizen the Indian was capable of suing in the state courts which were open to all persons irrespective of race or color, and that upon becoming a citizen he could also sue in the federal courts. Also see Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 367 (1886), and holding that aliens had access to the courts for the protection of their person and property and a redress of their wrongs. Accord: Deere v. St. Lawrence River Power Co., 32 F. 2d 550 (C. C. A. 2, 1929); Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Cullers, 81 Tex. 382, 17 S. W. 19 (1891), discussed in 13 L. R. A. 542 (1891); Johnson v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 2 Alaska 224, 239 (1904); Keokuk v. Ulam, 4 Okla. 5, 14 (1895); Canfield, Legal Position of the Indian (1881), 15 Am. L. Rev. 21, 33. Also see Chapter 23, sec. 4.

Indians may sue out a writ of habeas corpus. United States ex rel. Standing Bear v. Crook, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14891 (C. C. Nebr. 1879). Also see United States ex rel. Kennedy v. Tyler, 269 U. S. 13 (1925); and Bird v. Terry, 129 Fed. 472 (C. C. Wash. 1903), app. dism. 129 Fed. 592 (C. C. A. 9, 1904). A judgment may be obtained against an Indian for breach of contract even though unenforceable because his property is restricted. Stacy v. La Belle, 99 Wis. 520, 75 N. W. 60 (1898).

[167] Canfield contended that the common law did not prevail on the reservations and that since Indian tribes were distinct political entities, Indians should not be able to enforce in state courts rights acquired under Indian laws or customs. Legal Position of the Indian (1881), 15 Am. L. Rev. 21, 32, 33.

[168] Suits by and against tribes are elsewhere analyzed. See Chapter 14, sec. 6. Cf. Johnson v. Long Island Railroad Company, 162 N. Y 462, 56 N. E. 992 (1900). Plaintiff, a member of the Montauk Tribe, brought an action of ejectment on behalf of himself and any members of the tribe who would come in and contribute to the expenses. The court held (two judges dissenting) that Indian tribes are wards of the state and are only possessed of such rights to litigate in courts of justice as are conferred on them by statutes. Accord: Onondago Nation v. Thacher, 169 N. Y. 584, 62 N. E. 1098 (1901), aff'g 53 App. Div. 561, 65 N. Y. Supp. 1014 (1900). A New York statute giving Indians such power was not questioned. McKinney, New York Consol. Laws (1917), book 25, sec. 5; George v. Pierce, N. Y. Sup. Ct. 85 Misc. 105, 148 N. Y. Supp. 230 (1914).

[169] Pound, Nationals without a Nation (1922), 22 Col. L. Rev. 97, 101, 102.

on the ground that Indians are not extraterritorial but only subject to special rules of substantive law.[170] An Indian has the same right as anyone else to be represented by counsel of his own selection, who may not be subordinated to counsel appointed by the court.[171] As an additional protection, the United States District Attorney has the duty to represent him in all suits at law or in equity.[172]

As a practical matter, the Indians have frequently been at a decided disadvantage in safeguarding their legal rights.

The courts were often at such a distance that the Indians could not avail themselves of their right to sue.[173] Their ignorance of the language, customs, usages, rules of law, and forms of procedure of the white man, the disparities of race, the animosities caused by hostilities, frequently deprived them of a fair trial by jury.[174] They were sometimes barred by state statutes from serving on juries,[175] and deemed incompetent as witnesses.[176]

The Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, in a report [177] on the Trade and Intercourse Act of 1834 said:

> Complaints have been made by Indians that they are not admitted to testify as witnesses; and it is understood that they are in some of the States excluded by law. Those laws, however, do not bind the courts or tribunals of the United States. The committee have made no provision on the subject, believing that none is necessary: that the rules of law are sufficient, if properly applied, to remove every ground of complaint. (P. 13.)

Even at the present time, many Indians, particularly the older people, do not know any language but their native Indian tongue, and lack familiarity with most of the customs and ideas of the white people.[178] Most of the Indians live far from the county seats and cities where courts meet and legal business is transacted.[179] Prejudice,[180] lack of education,[181] of money,[182] and of a sufficient number of lawyers of their race who have their confidence also hamper them in securing adequate legal advice and enforcing their rights. Prof. Ray A. Brown, an eminent authority on Indian Law, has written: "* * * The majority of these people are not able either in understanding or financial ability to take advantage of the courts of justice * * *." [183]

In order to minimize the foregoing disadvantages a number of statutes have been enacted, establishing a separate administrative procedure to safeguard the rights of the Indians. One of the most important laws of this nature is the Act of June 25, 1910,[184] which vests in the Secretary of the Interior conclusive power to ascertain the heirs of a deceased allottee.

During the era of the westward expansion of railroads, statutes authorizing the construction and operation of railways through the Indian Territory usually provided that in case of the failure of the railroad to make amicable settlements with the Indian occupants of the land a commission of three disinterested referees should be appointed as appraisers, the chairman by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which the occupant belongs, and the other by the railway.[185]

In the absence of statute, Indian litigants are subject to the same defenses as other people. Except with respect to restricted property,[186] they may lose their rights because of laches, and the running of the statute of limitations.[187] They are also subject to the restrictions against suing sovereigns without their consent.

---

[170] Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States (1934), 16 J. Comp. Leg. 78; 14 Col. L. Rev., pp. 587–590 (1914).

[171] Roberts v. Anderson, 66 F. 2d 874 (C. C. A. 10, 1933).

[172] Act of March 3, 1893, 27 Stat. 612, 631, 25 U. S. C. 175, 178. On the interpretation of this law, see Chapter 12, sec. 8.

[173] Abel, vol. 1, op. cit., p. 23, fn. 14. Toward the close of the nineteenth century, many writers criticized the government for not giving the Indians courts for the redress of their wrongs, especially the arbitrary action of administrators. Thayer, A People Without Law (1891), 68 Atl. Month, 540, 542, 676, 683. Wise describes the disadvantages under which Indians labor in their legal struggles with the Federal Government, Indian Law and Needed Reforms (1926), 12 A. B. A. J. 37, 39–40.

[174] Abbot, Indians and the Law (1888), 2 Harv. L. Rev. 167, 175–176; Harsha, Law for the Indians (1882), 134 N. A. Rev. 272, 274–275; Kyle, How Shall the Indians be Educated (1894), 159 N. A. Rev. 434.

[175] See Const. Idaho, Art. 6, sec. 3; Kie v. United States, 27 Fed. 351, 357–358 (C. C. Ore. 1886); People v. Howard, 17 Calif. 64 (1860).

[176] For early texts discussing their incompetency as witnesses, see Rapalje, A Treatise on the Law of Witnesses (1887), p. 26; Appleton, Rules of Evidence (1860), pp. 271–272. Pumphrey v. State, 84 Nebr. 636, 122 N. W. 19 (1909). Sometimes their incompetency as witnesses was restricted to cases where whites were parties. People v. Hall, 4 Calif. 399 (1854), aff'd by Speer v. See Yup Co., 13 Cal. 73 (1859), held that the term "Indian" as used in section 394 of the Civil Practice Act (Calif. Stats. 1850, p. 230, subsequently reenacted) excluded a Chinese from testifying as a witness. See Goodrich, The Legal Status of the California Indian (1926), 14 Calif. L. Rev. 83, pp. 156 and 174; Carter v. United States, 1 Ind. T. 342 (1896). Even when competent, prejudice against their testimony was not infrequent. See Shelp v. United States, 81 Fed. 694 (C. C. A. 9, 1897). The Confederate States signed treaties with many of the southern tribes giving the members the right to be competent as witnesses in state courts and if indicted to subpoena witnesses and employ counsel. Abel, vol. 1, The American Indian as Slaveholder & Secessionist (1915), pp. 172–173. The Act of March 1, 1889, sec. 15, 25 Stat. 783, limited jurors in criminal cases in the United States courts in the Indian Territory in which the defendant is a citizen to citizens and thus excluded most Indians.

[177] 23d Cong., 1st sess., Repts. of Committees, No. 474, May 20, 1834.

[178] Meriam, Problem of Indian Administration (1928), pp. 777, 783, 790.

[179] Ibid., pp. 713–714.

[180] Ibid., p. 776.

[181] Ibid., pp. 346–429.

[182] Ibid., p. 776.

[183] The Indian Problem and the Law, 39 Yale L. J. 307, 331 (1930).

[184] 36 Stat. 855, amended March 3, 1928, 45 Stat. 161, April 30, 1934, 48 Stat. 647, 25 U. S. C. 372, discussed in Hallowell v. Commons, 239 U. S. 506 (1916), aff'g 210 Fed. 793 (C. C. A. 8, 1914); Knoepfler, Legal Status of American Indian & His Property (1922), 7 Ia. L. B. 232, 247, 248; Meriam, Problem of Indian Administration (1928), pp. 787–795; Schmeckebier, The Office of Indian Affairs, Its History, Activities, and Organization (1927), pp. 166–175.

[185] For an example of such a provision, see Act of September 26, 1890, 26 Stat. 485, 486. The Act of May 21, 1934, 48 Stat. 787, repealed sec. 186 of title 25, U. S. C., derived from sec. 2 of the Act of June 14, 1862, 12 Stat. 427, which empowered the superintendent or agent to ascertain the damages caused by a tribal Indian trespassing upon the allotments of an Indian; to deduct from the annuities due to the trespassing Indian the amount ascertained and, with the approval of the Secretary, to pay it to the party injured.

[186] See Chapter 11; Chapter 19, sec. 5.

[187] Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 317, 331 (1892), discussing laches, aff'g 36 Fed. 457, discussing the statute of limitations. Also see Lemieux v. United States, 15 F. 2d 518 (C. C. A. 8, 1926), cert. den. 273 U. S. 749; 14 Col. L. Rev. 587–589 (1914). Also see Act of May 31, 1902, sec. 1, 32 Stat. 284, 25 U. S. C. 347, which provides for the application of the state statute of limitations in certain suits involving lands patented in severalty under treaties. While a deed of an Indian who received patent prohibiting alienation of property without the approval of the Secretary of Interior is void and the statute of limitations does not run against him and his heirs so long as the condition of incompetency remains, when by treaty subsequent to the issuance of the deed all restrictions were removed and the Indian became a citizen, the statute of limitations began to run against the grantor and his heirs. Schrimpscher v. Stockton, 183 U. S. 290 (1902). Also see Bluejacket v. Ewert, 265 Fed. 823 (C. C. A. 8, 1920), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 259 U. S. 129 (1922). Cf. Op. Sol. I. D., M.20888, January 14, 1927, p. 2, to the effect that in view of the guardianship relation existing between the Government and the Indians, and the fact that so long as they maintain tribal relations, they are perhaps not chargeable with laches, the Department [of Interior] has been slow to establish a definite rule limiting the reopening of heirship proceedings or invoking the maxims of res adjudicata and stare decisis.

The right to sue is not conferred upon an individual member by a statute granting to a tribe the right to sue to recover tribal property.[188] In the absence of congressional legislation bestowing upon individual Indians the right to litigate in the federal courts internal questions relating to tribal property, the courts will not assume jurisdiction.[189]

The judgment entered in a suit against an Indian may be enforced against any unrestricted property which the Indian judgment debtor may own free from federal control. The restricted property of the judgment debtor is exempt from levy and sale under such a judgment.[190]

The Secretary of the Interior has authority to make payment of a judgment obtained in a state court against a restricted member of the Osage tribe of Indians or his estate.[191]

[188] Blackfeather v. United States, 190 U. S. 368 (1903), aff'g 37 C. Cls. 233 (1902); Casteel v. McNeely, 4 Ind. T. 1 (1901).

[189] United States v. Seneca Nation of New York Indians, 274 Fed. 946 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1921). Also see Lane v. Pueblo of Santa Rosa, 249 U. S. 110 (1919).

[190] Mullen v. Simmons, 234 U. S. 192 (1914).

[191] Act of February 27, 1925, 43 Stat. 1008 (Osage).

SECTION 7. RIGHT TO CONTRACT

Indians may make contracts in the same way as any other people,[192] except where prohibited by statutes which primarily regulate contracts affecting trust property.[193]

The contractual capacity of Indians is discussed in the case of Gho v. Julles:[194]

> We are unable to see why an Indian alien, preserving his tribal relations, is not as capable of making a binding contract (other than such as we have defined to be void by Statute), as an Englishman, or Spaniard, or a Dane, who while still retaining his native allegiance makes contracts here. (P. 328.)

Similarly, a more recent opinion[195] holds:

> * * * The fact that one of the parties to the contract was a full-blood Indian did not incapacitate him or impair his right to enter into this contract. He had the same right as other persons to make contracts generally. The only restriction on this right peculiar to an Indian was in regard to contracts affecting his allotment. These he could not make without the consent and approval provided by law. * * * (P. 156.)

Some treaties contained contractual restrictions.[196]

The most important limitation on the alienability of land is found in the Allotment Act of February 8, 1887,[197] which prevents an Indian allottee from making a binding contract in respect to land which the United States holds for him as trustee.[198]

The Act of May 21, 1872,[199] imposing restrictions on the contractual rights of noncitizen Indians, which has lost most of its importance because of the passage of the Citizenship Act, voids any contract with a noncitizen Indian (or an Indian tribe) for services concerning his lands or claims against the United States, unless it is executed in accordance with prescribed formalities and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

An important statute restricting the contractual power of Indians with respect to certain types of property is the Act of June 30, 1913,[200] which provides:

> No contract made with any Indian, where such contract relates to the tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States, shall be valid, nor shall any payment for services rendered in relation thereto be made unless the consent of the United States has previously been given.

A. POWER OF ATTORNEY

Though an Indian may grant a power of attorney to another, and such grants of power have been extensively used in the award of grazing permits in allotted lands,[201] such a power will not ordinarily be implied.[202] If there is any doubt about the method of exercising the power, it will be resolved in favor of the grantors of the power.[203]

The government examines closely the circumstances surrounding the issuance and exercise of a power of attorney in order

[192] An Indian may contract freely concerning unrestricted real and personal property, Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1 (1899); also see United States v. Paine Lumber Co., 206 U. S. 467 (1907). Accord: Ke-tuc-e-mun-guah v. McClure, 122 Ind. 541, 23 N. E. 1080 (1890); Stacy v. La Belle, 99 Wis. 520, 75 N. W. 60 (1898). Recognition of this capacity was contained in the Act of May 2, 1890, sec. 29, 26 Stat. 81, 93, which gave to the United States Courts in the Indian Territory jurisdiction of all contracts between citizens of Indian nations and citizens of the United States, provided such contracts were made in good faith and in accordance with the laws of such tribe or nation. As to individual rights in restricted personalty, see Chapter 10.

[193] Op. Sol. I. D., M.28869, February 13, 1937, p. 8: "it should be pointed out that an Indian, although a tribal member and a ward of the Government, is capable of making contracts and that these contracts require supervision only insofar as they may deal with the disposition of property held in trust by the United States." Cf. Owen v. Dudley, 217 U. S. 488 (1910). Questions frequently arise as to whether property is restricted. For example, crops growing on Indian trust land are considered trust property. United States v. First National Bank, 282 Fed. 330 (D. C. E. D. Wash. 1922), repudiating the case of Rider v. LaClair, 77 Wash. 488, 138 Pac. 3 (1914), which held that Indians could mortgage crops growing on allotments without the Government's consent. Also see Act of May 31, 1870, sec. 16, 16 Stat. 140, 144, guaranteeing the right to enforce contracts to all persons "within the jurisdiction of the United States." The Act of February 27, 1925, sec. 6, 43 Stat. 1008, 1011, exemplifies a restriction of the right to contract. It requires the approval of the Secretary of the Interior for contracts of debts of Osage tribesmen not having a certificate of competency. And see Act of February 21, 1863, 12 Stat. 658 (Winnebago).

[194] 1 Wash. Terr. (new series) 325 (1871).

[195] Postoak v. Lee, 46 Okla. 477, 149 Pac. 155 (1915).

[196] Section 15 of the Treaty of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat. 819, 820, provided that the Sioux Indians shall be incapable of making any valid civil contract with anyone other than a native member of their tribe without consent of the President. The Cherokees obtained an interesting provision in Article X of the Treaty of July 19, 1866, 14 Stat. 799, 801, permitting their members and resident freedmen to sell their farm or manufacured products and to ship and drive them to market without restraint.

[197] Sec. 5, 24 Stat. 388, 389. Also see Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855. See Chapter 11.

[198] See Chapter 11. A few treaties also restrict the alienability of land. The Treaty with the Nez Perce of June 9, 1863, Art. III, 14 Stat. 647, 649, provides that lands belonging to individual Indians shall be inalienable without the permission of the President and shall be subject to regulations of the Secretary of the Interior.

[199] 17 Stat. 136, 25 U. S. C. 81, amended by Act of June 26, 1936, 49 Stat. 1984. The Act of April 29, 1874, 18 Stat. 35, contains similar provisions for contracts, made prior to May 21, 1872. Also see prior statute restricting contracts—Act of March 3, 1871, 16 Stat. 544, 570. To the effect that a contract by which Indian residents and subjects of the Dominion of Canada propose to employ an attorney to prosecute claims against the United States is not subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, see Op. Sol. I. D., M.30146, February 8, 1939. On the application of this law to tribes, see Chapter 14, sec. 5.

[200] Sec. 18, 38 Stat. 77, 97, 25 U. S. C. 85.

[201] See 25 C. F. R. 71.10–71.19.

[202] Richardville v. Thorp, 28 Fed. 52, 53 (C. C. Kan. 1886).

[203] 18 Op. A. G. 447, 497 (1886); 5 Op. A. G. 36 (1848).

to safeguard the interests of the Indian.[204] Subterfuges whereby such powers are used to take away control of restricted lands are held invalid [205] because "the restraints upon alienation and incumbrance were intended by Congress to instill into the Indians habits of thrift and industry and a sense of independence, and to protect them in the meantime from improvident contracts." (P. 799.)

B. COOPERATIVES AND BUSINESS ORGANIZATIONS

In some types of work, Indians, like other people, cannot compete with large aggregations of capital which dominate an increasing number of types of business, unless many of them combine their resources and energies.[206] Indian cooperatives have been chartered by the Secretary of the Interior, by organized tribes, and by states.[207]

Many recent statutes encourage the formation of cooperatives, including the Wheeler-Howard Act,[208] the Act of May 1, 1936,[209] applying its main provisions to Alaska, the Oklahoma Welfare Act,[210] and the Alaskan Reindeer Act.[211] Other legislation permitting loans to cooperatives is discussed under another heading.[212]

Thus encouraged by the Federal Government, Indians have established many different kinds of cooperatives.[213] Several statutes and tribal ordinances are designed to encourage Indian cooperatives in a particular tribe.[214]

The Constitution of the Blackfeet Tribe contains provisions typical of many tribal constitutions. Article VII, section 3, gives preference in the leasing of tribal land to members and associations of members, such as oil producers' cooperatives.[215] Section 1h of Article VI authorizes the Tribal Business Council to regulate and license all business or professional activities upon the reservation, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.[216]

Indian business organizations have been aided by some important laws relating to both Indians and non-Indians, such as the Taylor Grazing Act,[217] which provides for the granting of privileges to stockowners, including groups, associations, or corporations, authorized to conduct business under the laws of the state in which a grazing district is located. An Indian or group of Indians is capable of applying for grazing privileges under this act without the intervention of agency officials.[218]

C. RIGHTS OF CREDITORS

In the absence of statutory authorization, a third person may not discharge the duty of the Government and then recover the expenses incurred in performing such governmental duty.[219] Governmental liability for the debts of Indians arises solely from acts of Congress or treaties with the tribes. Treaties often provided payments even for substantial debts.[220]

The treaty provisions were often worded in justification for the payments of claims. The Indians were "anxious" to pay the claims, [221] or the payments were made at the "request" of the Indians, and the money was acknowledged by them to be due or to be a just claim.[222] The good deed of the creditor or a friend of the tribe would be glowingly described.[223]

---

[204] United States v. Sands, 94 F. 2d 156 (C. C. A. 10, 1938). Individual Indian owners frequently empower superintendents to issue leases or permits for them. Also see Chapter 11, sec. 5.

[205] Williams v. White, 218 Fed. 797 (C. C. A. 8, 1914).

[206] Senator O'Mahoney, Chairman of the Temporary National Economic Committee, alluded to one of the many causes for the trend toward concentration of economic power:

> * * * it is a common experience that the large aggregations of capital are able to secure money at a very much lower rate and for longer terms and on better conditions than the small business corporation may, and that in itself is an inherent difficulty which tends to magnify the big and reduce the little. Hearings before the Temporary National Economic Committee, Pt. V, p. 1669 (1939).

These hearings report the growth of monopoly in general and in specific industries. Also see Berle and Means, The Modern Corporation and Private Property (1932), pp. 18–46.

[207] In Oklahoma the Secretary may issue charters of incorporation to Indian cooperatives; in other states they generally operate as unincorporated associations. J. E. Curry, Principles of Cooperation, 4 Indians at Work, No. 16 (April 1, 1937), p. 8. For regulations on cooperatives see 25 C. F. R. 21.1–25.26.

[208] Secs. 10 (25 U. S. C. 470) and 17 (25 U. S. C. 477), June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984. The regulations governing the administration of the revolving credit fund make special provision for loans by incorporated tribes to Indian cooperatives. For example, see 25 C. F. R. 22.1–23.27 relating to cooperatives in Oklahoma.

[209] 49 Stat. 1250.

[210] Act of June 26, 1936, sec. 4, 49 Stat. 1967, 25 U. S. C. 504.

[211] Act of September 1, 1937, sec. 10, 50 Stat. 900, authorizing transfer of reindeer to cooperative associations or other organizations.

[212] See Chapter 12, sec. 6A.

[213] Some of these enterprises were discussed by John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in a radio address on December 4, 1939, entitled "America's Handling of its Indigenous Indian Minority," and in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1939), pp. 30–31, and (1938), pp. 251–252.

> The most important development in the Indian livestock field, perhaps, has been the marked increase in Indian initiative and management. Indians, through cooperative livestock associations, are managing controlled grazing, round-ups, sales, and other business affecting their livestock enterprises. Cooperative livestock associations have increased from a comparatively small number in 1933 to 53 in 1935 and to 119 in 1936. (Annual Report of Secretary of Interior (1937), p. 213.)

Also see Indian Land Tenure, Economic Status, and Population Trends, Pt. X of the Supplementary Report of the Land Planning Committee to the National Resources Board (1935), pp. 24–25, 56.

[214] The Act of August 15, 1935, 49 Stat. 654, authorizes the loaning of tribal moneys as a capital fund to the Chippewa Indian Cooperative Marketing Association.

[215] Discussed in Memo. Sol. I. D., March 16, 1939.

[216] It has been held that this provision does not require a group of Indians forming an unincorporated or incorporated cooperative association to secure departmental approval of the articles of association and bylaws. Memo. Sol. I. D., March 14, 1938.

[217] Act of June 28, 1934, 48 Stat. 1269, amended Act of June 26, 1936, 49 Stat. 1967, 1976.

[218] Op. Sol. I. D., M.28869, February 13, 1937.

[219] McCalib, Adm'r v. United States, 83 C. Cls. 79 (1936).

[220] The Treaty of September 26, 1833, with the United Nation of Chippewa, Ottowa, and Potawatamie, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 431, 432, provided for the payment of $100,000 and the supplementary Treaty of September 27, 1833, Art. 7, 7 Stat. 442, provided for an additional sum of $25,000.

[221] Treaty of October 23, 1826, with the Miami Tribe, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 300, 301.

[222] To show satisfaction of claims acknowledged to be due, see Treaty of July 29, 1929, with the United Nation of Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatamie Indians, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 320; Treaty of August 1, 1829, with the Winnebaygo Indians, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 323, 324; Treaty of September 15, 1832, with the Winnebago Nation, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 370, 374; payment of debts acknowledged to be due, Treaty of October 26, 1832, with the Shawnoes and Delawares, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 397, 398; also see Treaty of October 16, 1826, with the Potawatamie Tribe, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 295, 296; and (at the request of Indians) Treaties of August 5, 1836, with the Potawattimie Tribe, 7 Stat. 505, and of September 20, 1836, with the Patawattimie Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 513.

[223] Treaty of February 18, 1833, with the Ottawa Indians, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 420, 421, 422, land was ceded to people who had resided with or been kind to the tribe; Treaty of September 28, 1836, with the Sac and Fox Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 517, 525, 526, compensation was provided in view of liberality of individuals extending large credit to the chiefs or braves; Treaty of October 15, 1836 (articles of a convention) with the Otoes, Missouries, and others, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 524, 525:

> * * * feeling sensible of the many acts of kindness and liberality manifested towards them, and their respective tribes by their good friends * * * during an intercourse of many years; aware of the heavy losses sustained by them at different times by their liberality in extending large credits to them and their people, which have never been paid, and which (owing to the impoverished situation of their country and their scanty means of living) never can be; are anxious to evince some evidence of gratitude for such benefits and favours, and compensate the said individuals in some measure for their losses. * * *

Often the United States would agree to pay creditors [224] of the Indians for some consideration or partial consideration, such as the cession of land,[225] reduction or omission of annuities,[226] or relinquishment of claims against the United States,[227] or described services and goods.[228]

The names of the creditors were often enumerated in an attached schedule [229] or separate schedule,[230] but sometimes they were listed in the body of the treaty.[231]

Other provisions included an acknowledgment of special services and a provision for their payment. One, for example, provided that money should be paid to a designated captain to repay him for expenditures in defending Chickasaw towns against the invasion of the Creeks.[232]

Sometimes claims already brought against the Indians were acknowledged as due and the United States agreed to make payments for them.[233] Occasional provisions include a prohibition against the payments of debts of individuals [234] or payments for depredations; [235] a requirement that the superintendent shall pay the debts; [236] a prohibition against the sale of land for prior debts.[237]

The limitation of the rights of creditors is in accordance with the well established policy of the Federal Government to protect Indians from their own improvidence.[238]

A number of restrictive statutes hamper creditors from executing on their judgments.[239] An important general provision of this type is contained in the Appropriation Act of June 21, 1906,[240] which amended the General Allotment Act [241] by adding the following:

> No lands acquired under the provisions of this Act shall, in any event, become liable to the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the issuing of the final patent in fee therefor.

The same principle is also applicable to restricted money.[242]

The United States cannot restrain the enforcement, in a state court, of claims against property of Indian allottees for which they had received patents in fee,[243] but it can restrain a state receiver from disposing of the proceeds of a lease of restricted lands,[244] and of a growing crop on allotted lands.[245]

In holding that a mortgage by an allottee of growing crops is void, the District Court said: [246]

> The crops growing upon an Indian allotment are a part of the land and are held in trust by the government the same as the allotment itself, at least until the crops are severed from the land. The use and occupancy of these lands by the Indians, together with the crops grown thereon, are a part of the means which the government has employed to carry out its policy of protection, and I am satisfied that a mortgage of any of these means by the Indian, without the consent of the government, is necessarily null and void. If the lien is valid, it carries with it all the incidents of a valid lien, including the right to appoint a receiver to take charge of and garner the crops, if necessary, and the right to send an officer upon the allotment armed with process to seize and sell the crops without the consent and even over the protest of the government and its agents. That this cannot be done does not, in my opinion, admit of question. (P. 332.)

Though an Indian may be a bankrupt, land allotted to him does not pass to a trustee in bankruptcy.[247] This decision is based on the fact that it is not the policy of the Bankruptcy Act to interfere with congressional statutes relating to the disposiion and control of property which is set apart for the benefit of the bankrupt, and that a man presumably deals with an Indian with full knowledge of his disability, and does not give credit on his allotments,[248] or his other restricted property.

---

[224] For early opinions on method of determining amount of claims against Indians, see 5 Op. A. G. 284 (1851) and 572 (1852). Treaty of October 27, 1822, with the Potowatomies, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 399, 401.

[225] Treaty of August 30, 1831 (articles of agreement and convention), with Ottoway Indians, Arts. 2 and 6, 7 Stat. 359, 360–361; Treaty of October 27, 1832, with the Potowatomies, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 399, 401; Act of February 21, 1863, Art. 4, 12 Stat. 658, 659 (Winnebago).

[226] Treaty of May 13, 1833 (articles of agreement), with the Quapaw Indians, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 424, 425–426.

[227] Treaty of January 20, 1825 (articles of a convention), with the Choctaw Nation, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 234, 235; Treaty of October 16, 1826, with the Potawatamie Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 295, 296; Treaty of October 23, 1826, with the Miami Tribe, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 300, 301.

[228] Treaty of July 23, 1805, with the Chickasaw Nation, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 89, 90.; Treaty of February 11, 1828, with the Eel River, or Thorntown party of Miami Indians, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 309, 310; Treaty of March 24, 1832, with the Creek Tribe, Art. 9, 7 Stat. 366, 367.

[229] Treaty of October 11, 1842, with the Sac and Fox Indians, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 596.

[230] Treaty of October 16, 1826, with the Potawatamie, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 295, 296, 297.

[231] Treaty of July 23, 1805, with the Chickasaw Nation, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 89, 90; Treaty of October 19, 1818, with the Chickasaws, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 192, 193; Treaty of February 11, 1828, with the Eel River, or Thorntown party of Miami Indians, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 309, 310.

[232] Treaty of October 19, 1818, with the Chickasaws, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 192, 193. Also see Treaty of July 23, 1805, with the Chickasaw Nation, Art. 2, 7 Stat. 89, 90.

[233] Treaty of July 29, 1829, with the United Nations of Chippewa, Ottowa, and Potawatamie, Art. 5, 7 Stat. 320, 321; Treaty of August 1, 1829, with the Winnebaygo, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 323, 324.

[234] Treaty of October 17, 1855, with the Blackfoot, Art. 15, 11 Stat. 657, 660.

[235] Treaty of November 1, 1837, with the Winnebago Nation, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 544, 545.

[236] Treaty of October 26, 1832, with the Shawnoes and Delawares, Art. 3, 7 Stat. 397, 398.

[237] Act of June 1, 1872, Art. 4, 17 Stat. 213, 214 (Miami).

[238] Knoepfler, Legal Status of American Indian & His Property (1922), 7 Ia. L. B. 232, 245. On creditor's rights against restricted money and estates of allottees, see Chapter 11, sec. 6, and 25 C. F. R. 81.23, 81.46–81.49, 221.1–221.39.

[239] Act of May 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 81, 94 (Indian Territory), discussed in Crowell v. Young, 4 Ind. T. 36 (1901), mod. 4 Ind. T. 148 (1902). Also see In re Grayson, 3 Ind. T. 497 (1901), concerning foreclosure of mortgage.

[240] 34 Stat. 325, 327.

[241] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388.

[242] See Chapter 5, sec. 5B and D.

[243] United States v. Parkhurst-Davis Co., 176 U. S. 317 (1900).

[244] United States v. Inaba, 291 Fed. 416 (D. C. E. D. Wash. 1923). On the right of the United States to sue on behalf of Indians, see Chapter 19, sec. 2A(1).

[245] See United States v. First Nat. Bank, 282 Fed. 330 (D. C. E. D. Wash. 1922). On the rights of conveyees of allotted lands, see Chapter 11, sec. 4H.

[246] Ibid. For a decision holding invalid a mortgage executed by a tribal member of his interest in the tribal lands, see United States v. Boylan, 265 Fed. 165 (C. C. A. 2, 1920).

[247] In re Russie, 96 Fed. 609 (D. C. Ore. 1899). See Chapter 11, sec. 4A. State laws relating to assignments for the benefit of creditors were extended to the Indian debtor by the Act of May 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 81 (Indian Territory), discussed in Robinson & Co. v. Belt, 187 U. S. 41 (1902), aff'g 100 Fed. 718 (C. C. A. 8, 1900).

[248] In re Russie, 96 Fed. 609 (D. C. Ore. 1899).

SECTION 8. THE MEANINGS OF "INCOMPETENCY"

The word "incompetency" has varied applications in many branches of law. Thus a person may be incompetent to serve on a jury, or evidence may be inadmissible as incompetent. Perhaps the most common meaning of the term is lack of capacity to enter into legally binding contracts.[249]

In addition to its ordinary legal meaning, the term "incompetency," as used in Indian law, has several special or restricted meanings, relating to particular types of transactions, such as land alienation.

A. GENERAL LACK OF LEGAL CAPACITY[250]

Treaties and statutes contain numerous illustrations of the ordinary use of the term "incompetency," and various provisions to safeguard the interests of Indians who are deemed unfit to manage their own affairs. They empower guardians or other persons authorized by the Department of the Interior,[251] parents or guardians,[252] heads of families,[253] chiefs,[254] collectors of customs,[255] and agents,[256] and superintendents or other bonded officers of the Indian Service,[257] to select allotments,[258] or homestead entries,[259] receive payments due,[260] appraise property in condemnation proceedings, or perform other functions for minors or persons non compos mentis.[261]

Special provisions were often made for minor orphan children,[262] such as making the chiefs responsible for the school attendance of orphan children between 7 and 18 who had no guardians.[263]

Congress has conferred on parents certain rights with respect to the property of minor children.[264] The administrative practice of the Department of the Interior requires that a minor be represented in some cases, such as the relinquishment or inheritance of Indian trust lands.[265]

B. RESTRICTED MEANINGS

(1) Inability to alienate land.[266]—Perhaps the most frequent special use of the term "incompetency" is to describe the status of an Indian incapable of alienating some[267] or all of his real property. Such an Indian may be competent in the ordinary legal sense. An outstanding example is Charles Curtis, who, though he became Senator and Vice President of the United States, remained all his life an incompetent Indian, incapable of disposing of his trust property by deed or devise, without securing the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

This striking example indicates that a determination of general competency is not always sufficient to cause the Secretary to issue a certificate of competency permitting the Indian to dispose of his restricted property. In determining whether to remove restrictions, the Secretary must decide, not only the "competency" of the Indian, but also whether such removal would be for the best interest of the Indian.[268]

---

[249] See In re Blochowitz Guardianship, 135 Neb. 163, 169, 280 N. W. 438, 441 (1938); In re Mathews, 174 Cal. 679, 164 Pac. 8 (1917).

[250] See Stewart v. Keyes, 295 U. S. 403 (1935). Pet. for rehearing den. 296 U. S. 661 (1935).

[251] Act of March 3, 1885, 23 Stat. 340, 341 (Umatilla Reservation).

[252] Treaty of April 28, 1866, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, Art. 15, 14 Stat. 769, 775; Treaty of July 4, 1866, with the Delawares, Art. 3, 14 Stat. 793, 794; Act of February 13, 1891, Art. 2, 26 Stat. 749, 750, 751 (Sac and Fox).

[253] Act of April 11, 1882, 22 Stat. 42 (Crow); Act of August 7, 1882, sec. 5, 22 Stat. 341, 342 (Omahas).

[254] Act of March 2, 1889, sec. 2, 25 Stat. 1013, 1015 (Peorias and Miamies).

[255] Act of June 10, 1872, sec. 6, 17 Stat. 381, repealed by Act of March 3, 1933, 47 Stat. 1428.

[256] The agents often made selections for orphans, Act of March 2, 1889, sec. 9, 25 Stat. 888, 891 (Sioux); Act of February 23, 1889, Art. 4, 25 Stat. 687, 688 (Shoshones and others).

[257] Act of February 25, 1933, 47 Stat. 907, 25 U. S. C. 14.

[258] Treaty of April 28, 1866, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, Art. 15, 14 Stat. 769, 775.

[259] Act of June 10, 1872, sec. 6, 17 Stat. 381.

[260] Act of June 10, 1872, sec. 6, 17 Stat. 381. Also see Appropriation Act of July 5, 1862, sec. 6, 12 Stat. 512, 529, R. S. § 2108, 25 U. S. C. 159, providing for payment to persons appointed by Indian councils to receive money due to incompetent or orphan Indians.

[261] Allotments to minors were sometimes not selected until their majority or marriage, Treaty of June 19, 1858, with the Sioux, Art. 1, 12 Stat. 1031; Treaty of June 19, 1858, with the Sioux, Art. 1, 12 Stat. 1037.

[262] Treaty of May 10, 1854, with the Shawnees, Art. 2, 10 Stat. 1053, providing that the selections for incompetents and minor orphans shall be made as near as practical to their friends by some disinterested person appointed by the council and approved by the United States agent. Also see Treaty of January 31, 1855, with the Wyandotts, 10 Stat. 1159; Treaty of August 2, 1855, with the Chippewas, Art. 1, 11 Stat. 633; Act of June 28, 1898, 30 Stat. 495, 513 (Indian Territory); Act of April 11, 1882, 22 Stat. 42 (Crow); Act of August 7, 1882, sec. 5, 22 Stat. 341, 342 (Omaha Tribe). The Act of March 2, 1889, sec. 2, 25 Stat. 1013, 1015 (Peorias and Miamies), empowers the father to make grazing lease not exceeding 3 years for minors; and chiefs, for orphans. No allotment to orphan until 21 or married. Act of February 13, 1891, Art. 3, 26 Stat. 749, 751 (Sac and Fox Nation and Iowa Tribe). Heads of family choose lands for minor children, but agent chooses lands for orphans and persons of unsound mind, Treaty of November 15, 1861, with the Pottawatomies, Art. 2, 12 Stat. 1191, 1192; Treaty of October 18, 1864, with the Chippewas, Art. 3, 14 Stat. 657, 658; Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388.

[263] Treaty of September 24, 1857, with the Pawnees, Art. 3, 11 Stat. 729, 730.

[264] See Act of June 28, 1906, sec. 7, 34 Stat. 539, 545 (Osage), which confers on parents of minor members of the tribe the control and use of their lands, together with its proceeds, until the minors reach majority.

Allotments to minor children under sec. 4 of the General Allotment Act, as amended, are made when the parent has settled upon the public lands, is himself entitled to an allotment, and is a recognized member of an Indian tribe or entitled to such recognition according to the tribal laws and usages. 35 L. D. 549 (1907); 40 L. D. 148 (1911); 41 L. D. 626 (1913); 43 L. D. 149 (1914).

An administrative finding that an Indian had reached majority is not conclusive upon a determination of whether a deed of land made by him after the issuance of a patent was subject to a state law permitting disaffirmance of a contract made in infancy. Dickson v. Luck Land Co., 242 U. S. 371 (1917).

The rights of minors are discussed in 13 L. D. 318 (1891), 30 L. D. 532, 536 (1901), 35 L. D. 145 (1906), 38 L. D. 422 (1910), and 43 L. D. 125 (1914).

The rights of heirs upon death of allottee before expiration of trust period and before issuance of fee simple patent without having made will, are discussed in 40 L. D. 120 (1911). Also see 38 L. D. 422 (1910); 38 L. D. 427 (1910).

For interpretation of sec. 4 of the General Allotment Act, authorizing the allotment of public lands on behalf of minor children where the parent settled and made his home on public domain, see 40 L. D. 148 (1911); 43 L. D. 125, 128 (1914). This section includes step children and all other children to whom the settler stands in loco parentis, 41 L. D. 626 (1913), 43 L. D. 149 (1914), 44 L. D. 520 (1916); who are recognized members of the tribe or entitled to be recognized, 35 L. D. 549 (1907); but orphan children under 18 are not entitled to benefits, 8 L. D. 647 (1889); nor children of parents who are disqualified from benefits, 44 L. D. 188 (1915). For interpretations of other allotment acts affecting minors, see: 15 L. D. 287 (1892); 24 L. D. 511 (1897); 40 L. D. 4, 9 (1911); 43 L. D. 125, 149, 504 (1914).

[265] This practice has been upheld by the courts. Henkel v. United States, 237 U. S. 43 (1915), aff'g 196 Fed. 345 (C. C. A. 9, 1912).

[266] On restrictions on alienation, see Chapter 11, sec. 4; on leasing, sec. 5 and Smith v. McCullough, 270 U. S. 456 (1926).

[267] The Act of April 18, 1912, sec. 9, 37 Stat. 86, defined "competent" as used therein to "mean a person to whom a certificate has been issued authorizing alienation of all the lands comprising his allotment, except his homestead."

[268] Williams v. Johnson, 239 U. S. 414, 418, 419, (1915). While the Secretary may permit the sale of trust lands, he may retain control

An Indian may be declared competent to alienate his land, and then, having become landless, may inherit property in a restricted estate and thus become incompetent again.[269]

An administrative holding analyzes the material difference between the removal of restrictions against alienation and the issuance of a certificate of competency:[270]

> * * * At times and under given circumstances restrictions against alienation as applied to lands allotted to the Indians, savor largely of covenants running with the land. Competency, of course, is a personal attribute or equation. These two, competency and the power to alienate certain lands are not synonymous or even coexistent factors in all cases. Frequently they go hand in hand but not necessarily always so. Congress itself, at times, has lifted restrictions against alienation, in masse, without special regard to the competency of the individual Indian land owners. With respect to the Osages, as previously shown, under the act of 1906, the issuance of a certificate of competency did not remove the restrictions against alienation of the homestead and under other legislation dealing with these people, the Secretary of the Interior is empowered to lift the restrictions against alienation on part or all of their allotted lands including the homesteads even in the hands of incompetent members of the tribe; act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. 778); act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat. 561–579). This but again emphasizes the fact that removal of restrictions against alienation is not synonymous with competency, or the right to a certificate of that character. (Pp. 8–9.)

(a) Statutes.—The following provision of the Act of May 8, 1906,[271] illustrates this use of the term:

> * * * Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, and he is hereby authorized, whenever he shall be satisfied that any Indian allottee is competent and capable of managing his or her affairs at any time to cause to be issued to such allottee a patent in fee simple, and thereafter all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said land shall be removed and said land shall not be liable to the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the issuing of such patent: * * *.

The Circuit of Appeals,[272] in construing this provision, said that the Indian "shall have at least sufficient ability, knowledge, experience, and judgment to enable him to conduct the negotiations for the sale of his land and to care for, manage, invest, and dispose of its proceeds with such a reasonable degree of prudence and wisdom as will be likely to prevent him from losing the benefit of his property or its proceeds."

The same court, in another case,[273] said:

> * * * The chief purpose and main object of the restriction upon alienation is not to prevent the incompetent Indian from selling his land for a price too low, but to prevent him from selling it at all, to the end that he shall be prevented from losing, giving away, or squandering its proceeds and thus be left dependent upon the government or upon charity for his support. * * * (P. 776.)

Another important act, illustrating a somewhat similar concept of incompetency is the Act of March 1, 1907,[274] which provides:

> That any noncompetent Indian to whom a patent containing restrictions against alienation has been issued for an allotment of land in severalty, under any law or treaty, or who may have an interest in any allotment by inheritance, may sell or convey all or any part of such allotment or such inherited interest on such terms and conditions and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and the proceeds derived therefrom shall be used for the benefit of the allottee or heir so disposing of his land or interest, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; * * *

A federal district court[275] in construing this provision at first treated the term "noncompetent" as equivalent to "incompetent," and as implying the ordinary legal meaning of incompetency "legal incapacity, due to nonage, imbecility, or insanity." Upon reconsideration the court thought such restriction of its meaning was too narrow. It also discussed the provisions of section 1 of the Act of June 25, 1910,[276] which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior > * * * in his discretion to issue a certificate of competency, upon application therefor, to any Indian, or, in case of his death, to his heirs, to whom a patent in fee containing restrictions on alienation has been or may hereafter be issued, and such certificate shall have the effect of removing the restrictions on alienation contained in such patent. (P. 497.)

The court concluded:

> * * * while as applied to Indians the terms "competency" and "noncompetency" or "incompetency" are used in their ordinary legal sense, there is a presumption, conclusive upon the courts, that until the restriction against alienation is removed in the manner provided by law, either through the lapse of time or the positive action of the Secretary of the Interior, the allottee continues to be an "incompetent" Indian, at least in so far as concerns the land to which the restriction relates. (Pp. 497–498.)

Under the 1910 act the determination of competency and the issuance of a patent in fee simple were both conditions precedent to the removal of restrictions on alienation and "the issuance of a patent in fee simple by the Secretary is not mandatory upon his being satisfied that a trust allottee is competent and capable of managing his own affairs."[277] over the investment of the proceeds. Sunderland v. United States, 266 U. S. 226 (1924), aff'g 287 Fed. 468 (C. C. A. 8, 1923). Also see Chapter 5, sec. 11.

---

[269] Indian Land Tenure, Economic Status, and Population Trends, Pt. X, of the Supplementary Report of the Land Planning Committee to the National Resources Board (1935), p. 1.

[270] Op. Sol. I. D., M.19190, June 2, 1926.

[271] 34 Stat. 182, 183, 25 U. S. C. 349. For regulations regarding this statute see 25 C. F. R. 241.1–241.2.

[272] United States v. Debell, 227 Fed. 760, 770 (C. C. A. 8, 1915). This case held that the Secretary may not determine such competency by an arbitrary test, such as the Indian's awareness of the effect of his deeding restricted property, saying, "* * * a person might know he was making a deed to his property, and that after he made and delivered the deed he could not regain his property, and yet be utterly incapable of managing his affairs, the sale of his property, or the care or disposition of the proceeds. * * *." (P. 770.) Also see Miller v. United States, 57 F. 2d 987 (C. C. A. 10, 1932).

[273] United States v. Debell, 227 Fed. 775 (C. C. A. 8, 1915).

[274] 34 Stat. 1015, 1018, 25 U. S. C. 405.

[275] United States v. Nez Perce County, Idaho, 267 Fed. 495, 497 (D. C. D. Idaho 1917).

[276] 36 Stat. 855, 25 U. S. C. 372. For regulations regarding certificates of competency see 25 C. F. R. 241.3–241.7.

[277] Ex parte Pero, 99 F. 2d 28, 34 (C. C. A. 7, 1938), cert. den. 306 U. S. 643.

Statutory [278] and administrative [279] distinctions in the determination of competency to alienate freely often hinge on the quantum of the Indian blood of the allottee.[280]

(b) Treaties.—Many treaties contain special provisions providing for the separation of competent and incompetent Indians.[281] The Treaty of October 18, 1864,[282] between the United States and the Chippewas provides that the agent shall divide the Indians who have selected lands into two classes:

> Those who are intelligent, and have sufficient education, and are qualified by business habits to prudently manage their affairs, shall be set down as "competents," and those who are uneducated, or unqualified in other respects to prudently manage their affairs, or who are of idle, wandering, or dissolute habits, and all orphans, shall be set down as "those not so competent."

The United States agreed to issue fee patents to the competent Indians, but the incompetents could not alienate their land without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

(2) Inability to receive or spend funds.—Another special meaning of "incompetency" is inability to control funds, illustrated by the Act of March 2, 1907,[283] which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to designate any individual Indian belonging to any tribe whom he deems capable of managing his affairs to be apportioned his pro rata shares of tribal funds.[284]

---

[278] For example the Act of February 27, 1925, 43 Stat. 1008 (Osage), distinguishes between a member of the Osage tribe of more than one-half blood and one with less. Also see Act of March 1, 1907, 34 Stat. 1015, 1034, which removed the restrictions upon alienation of allotments of Chippewas of mixed blood imposed by the General Allotment Act; Act of May 27, 1908, 35 Stat. 312 (Five Civilized Tribes), discussed in United States v. Bartlett, 235 U. S. 72 (1914), aff'g 203 Fed. 410 (C. C. A. 8, 1913), and Whitchurch v. Crawford, 92 F. 2d 249 (C. C. A. 10, 1937), aff'g sub nom. Whitchurch v. Burge, 17 F. Supp. 234 (D. C. Okla. 1936). Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325, 353, interpreted in United States v. First National Bank, 234 U. S. 245 (1914), aff'g 208 Fed. 988 (C. C. A. 8, 1913). Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 1, 36 Stat. 855, 25 U. S. C. 372, interpreted in United States v. Sherburne Mercantile Co., 68 F. 2d 155, 156 (C. C. A. 9, 1933).

The courts have justified these distinctions. The court in United States v. Shock, 187 Fed. 862 (C. C. E. D. Okla. 1911), said:

> * * * The varying degrees of blood most naturally become the lines of demarcation between the different classes, because experience shows that generally speaking the greater percentage of Indian blood a given allottee has, the less capable he is by natural qualification and experience to manage his property. * * * (P. 870.)

Also see Tiger v. Western Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286, 306, 308 (1911); United States v. Waller, 243 U. S. 452, 462 (1917); United States v. Ferguson, 247 U. S. 175 (1918), aff'g 225 Fed. 974 (C. C. A. 8, 1915); 34 Op. A. G. 275, 281 (1924).

[279] Annual Report of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, p. 3 (1917):

> While ethnologically a preponderance of white blood has not heretofore been a criterion of competency, nor even now is it always a safe standard, it is almost an axiom that an Indian who has a larger proportion of white blood than Indian partakes more of the characteristics of the former than of the latter. In thought and action, so far as the business world is concerned, he approximates more closely to the white blood ancestry.

[280] The determination of competency is often a difficult administrative decision. Leupp, The Indian and His Problem (1910), pp. 67–78. Also see Schmeckebier, The Office of Indian Affairs, Its History, Activities, and Organization (1927), p. 29. During some periods the Indian Service was desirous of declaring Indians competent. Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1918), pp. 22, 47, id. (1917), p. 11. Congress sometimes authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commission to classify the competent and incompetent Indians of an Indian tribe (Crow Act of June 4, 1920, sec. 12; 41 Stat. 751). For further discussion see Chapter 5, sec. 13, and Chapter 12, sec. 2.

The Circuit Court of Appeals in Cully v. Mitchell, 37 F. 2d 493 (C. C. A. 10, 1930), wrote:

> If Congress were concerned alone with incompetency in fact, some intelligence tests would have been more appropriate, for Indians, like whites, differ in mental stature, and some full-bloods are actually more competent than other half-bloods. (P. 498.)

Also see United States v. First National Bank of Detroit, 234 U. S. 245 (1914).

[281] Treaty of May 24, 1834, with the Chickasaws, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 450; Treaty of January 31, 1855, with the Wyandotts, Art. 2, 10 Stat. 1159, interpreted in 11 Op. A. G. 197 (1865). Treaty of October 18, 1864, with the Chippewa, Art. 3, 14 Stat. 657, 658. Treaties providing for restrictions on alienation: Treaty of July 16, 1859, with the Swan Creek and Black River Chippewa and the Munsee or Christian Indians, 12 Stat. 1105; Treaty of October 5, 1859, with the Kansas Tribe, Art. 3, 12 Stat. 1111, 1112; Treaty of February 18, 1861, with the Arapahoes and Cheyenne Indians, Art. 3, 12 Stat. 1163, 1164.

[282] 14 Stat. 657, 658.

[283] 34 Stat. 1221.

[284] Another use of the term is to describe the legal incapacity of an Osage to expend his income. See Chapter 23, sec. 12B. Ex parte Pero, 99 F. 2d 28, 34 (C. C. A. 7, 1938) cert. den. 306 U. S. 643. Also see Darks v. Ickes, 69 F. 2d 231 (App. D. C. 1934), Barnett v. United States, 82 F. 2d 765 (C. C. A. 9, 1936), cert. den. 299 U. S. 546, rehearing den. 299 U. S. 620.

SECTION 9. THE MEANINGS OF "WARDSHIP"

The relationship of guardian and ward, at common law, is a relation under which, typically, the guardian (a) has custody of the ward's person and can decide where the ward is to reside, (b) is required to educate and maintain the ward, out of the ward's estate, (c) is authorized to manage the ward's property, for the benefit of the ward, (d) is precluded from profiting at the expense of the ward's estate, or acquiring any interest therein, (e) is responsible to the courts and to the ward, at such time as the ward may become sui juris, for an accounting with respect to the conduct of the guardianship.[285]

It is clear that this relationship does not exist between the United States and the Indians, although there are important similarities and suggestive parallels between the two relationships. The relationship of the United States to the Indian tribes and their members is analyzed in many other sections and chapters of this work, and it would be futile to treat under the heading of "wardship" the many aspects of that relation which are analyzed elsewhere under more precise topical headings. Rather we shall attempt in the present section to clarify and separate the various questions that have frequently been fused or confused under the term "wardship."

The term "ward" has been applied to Indians in many different senses and the failure to distinguish among these different senses is responsible for a considerable amount of confusion. Today a careful draftsman of statutes will not use the term "ward Indian" or, if he uses the term at all, will expressly define it for the purposes of the statute. The fact remains, however, that the term "ward Indian" has been used in several statutes,[286]

---

[285] 1 Schouler, Marriage, Divorce, Separation, and Domestic Relations (6th ed., 1921), pt. IV.

[286] See, for example, Act of June 15, 1938, sec. 1, 52 Stat. 696, 25 U. S. C. A. 241, amending R. S. sec. 2139; Act of May 27, 1908, 35 Stat. 312 (Five Civilized Tribes). The Act of February 25, 1933, 47 Stat. 907, 25 U. S. C. 14, refers to Indians "who are recognized wards of the Federal Government," and the Act of February 14, 1920, 41 Stat. 408, 410, 25 U. S. C. 282, refers to "Indian children who are wards of the Government."

a few treaties,[287] and many judicial opinions.[288] It may help us to avoid some of the fallacies that result from a shuffling of the different meanings of the term "wardship" to survey these various meanings. We shall find at least 10 distinct connotations of the term in various contexts.[289]

A. WARDS AS DOMESTIC DEPENDENT NATIONS

Like so many other concepts in Indian law, the idea of "wardship" appears to have been first utilized by Chief Justice Marshall.[290] In fairness to the great Chief Justice, however, it must be said that he used the term with more respect for its accepted legal significance than some of his successors have shown. He did not apply the term "ward" to individual Indians; he applied the term to Indian tribes. He did not say that Indian tribes were wards of the Government but only that the relation to the United States of the Indian tribes within its territorial limits resembles that of a ward to his guardian.[291] The Chief Justice hastened to explain this sentence by offering a bill of particulars (pp. 17–18):

> They look to our government for protection; rely upon its kindness and its power; appeal to it for relief to their wants; and address the president as their great father. They and their country are considered by foreign nations, as well as by ourselves, as being so completely under the sovereignty and dominion of the United States, that any attempt to acquire their lands, or to form a political connection with them, would be considered by all as an invasion of our territory and an act of hostility.

The court went on to say (p. 18):

> These considerations go far to support the opinion, that the framers of our constitution had not the Indian tribes in view, when they opened the courts of the Union to controversies between a state or the citizens thereof and foreign states.

The question in the case was whether the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit by the Cherokee Nation against the State of Georgia under that provision of the Constitution (Art. III, sec. 2) which provides for the extension of the federal judicial power "to controversies * * * between a State * * * and foreign States * * *." To that question the following answer was given:

> The Court has bestowed its best attention on this question, and, after mature deliberation, the majority is of opinion, that an Indian tribe or nation within the United States is not a foreign state, in the sense of the constitution; and cannot maintain an action in the courts of the United States. (P. 20.)

Thus in its original and most precise signification the term "ward" was applied (a) to tribes rather than to individuals, (b) as a suggestive analogy rather than as an exact description, and (c) to distinguish an Indian tribe from a foreign state.

It should be noted that the basis upon which the Supreme Court applied the concept of wardship was the acceptance of that status, in effect, by the Indian tribes themselves: "They look to our government for protection * * *." For many years after the decision in Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, the Indian tribes continued to emphasize, in their treaties with the United States, their dependence upon the protection of the Federal Government.[292]

B. WARDS AS TRIBES SUBJECT TO CONGRESSIONAL POWER

By a natural extension of the term, "wardship" came to be commonly used to connote the submission of Indian tribes to congressional legislation. The power of Congress to legislate in matters affecting the Indian tribes was expressly recognized by the tribes themselves in many early treaties.[293] Thus, quite apart from the specific power given by the Constitution to Congress to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes, there came to be recognized, as an outgrowth of the federal treaty-making power and the power of Congress to legislate for the effectuation of treaties, a broad and vaguely defined congressional power over Indian affairs.[294] By virtue of this power, congressional legislation that would have been unconstitutional if applied to non-Indians was held to be constitutional when limited in its application to Indians. In this sense, "wardship" was still a concept applicable primarily to the Indian tribe, rather than to the individual members thereof, since it was the tribe as such that entered into treaties. As with the original meaning of the term "wardship," the justification of the result reached, in this case the extension of congressional power, was found in a course of action to which the Indian tribes themselves had expressly consented.

The effective meaning of the term "wardship," in the sense of special subjection to congressional power, is to be found entirely in the realm of constitutional law. The extent of this constitutional power is a matter dealt with in other chapters. For the present it is enough to note that this power is utilized in two general ways: (1) as a justification for congressional legislation in matters ordinarily within the exclusive control of the states,[295] and (2) as a justification for federal legislation which would be considered "confiscatory" if applied to non-Indians.[296]

In upholding the power of Congress to confer jurisdiction upon the federal courts over certain crimes committed on Indian reservations within a state, the Supreme Court of the United States said:[297]

> * * * These Indian tribes are the wards of the nation. They are communities dependent on the United States. Dependent largely for their daily food. Dependent for their political rights. They owe no allegiance to the States, and receive from them no protection. Because of the local ill feeling, the people of the States where they are found are often their deadliest enemies. From their

---

[287] Art. 10 of the Treaty of April 1, 1850, with the Wyandots, 9 Stat. 987, which provides that "persons adjudged to be incompetent to take care of their property * * * shall become the wards of the United States * * *."

[288] Often the courts have described specific tribes of Indians as wards. See Oregon v. Hitchcock, 202 U. S. 60, 70 (1906) (Klamath); Ex parte Webb, 225 U. S. 663, 684 (1912) (Five Civilized Tribes); LaMotte v. United States, 254 U. S. 570, 575 (1921) (Osage); Jaybird Mining Co. v. Weir, 271 U. S. 609, 612 (1926) (Quapaw); United States v. Candelaria, 271 U. S. 432, 443 (1926) (Pueblo); British-American Co. v. Board, 299 U. S. 159, 160 (1936) (Blackfeet).

[289] The number of ways in which these 10 meanings can be combined is two to the tenth power minus one, that is to say, 1,023. It would be obviously impossible to analyze all of these combinations within the confines of this work.

[290] Analogies to the common law concept of wardship may be found in the early Spanish and French recognition that the Indians were not able to deal with the whites on an equal footing and required special governmental protection. See Choteau v. Molony, 16 How. 203 (1853). Also see United States v. Douglas, 190 Fed. 482 (C. C. A. 8, 1911), for a theory of the origin of guardianship.

[291] Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 17, 18, 20 (1831).

[292] See Chapter 3, sec. 3B(1).

[293] See Chapter 3, sec. 3B(4) and Chapter 5, sec. 2.

[294] See Chapter 5, sec. 2.

[295] See Chapters 5 and 6.

[296] See Chapter 5, sec. 1.

[297] United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375 (1886); also see United States v. McBratney, 104 U. S. 621 (1881). See Introduction, footnote 22.

very weakness and helplessness, so largely due to the course of dealing of the Federal Government with them, and the treaties in which it has been promised, there arises the duty of protection, and with it the power. This has always been recognized by the Executive and by Congress, and by this court, whenever the question has arisen. (Pp. 383–384.)

Though state courts have justified the regulation of Indian tribes by the doctrine of state wardship,[298] it is settled that federal guardianship does not terminate with the admission of a state into the Union.[299] Although the power ascribed to wardship is not unlimited and is subject to constitutional restrictions,[300] the practical significance of the wardship concept in these cases is to justify certain types of legislation that would otherwise be held unconstitutional. There is thus not only an important difference but indeed a striking contrast between the use of the wardship concept in relation to Indian tribes and the use of the concept in private law. In private law, a guardian is subject to rigid court control in the administration of the ward's affairs and property. In constitutional law the guardianship relation has generally been invoked as a reason for relaxing court control over the action of the "guardian." [301]

C. WARDS AS INDIVIDUALS SUBJECT TO CONGRESSIONAL POWER

When Congress legislates with reference to tribal rights and duties it necessarily affects, indirectly, the rights and duties of the individual members of the tribes. Thus the courts, in holding that Congress had extraordinary powers over Indian tribes as "wards," were indirectly holding that Congress had extensive powers in dealing with the members of such tribes in matters affecting their tribal relations. The courts soon made this logical implication explicit and came to apply the term "wards" to individual Indians, signifying the susceptibility of individual Indians to an extraordinary measure of congressional control in matters affecting their tribal relations.[302]

The use of the concept of wardship to justify a very broad exercise of power is also exemplified by judicial utterances to the effect that state control is superseded because of federal wardship.[303]

D. WARDS AS SUBJECTS OF FEDERAL COURT JURISDICTION

The term "wards of the United States" has been applied to Indians in still a fourth sense, as equivalent to the phrase "subject to the jurisdiction of the federal courts." [304] Certain federal laws are, in terms, applicable only to Indians. By such laws, and by treaties, Indians have been subjected to federal court jurisdiction in many realms where non-Indians are amenable only to courts of the states. It would be foolish to quarrel with this use of the term "wardship" to express a jurisdictional relationship, but it is important to recognize that "wardship" in this sense has no necessary connection with the other senses of the term that have been examined. A group of individuals, whether identified by race or in any other manner, may be subjected to a particular set of laws administered by federal courts, and in this sense they might be considered "wards of the Federal Government." This might be the case even though the extent of constitutional power vested in Congress over the group in question were no greater than the extent of the power which Congress could exercise, but has not exercised, over other groups. Thus the fact that certain individuals are "wards" in the jurisdictional sense does not mean that they must be "wards" in the constitutional sense. Conversely, individuals may be "wards" in the constitutional sense, and yet if Congress has not actually exercised its powers over that group but has allowed them to be dealt with by the states, the individuals concerned would not be "wards" in the sense of "subjects of federal jurisdiction."

E. WARDS AS SUBJECTS OF ADMINISTRATIVE POWER

Still another distinct sense of the term "wardship" involves the concept of administrative power. To say that the United States has certain extraordinary powers over Indians is to say that the President and the Senate, by treaty, and that Congress, by statute, may exercise certain extraordinary powers over the Indians, powers which could not constitutionally be exercised over non-Indians generally, and it is to say that courts and administrators may thereupon enforce such measures. It is, however, another thing entirely to say that administrators, in the absence of such laws or treaty provisions, may in their wisdom govern Indians by issuing and enforcing administrative regulations. There is, therefore, an important distinction between the concept of an Indian tribe or an individual Indian as a "ward of the United States" and the concept of an Indian tribe or individual as a "ward of the Interior Department." To identify these concepts is to identify the United States with a particular branch of its government and to assume that the powers of the Interior Department over the Indians, in the absence of treaty or statutory authorization, are as broad as the powers of Congress. The error of this assumption is ob-

---

[298] For a case holding that the New York Indians are under the wardship of New York State, see George v. Pierce, 85 Misc. 105, 148 N. Y. Supp. 230 (1914). Also see John v. Sabattis, 69 Me. 473 (1879):

> The wandering and improvident habits of the remnants of Indian tribes within our borders led our legislature at an early period to make them, in a manner, the wards of the state, and especially to take the control and regulate the tenure of their lands. (P. 476.)

and Moor v. Veazie, 32 Me. 343 (1850), aff'd on other grounds, 55 U. S. 567 (1852):

> By the agreed statement it appears, that the Penobscot tribe of Indians "always have been, and now are under the jurisdiction and guardianship of this State." This tribe cannot, therefore, be one of those referred to in the constitution of the United States. (P. 368.)

Also see Minnesota Laws, 1925, chapter 291, p. 365; 13 Yale L. J. (1904) 250; Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States, 16 J. Comp. Leg. (1934), pp. 78–80, and memorandum filed by the Attorney General of the United States in United States v. Hamilton, 233 Fed. 685, 686–690 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1915).

[299] United States v. Ramsey, 271 U. S. 467 (1926); Surplus Trading Co. v. Cook, 281 U. S. 647, 651 (1930).

[300] Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665 (1912). Also see Chapter 5 sec. 1.

[301] Consider the significance of the word "although" in the following sentence, referring to the Five Civilized Tribes, taken from the opinion of the Supreme Court in Ex parte Webb, 225 U. S. 663 (1912): "Although those tribes had long been treated more liberally than other Indians, they remained none the less wards of the Government, and in all respects subject to its control." (P. 684.)

[302] In Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 106 (1884), the Court said:

> * * * But the question whether any Indian tribes, or any members thereof, have become so far advanced in civilization, that they should be let out of a state of pupilage, * * * is a question to be decided by the nation whose wards they are * * *.

5 Op. A. G. 36, 40 (1848):

> * * * The government deals directly not only with the tribe, but with the individuals of the tribe. It exercises a parental or guardian authority over them as a dependent people, in a state of pupilage. * * *

See also United States v. Pelican, 232 U. S. 442 (1914); 19 Op. A. G. 161, 165 (1888).

[303] United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375, 383 (1886); Ward v. Love County, 253 U. S. 17 (1920); but see United States ex rel. Kennedy v. Tyler, 269 U. S. 13 (1925). On the sharp difference of opinion among Indians on the question of termination of guardianship see Meriam, op. cit. pp. 100, 105.

[304] See United States v. Thomas, 151 U. S. 577, 585 (1894), and see Chapters 5, 6, 18 and 19.

vious and the implications of this error have elsewhere been analyzed.[305]

F. WARDS AS BENEFICIARIES OF A TRUST

The term "ward" has sometimes been loosely used as a synonym for "beneficiary of a trust" or "cestui que trust." Thus when land is held by the United States in trust for an Indian tribe or in trust for an individual or group of individuals, it is sometimes said that this creates a wardship relationship by virtue of which Indians are unable to alienate the land. The futility of this method of argument is shown by the fact that even where no trust relationship is found, and the land of an Indian tribe is vested in fee simple in the tribe itself, the land is nevertheless inalienable (except in certain special cases) by virtue of general federal legislation.[306] There is thus no practical justification for the use of the term "ward" as synonymous with "cestui que trust." Obviously property, real or personal, may be held in trust for a perfectly competent individual who is nobody's ward, and on the other hand perfect title to land or any other property may be vested in a lunatic or a minor whose every act is subject to a guardian's physical and legal control.

G. WARDS AS NONCITIZENS

Occasionally the term "ward Indian" has been used as synonymous with "noncitizen" Indian. This appears to be the case, for instance in the following sentence from the opinion of the Supreme Court (per Harlan, J.) in the case of United States v. Rickert:[307]

> * * * It is for the legislative branch of the Government to say when these Indians shall cease to be dependent and assume the responsibilities attaching to citizenship.

The frequent confusion regarding the supposed incompatibility of the terms "wardship" and "citizenship" has already been discussed in this chapter. It has been seen that the extent of congressional power over Indians is not diminished by the grant of citizenship. As was said by the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Waller:[308]

> * * * The tribal Indians are wards of the Government, and as such under its guardianship. It rests with Congress to determine the time and extent of emancipation. Conferring citizenship is not inconsistent with the continuation of such guardianship, for it has been held that even after the Indians have been made citizens the relation of guardian and ward for some purposes may continue. On the other hand, Congress may relieve the Indians from such guardianship and control, in whole or in part, and may, if it sees fit, clothe them with full rights and responsibilities concerning their property or give to them a partial emancipation if it thinks that course better for their protection. United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591, 598, and cases cited. (Pp. 459–460.) [Italics added.]

H. WARDSHIP AND RESTRAINTS ON ALIENATION

The term "ward" has sometimes been applied to an Indian allottee who holds land subject to restraints upon alienation. According to this usage, when the Indian has received a fee patent, or has been adjudged "competent" to manage his own affairs and his property has been released from the protection of the Federal Government, he ceases to be a "ward." The distinction between this use of the term "ward" and the constitutional sense of the term discussed above becomes apparent in the situation in which Congress reimposes a restriction on alienation which has already expired. The individual allottee ceased to be a "ward," in the sense that he was freed from restrictions upon alienation, but the courts say that Congress can reimpose those restrictions because the Indian is a "ward" of the Federal Government.[309] It is obvious that in this situation the term "wardship" is being used in two distinct senses.

I. WARDSHIP AND INEQUALITY OF BARGAINING POWER

Doubtful clauses in treaties or agreements between the United States and Indian tribes have often been resolved by the courts in a nontechnical way, as the Indians would have understood the language and in their favor. The Supreme Court of the United States stated, per Justice Matthews, in the case of Choctaw Nation v. United States:[310]

> The recognized relation between the parties to this controversy, therefore, is that between a superior and an inferior, whereby the latter is placed under the care and control of the former, and which, while it authorizes the adoption on the part of the United States of such policy as their own public interests may dictate, recognizes, on the other hand, such an interpretation of their acts and promises as justice and reason demand in all cases where power is exerted by the strong over those to whom they owe care and protection. (P. 28.)

The principle of construction in favor of the Indians is also applicable to congressional statutes.[311]

---

[305] See Chapter 5, sec. 8. Cf. comment of court in Ex parte Bi-a-lille, 100 Pac. 450 (Ariz. 1909):

> Indians are not wards of the executive officers, but wards of the United States, acting through executive officers, it is true, but expressing its fostering will by legislation. (P. 451.)

[306] See Chapter 15, sec. 18; Chapter 20, sec. 7.

[307] 188 U. S. 432, 445 (1903).

[308] 243 U. S. 452, 459–60 (1917). In United States v. Nice, 241 U. S. 591 (1916), the court said:

> Of course, when the Indians are prepared to exercise the privileges and bear the burdens of one sui juris, the tribal relation may be dissolved and the national guardianship brought to an end, but it rests with Congress to determine when and how this shall be done, and whether the emancipation shall at first be complete or only partial. Citizenship is not incompatible with tribal existence or continued guardianship, and so may be conferred without completely emancipating the Indians or placing them beyond the reach of congressional regulations adopted for their protection. (P. 598.)

Congress has the exclusive power to determine when guardianship shall terminate. Tiger v. Western Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286, 315 (1911). Accord: Surplus Trading Co. v. Cook, 281 U. S. 647, 651, (1930); Dewey County, S. D. v. United States, 26 F. 2d 434 (C. C. A. 8, 1928), aff'g sub nom. United States v. Dewey County, S. D., 14 F. 2d 784 (D. C. S. Dak. 1926), cert. den. 278 U. S. 649 (1928); Katzenmeyer v. United States, 225 Fed. 523 (C. C. A. 7, 1915); Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553 (1903). Also see Chapter 5.

[309] Cf. Brader v. James, 246 U. S. 88 (1918); Tiger v. Western Investment Co. 221 U. S. 286 (1911).

[310] 119 U. S. 1 (1886), rev'g 21 C. Cls. 59 (1886). Also see Chapter 3, sec. 2; United States v. Seufert Bros. Co., 249 U. S. 194 (1919), aff'g sub nom. United States ex rel. Williams v. Seufert Bros. Co., 233 Fed. 579 (D. C. Ore. 1916). "* * * there is no rule that the language of Congressional statutes giving rise to a controversy between the Indians and the states should likewise be construed in favor of the Indians." (Brown, The Taxation of Indian Property (1931), 15 Minn. L. Rev., pp. 182, 185, referring to Goudy v. Meath, 203 U. S. 146 (1906).) Justice Stone, while Attorney General, referred to the judicial "disinclination to invoke technical rules of law to the prejudice of Indian tribes or members thereof * * *." 34 Op. A. G. 302, 304 (1924).

[311] Legislation of Congress is to be construed in the interest of the Indian. United States v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278, 290 (1909). Red

The Supreme Court has said:[312]

> But in the Government's dealings with the Indians the rule is exactly the contrary. The construction, instead of being strict, is liberal; doubtful expressions, instead of being resolved in favor of the United States, are to be resolved in favor of a weak and defenseless people, who are wards of the nation, and dependent wholly upon its protection and good faith. This rule of construction has been recognized, without exception, for more than a hundred years and has been applied in tax cases. (P. 675.)

The theory also helps to explain the rule of statutory construction, often recited but not always followed, that general acts of Congress do not apply to Indians, if their application would affect the Indians adversely,[313] unless congressional intent to include them is clear.[314]

It should be clear that the use of the terms "guardian" and "ward" in these cases has no necessary connection in the other senses in which the ward concept has been invoked.

J. WARDS AS SUBJECTS OF FEDERAL BOUNTY

The terms "wardship" and "guardianship" have been frequently used to convey the thought that Indians have a racial right to receive rations and other special favors of various sorts from the Federal Government. The error of this notion has been pointed out in other chapters,[315] and the fact that this notion does not logically follow from, or imply, any of the other senses of the terms discussed in the foregoing pages is too clear for argument.

Bird v. United States, 203 U. S. 76 (1906); 34 Op. A. G. 439, 444 (1925). United States v. First National Bank, 234 U. S. 245 (1914), aff'g 208 Fed. 988 (C. C. A. 8, 1913), excludes from this rule statutes having none of the features of an agreement. This decision is critized by R. C. Brown, The Taxation of Indian Property (1931), 15 Minn. L. Rev., pp. 182, 185, fn. 17. It is also a settled rule, the Supreme Court has said, "that as between the whites and the Indians the laws are to be construed most favorably to the latter." Cherokee Intermarriage Cases, 203 U. S. 76, 94 (1906).

[312] Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665 (1912); quoted with approval in Blackbird v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 38 F. 2d 978 (C. C. A. 10, 1930). Accord: Gleason v. Wood, 224 U. S. 679 (1912); English v. Richardson, Treasurer of Tulsa County, Oklahoma, 224 U. S. 680 (1912).

[313] Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556 (1883); 12 Op. A. G. 208 (1867). See Lewellyn v. Colonial Trust Co., 275 U. S. 232 (1927). Cf. McCandless v. United States ex rel. Diabo, 25 F. 2d 71 (C. C. A. 3, 1928), aff'g sub nom. United States ex rel. Diabo v. McCandless, 18 F. 2d 282 (D. C. E. D. Pa. 1927); United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432 (1903).

[314] Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 616 (1870), aff'g sub nom. United States v. Tobacco Factory, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,528 (D. C. W. D. Ark. 1870); United States v. 43 Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U. S. 188 (1876); 21 Op. A. G. 466 (1897); Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U. S. 94, 100 (1884).

[315] See especially Chapter 12, sec. 1.

SECTION 10. CIVIL LIBERTIES

The term "civil liberties" has been used in many senses. In this chapter we shall use the term to cover those immunities from governmental interference which are enjoyed by individuals and which are not derived from the ownership of property. The category of "civil liberties" thus defined includes certain subjects which are elsewhere treated in this chapter, such as the rights of citizenship, the right to vote, the right to sue, the right to contract, and the right to hold public office. These rights, of course, are fundamental in the field of civil liberties. There are other rights, however, which are of great importance.

The civil liberties of the Indian are, generally speaking, those liberties which have been conferred constitutionally or otherwise upon all citizens of the United States.[316] The legal problems arising in the defense of Indian civil liberties, however, differ fundamentally from those problems which arise in the defense of the civil liberties of other groups. This is because infringements upon civil liberties are byproducts of Government action and the action of the federal and state governments with respect to Indians constitutes a special, and in many ways peculiar, body of law and administration. In this mass of special legislation and special administration we find a number of civil liberties problems that have not arisen elsewhere in American law.

The principle of government protection of the Indians runs through the course of federal legislation and administration. The line of distinction between protection and oppression is often difficult to draw. What may seem to administrative officials and even to Congress to be a wise measure to protect the Indian against supposed infirmities of his own character, may seem to the Indian concerned a piece of presumptuous and intolerable interference with precious individual rights. These differences in appraising a given measure of government regulation are natural where differences in standards of value exist. In the interaction between two groups with divergent histories, traditions, and ways of life, such differences of value standards are common. They must be continually reckoned with by one who seeks to understand divergent viewpoints in the field of Indian civil liberties.

A. DISCRIMINATION

(1) Discriminatory state laws.—One set of problems in the field of Indian civil liberties arises out of discriminatory state statutes and state constitutional provisions. Laws and constitutional provisions which deprive Indians of their privileges of voting,[317] serving on a jury,[318] or testifying in a lawsuit[319] have already been discussed.

Some states enacted a series of discriminatory and oppressive laws against the Indians. After discussing some of the flagrant laws of this type passed by the early legislature of California,[320] Mr. Goodrich concludes:

> * * * Enough has been said to indicate what the legal status of the Indian was in the California of the fifties and sixties, without touching upon the treatment meted to him outside the law. The legislation affecting him reflects the pioneer spirit, one of whose necessary virtues is ruthlessness toward any element, human or other, which may be thought to endanger the new community. The swift economic development of California was bought at [316] In re Sah Quah, 31 Fed. 327 (D. C. Alaska, 1886), holding that, despite custom, slaveholding was illegal after the passage of the Thirteenth Amendment. In Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 306 (1879), the Supreme Court of the United States said that the colored race was entitled to all "the civil rights that the superior race enjoy." The court held in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356 (1886), that the guarantees of protection of the Fourteenth Amendment extend to all persons within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, without regard to differences of race, color, or nationality, and that a statute, though impartial on its face, was unconstitutional if "applied" and administered with an evil eye and an unequal hand so as practically to make unjust and illegal discrimination between persons in similar circumstances (p. 374).

[317] See sec. 3, supra.

[318] See sec. 6, supra.

[319] See sec. 6, supra.

[320] Goodrich, The Legal Status of the California Indian (1926), 14 Calif. L. Rev., pp. 83, 91–94; also see pp. 157, 170–176.

a certain cost of human values. It was the Indian who paid the price.[321] (P. 94.)

Although laws of this type are less frequently passed today than in the early state history, some have never been repealed.[322]

A more recent picture of discrimination is given in the case of United States v. Wright,[323] dealing with the Eastern Cherokees:

> * * * the state of North Carolina has afforded them few of the privileges of citizenship. It has not furnished them schools, and forbids their attendance upon schools maintained for the white and colored people of the state. It will not receive their unfortunate insane or their deaf, dumb, or blind in state institutions. It makes no provision for their instruction in the arts of agriculture or for the care of their sick or destitute. It supervises their roads; but until comparatively recent years these were maintained by their own labor. * * * Politically they have been subject to the laws of the state, but economically they have been wards of the federal government and cared for as such under the provisions of its laws. (Pp. 304–305.)

(2) Discriminatory federal laws.—During much of the history of the United States, the original occupants of the continent were imprisoned on reservations.[324] As late as May 8, 1890, Congress provided that the Spokane Falls and Northern Railway Co. should prohibit the riding by the Indians of the Colville Indian Reservation upon any of its trains unless they were provided with passes signed by the Indian agent.[325]

The statute admitting Utah to statehood[326] illustrates a comprehensive form of discrimination:

> The constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not to be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. * * *

Early laws, only recently repealed by the Act of May 21, 1934,[327] hampered freedom of speech, empowered the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to remove from an Indian reservation "detrimental" persons, and sanctioned various measures of military control within the boundaries of the reservations.

A summary of these repealed laws conveys an excellent insight into early congressional disregard of the civil liberties of Indians.

Sections 171, 172, and 173 of the United States Code were derived from the Trade and Intercourse Act.[328] They prohibited the sending or carrying of seditious messages to Indians and correspondence with foreign nations to excite Indians to war.[329] Like many other archaic espionage laws, they were broad, ambiguous, and liable to be applied to situations beyond the contemplation of the Congress,[330] as when the Federal Government arrested an individual who conferred with the Sandia Pueblo in order to join in opposing a Government engineering project in the Pueblo.[331]

Section 219[332] required foreigners[333] entering the Indian country to secure a passport from the Department of the Interior or officer of the United States commanding the nearest military post on the frontiers.

Section 220[334] empowered the superintendent of Indian affairs and the Indian agents and subagents to remove persons illegally in the Indian country and authorized the President to direct the military force to be employed in such removal.

Section 221[335] provided that a person returning after removal from the Indian country would be liable to a penalty of $1,000.

Section 222 authorized the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior to remove any person from a reservation whose presence in his judgment may be "detrimental to the peace and welfare of the Indians."[336]

In an opinion of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior discussing this section, it was said:

> * * * The power of removal under this section has been held to cover not only collectors, but even an alderman of an incorporated town in a Territory. The alderman in that case was not a State official, since the reservation was not then included within a State, but the decision would be equally applicable if he were. Ex parte Carter (1903, 76 S. W. 102, 4 I. T. 539). The question of whether the presence of any person in Indian country is detrimental to the welfare of the Indians is one for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and the courts will not review their decision. United States v. Sturgeon (1879, Fed. Cas. No. 16,413, D. C. Nev.). See United States v. Mullin (1895, 71 Fed. 682, 684, D. C. Neb.).[337]

The Attorney General held that the Commissioner and his agents have full discretion to remove from an Indian reservation any person not of the tribe entitled to remain thereon, and that they could not be interfered with by mandamus or injunction of any court.[338]

---

[321] Schmeckebier, in The Office of Indian Affairs: Its History, Activities, and Organization (1927), writes:

> * * * public opinion on the frontier justified practically any action taken by settlers against the Indians, regardless of law or equity. (P. 23.)

The Government was powerless to prevent constant violation of treaty stipulations by the whites; ibid., p. 62. Also see United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375 (1886), and 19 Op. A. G. 511 (1890). The present attitude towards the Indian is described as follows:

> In the generation that has passed * * * the white neighbors have ceased to be deadly enemies in the physical sense, but in too many places they are deadly enough as regards the Indian's property. It is not true that all communities near the Indian are indifferent to his welfare, but it is an unfortunate fact that the Indian is too often regarded as legitimate prey and that public opinion is indifferent to the wrongs perpetrated upon him. * * * (Schmeckebier op. cit. p. 11.)

Also see 9 Op. A. G. 110, 111 (1857).

[322] Considerable discrimination still exists against Indians in several states. Rice, The Position of the American Indian in the Law of the United States (1934), 16 J. Comp. Leg. 78, 79.

[323] 53 F. 2d 300 (C. C. A. 4, 1931).

[324] Kinney, A Continent Lost—A Civilization Won (1937), pp. 168–170, 209, 231, 311, 314.

[325] Sec. 8, 26 Stat. 102, 103. A series of treaties in 1865 restricted the freedom of the Indians to leave the reservation without the written consent of the agent or superintendent. Treaty of August 12, 1865, with the Snake, Art. 3, 14 Stat. 683; Treaty of October 14, 1865, with the Cheyenne and Arrapahoe, Art. 2, 14 Stat. 703, 704; Treaty of October 18, 1865, with the Camanche and Kiowa, Art. 2, 14 Stat. 717, 718.

[326] Act of July 16, 1894, sec. 3, 28 Stat. 107, 108. A similar provision is found in the act providing for the division of Dakota into two states and enabling the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and state governments; Act of February 22, 1889, sec. 4, 25 Stat. 676.

[327] 48 Stat. 787, repealing secs. 171–173, 186, 219–226 of title 25 of U. S. C. Some of these provisions are interpreted in 18 Op. A. G. 855 (1887).

[328] Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 729, 731. See Chapter 4, secs. 3, 6.

[329] A similar law, Act of January 17, 1800, 2 Stat. 6, expired by its terms (sec. 5) on March 3, 1802.

[330] See In re Lelah-Puc-Ka-Chee, 98 Fed. 429, 435 (D. C. N. D. Iowa, 1899).

[331] American Indian Life, Bull. No. 16, American Indian Defense Association, Inc. (1930), pp. 35–36.

[332] Derived from sec. 6 of the Act of June 30, 1834, c. 161, 4 Stat. 729, 730, R. S. § 2134. See Chapter 4, sec. 6.

[333] For the interpretation of "foreigner" see 18 Op. A. G. 555 (1887).

[334] Derived from sec. 10 of the Act of June 30, 1834, c. 161, 4 Stat. 729, 730, R. S. § 2147. See Chapter 4, sec. 6.

[335] Derived from sec. 2 of the Act of August 18, 1856, c. 128, 11 Stat. 65, 80, R. S. § 2148.

[336] Derived from sec. 2 of the Act of June 12, 1858, c. 155, 11 Stat. 329, 332, R. S. § 2149. See Chapter 4, sec. 8.

[337] Op. Sol. I. D., M.27487, July 26, 1933. Also see Rainbow v. Young, 161 Fed. 835 (C. C. A. 8, 1908).

[338] 20 Op. A. G. 245 (1891).

Sections 223, 224, 225 empowered the President to employ military forces for the enforcement of various laws and in the arrest of absconding Indians.[338a]

Section 226 authorized the marshal in executing process in Indian country to employ a posse comitatus, not exceeding three persons in any of the states respectively, to assist in executing process by arresting and bringing in prisoners from the Indian country.[339]

(3) Oppressive federal administrative action.—Administrative oppression has often infringed on the civil liberties of Indians. The oppression depended upon two main factors: (a) The great concentration of power in administrative officials; (b) the practice of confining Indian tribes on reservations. Both of these conditions were described by the Court of Claims in the case of Conners v. United States,[340] involving Indians of the Cheyenne Reservation:

> These Indians, indeed, in 1878 occupied an anomalous position, unknown to the common or the civil law or to any system of municipal law. They were neither citizens nor aliens; they were neither free persons nor slaves; they were the wards of the nation, and yet, on a reservation under a military guard, were little else than prisoners of war while war did not exist. Dull Knife and his daughters could be invited guests at the table of officers and gentlemen, behaving with dignity and propriety, and yet could be confined for life on a reservation which was to them little better than a dungeon, on the mere order of an executive officer.

(a) Concentration of administrative power.[341]—All persons living in civilized society are subjected to the orders of many public officials and employees, including policemen, tax collectors, judges, and administrative boards, and numerous private agencies and individuals, such as employers, creditors, utility companies, and landlords. Up to a few years ago the 200,000 reservation Indians were subjected to perhaps the greatest concentration of administrative absolutism in our governmental structure. At that time the Indian Bureau, represented by the superintendent, combined, for these Indians, the functions of an employer, landlord, policeman, judge, physician, banker, teacher, relief administrator, and employment agency. According to the report of the Bureau of Municipal Research, "the Indian superintendent is a czar within the territorial jurisdiction prescribed for him. He is ex-officio both guardian and trustee. In both of these capacities he acts while deciding what is needed for the Indian and while disbursing funds."[342]

As early as 1834 the great power of Indian agents was commented upon by the House Committee of Indian Affairs in a report[343] which stated:

> The tribes are placed at too great a distance from the Government to enable them to make their complaints against the arbitrary acts of our agents heard; and it is believed they have had much cause of complaint. Hitherto they have suffered in silence. The agents, being subject to no immediate control, have acted under scarcely any other responsibility than that of accountability for moneys received. Although much is expected from the personal character of the agents, yet it is not deemed safe to depend entirely upon it. (P. 8.)

Since 1884, Indian Service officials and judges chosen and removable by the superintendent of the reservation could arrest, try, and imprison reservation Indians. This system has been subjected to continued criticism by Congressmen, Indians, and Indian welfare societies. Prior to the election of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, several earlier administrations initiated studies to reform this condition but few substantial changes resulted.[344]

On November 27, 1935, the Secretary of the Interior revoked the regulations of the office, in force since 1884,[345] which empowered the superintendent of an Indian reservation to act as judge, jury, prosecuting attorney, police officer, and jailer. A judicial system was established giving the defendants the right to formal charges, jury trial, power to summon witnesses, and the privilege of bail.

John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has described the revised Law and Order Regulations in these terms:[346]

> * * * Indian Service Officials are prohibited from controlling, obstructing, or interfering with the functions of the Indian courts. The appointment and removal of Indian judges on those reservations where courts of Indian offenses are now maintained is made subject to confirmation by the Indians of the reservation. Indian defendants will hereafter have the benefit of formal charges, the power to summon witnesses, the privilege of bail, and the right to trial by jury. The offenses for which punishment may be imposed are specifically enumerated, the maximum of 6 months labor or $360 fine being imposed for such offenses as assault and battery, abduction, embezzlement, fraud, forgery, misbranding and bribery. * * *
>
> * * * * *
>
> The revision of law and order regulations is one step in the program of the present administration to eliminate obsolete regulations and bureaucratic procedures governing the conduct of Indians, and to endow the Indian tribes themselves with increased responsibility and freedom in local self-government. * * *
>
> These regulations are subject to modifications in the light of local conditions by each tribe organized under the Indian Reorganization Act.

Administrative control of Indian life, until recently, recognized no right of religious freedom.

Administrators who identified civilization with a particular sect infringed the religious liberty of the Indians and interfered, on the ground of immorality, with many of the dances and other cherished customs of some of the tribes.[347] On January 3, 1934,

---

[338a] Section 223 is derived from secs. 21 and 23 of the Act of June 30, 1834, c. 161, 4 Stat. 729, 732, 733, R. S. § 2141; section 224, from sec. 23 of the same act, R. S. § 2150; and section 225 from sec. 19 of the same act, R. S. § 2151. See Chapter 4, sec. 6.

[339] Derived from sec. 3 of the Act of June 14, 1858, c. 163, 11 Stat. 362, 363, R. S. § 2153. An obsolete provision, which is still unrepealed, is sec. 187, 25 U. S. C., which permits the Superintendent of Indian Affairs to suspend a chief or headman of a band or tribe for trespassing on allotments. See Chapter 4, sec. 9.

[340] 33 C. Cls. 317, 323–324 (1898).

[341] See chapter 5, secs. 7–13.

[342] Administration of the Indian Office (Bureau of Municipal Research Publication No. 65) (1915), p. 21. "'All offences,' wrote an Indian agent to the commissioner in September, 1890, 'are punished as I deem expedient, and the Indians offer no resistance.'" Thayer, A People Without Law (1891), 68 Atl. Month. 540, 551.

[343] 23d Cong., 1st sess., Repts. of Committees, No. 474, May 20, 1834.

[344] Annual Report of Secretary of the Interior (1936), pp. 165–166.

[345] Slightly modified in 1904. F. S. Cohen, Indian Rights and the Federal Courts (1940), 24 Minn. L. Rev. 145, 153, 194.

[346] Annual Report of Secretary of the Interior (1936), p. 166. For a history of Courts of Indian Offences, see Leupp, The Indian and His Problem (1910), pp. 241–247.

[347] Office of Indian Affairs, Circular No. 1665, April 26, 1921, reads in part:

> The sun-dance, and all other similar dances and so-called religious ceremonies are considered "Indian Offences" under existing regulations, and corrective penalties are provided. I regard such restriction as applicable to any [religious] dance which involves * * * the reckless giving away of property * * * frequent or prolonged periods of celebration * * * in fact any disorderly or plainly excessive performance that promotes superstitious cruelty, licentiousness, idleness, danger to health, and shiftless indifference to family welfare.

In all such instances, the regulations should be enforced. The Supplement to this Circular, February 14, 1923, contained recommendations endorsed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, including the following:

> That the Indian dances be limited to one in each month in the daylight hours of one day in the midweek, and at one center in the employees of the Indian Service were warned against interfering with the religious liberties guaranteed by the Federal Constitution.[348]

Recent statutes, notably the Wheeler-Howard Act, have laid down a policy which is designated to grant greater self-government to the Indians and thus eventually lessen or end the great administrative powers now exercised by the Federal Government over Indians.[349] The monopolistic control of Indians by the Indian Office has been displaced by increased activities in matters affecting the Indians by many federal, state, and county agencies.[350]

(b) Confinement on reservations.—The great administrative power of the Indian Bureau was sometimes abused or misdirected.[351] One of the objectives of Indian Service policy, for many years, was the segregation of Indians.[352] The location of these settlements was changed as the white man moved westward.

The attitude of the administrators towards the reservation Indians may be gleaned from annual reports and judicial opinions. In Dobbs v. United States[353] the Court of Claims characterized Indians on a reservation as "little better than prisoners of war." The same court in the case of Tully v. United States,[354] said:

> General Ord, in his report for September, 1869 (Messages and Documents War Department, 1, 1869 and 1870, p. 121), in substance says that on taking command of the department he became satisfied that the few settlers and scattered miners of Arizona were the sheep upon which these wolves habitually preyed, and that a temporizing policy would not answer, and so he "encouraged the troops to capture and root out the Apaches by every means and to hunt them as they would wild animals." "This," he says, "they have done with unrelenting vigor, and as a result" he says, "since my last report over 200 have been killed, generally by parties who have trailed them for days and weeks into the mountain recesses, over snows, among gorges and precipices, lying in wait for them by day and following them by night."
>
> In the table appended to this report, pages 127–129, it appears that 66 parties were sent out in search of Indians, traveling over 11,000 miles, and that as a result of these expeditions 207 Indians were killed, 75 wounded, and 65 men, women, and children taken prisoners, while 1 enlisted man was killed or captured and 3 wounded.

The Court of Claims in the case of Conners v. United States et al.,[355] described another illuminating incident. After telling of the surrender of Dull Knife's band, the last of the Northern Cheyennes to make peace, the court said:

> After a year of sickness, misery, and bitterness in the Indian Territory, and repeated prayers to be taken back to the country where their children could live, 320 of them, in September, 1878, broke away from the reservation. Dull Knife and Little Wolf were the leaders of this escaping party, which consisted of their bands.
>
> They were pursued and overtaken. A parley ensued in which Little Wolf, whom Captain Bourke characterizes as "one of the bravest in fights where all were brave," said, "We do not want to fight you, but we will not go back." The troops instantly fired upon the Cheyennes and a new Indian war began.
>
> That volley was one of the many mistakes, military and civil, which have been the fatality of our Indian administration, for the officer who ordered it thereby instituted an Indian war, and at the same instant turned hostile savages loose upon the unprotected homes of the frontier and their unwarned, unsuspecting inmates. (P. 321.)

After fierce fighting the Cheyenne surrendered and forty-nine men, fifty-one women and forty-eight children were carried as prisoners of war to Fort Robinson.

The court continued:

> * * * Dull Knife and his band were carried to Fort Robinson. There they persistently refused to return to the reservation and were kept in close custody. In January, 1879, orders from the Interior Department arrived at Fort Robinson peremptorily directing the commanding officer to remove them to the reservation. On the 3d of January, 1879, the Indians were told of this, and on the next day gave, through Wild Hog, their spokesman, their unequivocal answer, "We will die, but we will not go back."
>
> The commanding officer apparently shrunk from shooting them down; removing them meant nothing short of that, or of actually carrying each one forcibly to the detested place from which they had escaped. The military authorities therefore resorted to the means for subduing the Cheyennes by which a former generation of animal tamers subdued wild beasts. In the midst of the dreadful winter, with the thermometer 40° below zero, the Indians, including the women and children, were kept for five days and nights without food or fuel, and for three days without water. At the end of that time they broke out of the barracks in which they were confined and each district; the months of March and April, June, July, and August being excepted.

---

That none take part in the dances or be present who are under 50 years of age.

That a careful propaganda be undertaken to educate public opinion against the dance. * * *

The religious persecutions caused by these circulars, as well as the Taos persecution, during which the education for the tribal priesthood of the boys of the ancient Pueblo of Taos in New Mexico was forbidden by the Indian Bureau, are discussed in two pamphlets of the American Indian Defense Association, Inc.: The Indian and Religious Freedom (1924), and Even as You Do Unto the Least of These, so You Do Unto Me (1924).

> * * * children enrolled in Government schools were forced to join a Christian sect, to receive instruction in that sect, and to attend its church. On many reservations native ceremonies were flatly forbidden, regardless of their harmless nature. In some cases force was used to make the Indians of a reservation cut their hair short. (The New Day for the Indians, edited by Nash (1938), p. 12.

> Official policy in the United States toward the religions of the Indians, through the 70 years preceding 1929, definitely ruled out the concept of liberty of conscience. * * * (7 Indians at Work, No. 8 (April 1940), p. 46.)

[348] Office of Indian Affairs, Circular No. 2970, January 3, 1934.

[349] The new policy and possible dangers in its consummation are described in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior (1936):

> * * * Many of these legislative acts, as provided for in tribal constitutions, require formal approval by the Secretary of the Interior; also, many new and unsolved questions of law and policy have arisen * * *. It will be increasingly important, as organization takes effect among the tribes, that the Indian Office shall devise a new practice in Indian administration. The temptation will be great, on occasion, to make decisions in Washington on matters which, when referred to the Office or the Department for decision, should be returned to the point of origin for local action. With the best intentions in the world, the Office can in effect fasten a blight upon local self-government before it is ever an established fact. (P. 164.)

[350] McCaskill, The Cessation of Monopolistic Control of Indians by the Indian Office, Indians of the United States, contributions by the delegation of the United States First Inter-American Conference on Indian Life, Patzcuaro, Mexico, Office of Indian Affairs (April 1940), p. 69.

[351] Harold L. Ickes wrote in 1929: "There has been no more shameful page in our whole history than our treatment of the American Indians." Federal Senate & Indian Affairs (1930), 24 Ill. L. Rev. 570, 577. The attitude of some public officials and employees is exemplified by the cruel treatment of Indian children at some of the Indian schools; Schmeckebier, op. cit., pp. 71–76. Meriam, The Problem of Indian Administration (1928), pp. 332–333, 779; and such educational policies as the forcible removal of children from their families to distant boarding schools; id., 373–579. See also Chapter 12, sec. 2; Harsha, Law for the Indians (1882), 134 N. A. Rev. 272, 275, and In re Lelah-Puc-Ka-Chee, 98 Fed. 429 (D. C. N. D. Iowa, 1899).

[352] See Chapter 2, sec. 2.

[353] 33 C. Cls. 308, 317 (1898).

[354] 32 C. Cls. 1, 13 (1896).

[355] 33 C. Cls. 317 (1898).

rushed forth into the night. The troops pursued, firing upon them as upon enemies in war; those who escaped the sword perished in the storm. Twelve days later the pursuing cavalry came upon the remnant of the band in a ravine 50 miles from Fort Robinson. "The troops encircled the Indians, leaving no possible avenue of escape." The Indians fired on them, killing a lieutenant and two privates. The troops advanced; "the Indians, then without ammunition, rushed in desperation toward the troops with their hunting knives in hand; but before they had advanced many paces a volley was discharged by the troops and all was over." "The bodies of 24 Indians were found in the ravine—17 bucks, 5 squaws, and 2 papooses." Nine prisoners were taken—1 wounded man, and 8 women, 5 of whom were wounded. The officer in command unconsciously wrote the epitaph of the slain in his dispatch announcing the result: "The Cheyennes fought with extraordinary courage and firmness, and refused all terms but death." The final result of the last Cheyenne war was, that of the 320 who broke away in September, 7 wounded Cheyennes were sent back to the reservation. (Pp. 322–323.)

Although there never was any statutory authority for confining Indians on reservations, administrators relied upon the magic solving word "wardship" to justify the assertion of such authority. Thus the statement on "Policy and Administration of Indian Affairs" which appears in the "Report on Indians Taxed and Not Taxed, at the Eleventh Census, 1890" declares:

> The Indian not being considered a citizen of the United States, but a ward of the nation, he can not even leave the reservation without permission.[355a]

It is now recognized that there is no legal authority for confining any Indian within a reservation.

B. REMEDIES

The courts have pointed to two ways in which an Indian may meet injustices directed at him as an Indian. One way is to give up the status that subjects him to oppression: If he is a member of an oppressed tribe, he may give up his citizenship in that tribe. The other way is to attack the oppressive measure itself.

The former alternative is based upon the individual right of expatriation. The latter is based upon the right of a racial minority to be immune from racial discrimination. This latter right our Indian population shares with every other minority group in the United States, and since all the minority groups that have reason to fear discriminatory legislation make up together a great majority of our population, the asserted right to be immune from racial discrimination lies at the heart of our democratic institutions.

(1) The right of expatriation.[356]—Oppression against a racial minority is more terrible than most other forms of oppression, because there is no escape from one's race. The victim of economic oppression may be buoyed up in the struggle by the hope that he can improve his economic status. The victim of religious oppression may embrace the religion of his oppressors. The victim of political oppression may change his political affiliation. But the victim of racial persecution cannot change his race. For these victims there is no sanctuary and no escape.

If special legislation governing Indians refers to a racial group,[357] there is no way in which the individual Indian can avoid the impact of such laws. If, on the other hand, as we have elsewhere suggested,[358] such laws refer primarily to persons having a certain social or political status, then, presumably, the oppressed Indian, by changing that status, can escape the force of such legislation.

This issue never has been squarely before the United States Supreme Court, but the viewpoint here put forward is confirmed by the only statement the Supreme Court has made upon the question, the dictum of the majority opinion in the Dred Scott Case:

> * * * if an individual should leave his nation or tribe, and take up his abode among the white population, he would be entitled to all the rights and privileges which would belong to an emigrant from any other foreign people.[359]

There is one federal case which squarely raised the question whether Indians can avoid oppression at the hands of the Federal Government by renouncing their allegiance to their tribe and abandoning the reservation assigned to their use.

The case of United States ex rel. Standing Bear v. Crook[360] arose out of an attempt of a band of Ponca Indians led by Chief Standing Bear to escape from a reservation in Indian Territory to which they had been removed by the Interior Department. After a few months on their new reservation they succeeded in escaping to Nebraska, where they took up a residence with friendly Omaha Indians. Brigadier General Crook, Commander of the Military Department of the Platte, was ordered to arrest Standing Bear and his followers and to return them to the Ponca Reservation in Indian Territory. Standing Bear managed to secure attorneys, who sued out a writ of habeas corpus against General Crook. The principal ground of the writ was the claim that Standing Bear and his followers had renounced their membership in the Ponca tribe. Since they were no longer members of the tribe, it was argued that neither the Interior Department nor the United States Army could force these Indians to live upon the Ponca Reservation.

The issue of fact was thus formulated by the court, per Dundy, J.:

> It is claimed upon the one side, and denied upon the other, that the relators had withdrawn and severed, for all time, their connection with the tribe to which they belonged; and upon this point alone was there any testimony produced by either party hereto.[361] (P. 696.)

On the issue of fact the court found as follows:

> Standing Bear, the principal witness, states that out of five hundred and eighty-one Indians who went from the reservation in Dakota to the Indian Territory, one hundred and fifty-eight died within a year or so, and a great proportion of the others were sick and disabled, caused.

[355a] H. R. Misc. Doc. No. 340, 52d Cong., 1st sess., pt. 15 (1894), p. 68.

[356] Expatriation is the voluntary act of changing one's allegiance from one country to another. In Indian law it connotes the giving up of membership in a tribe. On the general subject of expatriation see 3 Moore International Law Digest (1906), pp. 552–735; Hunt, The American Passport (1898), pp. 127–144; Moore, American Diplomacy (1918), c. VII.

[357] The thesis that our law governing Indians is "racial law" is defended by Heinrich Krieger, of the Notgemeinschaft der Deutschen Wissenschaft, in an article, Principles of the Indian Law and the Act of June 18, 1934 (1935), 3 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 279 (announced as part of a dissertation on "American Racial Law").

[358] See Chapter 14, sec. 1.

[359] Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393, 404 (1856). A tribal council cannot prevent a member from expatriating himself. Memo. Sol. I. D., March 19, 1938.

[360] 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14891 (C. C. Nebr. 1879). See Canfield, The Legal Position of the Indian (1881), 15 Am. L. Rev. 21, 33. Cf. The New York Indians v. United States, 40 C. Cls. 448, 459 (1905), and United States v. Earl, 17 Fed. 75 (C. C. Ore. 1883), holding that an Indian who absented himself from the reservation to obtain liquor, did not expatriate himself.

[361] Ibid., p. 696. United States ex rel. Standing Bear v. Crook, supra.

> in a great measure, no doubt, from change of climate; and to save himself and the survivors of his wasted family, and the feeble remnants of his little band of followers, he determined to leave the Indian Territory and return to his old home, where, to use his own language, "he might live and die in peace, and be buried with his fathers." He also states that he informed the agent of their final purpose to leave, never to return, and that he and his followers had finally, fully, and forever severed his and their connection with the Ponca tribe of Indians, and had resolved to disband as a tribe, or band, of Indians, and to cut loose from the government, go to work, become self-sustaining, and adopt the habits and customs of a higher civilization. To accomplish what would seem to be a desirable and laudable purpose, all who were able so to do went to work to earn a living. The Omaha Indians, who speak the same language, and with whom many of the Poncas have long continued to intermarry, gave them employment and ground to cultivate, so as to make them self-sustaining. And it was when at the Omaha reservation, and when thus employed, that they were arrested by order of the government, for the purpose of being taken back to the Indian Territory. They claim to be unable to see the justice, or reason, or wisdom, or necessity, of removing them by force from their own native plains and blood relations to a far-off country, in which they can see little but new-made graves opening for their reception. The land from which they fled in fear has no attractions for them. The love of home and native land was strong enough in the minds of these people to induce them to brave every peril to return and live and die where they had been reared. The bones of the dead son of Standing Bear were not to repose in the land they hoped to be leaving forever, but were carefully preserved and protected, and formed a part of what was to them a melancholy procession homeward. * * * (Pp. 698, 699.)

In view of the foregoing facts the court reached the conclusion that the Indian relators > * * * did all they could to separate themselves from their tribe and to sever their tribal relations, for the purpose of becoming self-sustaining and living without support from the government. This being so, it presents the question as to whether or not an Indian can withdraw from his tribe, sever his tribal relation therewith, and terminate his allegiance thereto, for the purpose of making an independent living and adopting our own civilization.

>
> If Indian tribes are to be regarded and treated as separate but dependent nations, there can be no serious difficulty about the question. If they are not to be regarded and treated as separate, dependent nations, then no allegiance is owing from an individual Indian to his tribe, and he could, therefore, withdraw therefrom at any time. The question of expatriation has engaged the attention of our government from the time of its very foundation. Many heated discussions have been carried on between our own and foreign governments on this great question, until diplomacy has triumphantly secured the right to every person found within our jurisdiction. This right has always been claimed and admitted by our government, and it is now no longer an open question. It can make but little difference, then, whether we accord to the Indian tribes a national character or not, as in either case I think the individual Indian possesses the clear and God-given right to withdraw from his tribe and forever live away from it, as though it had no further existence. If the right of expatriation was open to doubt in this country down to the year 1868, certainly since that time no sort of question as to the right can now exist. On the 27th of July of that year congress passed an act, now appearing as section 1999 of the Revised Statutes, which declares that: "Whereas, the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people, indispensable to the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and, whereas, in the recognition of this principle the government has freely received emigrants from all nations, and invested them with the rights of citizenship. * * * Therefore, any declaration, instruction, opinion, order, or decision of any officer of the United States which denies, restricts, impairs, or questions the right of expatriation, is declared inconsistent with the fundamental principles of the republic."
>
> This declaration must forever settle the question until it is reopened by other legislation upon the same subject. (P. 699.)

The federal court, in granting a writ of habeas corpus to Standing Bear against General Crook, established a precedent which many Indians since Standing Bear have followed, and which many administrators since General Crook have recognized. In the closing decades of the nineteenth century and down to very recent times, the trend of legislation and of administration with respect to Indian affairs was to decrease the area of tribal land and the authority of tribal councils, to multiply the restrictions upon the use that Indian tribes might make of their remaining property, and to break down tribal governments, tribal customs, and tribal social life. But always one door to freedom was left open: the individual Indian might accept an allotment of land, have the restrictions upon his land tenure removed, adopt "the habits of civilized life," abandon his tribal relations, attain citizenship, and thus achieve freedom from the oppression of Indian Bureau control. This was the way in which the Indian Bureau was to dissolve the Indian problem. The more intolerable the oppression of the Bureau upon the life of the tribe, the more successful was the Bureau in achieving its objective. The year's quota of spiritual refugees from the tribal life was, on each reservation, the criterion of the Indian superintendent's success.[362] It did not matter much that those who grasped at freedom through renunciation of tribal relations and federal property frequently reached their goal broken in spirit and swindled of their lands. To many Indians, as well as to many Indian administrators, this was an advance from serfdom to freedom, from barbarism to civilization.

The right of expatriation established by the Standing Bear case remains a significant human right, even where Indian tribes are actually moving in an organized way toward the ideal of freedom from Indian Bureau supervision. The right of expatriation is an answer not only to federal oppression but to tribal oppression as well. It would be remarkable if the development of Indian self-government failed to give rise to dissatisfied individuals and minority groups who considered their tribal status a misfortune. History shows that nations lose in strength when they seek to prevent such unwilling subjects from renouncing allegiance.

(2) Antidiscrimination statutes and treaties.—Against the somber background of discriminatory state and federal statutes, administrative oppression, and public discrimination, prejudice and unfair treatment, stand treaties, state and federal statutes and administrative rulings prohibiting discrimination against Indians or any races.[363]

Treaties ceding Louisiana, New Mexico, and Alaska to the United States contained guarantees of civil liberties to all the inhabitants of the ceded territory. Later, federal statutes provided for equality of treatment between Indians and whites. Many recent statutes prohibit discrimination against the Indians or against any races.

(a) Federal statutes affecting Indians only.—The Act of March 3, 1855,[364] granting bounty lands to soldiers, provided that Indians shall be granted lands on the same terms as white men. Recent statutes appropriating money or ceding land from a reservation for school purposes, often contain a condition that the

---

[362] See Chapter 2, sec. 2.

[363] On legislative attempts to eliminate racial and religious discrimination, see 39 Col. L. Rev. 986 (1939).

[364] Sec. 7, 10 Stat. 701, 702.

schools shall be available to Indian children on an equality with white children.[365]

(b) Federal statutes affecting all races.—Civil-rights laws protect Indians as well as other races against various forms of governmental and public discrimination.[366] Some recent laws expressly prohibit discrimination against any races. An excellent illustration is a clause in section 8 of the Act of June 28, 1937,[367] establishing the Civilian Conservation Corps, which provides: " * * * no person shall be excluded on account of race, color, or creed." A frequent provision is a condition in grants of land to the state that its institutions shall be open to all races.[368]

Other statutes which do not contain express guarantees of equality, have been administratively interpreted to prohibit discrimination against Indians. A recent administrative ruling of this kind by the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture on February 17, 1937, declared unlawful the exclusion of Indians and Indian lands from soil conservation benefit payments.[369]

(c) State statutes affecting all races.—Over one-third of the states have enacted civil rights statutes prohibiting various kinds of racial discrimination.[370]

(d) Treaties affecting all races.—The civil liberties of the Indians of the Territories of Louisiana and New Mexico and the Alaskan natives were protected by treaty guarantees until they became citizens.

Article 3 of the Treaty of April 30, 1803,[371] whereby the United States purchased the Territory of Louisiana from the French Republic, provides:

> The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages and imunities of citizens of the United States; and in the mean time they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess.

A provision along the same lines is contained in the treaties whereby the Territories of New Mexico[372] and Alaska[373] were ceded to the United States.

(3) Constitutional protection.—The right of the Indian to be immune from racial discrimination by Government officials is protected by the Fifth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution.[374]

Although the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments were primarily passed to protect the Negroes, they have been successfully invoked to protect the civil liberties of other races.

While the reasons for discrimination against Indians include economic competition and ignorance, the exemption of some of the Indians from property taxation perhaps constitutes the most common avowed reason for this discrimination.[375] Obviously this argument is inapplicable to the many Indians who do not possess exempt property.[376]

It is also probably invalid as to other Indians. Until recently state and federal officials were exempt from the income tax of the federal and state governments respectively. The possession of tax-exempt securities has never been considered a justification for denying a wealthy citizen possessing such securities the right to vote.

Another justification for discrimination, the grant of special federal benefits to the Indians, sometimes springs from the erroneous impression that the Government supports most Indians. The majority of the Indian population supports itself and does not receive direct and continuous federal dole.[377] This argument is clearly invalid in so far as it is applied to discrimination against political rights, unless it be applied equally to non-Indian beneficiaries of federal subsidies such as shipowners, farmers, beneficiaries of tariffs, and relief recipients. On the other hand, it may be argued with some force that special Government assistance and facilities rendered tribal Indians may give legal validity to a state law or regulation discriminating against such Indians in the dispensing of similar state benefits and services.

Indians, like other races, are constitutionally protected against legislative or administrative discrimination because of color or race.[378] In a leading early case, Strauder v. West Virginia,[379] the Supreme Court of the United States, in discussing the Fourteenth Amendment, said:

> * * * The words of the amendment, it is true, are prohibitory, but they contain a necessary implication of a

---

[365] Act of August 21, 1916, 39 Stat. 524 (City of Flandreau, S. D.); Act of May 31, 1918, 40 Stat. 592 (Fort Hall Indian Reservation); Act of January 7, 1919, 40 Stat. 1053; Act of April 1, 1920, 41 Stat. 549 (Blackfeet); Act of June 4, 1920, 41 Stat. 751 (Crow); Act of March 3, 1921, 41 Stat. 1355 (Fort Belknap); Act of May 15, 1930, 46 Stat. 334 (Blackfeet); Act of February 14, 1931, 46 Stat. 1105 (Klamath); Act of February 14, 1931, 46 Stat. 1106 (Fort Peck); Act of June 7, 1935, c. 188, 49 Stat. 327; Act of June 7, 1935, 49 Stat. 330; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 198, 49 Stat. 331; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 199, 49 Stat. 331.

[366] Sec. 1 of the Act of April 20, 1871, 17 Stat. 13, provides for recovery in tort against any person depriving another person of civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution and laws. Other federal statutes protecting civil rights include Act of May 31, 1870, sec. 1, 16 Stat. 140, R. S. § 629, 2004; Act of March 4, 1909, secs. 19–20, 35 Stat. 1088, 1092.

[367] 50 Stat. 319, 320, extended until July 1, 1943, by Act of August 7, 1939, 53 Stat. 1253, 16 U. S. C. 584a. The original law creating a temporary Civilian Conservation Corps contains a similar provision, Act of March 31, 1933, c. 17, sec. 1, 48 Stat. 22, 23.

[368] Act of February 19, 1934, 48 Stat. 353; Act of May 21, 1934, 48 Stat. 786. And cf. Act of October 1, 1890, sec. 10, 26 Stat. 655 (Indian Territory), R. S. § 2434.

[369] See Chapter 15, sec. 10, fn. 511.

[370] Colorado: Statutes Annotated (1935), c. 35; Connecticut: Supplement to General Statutes (1935), c. 319, sec. 1676c; General Statutes (Revision of 1930), c. 323, sec. 6065–6066; Illinois: Revised Statutes (1939), c. 38, sec. 125–128; Indiana: Burns Annotated Statutes (1933) sec. 10–901, 10–902; Iowa: Code (1939), c. 602, sec. 13251–13252; Kansas: General Statutes (1935), c. 21, sec. 2424–2425; Louisiana: Dart's General Statutes (1939), title 13, sec. 1070–1073; Massachusetts: Acts and Resolves (1933), c. 117, (1934), c. 138; Michigan: Compiled Laws (1929), sec. 16809–16811; Minnesota: Mason's Minnesota Statutes (1927), c. 55, sec. 7321; Nebraska: Compiled Statutes (1929), c. 23, sec. 101–102; New Jersey: Revised Statutes (1937), title 10, c. 1, sec. 1–9; New York: Thompson's Laws of New York (1939), sec. 40, amended c. 810, Laws of 1939, and sec. 40a, 41 and 42; Ohio: Throckmorton's Ohio Code Annotated (Baldwin's) (1936), sec. 12940–12942; Pennsylvania: Laws of Pennsylvania (1935), Act No. 132; Rhode Island: General Laws (1938), c. 606, sec. 28; Washington: Remington's Revised Statutes (1932), title 14, c. 10, sec. 2686; Wisconsin: Statutes (1937), sec. 340.75.

[371] 8 Stat. 200, 202.

[372] Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, signed February 2, 1848, 9 Stat. 922.

[373] Art. 3, 15 Stat. 539. See Chapter 21, sec. 3, for the text of this article.

[374] F. S. Cohen, Indian Rights and the Federal Courts (1940), 24 Minn. L. Rev. 145, 191.

[375] See Usher, Pan Americanism (1915), p. 296.

[376] It is estimated that approximately 100,000 Indians are totally landless and in many cases homeless. Indian Land Tenure, Economic Status, and Population Trends, Part X of the Supplementary Report of the Land Planning Committee to the National Resources Board (1935), p. 2.

[377] Indian Land Tenure, Economic Status, and Population Trends, Part X of the Supplementary Report of the Land Planning Committee to the National Resources Board (1935), pp. 2, 11.

[378] 45 Yale L. J. 1296 (1936).

[379] 100 U. S. 303 (1879). Also see Nixon v. Herndon, 273 U. S. 536 (1927); and see sec. 3, supra. The Court in Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U. S. 60 (1917), said that while a principal purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment "was to protect persons of color, the broad language used was deemed sufficient to protect all persons, white and black, against discriminatory legislation by the States. This is now the settled law." (P. 76.)

> positive immunity, or right, most valuable to the colored race,—the right to exemption from unfriendly legislation against them distinctively as colored,—exemption from legal discriminations, implying inferiority in civil society, lessening the security of their enjoyment of the rights which others enjoy, and discriminations which are steps towards reducing them to the condition of a subject race. (Pp. 307–308.) * * * Its aim was against discrimination because of race or color. * * * (P. 310.)

In this case the court held that discrimination by any state agency in selection for jury service because of race is a denial of equal protection of law. The court has subsequently reaffirmed this doctrine in many cases, usually involving a Negro, the most recent being Norris v. Alabama[380] and Hale v. Kentucky.[381]

While segregation per se is not held to be discriminatory,[382] the facilities offered must be substantially equal. This doctrine was reenunciated in the case of Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada.[383] The petitioner Gaines, a Negro, was granted a writ of mandamus compelling the board of curators of the University of Missouri to admit him to the law school of the university. The qualifications of Gaines for admission, apart from race, were admitted. In holding that this discrimination constituted a denial of the Negro's constitutional right, Chief Justice Hughes, speaking for the majority of the court, said:

> * * * The basic consideration is * * * what opportunities Missouri itself furnishes to white students and denies to negroes solely upon the ground of color. The admissibility of laws separating the races in the enjoyment of privileges afforded by the State rests wholly upon the equality of the privileges which the laws give to the separated groups within the State. The question here is not of a duty of the State to supply legal training, or of the quality of the training which it does supply, but of its duty when it provides such training to furnish it to the residents of the State upon the basis of an equality of right. By the operation of the laws of Missouri a privilege has been created for white law students which is denied to negroes by reason of their race. The white resident is afforded legal education within the State; the negro resident having the same qualifications is refused it there and must go outside the State to obtain it. That is a denial of the equality of legal right to the enjoyment of the privilege which the State has set up, and the provision for the payment of tuition fees in another State does not remove the discrimination. (Pp. 349–350.)

As in the case of the Negro,[384] one of the principal battlegrounds regarding discrimination against the Indian is exclusion from public schools. The only case which has squarely considered the Indian's right to state education held that the Fourteenth Amendment requires a state to grant equal educational opportunities to persons of the Indian race.[385]

In 1924 admittance to a state public school was sought by Alice Piper, a full-blooded Indian, a citizen of the United States and of California, who had never lived in tribal relations with any tribe of Indians, nor owed or acknowledged allegiance or fealty of any kind to any tribe or "nation" of Indians, nor lived on an Indian reservation. A law of California declared that the governing body of the public school could exclude Indian children from attending, provided the United States Government maintained a school for Indians within the school district. Refused admission, she sought a writ of mandamus to compel the board to admit her. The Supreme Court of California granted the writ and held that the law violated the state and federal constitutions, saying:

> The privilege of receiving an education at the expense of the state is not one belonging to those upon whom it is conferred as citizens of the United States. The federal Constitution does not provide for any general system of education to be conducted and controlled by the national government. It is distinctly a state affair. * * * But the denial to children whose parents, as well as themselves, are citizens of the United States and of this state, admittance to the common schools solely because of color or racial differences without having made provision for their education equal in all respects to that afforded persons of any other race or color, is a violation of the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States * * *.[386] (Pp. 928–929.)

The following dicta in the Piper case indicate that, as in the case of Negroes, state laws segregating Indian pupils from white pupils are constitutional so long as there is no disparity between the educational advantages offered to both races. The California Supreme Court said:

> The establishment by the state of separate schools for Indians, as provided by the statute, does not offend against either the federal or state Constitutions. Questions of racial differences have arisen in various forms in the several states of the Union and it is now finally settled that it is not in violation of the organic law of the state or nation, under the authority of a statute so providing, to require Indian children or others in whom racial differences exist, to attend separate schools, provided such schools are equal in every substantial respect with those furnished for children of the white race. "Equality, and not identity of privileges and rights, is what is guaranteed to the citizen."[387]

Since the Piper case dealt with an Indian who was not a member of any tribe, the scope of the decision is not entirely certain.

Indian children are entitled to state educational benefits financed by federal grants-in-aid with the proviso that there shall be no discrimination against Indian children.[388] A federal statute disposing of Indian lands upon which schools are to be established may provide that Indian children shall be allowed to attend the schools.[389]

---

[380] 294 U. S. 587 (1935).

[381] 303 U. S. 613 (1938). On discrimination in housing, see Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U. S. 60 (1917), and Harmon v. Tyler, 273 U. S. 668 (1927). On barring Negroes from party primaries, see Nixon v. Herndon, 273 U. S. 536 (1927). Also see Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356 (1886) and the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36 (1872). On discrimination against voting, see sec. 3, supra.

[382] Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, 544 (1896); McCabe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry Co., 235 U. S. 151, 160 (1914); Gong Lum v. Rice, 275 U. S. 78, 85, 86 (1927). Cf. Cumming v. Board of Education, 175 U. S. 528, 544, 545 (1899).

[383] 305 U. S. 337 (1938).

[384] The Courts and the Negro Separate School (1935), 4 Journal of Negro Education, pp. 289 et seq., especially pp. 351–441.

[385] Piper v. Big Pine School Dist. of Inyo County, 193 Cal. 664, 226 Pac. 926 (1924). For a subsequent law permitting the segregation of Indians, see Cal. School Laws, 1931, Div. III, c. 1, Art. 1, sec. 3.3–3.4, repealed by Act of June 15, 1935; Session Laws 1935, pp. 1562–1563. Also see Delaware Session Laws of 1935, Act of April 15, 1935, p. 700.

[386] Piper v. Big Pine School Dist. of Inyo County, 193 Cal. 664, 226 Pac. 926, 928–929 (1924). Also see Crawford v. District School Board for School Dist. No. 7, 68 Ore. 388, 137 Pac. 217, 219 (1913), wherein the court said:

> The facts stated in the amended writ show prima facie that the petitioner's children were entitled to be admitted as pupils of said school district No. 7, and to receive instructions therein in all respects as the white children. They and their parents are citizens of the United States and of the State of Oregon, and reside in said school district. They are not members of any Indian tribe, and they conform to the customs and habits of civilization. These children are half white, and their rights are the same as they would be if they were wholly white.

[387] Piper v. Big Pine School Dist. of Inyo County, 193 Cal. 664, 226 Pac. 926, 929 (1924). See also McMillan v. School Committee, 107 N. C. 609, 12 S. E. 330 (1890). For construction of legislative intent in this respect, see Ammons v. School District No. 5, 7 R. I. 596 (1864).

[388] Act of June 15, 1938, 52 Stat. 685, is typical in this regard.

[389] A typical provision is "Provided, That said school shall be conducted for both white and Indian children without discrimination." Act of June 15, 1938, 52 Stat. 685; also see Chapter 12, sec. 2.

Many important prohibitions, including the Bill of Rights [390] of the Federal Constitution, are limitations only on the power of the Federal Government. Other provisions limit the activities of state governments only,[391] or of the federal and state governments,[392] and hence are inapplicable to Indian tribes, which are not creatures of either the federal or state governments.[393]

The provisions of the Federal Constitution protecting personal liberty and property rights do not apply to tribal action.[394] In Talton v. Mayes,[395] the court held that the Fifth Amendment of the Federal Constitution, requiring indictment by a grand jury in most infamous crimes, does not apply to the acts of a tribal government.

[390] Amendments 1 to 10 inclusive.

[391] Articles 13 and 14.

[392] Amendment 19.

[393] Talton v. Mayes, 163 U. S. 376 (1896), and Cf. Patterson v. Council of Seneca Nation, 245 N. Y. 433, 157 N. E. 734 (1927); Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515 (1832); United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375 (1886); Turner v. United States, 248 U. S. 354 (1919), aff'g 51 C. Cls. 125 (1916); and Roff v. Burney, 168 U. S. 218, 222 (1897).

[394] Op. Sol. I. D., M.27810, October 23, 1934; Op. Sol. I. D., M.27810, December 13, 1934. See Chapter 7, sec. 2.

[395] 163 U. S. 376 (1896), discussed in Memo. Sol. I. D., August 8, 1938.

SECTION 11. THE STATUS OF FREEDMEN AND SLAVES

Although a minority race treated as inferiors, some of the members of the southern tribes, especially the plantation owners of mixed breed, possessed slaves.[396] Among some of the tribes, particularly the Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Seminoles, the slaves and freedmen [397] numbered from one-fourth to one-third of the population.[398]

The agents with the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Creeks went over to the Confederacy.[399] After the Union troops withdrew despite treaty obligations to protect them,[400] their friendship was cultivated by Albert Pike acting for the Confederate State Department because of the strategic importance of the Indian country from a military and economic view.[401] The success of the southern troops in Arkansas aided his diplomacy.[402]

Although many of their members remained loyal to the Union and in consequence suffered great privation,[403] most of the southern tribes supported the Confederacy,[404] largely because of economic considerations.

Influenced by the Emancipation Proclamation, the Cherokee Nation, when severing its connection with the Confederacy, abolished slavery in February of 1863.[405] The exact date when the slaves of other Indians were emancipated is doubtful. Some contend that they were freed by the Emancipation Proclamation prior to the Thirteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States,[406] which prohibits slavery within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction. Others [407] more accurately point out that the Emancipation Proclamation referred only to the states and did not extend to the Indian Territory. Although it has been suggested that the reasoning in Elk v. Wilkins [408] and Jackson v. United States,[409] holding that the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution did not grant citizenship to the Indians might also be applied in interpreting the Thirteenth Amendment,[410] it is now established that the Thirteenth Amednment freed the slaves of the United States,[411] and its incorporated territories,[412] of African, Indian, or mixed descent.[413]

The year following the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment and 4 months after the end of the Civil War a convention of the principal southern tribes was held at Fort Smith.[414] Treaties were effected with each of the tribes, which provided for peace and recognized the abolition of slavery.[415]

Treaties containing provisions freeing slaves were also consummated with several northwestern tribes,[416] both before and after the Civil War.

[396] The Act of July 30, 1852, c. 76, 10 Stat. 734, authorized repayment to legal representatives of a general of Georgia for purchasing captured slaves from Creek warriors while these warriors were serving the United States against the Seminole Indians in Florida.

[397] The freedmen were persons of African descent embracing free slaves and their descendants who had been admitted to the rights of citizens. Goat v. United States, 224 U. S. 458 (1912). See Abel, The Slaveholding Indians, vol. 3, p. 269 et seq.

[398] Sen. Ex. Doc. No. 71, 41st Cong., 2d sess., vol. 2, p. 3, March 24, 1870; Goat v. United States, 224 U. S. 458, 462 (1912). Reports of the Dawes Commission, p. 13 (1898). The earliest reference to slaves was found in the Treaty of September 17, 1778, with the Delawares, Art. 4, 7 Stat. 13, 14.

[399] Schmeckebier, The Office of Indian Affairs, op. cit., p. 49. The Chickasaw Freedmen v. Choctaw Nation and Chickasaw Nation, 193 U. S. 115, 124 (1904). Part of the Osage, Quapaw, Seminole, and Shawnee tribes signed treaties of alliance with the Confederacy on October 2 and 4, 1861. The Cherokees signed such a treaty on October 7, 1861, and on October 28, 1861, adopted a declaration of independence. Wardwell, Political History of Cherokee Nation (1938), pp. 132–133, 139. Also see Op. Sol. I. D., M.27759, January 22, 1935. For a list of treaties negotiated by the Confederacy with the Indians, see Abel, supra, vol. 1 (1915), pp. 157, 158. Their terms are discussed at pp. 158–180. The Confederacy recognized slavery as a legal institution within the Indian country, p. 166.

[400] Abel, vol. 1, supra, pp. 14, 266.

[401] Ibid., p. 14.

[402] Schmeckebier, op. cit., p. 49.

[403] Ibid. The Cherokees, Creeks, and Seminoles were fairly evenly divided. Abel, vol. 1, supra, pp. 265, 266, vol. 3, supra, pp. 12, 304–306. Several appropriation acts authorized the President to expend part of the appropriations for the hostile tribes on the loyal members of such tribes, who were driven from their homes during the Civil War. Act of July 5, 1862, 12 Stat. 512, 528; Act of March 3, 1863, sec. 3, 12 Stat. 774, 793.

[404] See The Chickasaw Freedmen, supra, p. 116.

[405] Treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokee Nation, Art. 9, 14 Stat. 799, 801. However, the large slave owners among the Cherokee Nation did not recognize this law until the fall of the Confederacy. Wardwell, op. cit., pp. 173–174.

[406] Adopted September 3, 1865. The Chickasaw Freedmen, supra, p. 124. See Abel, vol. 3, supra, p. 269.

[407] Abel, vol. 3, supra, p. 269.

[408] 112 U. S. 94 (1884).

[409] 34 C. Cls. 441 (1899).

[410] See Nunn v. Hazelrigg, 216 Fed. 330, 333 (C. C. A. 8, 1914); Thompson, The Constitution & the Courts (1924), p. 556.

[411] United States v. Choctaw Nation, 38 C. Cls. 558, 566 (1903), aff'd sub nom. Chickasaw Freedmen, 193 U. S. 115 (1904). The day before the proclamation of the Thirteenth Amendment, the President approved the Joint Resolution of July 27, 1868, 15 Stat. 264, commissioning General Sherman to reclaim from peonage women and children of the Navajo Indians enslaved in the Indian Territory.

[412] In re Sah Quah, 31 Fed. 327 (D. C. Alaska, 1886) in which the court refused to recognize the tribal law of slavery because it contravenes the Federal Constitution.

[413] Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1 (1906).

[414] Sen. Ex. Doc., No. 71, supra.

[415] Treaty of March 21, 1866, with the Seminoles, Art. 2, 14 Stat. 755, 756; Treaty of June 14, 1866, with the Creeks, Art. 2, 14 Stat. 785, 786; Treaty of July 19, 1866, with the Cherokee, Art. 9, 14 Stat. 799, 801.

[416] Treaty of January 22, 1855, with the Dwamish and others, Art. 11, 12 Stat. 927, 929; Treaty of January 26, 1855, with the S'Klallams, Art. 12, 12 Stat. 933, 935; Treaty of August 12, 1865, with the Snakes, Art. 1, 14 Stat. 683.

Even before the war there were many freedmen in the Indian Territory [417] and considerable intermarriage between Negroes and southern Indians.[418] Fearful that the emancipation of the slaves might cause prejudice against them, the United States Commissioners required the adoption of important provisions regarding the freedmen in many of the treaties, which included recognition as citizens, the granting of equal rights with Indians [419] and the right to share in tribal funds and property.[420]

The Court of Claims said: [421]

> * * * It is impossible to find in the history of the Seminoles a trace of hostility towards their slaves or freemen * * *. (P. 464.)
> * * * The wife of Osceola, one of their most noted, brave, and celebrated chiefs, was a descendant of a fugitive slave, and it was on account of her recapture as a fugitive that this intrepid half-breed chief waged a cruel and protracted warfare against the whites * * *. (P. 459.)

The court added:

> An examination of the treaties made immediately after the close of the Civil War with the tribes who had entered into treaties with the Confederacy, unmistakably discloses that the predominant purpose and intent of the Government as to preexisting slavery was to protect and care for the freedmen. (P. 466.)

The setting up of the freedmen as worthy of special consideration at a time when the Indians were suffering from economic dislocation [422] caused increased prejudice and among the Choctaws and Chickasaws, a reign of terror.[423]

Until the passage of the Citizenship Act, tribal Indians were unable to become citizens by the regular naturalization laws, but by the Thirteenth Amendment Negroes who were formerly slaves could become citizens in this way.[424]

Other types of statutes distinguished between Indians and freedmen. For example, the prohibition against the execution and sale of improvements on Indian lands contained in the Act of May 2, 1890,[425] is applicable only to improvements owned by Indians by blood and not Indians by adoption or marriage.[426]

---

[417] Abel, vol. 3, supra, p. 272.

[418] Abel, vol. 3, supra, p. 23, fn. 14. Even before the Civil War some Indians actively opposed slavery. Opposition to slavery was one of the main objectives of the Keetowah Society, secret organization of Cherokees, formed almost a century ago. Memo. Sol. I. D., July 29, 1937.

[419] Cherokee Treaty of July 19, 1866, 14 Stat. 799; Treaty of March 21, 1866, with the Seminole Nation, Art. 2, 14 Stat. 755, 756, interpreted by Seminole Nation v. United States, 78 C. Cls. 455 (1933).

[420] Treaty of March 21, 1866, with the Seminole Nation, Art. 15, 14 Stat. 755. See Chapter 3, sec. 41. On the subsequent history of these provisions, see Chapter 23, sec. 4.

[421] Seminole Nation v. United States, 78 C. Cls. 455 (1933).

[422] Abel, vol. 3, supra, pp. 290–292, 295.

[423] Ibid. p. 273.

[424] Cf. United States v. Wildcat, 244 U. S. 111 (1917).

[425] Sec. 31, 26 Stat. 81, 95.

[426] Hampton v. Mays, 4 Ind. T. 503 (1902).

CHAPTER 9

INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS IN TRIBAL PROPERTY

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. THE NATURE OF INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS IN TRIBAL PROPERTY [1]

The nature of the individual Indian's interest in tribal property presents one of the most difficult problems in the law of Indian property. It is clearly established that where legal or equitable title to real or personal property is vested in the tribe it is not vested in the individual members thereof, and yet these individual members are not entirely without legal or equitable rights in such property. The right of the individual Indian is, in effect, a right of participation similar in some respects to the rights of a stockholder in the property of a corporation.

In analyzing this right of participation, we shall be concerned, in the present chapter, with six questions:

(1) How does the right of participation in tribal property resemble, or differ from, other forms of property right?

(2) How far is this right of participation limited by the character and extent of the tribal property?

(3) Who is entitled to participate in tribal property?

(4) Under what circumstances, if any, is the individual's right of participation transferable?

(5) What rights of user may the individual participant exercise while property remains in tribal status?

(6) What rights does the individual enjoy in the distribution of tribal property?

We must recognize that just as the nature of rights of participation in corporate property varies among corporations and among various classes of security holders within a single corporation, so the rights of individual Indians in tribal property exhibit a wide range of variation, and depend, in the last analysis, upon the governmental acts and contractual agreements of the Federal Government, the tribe, and the individual Indian himself.

Answers to our questions are to be found primarily in a series of statutes and treaties, nearly all of which deal with particular tribes. The judicial and administrative decisions in this field are, in nearly every case, dependent upon such particular acts and treaties.

Here, even more than in most fields of law, general principles, no matter how confidently announced by the highest authorities, must be pared down to the facts with which they deal before we are entitled to rely upon them.

With this cautionary introduction we turn to our first question: How does the right of participation in tribal property resemble, or differ from, other forms of property right?

The right of participation in tribal property must be distinguished, in the first place, from tenancy in common. This distinction is particularly important because a good deal of the discussion of tribal property in the decided cases invokes such terms as "ownership in common," which is occasionally used to mean "tenancy in common." The distinction between tribal ownership and tenancy in common may be clearly seen if we consider the fractional interest of an Indian in an allotment in heirship status where there are so many heirs that every member of the tribe has a fractional interest, and then consider the interest which the same Indian would have in the same land if the land belonged to the tribe. In the first case, the individual Indian is a tenant in common. He may, under certain circumstances, obtain a partition of the estate. His consent is, generally, necessary to authorize the leasing of the land. His interest in the land is transferable, devisable, and inheritable. In the second case, his interest is legally more indirect, although economically it may be more valuable. He cannot, generally, secure partition of the tribal estate. He can act only as a voter in the leasing of tribal land. His interest in the tribal property is personal and cannot be transferred or inherited, but his heirs, if they are members of the tribe, will participate in the tribal property in their own right.

Observing that the Cherokee lands were held in communal ownership, the Supreme Court, speaking in the case of The Cherokee Trust Funds [2] remarks:

> * * * that does not mean that each member had such an interest, as a tenant in common, that he could claim a pro rata proportion of the proceeds of sales made of any part of them. (P. 308.)

In the absence of legislation to the contrary, the individual Indian has no right as against the tribe to any specific part of the tribal property.[3] It is often said that the individual has only [1] On the nature of tribal property see Chapter 15. On individual property see Chapters 10 and 11.

[2] 117 U. S. 288 (1886).

[3] Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, 193 U. S. 127 (1904); United States v. Chase, 245 U. S. 89 (1917). See McDougal v. McKay, 237 U. S. 372 (1915); Shulthis v. McDougal, 170 Fed. 529 (C. C. A. 8, 1909), app. dism. 225 U. S. 561 (1912).

a "prospective right" [4] to future income from tribal property in which he has no present interest.[5] Other terms used to picture this right are "an inchoate interest," [6] and a "float." [7] These terms aptly characterize the intangible right of the Indian to share in tribal property. Until the property loses its tribal character and becomes individualized, his right can be no more than this, except insofar as federal law, tribal law, or tribal custom may give him a more definite right of occupancy in a particular tract. In the case of tribal funds, he has, ordinarily, no vested right in them until they have been paid over to him or have been set over to his credit, perhaps subject to certain restrictions.[8] In the case of lands, he has no vested right unless the land or some designated interest therein has been set aside for him either severally or as tenant in common.[9]

The statement has often been made that the tribe holds its property in trust for its members.[10] This statement may be compared with the assertion frequently made that corporate property is held in trust for the stockholders, though, strictly speaking, no technical trust relationship exists in either case.

In speaking of the title to the lands of the Creek Nation, the court in Shulthis v. McDougal,[11] declared:

> The tribal lands belonged to the tribe. The legal title stood in the tribe as a political society; but those lands were not held by the tribe as the public lands of the United States are held by the nation. They constituted the home or seat of the tribe. Every member, by virtue of his membership in the tribe, was entitled to dwell upon and share in the tribal property. It was granted to the tribe by the federal government not only as the home of the tribe, but as a home for each of the members.[12]

Indian lands were generally looked upon as a permanent home for the Indians. "Considered as such, * * * it was not unnatural or unequal that the vast body of lands not thus specifically and personally appropriated should be treated as the common property of the Nation * * *." [13]

That tribal property should be held in common for the benefit of the members of the Indian community as a whole was, according to the Supreme Court in the case of Woodward v. de Graffenried, the principle upon which conveyances of land to the Five Civilized Tribes were made.[14] Treaties often provided that the land conveyed to the tribe was to be held in common.[15]

Likewise certain statutes specify that tribal lands are to be held or occupied in common.[16]

Indian tribal laws and customs led governments dealing with Indian lands to adopt the theory that tribal property was held for the common benefit of all.[17] The constitution of the Cherokee Nation, both as originally adopted in 1839 and as amended in 1866, declared in section 2, article 1, that the lands of the Cherokee Nation were to remain the common property of the tribe.[18]

In the case of United States v. Charles,[19] the court, in referring to the lands occupied by the Tonawanda Band of Seneca Indians, stated, "The reservation lands are held in common by the tribe, although individual members of the tribe may be in possession of a particular tract, and such possession is recognized by the tribe." (P. 348.) Many tribal constitutions, adopted under the Wheeler-Howard Act,[20] provide that all lands hitherto unallotted shall be held in the future as tribal property.[21]

Although tribal property is vested in the tribe as an entity, rather than in the individual members thereof, each member of the tribe may have an interest in the property.

The nature of the individual member's right in tribal property is discussed in Seufert Bros. Co. v. United States.[22] The court quotes the words of an Indian witness who compared a river in which there was a common right to fish to a "great table where all the Indians came to partake." (P. 197.)

In the case of Mason v. Sams, the Treaty of 1855 between the United States and the Quinaielts [23] is discussed. By the terms of article two of the treaty, a tract of land was to be "reserved for the use and occupation of the tribes * * * and set apart for their exclusive use." The court construed the treaty to give the Indians an exclusive right of fishing in the waters on these lands; the right to fish being enjoyed by all members, even though the treaty was made with the tribe.[24]

---

[4] Op. Sol. I. D., M.8370, August 15, 1922.

[5] Taylor v. Tayrien, 51 F. 2d 884 (C. C. A. 10, 1931), cert. den. 284 U. S. 672 (1931). This case involved individual rights in Osage tribal minerals. For a discussion of special laws governing Osage tribe see Chapter 23, sec. 12.

[6] Taylor v. Tayrien, 51 F. 2d 884 (C. C. A. 10, 1931), cert. den. 284 U. S. 672 (1931).

[7] McKee v. Henry, 201 Fed. 74 (C. C. A. 8, 1912); Woodbury v. United States, 170 Fed. 302 (C. C. A. 8, 1909). The cases involved rights of an enrollee before allotments had been made. In an opinion involving back annuity payments, the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior wrote: "The members of a tribe have an inherent interest in the tribal lands, and funds but until segregated by allotment or payment in severalty they remain the common property of the tribe." Op. Sol. I. D., D. 42071, December 29, 1921.

[8] Funds due Osage as share in royalties and proceeds from sale of land, not his until actually paid to him or placed to his credit—Op. Sol. I. D., M.8370, August 15, 1922. See Chapter 23, sec. 12B. So long as a judgment in favor of a tribe is not prorated among individual members, no present or former member has a vested right—Letter of Commissioner of Indian Affairs to Indian Agents, October 9, 1937.

[9] Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640 (1912); St. Marie v. United States, 24 F. Supp. 237 (D. C. S. D. Cal. 1938), aff'd — F. 2d — (C. C. A. 10, 1940); 56 I. D. 102 (1937); McKee v. Henry, 201 Fed. 74 (C. C. A. 8, 1912).

[10] Ligon v. Johnston, 164 Fed. 670 (C. C. A. 8, 1908), app. dism. 223 U. S. 741; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294 (1902).

[11] 170 Fed. 529, 533 (C. C. A. 8, 1909), aff'd 225 U. S. 561 (1912).

[12] Also see W. O. Whitney Lumber & Grain Co. v. Crabtree, 166 Fed. 738 (C. C. A. 8, 1908). Title to Creek lands were in nation; occupants had no more than possessory rights.

[13] Cherokee Nation v. Journeycake, 155 U. S. 196, 215 (1894).

[14] 238 U. S. 284 (1915). Accord: Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413 (1912), modify'g and aff'g sub nom. United States v. Allen, 179 Fed. 13 (C. C. A. 8, 1910). See Shulthis v. McDougal, 170 Fed. 529 (C. C. A. 8, 1909), app. dism. 225 U. S. 561 (1912).

[15] See, for example: Treaty of December 29, 1832, with the United Nation of the Senecas and Shawnee Indians, 7 Stat. 411; Treaty of May 30, 1854, with the United Tribes of Kaskaskia and Peoria, Plankeshaw, and Wea Indians, 10 Stat. 1082; Treaty of June 22, 1855, with Choctaws and Chickasaws, 11 Stat. 611; Treaty of August 6, 1846, with Cherokee, 9 Stat. 871, discussed in The Cherokee Trust Funds, 117 U. S. 288 (1886), and United States v. Cherokee Nation, 202 U. S. 101 (1906).

[16] See, for example, Joint Resolution, June 19, 1902, 32 Stat. 744 (Walker River, Uintah, and White River Utes). Various allotment statutes reserve from allotment lands to be held "in common," specifying occasionally for the reservation of grazing or timber lands, lands containing springs, etc. See, for example: Act of March 3, 1885, 23 Stat. 340 (Umatilla Reservation); Act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. 1013 (United Peorias and Miamies); Act of June 3, 1926, 44 Stat. 690 (Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation). See, also, Chapter 15.

[17] See Mitchel v. United States, 9 Pet. 711, 746 (1835).

[18] Cited and discussed in Cherokee Intermarriage Cases, 203 U. S. 76 (1906), and in The Cherokee Trust Funds, 117 U. S. 288 (1886).

[19] 23 F. Supp. 346, 348 (D. C. W. D. N. Y. 1938).

[20] Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461, et seq.

[21] E. g., Art. 8, sec. 2, of the Constitution and Bylaws for the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes of the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho, approved April 30, 1936.

[22] 249 U. S. 194 (1919), aff'g sub nom. United States ex rel. Williams v. Seufert Bros. Co., 233 Fed. 579 (D. C. Ore. 1916).

[23] 12 Stat. 971.

[24] 5 F. 2d 255 (D. C. W. D. Wash. 1925). Accord: Halbert v. United States, 283 U. S. 753 (1931), rev'g sub nom. United States v. Halbert, 38 F. 2d 795 (C. C. A. 9, 1930).

Where certain lands have been reserved for the use and occupation of a tribe, members of the tribe are entitled to use bodies of navigable water within the reservation.[25]

In all these cases, the individual enjoys a right of user derived from the legal or equitable property right of the tribe in which he is a member.[26]

[25] Op. Sol. I. D., M.24358, May 14, 1928. Cf. United States v. Powers, 305 U. S. 527 (1939), aff'g 94 F. 2d 783 (C. C. A. 9, 1938), and modify'g 16 F. Supp. 155 (D. C. Mont. 1936), holding that under the Treaty of May 7, 1868, with the Crow Indians, 15 Stat. 649, the waters within the reservation were reserved for the equal benefit of tribal members and when allotments of these lands were made, the right to use the waters passed to the allottees. See also Skeem v. United States, 273 Fed. 93 (C. C. A. 9, 1921), holding that the members of the Shoshone Tribe who occupied tribal lands under Art. 6 of the Fort Bridger Treaty, July 3, 1868, 15 Stat. 673, and who were awarded allotments of these lands under Art. 8 of the agreement ratified by Act of June 6, 1900, 31 Stat. 672, were entitled to the water rights.

[26] See sec. 5, infra.

SECTION 2. DEPENDENCY OF INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS UPON EXTENT OF TRIBAL PROPERTY

The individual Indian claiming a share in tribal assets is subject to the general rule that he can obtain no greater interest than that possessed by the tribe in whose assets he participates.[27] The use that an individual Indian may make of tribal lands is limited by the nature of the estate in the land held by the tribe. Thus in the case of United States v. Chase,[28] the court held that where the Omaha tribe held only a right of occupancy in certain lands, with the fee remaining in the United States, the tribe could not convey more than its right of occupancy to a member without the consent of the United States.

Viewed in this fashion, an allotment system or any act or treaty which extinguishes tribal title decreases to that extent the quantity of tribal property in which the individual may share.[29]

In the case of The Cherokee Trust Funds,[30] the court said,

> Their [Cherokee Nation] treaties of cession must, therefore, be held not only to convey the common property of the Nation, but to divest the interest therein of each of its members. (P. 308.)

The individual's rights in tribal property are affected by any set-offs or claims against the tribe, because the amount of his share that he would otherwise be entitled to is decreased.

[27] "The right of the individual member in tribal land is derived from and is no greater than the right of the tribe itself." If the tribe cannot make a lease without the approval of the Department of the Interior, neither can the individual. Memo. Sol. I. D., October 21, 1938.

[28] 245 U. S. 89 (1917), rev'g 222 Fed. 593 (C. C. A. 8, 1915).

[29] For examples of this fact situation see: Moore v. Carter Oil Co., 43 F. 2d 322 (C. C. A. 10, 1930), cert. den. 282 U. S. 903; United States v. Ft. Smith & W. R. Co., 195 Fed. 211 (C. C. A. 8, 1912); Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665 (1912); The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737 (1866).

[30] 117 U. S. 288 (1886).

SECTION 3. ELIGIBILITY TO SHARE IN TRIBAL PROPERTY

Originally the only requisite to share in tribal property was membership.[31] Abandonment or loss of membership forfeited the right to share.[32] Acquisition of membership ordinarily carried with it the right to share in tribal property.[33] The question of what constitutes tribal membership is discussed elsewhere.[34]

Under the rule that membership was necessary to share in tribal property, the right to participate in the distribution could not pass to the member's heirs, nor could it be assigned by the member.[35] The children of a member could not inherit their parent's right to share. Their only right to share in the distribution of tribal property came from being members themselves. However, had their parent's right to participate in the distribution of tribal assets attached itself to certain property in which he had a vested right, his children might inherit this property.[36] But as soon as the member's right had vested, the property was no longer tribal property. It had become individualized; it was individual property and not tribal property that was being passed on by descent.[37]

Although originally the right to participate in tribal property was coextensive with tribal membership, this rule has been modified by various congressional enactments. On the one hand, the [31] Halbert v. United States, 283 U. S. 753 (1931), rev'g sub nom. United States v. Halbert, 38 F. 2d 795 (C. C. A. 9, 1930); Tiger v. Fewell, 22 F. 2d 786 (C. C. A. 8, 1927); La Roque v. United States, 239 U. S. 62 (1915), aff'g 198 Fed. 645 (C. C. A. 8, 1912); Sizemore v. Brady, 235 U. S. 441 (1914); Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640 (1912); Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305 (C. C. A. 8, 1909); Fleming v. McCurtain, 215 U. S. 56 (1909); Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294 (1902); Op. Sol. I. D., M.15954, January 8, 1927. For regulations governing pro-rata shares of tribal funds, see 25 C. F. R. 233.1 233.7; for regulations governing annuity and other per capita payments, see 25 C. F. R. 224.1–224.5.

[32] See Memo. Sol. I. D., March 19, 1938 (Cheyenne River Sioux). In the case of The Cherokee Trust Funds, 117 U. S. 288 (1886), in which the Court denied the right of those who had remained East and abandoned their membership, to share in proceeds arising from sale of lands of Cherokee Nation, the Court stated:

> If Indians * * * wish to enjoy the benefits of the common property of the Cherokee Nation, in whatever form it may exist, they must * * * be readmitted to citizenship * * *. They cannot live out of its Territory, evade the obligations and burdens of citizenship, and at the same time enjoy the benefits of the funds and common property of the Nation. (P. 311.)

[33] In the case of Cherokee Nation v. Journeycake, 155 U. S. 196 (1894), the Supreme Court discussed the rights of the Delaware Indians to share in the property rights of the Cherokee Nation, under the contract entered into between the Delawares and the Cherokees on April 8, 1867, in pursuance of a treaty entered into between the United States and the Cherokee Nation, July 19, 1866 (14 Stat. 799, 803). The court decided:

> Given therefore, the two propositions that the lands are the common property of the Cherokee Nation, and that the registered Delawares have become incorporated into the Cherokee Nation and are members and citizens thereof, it follows necessarily that they are equally with the native Cherokees the owners of and entitled to share in the profits and proceeds of these lands. (Pp. 210–211.)

See also Cherokee Intermarriage Cases, 203 U. S. 76 (1906), and Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, 193 U. S. 127 (1904), for a discussion of the rights of the Delawares in Cherokee property.

In the case of the Cherokee Nation v. Blackfeather, 155 U. S. 218 (1894), the court applied the rule of the Journeycake case to the Shawnees who were admitted to the Cherokee Nation.

[34] See Chapters 1, 5, 7.

[35] Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640, 642 (1912); La Roque v. United States, 239 U. S. 62 (1915).

[36] See Op. Sol. I. D., D42071, December 29, 1921.

[37] Op. Sol. I. D., M.15954, January 8, 1927; Op. Sol. I. D., M.13270, November 6, 1924; Op. Sol. I. D., M.27381, December 13, 1934.

right to share in tribal property has been denied to certain special classes of tribal members. On the other hand, the right to share in tribal property has been extended to various classes of non-members.

The most important class of members excluded from the right to share in tribal property comprised white men marrying Indian women who, under special tribal laws, were admitted to tribal membership or "citizenship," but were not, in many cases, given any rights at all in tribal property.

The problem created by the claims of those people is discussed in the Cherokee Intermarriage Cases.[38] The court traces the policy of the United States and the tribal government to keep tribal property from coming into the hands of whites who married Indians solely for the purpose of sharing in the tribal wealth.[39]

The policy of the United States toward the rights of non-Indians who claimed rights because of intermarriage is indicated by the Act of August 9, 1888,[40] which, excluding the Five Civilized Tribes from its scope, provided:

> * * * no white man, not otherwise a member of any tribe of Indians, who may hereafter marry, an Indian woman, member of any Indian tribe * * * shall by such marriage hereafter acquire any right in any tribal property, privilege, or interest whatever to which any member of such tribe is entitled.

An analogous problem arose when the slaves residing in the Indian Territory were granted freedom and citizenship by the Emancipation Proclamation and the Thirteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. The rights of these "freedmen" in tribal property are elsewhere discussed.[41]

As already noted, the original rule was that existing membership was the requisite for sharing in tribal property. But the beginning of the allotment system, and the policy of encouraging the abandonment of tribal relations led to the modification of this rule.[42]

In order to persuade Indians to forsake tribal habits and adopt the white man's civilization, various acts[43] were passed and treaties[44] adopted, guaranteeing to those Indians who complied with this policy the same rights to share in tribal property, as if they had remained with the tribe.[45] Four of these acts, general in their terms, deserve special mention:

(1) The Act of March 3, 1875,[46] applying to Indians who had abandoned or who should thereafter abandon their tribal relations to settle under federal homestead laws,[47] declares:

> That any such Indian shall be entitled to his distributive share of * * * tribal funds, lands, and other property, the same as though he had maintained his tribal relations * * *.[48]

However, where specially provided, such as in the Act of February 6, 1871,[49] Indians who wished to leave the tribe and at the same time receive certain lands as their allotments, had to relinquish their rights to share in any further distribution of tribal assets. The Treaty of November 15, 1861,[50] with the Pottawatomie Nation, discussed in Goodfellow v. Muckey,[51] provided that those of the tribe who had adopted the customs of the whites and who were willing to abandon all claims to the common lands and funds would have lands allotted to them in severalty.

(2) Section 6[52] of the Act of February 8, 1887,[53] declares:

> * * * and every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States who has voluntarily taken up, within said limits, his residence separate and apart from any tribe of Indians therein, and has adopted the habits of civilized life, is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States, and is entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, whether said Indian has been or not, by birth or otherwise, a member of any tribe of Indians within the territorial limits of the United

---

[38] 203 U. S. 76 (1906).

[39] In 1874, the Cherokee National Council adopted a code which admitted white men to citizenship, and if one paid a sum of $500 (the approximate value of the share of each Indian) into the national treasury, he became entitled to a share in tribal property. But even this privilege was withdrawn in 1877, and so from that date, whites intermarrying into the Cherokee Nation were admitted to citizenship upon the condition that they should not thereby acquire an estate or interest in the communal property of the nation. In the case of Whitmire v. Cherokee Nation, 30 C. Cls. 138, 152 (1895), the court quotes a section of the Cherokee code and adds: "The idea therefore existed, both in the mind and in the laws of the Cherokee people, that citizenship did not necessarily extend to or invest in the citizen a personal or individual interest in what the constitution termed the 'common property,' 'the lands of the Cherokee Nation.'"

[40] C. 818, sec. 1, 25 Stat. 392, 25 U. S. C. 181.

[41] See Chapter 8, sec. 11.

[42] In 1909, Mr. Justice Van Devanter, then on the Circuit Court of Appeals, wrote:

> For many years the treaties and legislation relating to the Indians proceeded largely upon the theory that the welfare of both the Indians and the whites required that the former be kept in tribal communities separated from the latter, and while that policy prevailed, effect was given to the original rule respecting the right to share in tribal property; but Congress later adopted the policy of encouraging individual Indians to abandon their tribal relations and to adopt the customs, habits, and manners of civilized life, and, as an incident to this change in policy, statutes were enacted declaring that the right to share in tribal property should not be impaired or affected by such a severance of tribal relations, whether occurring theretofore or thereafter. (Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305, 308 (C. C. A. 8, 1909).) See Chapter 11, sec. 1.

[43] E. g., the Act of December 19, 1854, 10 Stat. 598, 599, promised that the property rights of the mixed bloods in the tribal property of the Chippewas would not be impaired if they remained on the lands ceded to the United States and separated from the tribe.

[44] E. g., Treaty with Choctaws, September 27, 1830, 7 Stat. 333, discussed in Winton v. Amos, 255 U. S. 373, 388 (1921).

[45] Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305 (C. C. A. 8, 1909); United States ex rel. Besaw v. Work, 6 F. 2d 694 (App. D. C. 1925); Pape v. United States, 19 F. 2d 219 (C. C. A. 9, 1927).

[46] 18 Stat. 402, 420.

[47] While this act is directed particularly at Indians acquiring homesteads on the public domain, it has been referred to as applying to any Indians abandoning their tribal relations. Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305. It is believed, however, that this act can be restricted in the following manner. The well-recognized purpose of this act and of similar acts preserving interests in tribal property to Indians abandoning their tribal relations was to induce Indians to leave their tribal life on the reservations and to take up the habits and customs of civilized life in white communities. See Oakes v. United States, at 308; United States v. Besaw, 6 F. (2d) 694, 697 (Ct. App. D. C. 1925). In fact, the phrase "abandonment of tribal relations" has continuously been interpreted as meaning a physical abandonment of the tribe and the reservation and an undertaking to live as a white person. An example of such an interpretation of the phrase in the Act of 1875 is the Circular of Instructions issued by the General Land Office on March 25, 1875, requiring Indians desiring to take advantage of the benefits of the Act of 1875 to make affidavit that they have adopted the habits and pursuits of civilized life (2 C. L. O. 44). In all cases of which I have knowledge so far brought into court or before the Department for adjudication of the rights of Indians under the 1875 or 1887 acts, the Indians had physically abandoned their tribe and reservation and this was assumed to prove abandonment of tribal relations.

In view of this purpose of Congress to induce Indians to leave the reservations and the interpretation of the statutory language "abandonment of tribal relations" it may be said that the Act of 1875 would not apply to Indians who wish to relieve themselves of membership in a tribe but who, nevertheless, remain upon the reservation of the tribe and continue living as other members of the tribe and continue enjoying the Federal protection of reservation life. Memo. Sol. I. D., March 19, 1938.

[48] The Act of January 18, 1881, 21 Stat. 315, 316, gave to those Winnebago Indians of Wisconsin who abandoned their tribal relations and wished to use the money for purposes of settling a homestead on the public domain a pro rata share in the distribution of tribal funds.

[49] 16 Stat. 404 (Stockbridge and Munsee).

[50] 12 Stat. 1191.

[51] 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5537 (C. C. Kans. 1881).

[52] This section was amended by the Act of May 8, 1906, 34 Stat. 182, 25 U. S. C. 349.

[53] 24 Stat. 388, 390.

> States without in any manner impairing or otherwise affecting the right of any such Indian to tribal or other property.[54]

In the case of Reynolds v. United States,[55] a Sioux woman who had been born on the reservation and was a member of the tribe was taken from the reservation by her father. She moved away from the reservation, adopted the habits of white people and married a white man. Her rights to share in the tribal property were recognized, under the 1887 statute.

(3) By section 2 of the Act of August 9, 1888,[56] rights in tribal property were preserved to Indian women who thereafter married citizens of the United States and became citizens also.

(4) In furtherance of its policy to induce Indians to break away from the tribal mode of life, Congress included in the Appropriation Act of June 7, 1897,[57] the following provision granting rights in tribal property to the children of certain Indian women who had left the tribe:

> That all children born of a marriage heretofore solemnized between a white man and an Indian woman by blood and not by adoption, where said Indian woman is at this time, or was at the time of her death, recognized by the tribe shall have the same rights and privileges to the property of the tribe to which the mother belongs, or belonged at the time of her death, by blood, as any other member of the tribe * * *.[58]

Because this statute creates a new class of distributees in tribal property and, to that extent, decreases the property right of those distributees otherwise entitled to share, it has been strictly construed. It does not include the children of a marriage between two Indians;[59] it does not include the children of a marriage between an Indian man and a white woman;[60] it does not save any rights of children of an Indian woman who married a white man after June 7, 1897;[61] it does not save the rights of children whose Indian mother had married a white man before that date, but who was a member by adoption only, or if she had been a member by blood, who was not considered a member at that date or at her death if it had occurred prior to that time.[62] Nor does it create any rights in any lineal descendants other than children of the Indian woman.

The rights of children of a tribal member are discussed in Halbert v. United States:[63]

> The children of a marriage between an Indian woman and a white man usually take the status of the father; but if the wife retains her tribal membership and the children are born in the tribal environment and there reared by her, with the husband failing to discharge his duties to them, they take the status of the mother.
>
> Whether grandchildren of such a marriage have tribal membership or otherwise depends on the status of the father or mother as the case may be, and not on that of a grandparent.
>
> As to marriages occurring before June 7, 1897 (as the marriages here did), between a white man and an Indian woman, who was Indian by blood rather than by adoption—and who on June 7, 1897, or at the time of her death, was recognized by the tribe—the children have the same right to share in the division or distribution of the property of the tribe of the mother as any other member of the tribe, but this is in virtue of the Act of June 7, 1897.

In the distribution of tribal assets, the visible evidence of one's right to share is the appearance of his name on the appropriate "roll." If membership was the requisite, he had to be on the "membership roll." As a practical matter, acts and treaties providing for distribution of tribal property had to and did set a specific date as to when status must exist. Generally those who did not have a status entitling them to share on that date could not participate even though they might have had such a status before and after that date.[64]

[54] In view of this act, "the mere transfer of citizenship is not important, so far as the question of the rights in tribal property is concerned." United States ex rel. Besaw v. Work, 6 F. 2d 694, 698 (App. D. C. 1925).

[55] 205 Fed. 685 (D. C. S. D. 1913).

[56] C. 818, 25 Stat. 392. See also Pape v. United States, 19 F. 2d 219 (C. C. A. 9, 1927), holding that an Indian woman may receive a share in tribal property even if she marries a white man, becomes a citizen of the United States, has severed tribal relations and has adopted civilized life. Work v. Gouin, 18 F. 2d 820 (App. D. C. 1927), holding that a Chippewa woman, though married to a white man and separated from the tribe, was entitled to share in tribal fund.

[57] 30 Stat. 62, 90, 25 U. S. C. 184.

[58] Cf. Stookey v. Wilbur, 58 F. 2d 522 (App. D. C. 1932). (Act invoked by Secretary of the Interior; court declined to issue mandamus to compel Secretary to restore certain names to tribal rolls.)

[59] Memo. Sol. I. D., December 18, 1934.

[60] Ibid.

[61] Pape v. United States, 19 F. 2d 219 (C. C. A. 9, 1927).

[62] Oakes v. United States, 172 Fed. 305 (C. C. A. 8, 1909).

[63] 283 U. S. 753, 763–764 (1931), rev'g sub nom. United States v. Halbert, 38 F. 2d 795 (C. C. A. 9, 1930).

[64] For examples of such rolls, see the Act of March 1, 1901, 31 Stat. 861, 869–870 (Creek) and the Act of June 30, 1902, 32 Stat. 500, 501–502 (Creek). See Chapter 23, sec. 7. For a discussion of the power of Congress and the Secretary over enrollment, see Chapter 5, secs. 6 and 13.

SECTION 4. TRANSFERABILITY OF THE RIGHT TO SHARE

Ordinarily, a right to participate in tribal property cannot be alienated, either voluntarily or by operation of law.[65] To be entitled to share, the participant's children must have a status in their own right; they may be entitled to share as members, but not as heirs.[66]

However, interests in tribal property may be made transferable by congressional act[67] or tribal law and custom.[68] In such event, alienability may be limited to transfer only by operation of law.[69]

Under the Wheeler-Howard Act, shares in the assets of an Indian tribe or corporation may be disposed of to the Indian tribe or corporation from which the shares were derived or to its successor with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, but alienation to others is prohibited. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to permit exchanges of shares of equal value whenever such exchange is expedient and for the benefit of cooperative organizations.[70]

[65] Sloan v. United States, 118 Fed. 283 (C. C. Nebr. 1902), app. dism. 193 U. S. 614 (1904). Woodbury v. United States, 170 Fed. 302 (C. C. A. 8, 1909); cf. Doe v. Wilson, 23 How. 457 (1859); Crews v. Burcham, 1 Black 352 (1861).

[66] Cf. Woodbury v. United States, 170 Fed. 302 (C. C. A. 8, 1909).

[67] E. g., Act of March 1, 1901, 31 Stat. 861, 864, and Act of June 30, 1902, c. 1323, 32 Stat. 500 (Creek allotments and funds). Act of June 28, 1906, c. 3572, 34 Stat. 539, and Act of April 18, 1912, 37 Stat. 86 (Osage allotments and funds). For a discussion of these statutes, see Chapter 23.

[68] See sec. 5.

[69] Act of June 28, 1906, c. 3572, 34 Stat. 539 (Osage), providing for descendibility did not make interest assignable. Op. Sol. I. D., M.8370, August 15, 1922. Act of April 18, 1912, 37 Stat. 86 (Osage), providing for descendibility did not make right assignable. Taylor v. Tayrien, 51 F. 2d 884 (C. C. A. 10, 1931), cert. den., 284 U. S. 672 (1931).

[70] Act of June 18, 1934, sec. 4, 48 Stat. 984, 985; 25 U. S. C. 464.

SECTION 5. RIGHTS OF USER IN TRIBAL PROPERTY

While property may be vested in a tribe, it is generally the individual members of the tribe who enjoy the use of such property. The question of what rights of user are enjoyed by individual Indians in tribal property may conveniently be considered under four headings:

(A) Occupancy of particular tracts.
(B) Improvements.
(C) Grazing and fishing rights.
(D) Rights in tribal timber.

A. OCCUPANCY OF PARTICULAR TRACTS

We have elsewhere noted[71] that it is a distinctive characteristic of tribal property that the right of possession is vested in the tribe as such, rather than in individual members.

Nevertheless, as a practical matter, some orderly distribution of occupancy among the members of the tribe is generally necessary in order that the land may be used. Hence, it comes about that individuals are given rights of occupancy in certain tracts of tribal land. The tribe may formally assign a right of occupancy to an individual, or if an individual is in possession by tribal law, usage and custom, a right of occupancy may come to be recognized without such formal assignment.[72]

The right of an Indian tribe to grant occupancy rights in designated tracts is specified in certain treaties.[73]

Many treaties recognize the value of individual occupancy rights on tribal land as well as the individual ownership of improvements, and provide for payments to such individuals for loss or destruction of such rights and improvements.[77]

The limitations on the rights of an individual occupant have been defined in several cases. In Reservation Gas Co. v. Snyder,[78] it was held that an Indian tribe might dispose of minerals on tribal lands which had been assigned to individual Indians for private occupancy, since the individual occupants had never been granted any specific mineral rights by the tribe.

In Terrance v. Gray,[79] it was held that no act of the occupant of assigned tribal land could terminate the control duly exercised by the chiefs of the tribe over the use and disposition of the land.

In Application of Parker,[80] it was held that the Tonawanda Nation of Seneca Indians had the right to dispose of minerals on the tribal allotments of its members and that the individual allottee had no valid claim for damages.

The nature of the rights conferred by an Indian tribe upon its members with respect to land occupancy depends upon the laws, customs, and agreements of the tribe. In the case of United States v. Chase,[81] the Supreme Court held that the making of assignments of land of the Omaha tribe to individual members did not preclude a later revocation of such assignments when the tribe decided that the reservation should be allotted, even though the original assignments were made pursuant to a specific treaty provision, were approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and guaranteed the possessory right of the assignee. The court per Van Devanter, J., characterized these arrangements as:

> * * * leaving the United States and the tribe free to take such measures for the ultimate and permanent disposal of the lands, including the fee, as might become essential or appropriate in view of changing conditions, the welfare of the Indians and the public interests. (P. 100.)

Referring to the rights of an occupant of lands of the Cherokee Nation, the court in The Cherokee Trust Funds,[82] declared:

> He had a right to use parcels of the lands thus held by the Nation, subject to such rules as its governing authority might prescribe; but that right neither prevented nor qualified the legal power of that authority to cede the lands and the title of the Nation to the United States.

The right of the occupant has been likened to that of a licensee or tenant at will. But, in order to assure the occupant of land some security in his possession, tribal law and custom may recognize his right of possession to the extent that the right of occupancy may not be revoked at the mere caprice of tribal officials.

Typical of the laws of the Five Civilized Tribes with respect to occupancy rights was the Creek Act of 1889 by which the Creek Nation conferred on each citizen of the nation who was the head of a family and engaged in grazing livestock the right to enclose for that purpose one square mile of public domain without paying compensation. Provision was made for establishing, under certain conditions, more extensive pastures near the frontiers to protect the occupants against the influx of stock from adjacent territories.[83] Various laws of the Five Civilized Tribes provided for the sale or lease of these rights in tribal lands to other members of the tribe.[84] Under these laws, the rights of the grantor and the grantee or the lessor and lessee were protected in tribal and territorial courts. If the lessee refused to surrender possession after the expiration of his term, the lessor could maintain an action of ejectment in federal courts.[85] Adverse possession could run against an occupant. The occupant could maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer against

---

[71] Chapter 15, sec. 1.

[72] Memo. Sol. I. D., October 21, 1938. "If no definite land assignments are made, it is possible that individual members may assert occupancy rights in tribal land based upon long-continued usage." On the power of the tribe over individual rights of occupancy in tribal land, see Chapter 7.

[73] See, for example, Art. VI of the Treaty of September 24, 1857, with the Pawnee Indians, 11 Stat. 729, which provided in part:

> * * * if they think proper to do so, they may divide said lands among themselves, giving to each person, or each head of a family, a farm, subject to their tribal regulations, but in no instance to be sold or disposed of to persons outside, or not themselves of the Pawnee tribe.

And see Art. IV of the Treaty of March 6, 1865, with the Omaha Indians, 14 Stat. 661, construed in United States v. Chase, 245 U. S. 89 (1917).

On the development of individual allotments, see Chapter 11.

[77] See, for example: Treaty of January 24, 1826, with the Creek Nation of Indians, 7 Stat. 286; Treaty of August 8, 1831, with the Shawnees, Senecas, and Wyandots, 7 Stat. 355; Treaty of May 20, 1842, with the Seneca Nation of Indians, 7 Stat. 586; Treaty of June 5 and 17, 1846, with the various Bands of Pottawautomie, Chippewa, and Ottawa Indians, 9 Stat. 853; Treaty of August 6, 1846, with the Cherokee Nation, 9 Stat. 871; Treaty of October 18, 1846, with the Menomonee Tribe of Indians, 9 Stat. 952; Treaty of February 5, 1856, with the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians, 11 Stat. 663; Treaty of June 9, 1855, with the Walla-Walla, Cayuse, and Umatilla Tribes and Bands of Indians, 12 Stat. 945; Treaty of June 9, 1855, with the Yakama, 12 Stat. 951.

[78] 150 N. Y. Supp. 216 (1914).

[79] 156 N. Y. Supp. 916 (1916).

[80] 237 N. Y. Supp. 134 (1929).

[81] 245 U. S. 89 (1917).

[83] 117 U. S. 288, 308 (1886).

[84] See Turner v. United States, 248 U. S. 354 (1919). Art. X of the Compiled Laws of the Cherokee Nation (1892) limited each citizen of the nation to 50 acres of land for grazing purposes, attached to his farm.

[84] E. g., Compiled Laws of Cherokee Nation (1892), Art. XXIII, sec. 706.

[85] Gooding v. Watkins, 5 Ind. T. 578, 82 S. W. 913 (1904), rev'd on other grounds, 142 Fed. 112 (C. C. A. 8, 1905) (Chickasaw).

a trespasser.[86] Shulthis v. McDougal,[87] describes the nature of the interest held by an occupant of Creek lands, as follows:

> From the time they took up their residence west of the Mississippi, the Constitutions of the Five Nations provided that their land should remain "common property; but the improvements made thereon, and in the possession of the citizens of the nation, are the exclusive and indefeasible property of the citizens respectively who made, or may rightfully be in possession of them." The term "improvements," as here used, meant not only betterments, but occupancy. Cherokee Nation v. Journeycake, 155 U. S. 196, 210, * * *. These "improvements" passed from father to son, and were the subject of sale, with the single restriction that they should not be sold to the United States, individual states, or to individual citizens thereof.

As the foregoing cases indicate, the federal courts have given full weight to the arrangements made by the various tribes with respect to the individual occupancy rights of tribal members.

Congress has repeatedly given recognition to such occupancy rights, as, for example, by providing that compensation be made directly to occupants of tribal land for damage done or property taken in railroad building across such land.[88] There have been occasions, however, when Congress has felt compelled to modify these tribal arrangements by federal legislation. The Five Civilized Tribes are a case in point.

The following statement of conditions in the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes is found in the Report by the Senate Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes, May 1894:[89]

> A few enterprising citizens of the tribe, frequently not Indians by blood but by intermarriage, have in fact become the practical owners of the best and greatest part of these lands, while the title still remains in the tribe—theoretically for all, yet in fact the great body of the tribe derives no more benefit from their title than the neighbors in Kansas, Arkansas or Missouri * * *.[90]

These conditions were cited in justification of congressional acts providing for the redistribution of occupancy rights and ultimately for the allotment of lands of the Five Civilized Tribes.[91]

Under the Act of June 18, 1934,[92] the problem of individual rights in tribal land assumes a new importance by reason of the provision prohibiting future allotments in severalty.[93]

On unallotted reservations, tribal constitutions often provide for a single form of assignment, under which each head of a family is entitled to secure the occupancy of a tract of standard acreage under a tenure dependent upon use.[94]

On allotted reservations, the land problem is more complicated, and two types of assignment are common, "standard" assignments and "exchange"[95] assignments. Standard assignments are usually made to landless Indians or to Indians having a lesser amount of land than the standard acreage fixed by the tribe, and are generally made for the purpose of establishing homes. The tribal constitution and the assignment form generally provide that a standard assignment shall be canceled if the land is not beneficially utilized by the assignee for a specified period of time. Exchange assignments may be made to Indians who have an interest in severalty in some land in consideration of their surrendering such interest. Exchange assignments generally include more extensive rights of lease and transfer than are provided in connection with standard assignments, and in this respect approach more nearly to the character of allotments. The chief respects in which exchange assignments differ from allotments are: (1) land under such assignment cannot be alienated (apart from exchanges of land of equal value) during the life of the assignee except to the tribe, whereas allotted land may be transferred, upon the removal of restrictions or the issuance of a fee patent by the Secretary of the Interior, to any individual, Indian or non-Indian; (2) land under an exchange assignment is not inheritable in the strict sense of the term, as is allotted land, but is subject to reassignment to qualified members of the tribe designated by the original assignee, provided the land is neither subdivided into portions too minute for economic use nor reassigned to persons holding more than a designated maximum acreage of tribal land; (3) land under an exchange assignment is tribal land and is subject to all the protections which the law throws about tribal land.

The rights to improvements placed by individual Indians on the land are, under many constitutions, distinguished from the assigned right of user in the land itself, and are made transferable by devise, lease, or operation of law to certain members of the tribe upon approval by the tribe.[96]

It has been administratively held that a tribal grant of occupancy rights to its members does not necessarily involve the conveyance of any interest in tribal land, since the occupant may hold a position similar to that of a licensee.[97]

On the other hand, it has been held that an individual member of an Indian Pueblo has such an occupancy interest as will, under the Taylor Grazing Act,[98] justify a preference in the award of grazing rights on the public domain.[99]

At this stage in the development of the forms of assignment it is important to avoid over-generalizations on the nature of the legal rights thus created. Possibly a suggestive analogy to the member's occupancy right in tribal land is the right of a member of a membership corporation to reside in an allocated tract of the society's estate.

B. IMPROVEMENTS

With reference to improvements placed upon the land, an occupant may acquire a vested right, subject to the limitations of tribal rules and customs.[100] It has been said that the individual has a vested right in such improvements, even as against the tribe because they are his own property; they are not the

---

[86] Hunt v. Hicks, 3 Ind. T. 275, 54 S. W. 818 (1900) (Cherokee).

[87] 170 Fed. 529, 533–534 (C. C. A. 8, 1909), app. dism. 225 U. S. 561 (1912).

[88] See, for example, sec. 3 of the Act of March 2, 1899, 30 Stat. 990, 991, amended by the Act of February 28, 1902, 32 Stat. 50, 25 U. S. C. 314. And see acts cited in Chapter 15, fn. 14.

[89] Sen. Rept. No. 377, 53d Cong. 2d sess. (1894), cited in Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445 (1899), and Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413, 434 (1912).

[90] For a further statement of conditions, see Woodward v. de Graffenried, 238 U. S. 284 (1915).

[91] See Chapter 23.

[92] Secs. 1 to 19, 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461–479.

[93] Op. Sol. I. D., M. 27770, May 22, 1935.

[94] E. g., Constitution and Bylaws of Papago Tribe, Ariz., approved January 6, 1937, Art. 8, sec. 3. Constitution and Bylaws of Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe, Nev., approved January 15, 1936, Art. 7, sec. 3.

[95] E. g., Constitution and Bylaws of Cheyenne River Sioux, S. D., approved December 27, 1935, Art. 8, sec. 4.
Constitution and Bylaws of Lower Sioux Community, Minn., approved June 11, 1936, Art. 9, secs. 1, 5.

[96] E. g., Constitution and Bylaws of Fort Belknap Community, Mont., approved December 13, 1935, Art. V, secs. 5, 7, 8.

[97] Memo. Sol. I. D., October 21, 1938 (Palm Springs); Memo. Sol. I. D. April 14, 1939 (Pueblo of Santa Clara).

[98] Act of June 28, 1934, 48 Stat. 1269, as amended June 26, 1936, 49 Stat. 1976, and July 14, 1939 (Pub., No. 173—76th Cong., 1st sess.).

[99] Eligibility of Indians and Indian Pueblos for Grazing Privileges under the Taylor Grazing Act, 56 I. D. 79 (1937); see, also, Rights of Pueblos and Members of Pueblo Tribes under the Taylor Grazing Act, 56 I. D. 308 (1938).

[100] See Chapter 7, sec. 8.

property of the tribe and his right to them is not derived as an interest in tribal property.[101]

However, the occupant's right of use and disposition of the improvements is qualified by the fact that he does not own the land and that the tribe, in granting him the right of occupancy, may impose as conditions certain terms affecting improvements. In effect, tribal laws and customs represent conditions upon the grant of individual occupancy rights, to which the individual is deemed to consent upon receiving such rights.[102]

The laws of many tribes contain provisions regarding the placing of improvements upon tribal land by an occupant.[103] For example, the laws of the Cherokee Nation compelled the occupant to place at least $50 worth of improvements upon the land he occupied within 6 months of locating thereon or else the land reverted to the nation.[104] Various tribal constitutions permit the holder of an assignment of land from the tribe to make improvements on the land and allow him to dispose of them by will or by other methods, under such rules and regulations as the tribal council may direct. It is also generally provided that permanent improvements may not be removed from the land without the consent of the tribal council.[105]

The claim of the individual Indian to the improvements he has placed upon tribal land has been frequently recognized by Congress. Allotment acts generally provided that the Indian who held certain lands as an occupant and had made improvements thereon had prior right of selecting these lands as his allotment.[106] The practical value of this was that he could, if he wished, retain a favorable location and save himself the expense of moving and making improvements elsewhere.[107]

Various statutes recognize the right of the individual who has occupied or placed improvements upon tribal land to the value of these improvements when they have been taken from him or destroyed.[108]

C. GRAZING AND FISHING RIGHTS[109]

Even in the absence of particular assignments of individual tracts, arrangements limiting the use of tribal lands are frequently imposed, either by tribal or by federal authorities, for the purpose of defining and protecting the rights of all the members of the tribe, including those yet unborn.[110] This control has been exercised most notably to prevent exploitation of tribal grazing lands by a small number of stock owners and to protect the economic life of the tribe against the damages resulting from serious overstocking of the range and soil erosion.[111]

In the case of United States v. Barquin,[113] the court considered regulations promulgated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs governing grazing on the Shoshone Indian tribal lands. The regulations provided generally for the free grazing by each family of a limited number of stock, which were to be branded. Indians were allowed to graze cattle in excess of this number by securing a permit and paying a small fee. The court held that an Indian who grazed cattle in violation of these regulations was guilty of trespass and enjoined him from so using the tribal lands.[113]

In the case of United States v. Bega,[114] and related cases, the court had before it the power of the Department of the Interior to make grazing regulations on Navajo tribal lands.[115] Consent

---

[101] Memo. Sol. I. D., October 21, 1938 (Palm Springs). The tribe does not own the improvements placed on tribal land by or under direction of individual members of the tribe. Where the occupant leases, with approval of the tribe and the Department of the Interior, the land and improvements, "there should be a definite provision as to the division of rentals between the individual as the owner of improvements, and the tribe as the owner of the land." Cf. Memo. Sol. I. D., October 20, 1937 (Ft. Belknap).

[102] See Chapter 7, sec. 8.

[103] See Chapter 15, secs. 9 and 18B.

[104] Compiled 1892, Art. III.

[105] E. g., Constitution and Bylaws of the Oglala Sioux of Pine Ridge Reservation, approved January 15, 1936, Art. 10, sec. 9; Constitution and Bylaws of the Colorado Pine Indians, approved August 13, 1937, Art. 8, sec. 9; Art. 1, sec. 2 of the Cherokee Constitution (1892) provided that improvements might be made by the individual occupant and recognized his vested rights therein. The improvements were inheritable and subject to sale, the only restriction being that they were not to be sold to the United States, to any of the states, or to any citizen of the state. The purpose of this restriction was to keep tribal members in possession. See Cherokee Trust Funds, 117 U. S. 288, 305 (1886); Shulthis v. McDougal, 170 Fed. 529, 534 (C. C. A. 8, 1909), app. dism. 225 U. S. 561 (1912).

Improvements and inclosures on lands held in occupancy made in furtherance of agriculture and grazing purposes by members of the Five Civilized Tribes were permitted to pass by quitclaim deed or bill of sale from one member to another. See United States v. Rea-Read Mill & Elevator Co., 171 Fed. 501, 504 (C. C. E. D. Okla. 1909).

[106] "That all allotments * * * shall be selected * * * in such manner as to embrace the improvements of the Indians making the selection," is the provision found in sec. 2, of the General Allotment Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 25 U. S. C., secs. 331, 332, 333, 334, 348, 349, 381, 339, 341, 342, and sec. 9 of the Act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. 888 (Sioux).

Art. 3 of the Agreement of June 6, 1900, 31 Stat. 672, between the Shoshones and the United States provided that the Indians who had taken possession of lands under a prior agreement (Act of February 23, 1889, 25 Stat. 687) and were occupying them as tribal lands and had made improvements thereon had a preference in selecting such lands as contained the improvements for their allotments. See Skeem v. United States, 273 Fed. 93 (C. C. A. 9, 1921), and see Art. 3 of the Agreement with the Crow Indians, ratified April 27, 1904, c. 1924, 33 Stat. 352.

[107] This explains why, in the selection of allotments, contention arose as to who had been entitled to occupancy rights,

[108] Act of February 13, 1871, 16 Stat. 410 (Menomonee); Act of May 8, 1872, 17 Stat. 85 (Kansas); Act of February 19, 1875, 18 Stat. 330 (Seneca); Act of May 15, 1882, 22 Stat. 63 (Miami); Act of February 20, 1895, 28 Stat. 677 (Ute); Act of March 2, 1907, 34 Stat. 1220 (Cherokee); Act of June 3, 1924, 43 Stat. 357 (Red Lake); Act of January 29, 1925, 43 Stat. 795 (Indians in New Mexico or California).

[109] This section deals only with rights in tribal property. On rights pertaining to adjacent public lands, under the Taylor Grazing Act, see fns. 98 and 99, supra.

[110] Tribal constitutions sometimes provide that in issuing grazing permits or leasing tribal lands preferences shall be given to Indian cooperative associations and to individual members of the tribe. See, e. g., Constitution of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, South Dakota, Art. VIII, sec. 3.

[111] The purposes of the general grazing regulations issued by the Secretary of the Interior is set forth as follows:

> (a) The preservation * * * of the forest, the forage, the land, and the water resources. * * * and the building up of these resources where they have deteriorated. (b) The utilization of these resources for the purpose of giving the Indians an opportunity to earn a living through the grazing of their own livestock. (c) The granting of grazing privileges on surplus range lands * * * in a manner which will yield the highest return consistent with undiminished future use. (d) The protection of the interests of the Indians from the encroachment of unduly aggressive and anti-social individuals. 25 C. F. R. 71.3.

[113] (D. C. Wyo. 1928, unreported) D. J. File No. 90–2–8–24.

[113] In the case of United States v. Jensen, unreported (D. C. E. D. Wash. 1926), a member of the Yakima tribe was adjudged guilty of trespassing on tribal lands when he grazed sheep upon the tribal reservation without securing a permit from the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary. See also United States v. Olney, unreported (D. C. E. D. Wash. 1919), holding that the Secretary of the Interior has the authority to require an Indian user of tribal grazing lands to first secure a permit and to require him to pay a fee for cattle grazed in excess of the number prescribed as "free" under Department of the Interior regulations.

[114] (D. C. Ariz. 1939, unreported) D. J. File No. 90–2–8–24–3.

[115] As promulgated, June 2, 1937, these regulations provided, in part:

> 1. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall establish land-management districts within the Navajo and Hopi Indian Reservations, based upon the social and economic requirements of the Indians and the necessity of rehabilitating the grazing lands.
> 2. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall promulgate for each land management district the carrying capacity for livestock.
> 3. The Superintendent shall keep accurate records of ownership of all livestock.
> 4. The Superintendent shall reduce the livestock in each district to the carrying capacity of the range.
> 5. The Superintendent is authorized to assess and collect trespass fees and, with the consent of the tribal council of the Navajo Indians, he may also assess and collect grazing fees upon all stock owned in excess of the base preference number and upon all nonproductive stock owned below the base preference number. * * *

Regulations governing grazing in the Navajo and Hopi Reservations are codified in 25 C. F. R. 72.1–72.13.

of the Navajo tribe to the federal grazing regulations had been duly obtained. The court held that under these regulations the Secretary of the Interior could require the removal of horses from the reservation in excess of the number permitted, and in its decree the court compelled the individual stock owners to remove their excess stock. In addition, the court disposed of questions that might cause future litigation by including a declaratory judgment to the following effect:

> * * * the Secretary of the Interior of the United States is vested with the power, right, and authority to promulgate rules and regulations for the protection of the tribal lands of the Navajo Reservation within the State of Arizona, and to the effect and extent necessary to prevent waste caused by overgrazing and to prevent unfair or unreasonable monopolization of tribal range by individuals, and to provide by rules and regulations a maximum carrying capacity of such districts as may be fixed and determined by said rules and regulations.

A similar problem has arisen in connection with the regulation of individual fishing rights in tribal waters. In the case of Mason v. Sams,[116] the court considered the power of the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate regulations with respect to the use by tribal Indians of waters in the Quinaielt Reservation which had been reserved for the exclusive use of the Indians by the Treaty of July 1, 1855, and January 25, 1856, with the Qui-nai-elts and Quil-leh-utes.[117] The scheme of regulations in question has been promulgated by the Department of the Interior, without tribal consent. Under these regulations certain members of the tribe were granted exclusive fishing rights at favored locations upon payment of prescribed fees, and other members were excluded therefrom. The court held that these regulations were invalid. The decision in Mason v. Sams is distinguishable from the grazing cases discussed above in two respects: first, certain individual members of the tribe were entirely excluded from the right to fish in tribal waters, in Mason v. Sams, while in the grazing cases no member of the tribe was entirely deprived of grazing rights on tribal land; secondly, tribal authority for the regulations in question was lacking in Mason v. Sams and present in the Bega case. (Whether it was present in the other grazing cases is not clear.)

D. RIGHTS IN TRIBAL TIMBER

Where a tribe possesses property rights in timber, the question arises: What right has a member of the tribe to cut and to use or sell tribal timber?

By the general Act of February 16, 1889,[118] for example, the President of the United States was authorized to permit, at his discretion and under such regulations as he might prescribe, Indians living on reservations or allotments, the fee to which was in the United States, to cut, remove, sell or otherwise dispose of dead timber, standing or fallen, on such lands. Pursuant to this statute, permission was given to Indians of the Chippewa reservation in Minnesota to cut tribal timber, subject to certain regulations. As discussed in the case of Pine River Logging Co. v. United States,[119] the regulations permitted "deserving Indians, who had no other means of support, to cut for a single season a limited quantity of dead and down timber * * *, and to use the proceeds for their support in exact proportion to the scale of logs banked by each, provided that ten per cent of the gross proceeds should go to the stumpage or poor fund of the tribe * * *."[120] The facts in the Pine River Logging Co. case disclosed that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had approved contracts between several Indians and a logging company for the cutting of a certain amount of dead timber. In its decision the court held that both the Indians and the logging company were trespassers and were liable to the United States for the value of the timber cut in excess of the amount stated in the contract.[121]

Other acts relating to specific tribes provided that the timber on tribal lands was to be cut and sold under federal supervision and the proceeds thereof were either to be spent for the benefit of the tribe or distributed per capita.[122]

The general Act of June 25, 1910,[123] contains authority for the sale of mature living and dead and down timber from the unallotted lands of any reservation, except the Osages, the Five Civilized Tribes, and the reservations of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Pursuant to the foregoing acts, the Department of the Interior has issued general forest regulations.[124] Insofar as these acts and regulations deal with the rights of the tribe in tribal timber they are elsewhere considered.[125] The right of the individual Indian to cut tribal timber is covered by section 20 of the current regulations which appears as section 61.27 of Title 25 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

Section 61.27 establishes a permit system whereby permits approved by duly authorized representatives of the tribe are required for the cutting of timber by individual Indians on tribal lands. As stated in the regulation, the system was devised to meet the needs of "Indians and other persons for limited quantities of timber for domestic, agricultural, and grazing purposes." Individual Indians who need timber for personal use may receive permits without the payment of stumpage charge, but the trees so cut are to be designated by a forest officer or other agency employee. The maximum value of the stumpage which may be thus cut by one person in any one year is not to exceed $100. Should the individual require more timber for his needs, he may purchase the surplus tribal timber or timber otherwise authorized for sale (61.13). The Indian is given the preference of buying stumpage not exceeding $5,000 in value in open market without having to bid therefor, provided the tribe consents to the sale (61.17).

---

[116] 5 F. 2d 255 (D. C. W. D. Wash. 1925).

[117] 12 Stat. 971.

[118] C. 172, 25 Stat. 673, 25 U. S. C. 196. On the right of Indians, under departmental regulations, to cut and sell tribal timber, see Act of March 31, 1882, 22 Stat. 36, entitled:

> An act to confirm certain instructions given by the Department of the Interior to the Indian agent at Green Bay Agency, in the State of Wisconsin, and to legalize the acts done and permitted by said Indian agent pursuant thereto.

[119] 186 U. S. 279, 285–286 (1902).

[120] Ibid.

[121] For a later act relating to rights of individual Chippewas in tribal timber, see the Act of June 27, 1902, 32 Stat. 400.

[122] E. g., Act of June 12, 1890, c. 418, 26 Stat. 146 (Menomonee), discussed in United States ex rel. Besaw v. Work, 6 F. 2d 694 (App. D. C. 1925), and supplemented by the Act of June 28, 1906, c. 3578, 34 Stat. 547; Act of December 21, 1904, c. 22, 33 Stat. 595 (Yakima); Act of April 23, 1904, 33 Stat. 302 (Flathead). Cf. sec. 4 of the Act of March 3, 1921, 41 Stat. 1355 (Fort Belknap), which affirms the right of the individual Indian to cut timber on tribal land. The foregoing statute also provides that the head of a family may take coal from unleased tribal lands for domestic use (sec. 6).

[123] 36 Stat. 855, 857, sec. 7, 25 U. S. C. 407. The disposition of timber belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes is governed by the Act of June 28, 1898, 30 Stat. 495; Act of January 21, 1903, 32 Stat. 774; Act of April 26, 1906, 34 Stat. 137; Act of August 24, 1912, 37 Stat. 497. Timber on reservation lands in Minnesota and Wisconsin may be sold in accordance with the provisions of the Acts of February 16, 1889, 25 Stat. 673, 25 U. S. C. 196, the Act of March 28, 1908, 35 Stat. 51 (Menominee), and the Act of May 18, 1916, 39 Stat. 123, 137 (Red Lake).

[124] 25 C. F. R. 61.1–61.29. Office of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, General Forest Regulations, approved April 23, 1936. It is provided that the regulations may be superseded by special instructions to particular reservations or by provisions of tribal constitutions, bylaws, or charters, or any authorized tribal action of the tribes thereunder. 25 C. F. R. 61.6.

[125] See Chapter 15, secs. 15, 19.

SECTION 6. INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS UPON DISTRIBUTION OF TRIBAL PROPERTY

The extent of individual participation in the distribution of tribal property is governed, in the first instance by the federal statute or treaty authorizing the distribution, or, where the federal law is silent, by the law or custom of the tribe.

Apportionment and distribution of tribal funds may be affected by acts passed by Congress in the exercise of its plenary power over tribal property.[126] The manner in which the plenary power over tribal property could be exercised to affect the individual's rights is discussed elsewhere.[127]

A. MODES OF DISTRIBUTION

Where Congress has prescribed the method of distributing tribal property, equal division per capita has been the general rule.[128] This method of apportionment is consistent with the nature of the individual's interest in tribal property and is found in numerous treaties and acts providing for the distribution of tribal property.[129] "Every member of the tribe has an interest in preventing one member from getting more than his share * * *." [130]

However, the act, treaty, or custom providing for distribution may restrict the class of those entitled to participate in a given distribution or deviate from the equality rule by differentiating among various classes of participants. Certain classes of members may receive more tribal property at given times than others.[131]

Even in the same class there have been inequalities in the distribution of tribal assets. For example, many allotments were made on the basis of acreage rather than value, although equality of acreage might co-exist with wide inequality of values.

Ordinarily, in the distribution of money, the wants of all individuals are, for all practical purposes, infinite and equal, and equal per capita distribution is a well-nigh universal rule.[132]

Where, however, the Federal Government has provided for a distribution of land or overcoats or teams of oxen, differentiations have frequently been made between adults and infants or between heads of families and dependents or between men and women.[133] Likewise, where divisions exist within a tribe, based upon separations in migration, degree of blood, or other historical factors, these factors have frequently been taken into account in treaties and statutes.[134]

Occasionally Congress, instead of specifying a total amount to be distributed within a given class, has allocated out of the tribal estate a fixed amount of money or property to each member of a tribe,[135] or to each member who meets certain qualifications.[136]

---

[126] See Chapter 5, sec. 5B.

[127] See Chapter 5, sec. 5.

[128] On the application of this rule to the allotment of tribal land, see Chapter 11. The application of this rule in the distribution of annuities is discussed in Chapters 10 and 15.

[129] E. g., Act of April 30, 1888, c. 206, 25 Stat. 94 (Sioux Nation); Act of April 27, 1904, c. 1620, 33 Stat. 319 (Devils Lake Reservation Indians); Act of June 28, 1906, c. 3578, 34 Stat. 547 (Menominee); Act of March 2, 1907, c. 2536, 34 Stat. 1230 (Rosebud Sioux).

[130] Tiger v. Twin State Oil Co., 48 F. 2d 509, 511 (C. C. A. 10, 1931), aff'g sub nom. Kemohah v. Shaffer Oil and Refining Co., 38 F. 2d 665 (D. C. N. D. Okla. 1930).

[131] In passing upon the distributing of a tribal fund created for the purpose of paying to certain Stockbridge-Munsee Indians their share in tribal property, said Indians having been erroneously omitted from the distribution of an earlier fund, the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior declared:

> The fund created was for one purpose only. Consequently there is no merit to the contention that if the fund be tribal or communal then it must be subject to disbursement for tribal expenditures generally, and that it is necessarily individual and not tribal because all members do not participate in its distribution. The very purpose of the appropriation refutes the contention. Op. Sol. I. D., D. 42071, December 29, 1921.

Cf. Treaty of March 28, 1836, with the Ottawas and Chippewas, 7 Sat. 491, providing for payments of different amounts to different classes of half-breeds.

[132] Per capita payment was made the general rule, except where the interest of the Indians or some treaty stipulation otherwise required, by sec. 3 of the Act of March 3, 1853, 10 Stat. 226, 239. This provision superseded a provision to the same general effect in sec. 3 of the Act of August 30, 1852, 10 Stat. 41, 56, which made permanent the clause which had been included as a limitation upon the appropriations made by earlier appropriation acts. See section 3 of Act of July 21, 1852, 10 Stat. 15, 23. Recent statutes providing for per capita distribution of various funds are cited in fn. 135 and 144 infra.

[133] Thus, for example, the original General Allotment Act of February 8, 1887, sec. 1, 24 Stat. 388, 25 U. S. C. 331, authorized the allotment of land in these terms:

> To each head of a family, one-quarter of a section;
> To each single person over eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section;
> To each orphan child under eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; and
> To each other single person under eighteen years now living, or who may be born prior to the date of the order of the President directing an allotment of the lands embraced in any reservation, one-sixteenth of a section.

[134] An example of a treaty provision modifying the general rule of equality is Art. 10 of the Treaty of October 1, 1859, with the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi, 15 Stat. 467, 470. Under this treaty half-bloods and intermarried Indians might receive certain tribal lands assigned to them in severalty, but then they would have no share in other tribal property, even though they remained members of the tribe.

See, for example, secs. 4 and 5, Act of July 29, 1848, 9 Stat. 252, 264–265 (N. C. Cherokees); Act of January 18, 1881, 21 Stat. 315 (Winnebago Indians); Act of October 19, 1888, 25 Stat. 608 (Cherokee freedmen); Act of October 1, 1890, 26 Stat. 636 (Shawnee and Delaware Indians and Cherokee freedmen); Act of March 3, 1893, 27 Stat. 744 (Stockbridge and Munsee tribe); Act of April 28, 1904, 33 Stat. 519 (Wyandotte Indians); Act of March 1, 1907, 34 Stat. 1055 (Sac and Fox Indians); Act of August 11, 1916, 39 Stat. 509 (Rosebud Sioux Reservation); Act of March 4, 1917, 39 Stat. 1195 (Santee Sioux); Act of April 14, 1924, 43 Stat. 95 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of May 3, 1928, 45 Stat. 484 (Sioux Tribe); Act of March 4, 1929, 45 Stat. 1550 (Loyal Shawnee Indians); Act of March 3, 1931, 46 Stat. 1495 (Blackfeet Tribe).

The following Appropriation Acts include special provisions for per capita payments to specified individuals or classes of individuals within a given tribe; Act of March 3, 1855, sec. 3, 10 Stat. 686 (North Carolina Cherokees); Act of July 31, 1854, sec 8(7), 10 Stat. 315, 333 (Cherokees); Act of August 18, 1856, sec. 14, 11 Stat. 81, 92 (Cherokees east of the Mississippi); Act of June 14, 1858, 11 Stat. 362 (Cherokees); Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 402, 412 (Kickapoo); Act of July 4, 1884, 23 Stat. 76, 81 (Kickapoo); Act of June 29, 1888, 25 Stat. 217, 222–223 (Kickapoo); Act of March 3, 1891, 26 Stat. 989, 1010 (Creek Nation of Indians); Act of June 10, 1896, 29 Stat. 321, 334 (Flandreau Band of Sioux and Santee Sioux in Nebraska) and pp. 358–359, Art. II (Apache, Mohave, and Yuma); Act of July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. 571, 578 (Kickapoo); Act of March 1, 1899, 30 Stat. 924, 931 (Kickapoo); Act of March 3, 1905, 33 Stat. 1048, 1052 (Kickapoo) and pp. 1078–1079, Art. II (Port Madison Indian Reservation) Act of March 4, 1929, 45 Stat. 1562, 1587 (Saint Croix Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of May 14, 1930, 46 Stat. 279, 285 (Sioux).

Special rights of participation in tribal property granted to mixed bloods of various tribes gave rise to "half-breed scrip." Act of July 17, 1854, 10 Stat. 304 (Sioux Nation). See also Appropriation Act of March 3, 1885, 23 Stat. 362, 368 (Kaw or Kansas Tribe).

[135] Act of August 22, 1911, 37 Stat. 44 (Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, and Seminole Indians); Act of November 19, 1921, 42 Stat. 221 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of January 25, 1924, 43 Stat. 1 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of January 30, 1925, 43 Stat. 798 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of February 19, 1926, 44 Stat. 7 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of March 15, 1928, 45 Stat. 314 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of April 28, 1928, 45 Stat. 467 (Shoshones and Arapahoes of Wyoming); Act of May 11, 1928, 45 Stat. 497 (Rosebud Sioux Indians); Act of May 26, 1928, 45 Stat. 747 (Pine Ridge Sioux Indians); Act of December 23, 1929, 46 Stat. 54 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of March 24, 1930, 46 Stat. 88 (Shoshone and Arapahoe); Act of April 15, 1930, 46 Stat. 169 (Pine Ridge, South Dakota); Act of February 3, 1931, 46 Stat. 1060 (Shoshone and Arapahoe); Act of February 14, 1931, 46 Stat. 1102 (Menominees of Wisconsin); Act of February 14, 1931, 46 Stat. 1107 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of February 12, 1932, 47 Stat. 49

To equalize allotments, various acts provide for the payment [137] or the withholding of payment [138] of tribal funds to individuals.

B. TIME OF DISTRIBUTION

Ordinarily, acts providing for the distribution of tribal assets provide for the immediate payment of the entire share to those entitled to it. Individual rights vest immediately upon segregation, and the tribal character of the property is extinguished.[139]

In some special acts providing for distribution of tribal property, Congress has seen fit to withhold payment of some or all of the Indian's share until some future time.[140]

C. THE LIMITS OF LEGISLATIVE DISTRIBUTION

Oftentimes, the act or treaty providing for the distribution of tribal lands or tribal funds does not state specifically the proportion each member is to receive, but leaves the distribution to the decision of the tribe.[141] Tribal charters generally limit the amount and mode in which tribal property may be distributed,[142] and in some cases prohibit any per capita distribution of tribal funds.[143]

So long as the Federal Government sought to achieve the breaking up of tribal estates, legislative distribution of tribal funds was the order of the day.[144]

(Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of June 14, 1932, 47 Stat. 306 (Red Lake of Minnesota); Act of June 14, 1932, 47 Stat. 307 (Menominees of Wisconsin); Act of January 20, 1933, 47 Stat. 773 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of June 3, 1933, 48 Stat. 112 (Menominee); Act of June 15, 1933, 48 Stat. 146 (Seminole); Act of June 16, 1933, 48 Stat. 254 (Red Lake); Act of May 7, 1934, 48 Stat. 668 (Chippewas of Minnesota); Act of July 2, 1935, 49 Stat. 444 (Red Lake); Act of June 20, 1936, 49 Stat. 1568 (Blackfeet).

[136] The Act of April 30, 1888, 25 Stat. 94 (later amended by the Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325, 326), established the right to "Sioux benefits" in the following terms:

> * * * That each head of family or single person over the age of eighteen years, who shall have or may hereafter take his or her allotment of land in severalty, shall be provided with two milch cows, one pair of oxen, with yoke and chain, one plow, one wagon, one harrow, one hoe, one axe, and one pitchfork, all suitable to the work they may have to do, and also twenty dollars in cash. (P. 101.)

And see Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 751 (Quapaw, Modoc, Klamaths); Act of June 1, 1938, 52 Stat. 605 (Klamath).

[137] See the Act of April 26, 1906, c. 1876, 34 Stat. 137 (Five Civilized Tribes).

[138] See the Act of March 1, 1901, 31 Stat. 861, 862–863 (Creek).

[139] Parallel problems arise in the law of corporations, future interests, and trusts. See Cogswell v. Second Nat. Bank, 78 Conn. 75, 60 Atl. 1059 (1905), aff'd sub nom. Jerome v. Cogswell, 204 U. S. 1 (1907), holding that the declaration of a dividend, payable at some future date, creates a debt in favor of the stockholder against the corporation. When a fund out of which the dividend is to be paid is segregated, a trust for the benefit of the stockholders is imposed upon the segregated fund. See New York Trust Co. v. Edwards, 274 Fed. 952 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1921); Staats v. Biograph Co., 236 Fed. 454 (C. C. A. 2, 1916). See also Hayward v. Blake, 247 Mass. 430, 142 N. E. 52 (1924), to the effect that income accruing to a life tenant during his lifetime, but not yet payable at the date of his death, is payable to his estate.

[140] The Act of January 14, 1889, 25 Stat. 642, provided for the sale of certain tribal lands of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota. Sec. 7 provided in part:

> That all money accruing from the disposal of said lands * * * shall * * * be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota as a permanent fund, which shall draw interest at the rate of five per centum per annum, payable annually for the period of fifty years * * * and which interest and permanent fund shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in manner following: One-half of said interest shall, during the said period of fifty years, except in the cases hereinafter otherwise provided, be annually paid in cash in equal shares to the heads of families and guardians of orphan minors for their use; and one-fourth of said interest shall, during the same period and with the like exception, be annually paid in cash in equal shares per capita to all other classes of said Indians; and the remaining one-fourth of said interest shall, during the said period of fifty years * * * be devoted exclusively to the establishment and maintenance of a system of free schools among said Indians * * *; and at the expiration of the said fifty years, the said permanent fund shall be divided and paid to all of said Chippewa Indians and their issue then living, in cash, in equal shares: * * * The United States shall, for the benefit of said Indians, advance to them as such interest as aforesaid the sum of ninety thousand dollars annually * * * until such time as said permanent fund * * * shall equal or exceed the sum of three million dollars, less any actual interest that may in the meantime accrue from accumulations of said permanent fund * * *.

Under this act, three-fourths of the interest is to be paid annually to the eligible Indians in equal shares per capita. Any advances made can come only from the interest, and the Secretary of the Interior cannot segregate and advance to any individual Chippewa his pro rata share of the permanent fund. If he were allowed to do this, there is a possibility that the permanent fund set apart for the benefit of all Chippewas might be seriously depleted or exhausted (Op. Sol. I. D., M.11879, May 31, 1924). The policy behind keeping the fund intact for the period of 50 years was to prevent the Indians from squandering their wealth; it was supposed that, during the 50-year period, they would have become sufficiently educated to realize the value of their property.

However, by virtue of the Act of May 18, 1916, c. 125, 39 Stat. 123, 135, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized in his discretion to advance to any individual entitled to participate in the permanent fund of the Chippewas > * * * one-fourth of the amount which would now be coming to said Indian under a pro rata distribution of said permanent fund: Provided further, That any money received hereunder by any member of said tribe or used for his or her benefit shall be deducted from the share of said member in the permanent fund of the said Chippewa Indians in Minnesota to which he or she would be entitled * * *.

(Discussed Op. Sol. I. D., M.15954, January 8, 1927.)

The question of the proportionate distribution of the interest accruing upon the Chippewa fund was discussed in an opinion of the Solicitor of the Interior Department (Op. Sol. I. D., M.15954, January 8, 1927).

[141] The Act of March 3, 1839, 5 Stat. 349, 350, providing for the division and distribution of lands belonging to the Brothertown Indians by a board of commissioners, stated that it was the duty of the board "to make a just and fair partition and division of said lands among the members of said tribe, or among such of them as, by the laws and customs and regulations of said tribe, are entitled to the same, and in such proportions and in such manner as shall be consistent with equity and justice, and in accordance with the existing laws, customs, usages, or agreements of said tribe." Numerous other acts which leave the distribution of tribal property to the tribe itself are discussed in Chapter 15, secs. 23 and 24.

[142] For example, the corporate charter of the Winnebago Tribe of Nebraska, ratified August 15, 1936, provides:

> The Tribe may issue to each of its members a nontransferable certificate of membership evidencing the equal share of each member in the assets of the Tribe and may distribute per capita, among the recognized members of the Tribe, all profits of corporate enterprises or income over and above sums necessary to defray corporate obligations and over and above all sums which may be devoted to the establishment of a reserve fund, the construction of public works, the costs of public enterprises, the expenses of tribal government, the needs of charity, or other corporate purpose. No such distribution of profits or income in any one year amounting to a distribution of more than one-half of the accrued surplus, shall be made without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. No distribution of the financial assets of the Tribe shall be made except as provided herein or as authorized by Congress.

[143] For example, the corporate charter of the Gila River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community (ratified February 28, 1938) provides, in sec. 8: "No per capita distribution of any assets of the community shall be made."

[144] Act of June 10, 1872, 17 Stat. 388 (Ottawa); Act of March 3, 1873, 17 Stat. 623 (Ottawa); Act of May 15, 1888, 25 Stat. 150 (Omaha); Act of August 19, 1890, 26 Stat. 329 (Omaha tribe); Act of February 13, 1891, 26 Stat. 749 (Sac and Fox and Iowa); Act of August 11, 1894, 28 Stat. 276 (Omaha); Act of February 20, 1895, 28 Stat. 677 (Ute); Act of February 28, 1899, 30 Stat. 909 (Pottawatomie and Kickapoo); Act of June 6, 1900, 31 Stat. 672 (Fort Hall); Act of February 28, 1901, 31 Stat. 819 (Seneca); Act of February 20, 1904, 33 Stat. 46 (Red Lake); Act of April 23, 1904, 33 Stat. 254 (Sioux); Act of April 23, 1904, 33 Stat. 302 (Flathead); Act of April 27, 1904, 33 Stat. 319 (Devils Lake); Act of April 27, 1904, 33 Stat. 352 (Crow); Act of April 28, 1904, 33 Stat. 567 (Grande Ronde); Act of December 21, 1904, 33 Stat. 595 (Yakima); Act of March 3, 1905, 33 Stat. 1016 (Shoshone or Wind River); Act of March 20, 1906, 34 Stat. 80 (Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache); Act of March 22, 1906, 34 Stat. 80 (Colville); Act of June 14, 1906, 34 Stat. 262 (Indians in Richardson County, Nebraska); Act of May 30, 1908, 35 Stat. 558 (Fort Peck); Act of February 18, 1909, 35 Stat. 628 (Omaha and Winnebago); Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 751 (Quapaw); Act of May 13, 1910, 36 Stat. 368 (Richardson County, Nebraska); Act of May 11, 1912, 37 Stat. 111 (Omaha); Act of July 1, 1912, 37 Stat. 187 (Winnebago); Act of February 14, 1913, 37 Stat.

In recent years, however, the Federal Government, recognizing that per capita payments would lead to the dissipation of the tribal estate and the creation of new demands upon the Federal Treasury on the part of individual Indians, has sought to discourage the per capita distribution of tribal funds,[145] except where such funds represent continuing income,[146] or where prior legislative commitments preclude application of the current policy of conserving the tribal estate.

The federal policy of discouraging per capita distribution of tribal funds, coupled with a tendency to cut down federal use of tribal funds for Indian Service administration, has made the activity of the tribe itself in distributing tribal property or rights of user therein a matter of increasing importance.[147]

---

675 (Standing Rock); Act of August 26, 1922, 42 Stat. 832 (Riverside County, California); Act of May 19, 1924, 43 Stat. 132 (Lac du Flambeau Band of Chippewas); Act of January 7, 1925, 43 Stat. 726 (Omaha); Act of February 9, 1925, 43 Stat. 820 (Omaha); Act of March 3, 1927, 44 Stat. 1369 (Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache); Act of March 3, 1927, 44 Stat. 1389 (Cheyenne River); Act of March 3, 1927, 44 Stat. 1397 (Fort Hall); Act of April 29, 1930, 46 Stat. 260 (Iowa); Act of March 2, 1931, 46 Stat. 1481 (Fort Berthold); Act of March 4, 1931, 46 Stat. 1526 (Puyallup); Act of March 3, 1933, 47 Stat. 1488 (Utes); Act of June 20, 1936, 49 Stat. 1543 (Crow); Joint Resolution of June 20, 1936, 49 Stat. 1569 (Fort Belknap). For a fuller discussion of problems involved in pro rata division of tribal property, and general statutes on the subject, see Chapter 15, secs. 22–24, and Chapter 10, secs. 4–5.

[145] Prohibitions against or limitations upon per capita payments are found in the following general statutes: Act of March 3, 1927, 44 Stat. 1347 (tribal oil and gas rentals); Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984 (making distribution of tribal assets subject to tribal consent). Prohibitions against per capita payments are likewise found in the following special statutes: Act of May 18, 1928, 45 Stat. 602 (Indians of California); Act of December 17, 1928, 45 Stat. 1027 (Winnebago); Act of February 20, 1929, 45 Stat. 1249 (Nez Perce); Act of February 23, 1929, 45 Stat. 1256 (Coos Bay, Lower Umpqua and Siuslaw); Act of February 23, 1929, 45 Stat. 1258 (Kansas); Act of April 21, 1932, 47 Stat. 87 (Wichita and affiliated bands); Act of June 19, 1935, 49 Stat. 388 (Tlingit and Haida); Act of August 30, 1935, 49 Stat. 1049 (Chippewa). A precursor of this prohibition against per capita distribution is found in the Act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat. 819 (Sioux).

[146] Act of June 15, 1934, 48 Stat. 964 (Menominee); Act of August 25, 1937, 50 Stat. 811 (Palm Springs).

[147] See Chapter 7, sec. 8.

CHAPTER 10

THE RIGHTS OF THE INDIAN IN HIS PERSONALTY

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. NATURE AND FORMS OF INDIVIDUAL PERSONAL PROPERTY

The forms of personalty held by Indians (e. g. funds, personal belongings, notes, mortgages, growing crops, livestock, and choses in action) may be as diverse as those held by non-Indians. So, too, the forms of legal and equitable interests in personal property which may be vested in individual Indians are probably as diverse as among non-Indians. It is not our purpose to analyze those rights in personalty which Indians enjoy in common with other citizens. Yet in so far as the Indian is subject to the special guardianship[1] of the Federal Government, problems peculiar to him arise concerning his acquisition, use, and disposition of his goods and chattels.

Under the United States Constitution, the rights of the Indian in his private property, whatever they may be, are "secured and enforced to the same extent and in the same way as other residents or citizens of the United States."[2] Nonetheless, Congress may, acting within the scope of its constitutional power, control and manage his affairs and property.[3] The rights of the Indian in his personalty are primarily dependent upon the answer to the question: Has Congress, in the particular instance, undertaken to manage the property, and if so, to what extent have powers of management been conferred upon administrative officials?

Where Congress has not imposed restrictions upon the Indian's personal property he may exercise the same power to use, destroy, or alienate his personal property which any other citizen possesses. There is nothing about the status of the individual Indian as such that incapacitates him from exercising the ordinary rights enjoyed by other owners of personal property.[4] Whatever peculiar limitations are to be found in this field are limitations attached to the property rather than limitations affecting the person.

If legal problems in the field of Indian-owned personal property are viewed from this standpoint, the statutory or treaty origin of any property is of final importance in determining what limitations are attached to its use or disposition. If the treaty or statute provides that funds or teakettles are to be turned over to an Indian without restriction, that ordinarily ends the matter. The funds or the teakettles become the absolute property of the recipient, who may thereafter utilize, destroy, conserve, or give away his property without the consent of any official. On the other hand, if Congress provides that certain property shall be distributed to Indians "under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," it becomes necessary to examine what those rules and regulations provide in order to determine how far rights ordinarily associated with ownership can be exercised by the Indian and how far they rest with the reservation superintendent or some other government official.

Generally, but not universally, restricted personal property represents a carry-over of restrictions imposed upon land ownership. Since Indian lands have generally been subjected to restrictions on lease or sale,[5] the treaties and statutes authorizing such lease or sale might, and often did, provide that the cash returns derived from such disposition of lands should be held by the United States in trust for the Indians concerned or should be turned over to the Indians subject to specific restrictions upon use or disposition. The legal justification for such provisions was that the Federal Government, having power to forbid or permit land alienation might condition its permission by extending restrictions to the proceeds derived from restricted lands. The factual justification was, generally, that the Indians might squander the proceeds of their lands and thus render themselves a burden to the Government or a danger to their neighbors unless restrained from doing so by governmental restrictions.

[1] "Guardian-ward" concepts are discussed in Chapter 8, sec. 9.

[2] See Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665, 677 (1912).

[3] For the extent of congressional power over Indian affairs and Indian property, see Chapter 5.

[4] See Chapter 8.

[5] See Chapter 11, secs. 4 and 5.

The policy problems which are raised in this field involve a balancing of two objectives: on the one hand to safeguard the economic future of the Indian and the purse strings of the Federal Government by preventing the dissipation of the Indian's capital assets; on the other hand to minimize the cost of paternal supervision that such safeguarding entails and to give the individual Indian the right to exercise his own judgment, and to make mistakes in the process, without which practical education in economics is impossible. At different times and in diverging circumstances, the balance between these conflicting objectives has naturally varied. No simple formula will explain why certain property has been restricted and other property turned over to Indian owners without strings. All that can be attempted in this chapter in that regard is to indicate the principal types of legislation in the field.

SECTION 2. SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL PERSONAL PROPERTY

The same Indian may possess at one time restricted and unrestricted funds. With unrestricted funds, as, for example, wages earned by the Indian in private employment, he may do just as he wishes, as any other person might.[6] Funds may come from sources not subject to control by the Federal Government; yet Congress may restrict the Indian's use of such funds as long as it retains its guardianship over the Indian.[7] On the other hand, funds, presently unrestricted, may have had their source in other restricted property.

The chief sources of funds which have given rise to special problems of Indian law are:[8]

1. Proceeds, including income, from restricted allotted lands.
2. Tribal funds individualized by per capita distributions to the Indians.
3. Payments from the Federal Government.
4. Payments of damages for loss of property.
5. Proceeds from the sale of restricted crops and livestock.

[6] See Choteau v. Burnet, 283 U. S. 691 (1931), aff'g sub nom. Choteau v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 38 F. 2d 976 (C. C. A. 10, 1930).

[7] See Hickey v. United States, 64 F. 2d 628 (C. C. A. 10, 1933); United States v. Waller, 243 U. S. 452 (1917); Brader v. James, 246 U. S. 88 (1918); and see Chapter 5, secs. 5C, D.

[8] Op. Sol. I. D., M.25258, June 26, 1929.

SECTION 3. SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL PERSONAL PROPERTY—PROCEEDS FROM ALLOTTED LANDS

Comparatively few of the allotment acts have any specific direction governing the distribution of the proceeds from the disposition of the individual's land, either by sale or lease.[9] The General Allotment Act of 1887[10] did not permit any disposition, except by descent, of allotted lands for certain periods of time, during which the lands were to be held in trust by the United States. But realizing that the heirs might not want the inherited lands, since they might have allotted lands of their own, and desiring to encourage the sale of such lands,[11] Congress, in the Appropriation Act of May 27, 1902,[12] provided that trust lands inherited from Indians might be conveyed in fee by them subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.[13]

The rights of the heirs to the proceeds derived from conveyance are discussed in the cases of National Bank of Commerce v. Anderson[14] and United States v. Thurston County, Nebraska,[15] which sustain the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior controlling the proceeds under the Act of 1902. The court in the National Bank of Commerce case holds that the Act of 1902 does not indicate an intent by Congress to vacate the trust of the lands held in trust. When the lands are sold with the consent of the Secretary, the trust attaches to the proceeds, which are payable to the heirs under the rules prescribed by the Interior Department. In approving sales by heirs, the Secretary of the Interior had prescribed that all proceeds of such sales be deposited in United States depositories to the individual credit of each heir as his interest in the estate indicated and subject to checks of $10 per month with the approval of the agent in charge and in larger amounts only when authorized by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.[16]

In United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. v. Hansen,[17] the court holds that the purchase price derived from the sale of the land by the heir is a trust fund; that under the provision of the act requiring the Secretary of the Interior to approve a conveyance, he has the authority to exercise the government's option of continuing control or relinquishing it.

In 1907, Congress took the further step and permitted the sale or lease of allotted lands by either the allottee or his heirs during the trust period, > * * * on such terms and conditions and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and the proceeds derived therefrom shall be used for the benefit of the allottee or heir so disposing of his land or interest, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; * * *.[18]

In the same Act of March 1, 1907,[19] Congress amended the Act of 1902, and relinquished some control over the proceeds derived from the sale of allotments in the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota. The amendment provides for the removal of re-

[9] See Chapter 11.

[10] Sec. 5, Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 389.

[11] The Act of 1902 permits alienation by the heirs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, on the assumption that they would be "more competent in many cases to manage their own affairs than would the original allottee have been; and that the Secretary of the Interior should be the judge as to whether that condition has come about." United States v. Park Land Co., 188 Fed. 383, 387 (C. C. Minn. 1911).

> The purpose of the statute evidently is that lands inherited from deceased allottees by heirs who had and were living upon allotments of their own, might be sold and converted into money, rather than remain untilled and unoccupied.

National Bank of Commerce v. Anderson, 147 Fed. 87, 89 (C. C. A. 9, 1906).

[12] Sec. 7, 32 Stat. 245, 275, 25 U. S. C. 379.

[13] The approval of the Secretary of the Interior was necessary to the validity of a conveyance by an adult heir of an Indian allottee. United States v. Leslie, 167 Fed. 670 (C. C. S. D. 1909).

[14] 147 Fed. 87 (C. C. A. 9, 1906).

[15] 143 Fed. 287 (C. C. A. 8, 1906), rev'g 140 Fed. 456 (C. C. Nebr. 1905).

[16] Rules promulgated September 16, 1904, sustained in United States v. Thurston County, supra, fn. 15. See Chapter 13, sec. 4.

[17] 36 Okla. 459, 129 Pac. 60 (1912).

[18] Appropriation Act of March 1, 1907, 34 Stat. 1015, 1018, 25 U. S. C. 405. See Chapter 11.

[19] 34 Stat. 1015, 1034.

strictions on allotments held by adult mixed bloods. In United States v. Park Land Co.,[20] the court construes this amendment to remove from federal control the sale of lands in the White Earth Reservation and the proceeds derived therefrom by the adult mixed-blood Indian, no matter how it has come to him. As for an adult full blood, the act provides that the Secretary of the Interior may remove the restrictions upon the sale of his allotment if satisfied that that Indian is competent to handle his own affairs. Till then, Congress retains control over the land and the proceeds therefrom.

Section 1 of the Act of May 29, 1908,[21] which expressly excludes from its scope lands in Oklahoma, Minnesota, and South Dakota, permits the sale of allotments on petition of the allottee, his heir, or duly authorized representative,

> Provided, That the proceeds derived from all sales hereunder shall be used, during the trust period, for the benefit of the allottee, or heir, so disposing of his interest, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: * * *

Sections 1[22] and 4[23] of the Act of June 25, 1910,[24] provide generally for the control of the proceeds from the sale or lease of the Indian's restricted lands. Section 8 of the act allows the sale of timber on trust allotments with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior and the distribution of the proceeds to the allottee or disposal for his benefit under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.[25]

The imposition of a trust over Indian funds may be effectuated by treaty as well as by statute. In the treaty concluded September 30, 1854,[26] between the United States and certain Chippewa Indians, a system of allotting tribal lands was established. Article 3 of the treaty provided that the President was to assign the allotments and that he might issue patents "with such restrictions of the power of alienation as he might see fit to impose." In the exercise of this power, he may include in the patent a restriction against alienation without his consent. In the case of Starr v. Campbell,[27] it is held that this restriction extends to the timber on the land and therefore the President could regulate the distribution of the proceeds from the sale of the timber.[28]

On the other hand, Congress may permit the leasing of allotted lands, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, but specifically providing that the allottees "* * * shall have full control of the same, including the proceeds thereof * * *."[29]

A perusal of the acts cited indicates a general intent of Congress to retain, for a time, governmental control of the proceeds from the disposition of restricted allotted lands and to leave to the discretion of administrative officials the time and manner in which such funds are to be distributed or expended, subject to the qualification that the funds be used for the benefit of the Indian.

---

[20] 188 Fed. 383 (C. C. Minn. 1911). In United States v. First National Bank, 234 U. S. 245 (1914), aff'g 208 Fed. 988 (C. C. A. 8, 1913), a case involving an attempt by the United States to set aside a conveyance of land by an Indian having less than one-eighth white blood, the Supreme Court held that any identifiable amount of white blood brought an Indian within the scope of the provision of the Act of March 1, 1907, removing restrictions upon the allotments of mixed-blood Indians.

[21] 35 Stat. 444, 25 U. S. C. 404.

[22] * * * All sales of lands allotted to Indians * * * shall be made under such rules and regulations * * * as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe * * * Provided, That the proceeds of the sale of inherited lands shall be paid to such heir or heirs as may be competent and held in trust subject to use and expenditure during the trust period for such heir or heirs as may be incompetent, as their respective interests shall appear * * *.

The section permits the deposit of Indian funds held by federal disbursing agents in banks. This provision is not affected by the Act of March 3, 1928, 45 Stat. 161, amending sec. 1. See 25 U. S. C. 372.

[23] Sec. 4 provides for the leasing of allotted lands for a period not to exceed 5 years, subject to and in conformity with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and the proceeds of any such lease shall be paid to the allottee or his heirs, or expended for his or their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. See 25 U. S. C. 403.

[24] 36 Stat. 855. This act applies to proceeds derived from the sale of lands held in trust as well as lands in which the power of alienation is restricted. United States v. Bowling, 256 U. S. 484 (1921), rev'g 261 Fed. 657 (D. C. E. D. N. Y. 1919).

[25] The Act of March 4, 1907, 34 Stat. 1413, provides also for the sale of merchantable timber on allotments on the Jicarilla Reservation and declares that the proceeds therefrom are to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for purposes beneficial to the indi-

In the Appropriation Act of May 18, 1916, 39 Stat. 123, Congress provided for the disposal of flowage rights on the allotments of Indians of the Lac Court Oreilles Tribe. The provision states that, > any allottee or the heirs of any deceased allottee, as a condition to giving his or their consent to the leasing or granting of flowage rights on their respective allotments, may determine, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, what consideration or rental shall be received for such flowage rights, and in what manner and for what purposes such consideration or rental shall be paid or expended; and the consideration or rental shall be paid or expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. (P. 158.)

Under the agreement concluded between the Columbia and Colville Indians and the United States on July 7, 1883, ratified by the Appropriation Act of July 4, 1884, 23 Stat. 76, 79–80, allotments of tribal lands are made, but no provision is made for the sale of allotments; hence no problem of rights in funds therefrom could arise. However, by the Act of March 4, 1911, 36 Stat. 1358, Congress authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell some of the land held in trust for certain named Indians and to conserve the funds for the benefit of the allottee or to invest or expend them for the individual's benefit in such manner as he might determine. The Act of May 20, 1924, c. 160, 43 Stat. 133, permits the disposition of patented lands by the Columbia or Colville allottee, or if he were deceased, the heirs might convey the land in accordance with the provisions of the Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855.

[26] 10 Stat. 1109.

[27] 208 U. S. 527 (1908).

[28] See Chapter 11, sec. 4B. Under the regulations approved by the President December 8, 1893, proceeds from the sale of timber from allotted lands, after the deduction of expenses, were to be deposited in some national bank, subject to the check of the allottee, countersigned by the Indian agent. In December 1902 the regulations were amended so that if the allottee were deemed incompetent to manage his own affairs, the agent had the authority, subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to fix the amounts the Indian could withdraw. For regulations regarding timber, see 25 C. F. R. 61.1–61.29.

[29] Osage Allotment Act of June 28, 1906, sec. 7, 34 Stat. 539, 545. For a discussion of this statute, see Chapter 23, sec. 12A.

SECTION 4. SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL PERSONAL PROPERTY—INDIVIDUALIZATION OF TRIBAL FUNDS

A second important source of individual funds is the individualization of tribal funds.[30] Since tribal funds generally represent the income from disposition of tribal lands, the Federal Government has commonly extended the restrictions on the land to the proceeds therefrom. By a further extension, Congress has frequently imposed, as conditions to the right of the individual to participate in tribal funds, certain restrictions affecting his use of the funds after they have become individualized.[31]

---

[30] The nature of tribal funds is discussed in Chapter 15; the right of the individual to share in tribal funds is discussed in Chapter 9. On administrative power over tribal funds, see Chapter 5, sec. 10, and over individual funds, see ibid., sec. 12. On regulations regarding moneys, tribal and individual, see 25 C. F. R. 221.1–233.7.

[31] See Chapter 9.

By the Act of March 2, 1907,[32] Congress provided generally for the distribution of tribal funds among individuals. Those Indians whom the Secretary of the Interior believed capable of managing their affairs could have placed to their credit upon the books of the United States Treasury their pro rata share of the tribal funds held in trust by the United States, and they could draw upon this credit without any further governmental control.[33] Section 2 of the act provided that the Secretary of the Interior might pay to disabled Indians their shares in tribal property, under such rules and conditions as he might prescribe. As later amended[34] this section authorizes the Secretary of the Interior upon application by an Indian "mentally or physically incapable of managing his or her own affairs," to withdraw the pro rata share of such Indian in the tribal funds, and to expend such sums on behalf of the Indian.

Section 28 of the Appropriation Act of May 25, 1918,[35] which specifically excluded from its scope the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes and the Osages, in Oklahoma, authorized the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw tribal funds from the Treasury of the United States and to credit recognized members of the tribe with equal shares. However, this authority was revoked by section 2 of the Act of June 24, 1938.[36] Nevertheless, the Indian may still apply for funds as his pro rata share in tribal assets, under the Act of 1907.[37] The granting of such applications is contrary to the general administrative policy of conserving tribal funds, but in special circumstances such pro rata distributions are still made. It has been held by the Interior Department that, under section 16 of the Act of June 18, 1934,[38] such applications must receive the approval of the tribal council, if the tribe in question is organized under that act.[39]

The individual may be awarded, by special statute, a specified sum from the tribal funds on deposit in the United States Treasury. A typical act is the Act of February 12, 1932,[40] providing for payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa of Minnesota from tribal funds, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

In the individualization of tribal funds, Congress has at various times laid down directions under which the Secretary of the Interior should expend the funds.

In the Act of March 3, 1933,[41] Congress provided for the distribution of tribal funds of the Ute Indians. The shares of all were to be deposited as individual Indian moneys[42] and subject to disbursement for the individual's benefit in the following ways: for improving lands, erecting homes, purchase of equipment, livestock, household goods and in other ways as will enable them to become self-supporting. The shares of the aged, infirm, and other incapacitated members were to be used for their support and maintenance. As for minors, their shares might be invested or spent in the same fashion as prescribed for adults, but when their funds were to be invested or expended, the consent of the parents and the approval of the Secretary of the Interior was necessary.[43]

Acts providing for the payment of judgments in favor of a tribe may limit the rights of the Indian in individualized tribal funds by the qualification that "the per-capita share due each member * * * be credited to the individual Indian money account of such member for expenditure in accordance with the individual Indian money regulations."[44] Various resolutions authorizing the distribution of judgments rendered in favor of Indian tribes provide for per capita payments to each enrolled member, such distribution to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.[45]

By virtue of these acts, Congress has given to the Secretary of the Interior authority over individual funds derived from the tribal property held in trust comparable to the authority over funds derived from the individual's restricted property.[46]

[32] 34 Stat. 1221, 25 U. S. C. 119.
[33] Op. Sol. I. D. M.25258, June 26, 1929.
[34] Amended by Act of May 18, 1916, 39 Stat. 123, 128, 25 U. S. C. 121.
[35] 40 Stat. 561, 591–592.
[36] 52 Stat. 1037.
[37] 34 Stat. 1221.
[38] Memo. Sol. I. D., September 21, 1939.
[39] 48 Stat. 984, 987, 25 U. S. C. 476.
[40] 47 Stat. 49. Acts of similar nature are cited in Chapter 9, sec. 6,
[41] 47 Stat. 1488.

[42] "Individual Indian moneys are funds, regardless of derivation, belonging to individual Indians which come into the custody of a disbursing agent." 25 C. F. R. 221.1. See sec. 8, infra, for a discussion of these regulations.
[43] Cf., Act of June 1, 1938, 52 Stat. 605, as amended by sec. 2(b), Act of August 7, 1939, Pub. No. 325, 76th Cong., 1st sess. (Klamath).
[44] Joint Resolution, June 20, 1936, 49 Stat. 1569, authorizing distribution of judgment in favor of Gros Ventre Indians among enrolled members.
[45] The Joint Resolution of June 20, 1936, 49 Stat. 1568, provides for a per capita payment of $85, and places the remainder of the fund awarded to the Blackfeet Tribe at the disposal of the tribal council and the Secretary of the Interior.

Under the Joint Resolution of April 29, 1930, 46 Stat. 260, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay a judgment in favor of the Iowa Tribe to members of the tribe in pro-rata shares. The competent members receive their entire shares in cash; the shares of the others, including minors, are deposited to the individual credit of each and subject to existing laws governing Indian moneys.

The right of the Chippewa allottee on the Lac du Flambeau Reservation to the proceeds derived from the sale of tribal timber is controlled by the Act of May 19, 1924, 43 Stat. 132. After providing for the sale under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, the act states that the net proceeds are to be distributed per capita. Those whom the Secretary shall deem competent to handle their own affairs shall receive their shares. As for the others, their shares are deposited to their individual credit and paid to them or used for their benefit under the Secretary's supervision.
[46] See Chapter 5, secs. 11 and 12.

SECTION 5. SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL PERSONAL PROPERTY—PAYMENTS FROM THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

A third source of individual personalty comprises the various forms of direct payment to individual Indians from the Federal Government. In this connection a distinction must be drawn between obligations assumed by the Federal Government towards the various tribes, by reason of the sale of tribal lands or otherwise, and obligations running directly to the members of the tribes. Problems arising out of the former situation are dealt with elsewhere.[47] For the present we are concerned only with the situations in which the Federal Government has undertaken to make payments, in money or goods, to individual Indians.

Gifts were sometimes made for the purpose of civilizing the Indians by giving them agricultural aids and clothes.[48] Gifts

[47] See Chapters 9 and 15.

[48] The Act of March 30, 1802, sec. 13, 2 Stat. 139, 143, provides in part:

> That in order to promote civilization among the friendly Indian tribes, and to secure the continuance of their friendship, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, to cause them to be furnished with useful domestic animals, and implements of husbandry, and with goods or money, as he shall judge proper * * *.

In the Appropriation Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 420, are numerous appropriations for agricultural pursuits. Miamies of Kansas are given were also justified simply on the ground that the Indian needed the bounty for subsistence.[49]

A. ANNUITIES[50]

Periodic payments of either money or goods are called "annuities." According to the terms of the instrument, an annuity may be a specific amount for a specified number of years,[51] or it may be a specified amount for life[52] or while the Indians are at peace.[53]

Frequently the individual recipients of annuities were the chiefs or others of the tribe who were influential in keeping the peace and in treaty making.[54] Treaties often provided that a sum of money or other gifts would be paid when a particular treaty went into effect.[55] At times the United States would promise to pay the salary of the chief annually[56] but the policy behind this was probably no different than that fostering the payment of annuities.

money for grain and seed for farming purposes (p. 432); money in aid of agricultural pursuits, to be given to Poncas (p. 436); River-Crows (p. 437). Appropriations for clothes are made to Bannocks (p. 440); to Shoshones (p. 440); Six Nations of New York (p. 441); Cheyennes and Arapahoes (p. 424); Crows (p. 429).

The Acts of April 30, 1888, sec. 17, 25 Stat. 94, 101, and of March 2, 1889, sec. 17, 25 Stat. 888, 895, dividing the Sioux lands, provide for the distribution of cattle and farming implements among the Sioux allottees.

[49] The Appropriation Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 420, makes an appropriation for subsistence to those Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico "who go and remain upon said reservations and refrain from hostilities, * * *" (p. 423); appropriation for the aged, sick, infirm and orphans among the Assiniboines (p. 424); the Blackfeet, Bloods, and Piegans (p. 424).

The Appropriation Act of June 25, 1864, 13 Stat. 161, provides for the subsistence of Indians who remain loyal to the United States, including members of the Five Civilized Tribes and affiliated tribes (pp. 180–181). The Appropriation Act of March 3, 1865, 13 Stat. 541, provides for the subsistence of a number of Chippewas of the Mississippi.

In the Treaty of August 9, 1814, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 120, the United States agreed to furnish members of the Creek Nation with the necessaries of life until they were able to take care of themselves to some extent.

[50] For regulations regarding annuity and other per capita payments, see 25 C. F. R. 224.1–224.5.

[51] By the Treaty of October 7, 1863, Art. 10, 13 Stat. 673, 675, with the Tabeguache Band of Utah Indians, each family receives a number of sheep and cattle annually for 5 years.

[52] Treaty of January 20, 1825, with Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 234; Treaty of September 26, 1833, with Chippewa, Ottowa, and Potawatamie Indians, 7 Stat. 431; Treaty of September 24, 1829, with Delaware Indians, 7 Stat. 327; Treaty of January 7, 1806, 7 Stat. 101, 102 (Cherokee chief receives $100 per year for life); Treaty of September 20, 1828, 7 Stat. 317, 318 (Potowatamie chief receives $100 per year in goods for life).

[53] Appropriation Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 420, 423 (supplies to those who refrain from fighting). Act ratifying agreement with Utes, April 29, 1874, 18 Stat. 36, 38.

[54] Art. V of the Treaty with the Chippewas, October 2, 1863, 13 Stat. 667, provides that the Chippewa chiefs may receive a house and annuity, to encourage peace and to encourage others to become orderly.

Treaty with the Chickasaw, October 19, 1818, 7 Stat. 192, 194. Because of their friendliness to the United States, the chiefs receive $150 in cash or in goods.

[55] Appropriation Act of July 2, 1836, 5 Stat. 73, 75.

[56] The Act of April 29, 1874, 18 Stat. 36, provides for the payment of salary to the head chief of the Ute Nation by the United States at the rate of $1,000 per year for the term of 10 years, or as long as he remains head chief and at peace with the United States.

The Act of December 15, 1874, 18 Stat. 291, provides for a salary of $500 per year by the United States for a term of 5 years. Accord: Treaty of June 11, 1855, 12 Stat. 957 (salary of Nez Perce chief to be paid); Treaty of June 25, 1855, 12 Stat. 963 (salary of chief of Oregon bands to be paid); Treaty of June 9, 1855, 12 Stat. 951 (salary to be paid to Yakama chief).

In order to induce Indians to settle upon homesteads[57] or accept allotments,[58] Congress generally provided that those Indians who accepted the benefits of homestead and allotment acts would not lose any rights in annuities and other personalty and that those Indians who did receive allotments would be assured of receiving compensation for damages occasioned by trespass of Indians who had not received allotments by payments from annuities due the trespassers.[59]

B. METHOD OF PAYMENT

While ordinarily the obligations of the United States under treaties and agreements with the Indian tribes were considered obligations owing to the tribes, even where the Federal Government assumed the task of paying over the promised sums per capita to the members of the tribe,[60] there have been cases in which the obligation of the United States ran directly to individual Indians.

In the treaty with the Shawnees on May 10, 1854,[61] the United States was to pay certain sums to these Indians. Section 8 of the treaty provides that competent Shawnees should receive their portions in seven annual payments and in money. As for those incompetent to manage their own affairs, the President was to dispose of their portion in a manner he believed to be for the best interests of them and of their families after consulting the Shawnee Council. The funds due the minor orphan children were to be appropriated by the President in a manner considered to be for their best interest.

The payments due the orphan children became a matter of litigation which reached the Supreme Court of the United States in 1894 in the case of United States v. Blackfeather.[62] The Court discusses the treaty of 1854 and finds that under it the President had determined that the orphans' funds should be paid to them in severalty. He committed some of the money to a United States Indian superintendent for distribution but said officer embezzled it. Another portion was paid to guardians of the orphans who were created by the Shawnee Council, but because of laches or dishonesty, this portion never reached the orphans. The Shawnee Tribe brought this action to collect this money from the Government. In its decision, the court holds that the tribe has no authority to sue for these moneys under a jurisdictional act authorizing suit for moneys claimed in tribal capacity. The Court also holds that the Government is not liable to the tribe for the portion paid to the guardians appointed by the tribal council, but intimates that the Government may have a moral obligation to reimburse the money embezzled by the Indian superintendent.[63]

Because of difficulties of the type that arose under the Shawnee treaty and described above, Congress in 1862 passed an act prohibiting the payment of money to any person appointed by any Indian council on behalf of incompetent or orphan Indians, and providing that said moneys shall remain in the United States Treasury at 6 percent interest until ordered to be paid by the Secretary of the Interior.[64]

[57] Appropriation Act of March 3, 1865, 13 Stat. 541, 562, sec. 4, relating to Stockbridge and Munsee Indians; Appropriation Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 402, 420, sec. 15 (general act).

[58] Act of March 3, 1843, 5 Stat. 645 (Stockbridge).

[59] Act of June 14, 1862, 12 Stat. 427 (general act).

[60] See Chapter 15, secs. 22–23.

[61] 10 Stat. 1053.

[62] 155 U. S. 180 (1894).

[63] In the Appropriation Act of July 7, 1884, 23 Stat. 236, 247, an appropriation was made for that purpose.

[64] Sec. 6, Act of July 5, 1862, 12 Stat. 512, 529–530, which is embodied in R. S. § 2108 and 25 U. S. C. 159.

SECTION 6. SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL PERSONAL PROPERTY—PAYMENTS OF DAMAGES

The Indian may receive funds because of being dispossessed from all or some of his lands. Acts or treaties which convey or reserve to the Indian tribe or to its members certain rights in land usually provide that the United States guarantees to them security and protection in the exercise of such rights.[65] The right of the individual to receive compensation for damages to his lands and property used in connection with it is derived in part from such provisions.

The loss of his land may be occasioned by the Government's taking.[66] A more frequent disposition of the Indian's land occurs when Congress grants rights-of-way across the land for railroad and similar purposes. Some treaties, such as the 1854 treaty with the Shawnees,[67] provide specifically for payment to Indians for any roads made through their lands. The acts granting such rights-of-way provide for payment of compensation for the taking of the land and for any damages done to his other property, such as chattels.[68] Although the property taken may have been restricted, nevertheless, it is a general policy of the acts to free from Government control the expenditure of the funds by making provision only for the supervision of payment to the Indians. The Act of May 6, 1910,[69] is a typical illustration. It provides that the railroad company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior the amount of the damages and compensation. The act continues: "that the damages and compensation paid to the Secretary of the Interior by the railway company taking any such land shall be paid by said Secretary to the allottee sustaining such damages."

Similarly, many acts or treaties providing for the removal of the Indian from the land of which he has possession stipulate that he is to receive money or other goods as payment for any improvements he made on the land or chattels he must leave behind.[70]

Related to moneys and other personal property given to Indians for property left behind are the gifts made to the individual Indians to aid them in their emigration from the lands ceded.[71]

[65] Treaty with Miamies, November 6, 1838, 7 Stat. 569, 571. See Chapter 15, sec. 10.

[66] The Act of April 28, 1924, c. 134, 43 Stat. 111, appropriates a sum of $85,000 for the benefit of dispossessed Nisqually Indians. Sec. 2 provides that the sum "shall be expended, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the said dispossessed families or individual Indians, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe."

[67] May 10, 1854, sec. 13, 10 Stat. 1053, 1058.

[68] See Chapter 15, secs. 1, 17.

[69] 36 Stat. 349.

[70] Treaty with Cherokees, July 8, 1817, 7 Stat. 156, 158, provides that the Cherokee emigrants are to be paid for loss of improvements by receiving rifles and other personal property; Treaty with Wyandots, etc., September 29, 1817, 7 Stat. 160, 166; Treaty with Chickasaws, October 19, 1818, 7 Stat. 192, 194; Treaty with Choctaws, October 18, 1820, 7 Stat. 210, 212–213; Treaty with Quapaws, November 15, 1824, 7 Stat. 232; Article 11, Treaty with Creeks, January 24, 1826, 7 Stat. 286, 288; Treaty with Cherokees, May 6, 1828, 7 Stat. 311, 313–314; Treaty with Senecas, February 28, 1831, 7 Stat. 348, 349; Treaty with Wyandots, etc., July 20, 1831, 7 Stat. 351, 352; Treaty with Ottaways, August 30, 1831, 7 Stat. 359, 360; Article 9, Treaty with Cherokees, December 29, 1835, 7 Stat. 478, 482; Treaty with New York Indians, January 15, 1838, 7 Stat. 550; Treaty with Menominees, October 18, 1848, 9 Stat. 952, 953; Treaty with Stockbridges and Munsees, February 5, 1856, 11 Stat. 663, 667; Treaty with Senecas, November 5, 1857, 11 Stat. 735, 737; Act of April 30, 1888, 25 Stat. 94, 103 (Sioux); Act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. 888, 897–898 (Sioux); Act of February 20, 1895, 28 Stat. 677 (Ute).

[71] Appropriation Act of July 29, 1848, sec. 4 (R. S. § 3689) and 5, 9 Stat. 252, 264–265 (Each Cherokee to receive a sum of money when he moves west); Joint Resolution, March 3, 1845, 6 Stat. 942 (Those Miamies moving west of the Mississippi receive tribal annuities); Treaty with Choctaws, September 27, 1830, Art. 20, 7 Stat. 333, 338 (Each emigrating Choctaw warrior receives rifle, etc.); Treaty with Cherokees, December 29, 1835, Art. 8, 7 Stat. 478, 482 (Money for moving expenses paid).

SECTION 7. FEDERAL PROTECTION OF INDIVIDUAL PERSONAL PROPERTY

Though the Indian enjoys the legal capacity to enforce his property rights in court, nevertheless his ability to do so has often been handicapped by unfamiliarity with legal processes and rules of law.[72] To aid the Indian in the protection of his rights and to supplement these rights, the Government has at various times sought to give additional protection to the individual Indian. The exent to which the United States may bring suit or intervene in litigation affecting Indian property[73] and the statutory responsibility of the United States attorneys in Indian litigation are discussed elsewhere.[74]

In various treaties and acts of Congress may be found provisions informing the Indian of his rights respecting depredations committed by whites and by other Indians, or provisions creating rights of damages therefrom.

Treaties may contain declaratory provisions stating the Indian's rights of property. Article 10 of the Treaty of November 6, 1838, with the Miamies[75] provides in part: "the United States shall protect the said tribe and the people thereof, in their rights and possessions, against injuries, encroachments, and oppressions of any person or persons, tribe or tribes whatsoever."

In the Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek[76] with the Choctaws, Article 12 protected the Indian's personalty. It provided in part:

> Private property to be always respected and on no occasion taken for public purposes without just compensation being made therefor to the rightful owner. * * * And if a white man unlawfully take or steal any thing from an Indian, the property shall be restored and the offender punished.

Similar provisions protecting the Indians' rights to their personalty are found in acts of Congress. As early as 1796 Congress indicated a policy to protect Indian property by the passage of the Indian Trade and Intercourse Act of May 19, 1796.[77] It provided that any white person who takes Indian property shall upon conviction of crime be sentenced (in addition to the usual sentence) to pay to the Indian to whom the property taken belongs, a sum twice the just value of such property. Furthermore, the United States Treasury is directed to pay the Indian the just value of stolen or destroyed property if compensation cannot be secured from the white criminal. This protection was continued by subsequent acts.[78]

[72] See Chapter 8, sec. 6.

[73] See Chapter 19, sec. 2A(1) and (3).

[74] See Chapter 12, sec. 8.

[75] 7 Stat. 569, 571.

[76] Entered into September 27, 1830, 7 Stat. 333, 335, proclaimed February 24, 1831.

[77] Sec. 4, 1 Stat. 469, 470.

[78] Act of March 3, 1799, sec. 4, 1 Stat. 743, 744–745; Act of January 17, 1800, sec. 4, 2 Stat. 6; Act of March 30, 1802, sec. 4, 2 Stat. 139, 141; Act of June 30, 1834, sec. 16, 4 Stat. 729, 731, R. S. § 2154, § 2155, 25 U. S. C. 227, 228.

Other treaties provide for reimbursement to the Indian for damages to his personalty. For example, Article 4 of the Treaty of 1832 with the Potawatamies [79] contains a schedule listing the names of various Indians whom the United States agrees to reimburse for horses stolen from them during a war between the United States and the Sacs and Foxes.[80]

In accordance with treaties and acts of this type, Congress has at various times caused to be paid to Indians sums for property taken from them.[81]

[79] Concluded October 20, 1832, proclaimed January 21, 1833, 7 Stat. 378, 379.

[80] For examples of other treaties containing provision of payment by the United States for damages sustained, see Treaty with Shawnees, May 10, 1854, Art. 11, 10 Stat. 1053, 1057; Treaty with Shawnees, etc., February 23, 1867, Art. 12, 15 Stat. 513, 516; Treaty with Kickapoos, June 28, 1862, Art. 9, 13 Stat. 623; Treaty with Tabeguache Band of Utah Indians, October 7, 1863, Art. 6, 13 Stat. 673; Treaty with Pawnee Marhar Tribe, June 22, 1818, Art. 6, 7 Stat. 175, 178; Treaty with Chippewas of the Mississippi, May 7, 1864, Art. 3, 13 Stat. 693.

[81] Act of March 15, 1832, 6 Stat. 480 (Cherokee paid for slaves taken by white man); Act of July 13, 1832, 4 Stat. 576 (Cherokee Indians paid for livestock taken by United States citizens); Act of June 30, 1834, 6 Stat. 592 (Creek to be paid for horse stolen by white men); Appropriation Act of September 30, 1850, 9 Stat. 544, 588 (Seminole reimbursed for money stolen by United States soldier); Appropriation Act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat. 774, 791 (Omaha chief paid for horses killed by white settlers); Appropriation Act of March 3, 1865, 13 Stat. 541, 560 (Chippewa chief paid for loss of house and furniture); Act of January 19, 1891, 26 Stat. 720 (Indians of Standing Rock and Cheyenne River agencies to be paid for ponies taken by United States); Appropriation Acts of December 22, 1927, 45 Stat. 2, 16, and of March 4, 1929, 45 Stat. 1550.

SECTION 8. EXPENDITURE AND INVESTMENT OF INDIVIDUAL INDIAN MONEYS

As may be noted in the statutes cited in this chapter, the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the disposition of individual Indian moneys are subject to the congressional requirement that the funds shall be used for the use and benefit of the Indian. The Secretary may not make gifts or donations on behalf of the Indian; nor create private trusts to which he might transfer the supervision and control that was intrusted to him.[82] Nevertheless, the meaning of the term "for the use and benefit of the Indian" is relative, and in absence of a showing of fraud or a lack of understanding as to what might be within the purview of this phrase, the court will not set aside the act and judgment of the Secretary of the Interior.[83]

It has been held by the Solicitor for the Interior Department that the money is not spent for the use and benefit of the Indian when the Secretary of the Interior deducts from the royalties accruing to respective allottees from mining leases money to pay for the upkeep of the local Indian agency. For by his so doing the allottees who have royalties accruing pay for an object of general welfare, while other Indians who benefit from the maintenance of an agency but who have no such royalties accruing to them pay nothing.[84]

Large amounts of individual moneys are under the control of the Secretary of the Interior.[85]

The regulations provide that withdrawal of money from the Indian's account shall be made by check, upon the application of the disbursing agent, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.[86] Minors and adults may receive monthly allowances not to exceed $50 per month; specific authority from the Secretary of the Interior must be obtained for payment of larger amounts.[87] Another regulation provides that the disbursing agents, in their discretion, may turn over to any Indian who has received a patent in fee of his allotted land any individual funds then on deposit to his credit or which in the future accrue to his credit.[88]

Among the regulations are found several which provide that certain payments of money may be made to the Indian for his unrestricted use.[89] The purpose of this is stated to be the encouragement of personal responsibility, self-reliance, and business experience which will enable the Indian to become an independent and progressive member of the community.[90]

The regulations authorize the expenditure of money for educational and agricultural purposes.[91] Further regulations provide that disbursing agents may pay necessary medical and funeral expenses, within specified maximum limits.[92] Administrative practice permits the superintendent to apply restricted funds of an Indian toward the support of an illegitimate child of such Indian.[93]

"Debts of Indians will not be paid from funds under the control of the United States * * * unless previously authorized by the Superintendent, except in emergency cases necessitating medical treatment or in the payment of last illness or funeral expenses * * * and any other exceptional cases where specific authority is granted by the Indian Office." [94]

The regulations provide that when personal property, such as wagons, horses, farm implements, etc., is purchased for an Indian, singly or in the aggregate value of $50 or more, the superintendent shall take a bill of sale therefor in his name as vendee, expressly in trust for the Indian.[95]

In the case of United States v. O'Gorman,[96] under a regulation such as the above, the superintendent of the Winnebago Agency bought several horses with the trust money held by him for an incompetent Indian. The bill of sale, which was promptly recorded, recited that the horses were bought with trust funds and that the sale was made to the superintendent. The Indian was permitted to have the use of the team of horses and hired the defendant to care for it. When he failed to receive payment for his services, the defendant asserted a claim of lien against the team. The court held that as trustee, the United States could maintain an action of replevin to recover the team from the possession of the defendant.[97]

[82] See Chapter 5, secs. 5D and 12.

[83] United States v. McGugin, 28 F. 2d 76 (D. C. Kans. 1928), and United States v. Mott, 37 F. 2d 860 (C. C. A. 10, 1930), cert. granted 281 U. S. 714 (1930), aff'd sub nom. Mott v. United States, 283 U. S. 747 (1931), indicate how different courts can disagree as to whether an act of the Secretary of the Interior was in fact for the use and benefit of the Indian.

[84] Op. Sol. I. D., M.23117, October 6, 1927.

[85] The statement of the Indian Office shows that as of June 30, 1939, it had in its control the sum of $53,200,000 belonging to individual Indians.

[86] 25 C. F. R. 221.2.

[87] Ibid., 221.4.

[88] Ibid., 221.6.

[89] Ibid., 221.5, 221.6, 221.18.

[90] Ibid., 221.5.

[91] Ibid., 221.10–221.14.

[92] Ibid., 221.8, 221.17.

[93] Memo. Sol. I. D., September 8, 1938.

[94] 25 C. F. R. 221.20.

[95] Ibid., 221.27.

[96] 287 Fed. 135 (C. C. A. 8, 1923).

[97] In accord, Cochran v. United States, 276 Fed. 701 (C. C. A. 8, 1921). For a fuller discussion of the rights of the United States with respect to trust property, see Chapter 5. On the protection from State taxation of property, purchased with restricted funds, see United States v. Hughes, 6 F. Supp. 972 (D. C. N. D. Okla. 1934); and see Chapter 13,

SECTION 9. DEPOSITS OF INDIVIDUAL INDIAN MONEYS

Ordinarily, restricted Indian funds are held in the custody of a Government official. Several statutes, however, authorize the deposit of such funds under prescribed conditions.

Section 1 of the Act of June 25, 1910,[98] provided that any "Indian agent, superintendent or other disbursing agent of the Indian Service" might "deposit Indian moneys, individual or tribal, coming into his hands as custodian, in such bank or banks as he may select," subject to certain bond requirements.

The Appropriation Act of May 25, 1918,[99] provided for the segregation of tribal funds to the credit of the individual member. The funds so segregated were to be deposited to the individual's credit in any bank selected by the Secretary of the Interior, in the state or states in which the tribe is located. The act contained general legislation in the form of a proviso:

> That no * * * individual Indian money shall be deposited in any bank until the bank shall have agreed to pay interest thereon at a reasonable rate and shall have furnished an acceptable bond or collateral security therefor, and United States bonds may be furnished as collateral security for * * * individual funds so deposited, in lieu of surety bonds: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior * * * may invest the trust funds of any * * * individual Indian in United States Government bonds: * * *

The Act of June 24, 1938,[100] superseding section 2 of the Act of June 25, 1910, and section 28 of the Appropriation Act of May 25, 1918,[101] provides that the Secretary of the Interior may deposit individual trust moneys in banks selected by him, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, provided that the bank agrees to pay a reasonable rate of interest thereon and to furnish security of a specified type. The Secretary of the Interior may waive interest on demand deposits. The act also permits the Secretary, if he deems it for the best interest of the Indian, to invest the Indian moneys in any federal public-debt obligations and in any other obligations which are unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States.[102]

In practice, the deposit of individual Indian moneys is made in the name of the United States; the disbursing agent keeps account of the amounts due the various individuals; the bank in which the funds are deposited has no account with the various individuals on whose behalf the funds were deposited.

Though these funds are deposited by the United States in its representative capacity, yet in case the bank fails, such deposits, being debts due to the United States, are entitled to priority under R. S. Sec. 3466. In the case of Bramwell v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co.,[103] the court under R. S. Sec. 3466, giving the United States priority in payment of claims against an insolvent estate, granted priority to deposits of Indian moneys, individual and tribal, made by the superintendent of the Klamath Reservation.

In enforcing the terms laid down by Congress for the deposit of Indian funds, the Department of the Interior issued regulations governing deposits. Under regulations approved March 5, 1938,[104] a bank seeking to qualify as a depository must file an application showing its financial condition, the amounts of money it will accept, the rate of interest that will be paid and the type of security that will be furnished. The regulations provide for deposits in the name of the disbursing agent and interest is payable semiannually. Monthly statements of receipts and checks on the Indian money account and other statements of information shall be furnished when required. Definite provisions as to the type of security, such as bonds of corporations, individuals, or of the United States are made.

[98] Sec. 1, 36 Stat. 855, 856, amended in other respects by Act of February 14, 1913, 37 Stat. 678, 25 U. S. C. 373. This provision was unchanged by the Act of March 3, 1928, 45 Stat. 161, and the Act of April 30, 1934, 48 Stat. 647, 25 U. S. C. 372, amending the Act of 1910, but was superseded by the Act of June 24, 1938, discussed below.

[99] 40 Stat. 561, 591, 25 U. S. C. 162.

[100] 52 Stat. 1037, 25 U. S. C. 162a.

[101] Sec. 28, 40 Stat. 561, 591, 25 U. S. C. 162.

[102] The authority to waive interest on demand deposits included in the 1938 act was occasioned by the passage of the Banking Act of August 23, 1935, 49 Stat. 684, 714, 715. The Act of May 25, 1918, had limited the class of eligible depositories of Indian funds to those paying reasonable interest. But under the 1935 act, as interpreted by the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior (Op. Sol. I. D., M.28231, March 12, 1936), banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System or of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation are prohibited from paying any interest on demand deposits and all statutory requirements inconsistent with this prohibition are repealed. Following a parallel opinion of the Attorney General in the case of postal savings funds, the Solicitor of the Interior Department held that deposits might be made without interest in banks prohibited, under the 1935 Banking Act, from paying interest.

[103] 269 U. S. 483 (1926), aff'g 299 Fed. 705 (C. C. A. 9, 1924), aff'g 295 Fed. 331. See also United States v. Barnett, 7 F. Supp. 573 (D. C. N. D. Okla. 1934). Cf. United States v. Johnson, 11 F. Supp. 897 (D. C. N. D. Okla. 1935), aff'd 87 F. 2d 155 (C. C. A. 10, 1936) (holding United States not entitled to priority in debt of bank to guardian to whom funds had been unlawfully paid). On rights of creditors of Indians, see Chapter 8, sec. 7C.

[104] Regulations of March 2, 1938, Department of the Interior, Office of Indian Affairs; 25 C. F. R. 230.1–230.18.

SECTION 10. BEQUEST, DESCENT, AND DISTRIBUTION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

A. IN THE ABSENCE OF FEDERAL LEGISLATION

In the absence of federal legislation, the bequest, descent, and distribution of the Indian's personalty is subject to tribal rule and custom.[105]

Because the inheritance of allotted lands is governed on substantive questions by state law,[106] the Indians of allotted reservations have, in some cases, adopted the state law as their own with respect to the descent of personalty, thus achieving the advantage of having a single body of law determine the descent of real and personal property.[107] A typical body of rules governing descent and distribution of unrestricted personalty is that set forth in the Code of Ordinances of the Gila River Pima-Maricopa [105] See Chapter 7, sec. 6. Cf. Trujillo v. Prince, 42 N. M. 337, 78 P. 2d 145 (1938), holding that the state court has power to appoint an administrator for a deceased tribal Indian to enforce a right of action created by a state wrongful death statute.

[106] See Chapter 11, sec. 6.

[107] Swinomish Law and Order Code, chap. 3, sec. 5 (adopted March 15, 1938, approved March 24, 1938); Pine Ridge Tribal Court and Code of Offenses, chap. 4, sec. 1 (adopted February 20, 1937, approved March 2, 1937); Cheyenne River Code, chap. 3, sec. 2 (adopted October 6, 1938, approved October 8, 1938). The Blackfeet Code of Law and Order (May 6, 1937) provides that the tribal court shall apply its own law if proved; otherwise, the state law is to be used. Similar provisions are to be found in the Flathead Code (adopted December 22, 1936, approved December 24, 1936), and the Makah Tribal Court and Code of Offenses (adopted February 15, 1938, approved February 28, 1938). And cf. Gray v. Coffman, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5, 714 (C. C. Kans. 1874), where the court points out that the Wyandot probate laws have been copied from the laws of Ohio with certain modifications, such as a provision that only living children should inherit.

Indian Community, adopted June 3, 1936, approved August 24, 1936. The governing ordinance [108] provides that after the payment of the debts and funeral expenses, the remainder passes to the surviving spouse. If no spouse survives, then the property descends to the children or grandchildren of the deceased. If none of these exist, then the property goes to the parents or parent of the deceased. And if no parents survive, the nearest relatives take. The code provides that if there is more than one heir, the heirs are to meet and decide among themselves what share each shall take and file their decision with the tribal court. If these heirs cannot agree, upon petition by any one of them, the tribal court will pass upon the distribution.

B. UNDER FEDERAL ACTS [109]

By virtue of its power over Indian property,[110] Congress may provide for a system of bequest, descent, and distribution of an Indian's personalty.

1. Descent.—Congress has never enacted general legislation [111] governing the descent of an Indian's personal property, and this is a matter, therefore, that remains generally subject to tribal jurisdiction.[112] Congress has provided, however, that upon the death, intestate, of "any Indian to whom an allotment of land has been made * * * before the expiration of the trust period and before the issuance of a fee simple patent," the Secretary of the Interior shall determine the heirs of the allottee and his decision shall be final.[113] Although this statute is directed primarily to the problem of the inheritance of allotments, and is discussed in more detail in connection with that subject,[114] the Interior Department has construed the power to determine heirs in the cases specified, as a power to determine heirs for all purposes.[115] Thus, in determining the heirs of an allottee, the Secretary of the Interior actually rules on the descent of personal property in the decedent's estate. This practice probably has the force of law, with respect to the estates of allottees, and it may be argued that an established course of administrative construction has extended the power of the Department to persons who are not within the language of the statute because they are not Indians "to whom an allotment of land has been made."

The regulations of the Interior Department refer to "an Indian of any allotted reservation," [116] which obviously defines a broader class than the class defined by the statute, since there are many Indians on allotted reservations who were born too late to receive allotments. The regulations of the Interior Department do not provide for departmental distribution of estates on unallotted reservations, although this practice is occasionally resorted to with the consent of all parties in interest where tribal judicial agencies are unavailable.

Under the Law and Order Regulations of the Indian Service, the Court of Indian Offenses determines heirship with respect to "property other than an allotment or other trust property subject to the jurisdiction of the United States." [117]

Tribal courts of organized tribes sometimes exercise like jurisdiction over all personal property.[118]

In some cases, tribal councils have requested the Interior Department to handle estates involving personal property, and the Department has done so.

The question of what law applies to an estate of personal property should be distinguished from the question of what agency shall administer the estate. The Secretary of the Interior may apply tribal custom and the tribal councils may apply state law. As a matter of practice, the examiners of inheritance, acting for the Interior Department and applying state law to the determination of the inheritance of real property, commonly apply the same rules to the inheritance of personal property. Where, however, the record shows a discrepancy between tribal custom and state law, a determination by an inheritance examiner of the descent of the personal estate of an unallotted Indian in accordance with state law and in violation of tribal custom has been held illegal. In Estate of Yellow Hair, Unallotted Navajo,[119] the Solicitor for the Interior Department disapproved such a determination, declaring:

> I believe that this conclusion is unjustified either as a matter of strict law or as a matter of policy. On the legal question I call your attention to the following paragraphs in the opinion of this Department, approved October 25, 1934, on "Powers of Indian Tribes" (M–27781). [See 55 I. D. 14]:
>
> > * * * With respect to all property other than allotments of land made under the General Allotment Act, the inheritance laws and customs of the Indian tribe are still of supreme authority.
>
> On the policy question involved I can see no necessity for departmental regulation of inheritance of personal property of Navajo Indians. The recently promulgated departmental regulations relating to the determination of heirs and the approval of wills specifically restrict departmental supervision over the inheritance of personal property to reservations which have been allotted. (Sections 13 and 22.) Likewise, the recently approved law and order regulations provide that Indian judges shall apply tribal custom in the distribution of personal property.
>
> I therefore recommend that instead of returning this case for the purpose of redistributing in accordance with Arizona law the personal property which has been distributed in accordance with tribal custom, it should be returned so that the entire estate may be distributed in accordance with tribal custom. The Examiner of Inheritance should take testimony as to such customs of inheritance, in their application to the facts of this case, and submit a revised order determining heirs for departmental approval.

2. Bequest.—The power to bequeath personalty is specifically granted by Act of February 14, 1913,[120] amending the Act of June 25, 1910.[121] It provides that any person of the age of 21 years or over may dispose of his interest in any restricted allotment, trust moneys, or other property held in trust by the United States before expiration of the restrictive period, by will in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. To be valid, the will must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The act provides further:

> That the Secretary of the Interior may approve or disapprove the will either before or after the death of the testator, and in case where a will has been approved and it is subsequently discovered that there has been fraud in [108] Chapter 4, sec. 7.

[109] This discussion excludes the Five Civilized Tribes and Osages. For a discussion of descent and related problems affecting them, see Chapter 23, secs. 9, 12D.

[110] See Chapter 5, sec. 5.

[111] The Act of January 19, 1891, 26 Stat. 720, provides for the payment to individual Indians of the Standing Rock and Cheyenne River agencies for ponies they were deprived of and states that "if any Indian entitled to such compensation shall have deceased the sum to which such Indian would be entitled shall be paid to his heirs at law, according to the laws of the State of Dakota * * *."

[112] See Chapter 7, sec. 6.

[113] Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 1, 36 Stat. 855, 25 U. S. C. 372.

[114] See Chapter 11, sec. 6.

[115] 25 C. F. R. 81.13, 81.23. Regulations governing Determination of Heirs and Approval of Wills of Indians, approved May 31, 1935, secs. 13, 22, 55 I. D. 263, 266, 268. This rule does not bind organized tribes.

[116] See fn. 115, supra.

[117] 25 C. F. R. 161.31; 55 I. D. 401, 407 (1935).

[118] See Chapter 7, sec. 6.

[119] 55 I. D. 426, 427–429 (1935). Also see Chapter 7, sec. 6.

[120] Sec. 2, 37 Stat. 678, 679, 25 U. S. C. 373.

[121] 36 Stat. 855.

> connection with the execution or procurement of the will the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized * * * to cancel the approval of the will, and the property of the testator shall thereupon descend or be distributed in accordance with the laws of the State wherein the property is located:[122] * * *.

In the case of Blanset v. Cardin,[123] the Supreme Court held that a will by a Quapaw allottee disposing of her moneys derived from her restricted lands and which were held in trust by the United States is governed by the 1913 act. The Court held inapplicable a statute of the State of Oklahoma regulating the portion of an estate that may be transferred by will, stating that the will is valid if approved by the Secretary of the Interior and executed in accordance with his regulations.

[122] The act provides also that the death of testator and the approval of the will does not terminate the trust, and that the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion regulate the distribution and expenditure of the money belonging to the legatee.

[123] 256 U. S. 319 (1921), aff'g 261 Fed. 309 (C. C. A. 8, 1919). This case is also discussed in Chapter 5, sec. 11C(2), Chapter 6, sec. 2A and Chapter 11, sec. 6B. See also Blundell v. Wallace, 267 U. S. 373 (1925).

The right of the Indian to bequeath his shares in a tribal corporation organized under the Wheeler-Howard Act[124] is limited to the extent that he can give them only to his heirs, to tribal members, or to the tribal corporation.[125]

Since the statute governing the bequest of restricted personalty does not apply to unrestricted personalty, the tribal law on testamentary disposition of unrestricted personalty is supreme.[126] Even though the bequest of restricted personalty be subject to the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, nevertheless such rules and regulations[127] implicitly authorize approval of wills made in accord with tribal customs or tribal laws regarding testamentary disposition where there has been no compliance with state law.[128]

[124] Act of June 18, 1934, sec. 4, 48 Stat. 984, 985, 25 U. S. C. 464.

[125] 55 I. D. 263, 279 (1935).

[126] Estate of Yellow Hair, Unallotted Navajo, 55 I. D. 426 (1935).

[127] The rules and regulations prescribed by the Department of the Interior for the execution of wills, as approved May 31, 1935, may be found in 55 I. D. 263, 275–280.

[128] 55 I. D. 14, 42 (1934). See also Estate of Yellow Hair, Unallotted Navajo, 55 I. D. 426 (1935).

SECTION 11. INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS IN PERSONALTY—CROPS

Early in its dealings with the Indians, the government sought, by granting them agricultural aids, to encourage them in peaceful pursuits, that would provide a means of subsistence.[129]

As has been observed elsewhere in this chapter, when the Indian was compelled to vacate his land, provision was made for his reimbursement for the property he could not take with him, including crops.[130] Where possible, the Indian may have been permitted to remain on the land until he harvested his growing crops.[131]

Problems arising today concern chiefly the Indian's rights to dispose of all or some of his interest in his crops grown on restricted lands.

The law is not settled as to whether an Indian may without departmental approval, sell or mortgage[132] crops grown on restricted lands, but severed therefrom. A memorandum of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior[133] presents the arguments on either side. On the one hand, it may be contended that even though severed from the restricted land, the crops are trust property while situated on the land. For as long as they remain there, the mortgagee cannot enter upon the land without the Government's consent. The contrary argument is that the sale or mortgage of severed crops does not come within the restrictions of the Indian's privilege to contract[134] nor does it affect the realty since severed crops are not part of the land; that there are no restrictions on the Indian's disposing of his crop as best he can.

To secure a loan from a tribal corporation under the Wheeler-Howard Act,[135] an Indian may mortgage his crops to the corporation,[136] since he might convey the land itself to the corporation.[137]

[129] United States v. Gray, 201 Fed. 291, 293 (C. C. A. 8, 1912).

[130] See sec. 6, supra.

[131] Treaty with Cherokees, February 27, 1819, 7 Stat. 195, 197.

[132] As for the sale or mortgage of the crops before severance, the case of United States v. First Nat. Bank, 282 Fed. 330 (D. C. E. D. Wash. 1922), holds that the United States may enjoin the foreclosure sale of mortgaged crops, the mortgage having been made on growing crops and crops to be grown during that year. Memo. Sol. I. D., March 25, 1936.

[133] Dated January 5, 1938.

[134] For restrictions on the power to contract, see Chapter 8, sec. 7.

[135] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461, et seq.

[136] Memo. Asst. Sec'y I. D., August 17, 1938. This memorandum discusses an opinion of the Attorney General of North Dakota, which holds that the 1932 Crop Mortgage Act of North Dakota, which declares void mortgages on growing and unharvested crops does not apply to such mortgages given by Indians to Indian corporations. The opinion holds that the proviso in the amendment of 1933 excepting from the scope of the 1932 act "any mortgage or lien in favor of the United States * * * or any department or agency of either thereof" excepts such tribal corporation as a federal instrumentality.

[137] Memo. Sol. I. D., March 25, 1936.

SECTION 12. INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS IN PERSONALTY—LIVESTOCK

To induce Indians to adopt agricultural pursuits, treaties with Indians frequently contained a promise by the United States that it would furnish livestock to them.[138] When these promises were fulfilled, the livestock remained the property of the United States, the Indian having the right to possession and use.[139] Livestock was also purchased by the United States for the Indian, with his own money.[140]

In the Appropriation Act of July 4, 1884,[141] Congress prohibited the sale of any cattle or their increase, in possession or control of an Indian, which were purchased by the Government, to any person not belonging to the tribe to which said Indian belonged or to any citizen of the United States, except with the written consent of the agent of the tribe to which said Indian belonged. In the case of United States v. Anderson,[142] the Court held that this act applied to cattle purchased by the Government even with the Indian's funds. It has also been held that the Act of 1884 is not limited in application to cattle in possession of Indians [138] E. g., Treaty with the Sioux, April 29, 1868, Art. 10, 15 Stat. 635, 639.

[139] See United States v. Anderson, 228 U. S. 52 (1913), rev'g 189 Fed. 262 (D. C. Ore. 1911).

[140] United States v. Anderson, 228 U. S. 52 (1913), rev'g 189 Fed. 262 (D. C. Ore. 1911).

[141] 23 Stat. 76, 94, 25 U. S. C. 195.

[142] 228 U. S. 52 (1913), rev'g 189 Fed. 262 (D. C. Ore. 1911).

at the time of its enactment.[143] Since a sale cannot be made without the written consent of the agent, a mortgage on the cattle without such consent has been held void.[144]

However, a sale or other disposition of the livestock to nonmembers of the tribe, even with the consent of the agent, may be made illegal, as where the statute making the appropriation specifically states that no sales to such outsiders shall be made.[145]

The Appropriation Act of June 30, 1919,[146] also restricted the disposition of livestock purchased or issued by the United States and any increase. It provided that such animals could not be sold, mortgaged, or otherwise disposed of, except with the written consent of the federal officer in charge of the tribe; any transaction in violation of the statute would be void. It was further provided that all such stock was to be branded with the initials I. D. (referring to Interior Department) or with the reservation brand and could not be removed from the Indian country without the consent of the federal officer or by order of the Secretary of War in connection with troop movements.

An additional act affecting an Indian's interest in his livestock is the Appropriation Act of March 3, 1865,[147] which permits an Indian agent to sell livestock belonging to Indians which is not needed for subsistence. The sale is to be under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and the proceeds used for the benefit of the Indian.

In accordance with the federal policy of encouraging Indians in peaceful agricultural pursuits and of providing them with a means of livelihood and subsistence, the Secretary of the Interior has provided for certain preferential rights to Indians in the acquisition of grazing permits on Indian lands for his livestock.[148]

On reservations where sufficient tribal land is available, free grazing privileges may be granted to Indians by the tribal authorities, as an encouragement for the breeding and raising of livestock.[149]

The Indian is protected in his care of livestock by regulations seeking to prevent the spread of contagious diseases among stock on Indian lands.[150]

---

[143] Rider v. La Clair, 77 Wash. 488, 138 Pac. 3 (1914).

[144] Ibid.

[145] Appropriation Act of March 2, 1889, sec. 17, 25 Stat. 888, 894 making provision for distribution of livestock among Sioux. Effect of this act upon Act of 1884 is discussed in Fisher v. United States, 226 Fed. 156 (C. C. A. 8, 1915).

[146] Sec. 1, 41 Stat. 3, 9, 25 U. S. C. 163.

[147] Sec. 9, 13 Stat. 541, 563, R. S. § 2127, 25 U. S. C. 192. See Chapter 4, sec. 9.

[148] 25 C. F. R. 71.11, 71.13, 72.8.

[149] Ibid., 71.9.

[150] Ibid., 71.22, 72.10.

CHAPTER 11

INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS IN REAL PROPERTY

TABLE OF CONTENTS

The process of allotment shifted the rights of individual Indians in real property from the rights of participation in tribal property, already discussed,[1] to rights of ownership in individual tracts.

[1] See Chapter 9. Also see Chapter 2, secs. 2B, 2C, 2D.

SECTION 1. BACKGROUND OF THE ALLOTMENT SYSTEM

The background, the inception, and the operation of this system are set forth with a wealth of detail in J. P. Kinney's study, A Continent Lost—A Civilization Won (1937) and, more briefly, in a "History of the Allotment Policy" by D. S. Otis, which, presented in hearings[2] leading to the enactment of the Act of June 18, 1934,[3] provided the chief factual basis for the termination of the allotment system by that act.

A. EARLY DEVELOPMENT OF THE ALLOTMENT SYSTEM

The origins of the allotment system, as of every other important legal institution in the field of Indian affairs, are to be found in Indian treaties. As early as 1798 tribal lands were allotted to individuals or families.[4] Allotment was then, as it has been generally ever since, an incident in the transfer of Indian lands to white ownership. Chiefs and councils might cede vast areas over which a tribe claimed ownership, but when it came to ceding a plot of land which some member of the tribe had improved and on which he lived, a different situation was presented. In this situation many treaties provided that there should be "reserved" from the cession tracts of land for the use, or occupancy, or ownership, of designated individuals or families.[5] These early allotments were commonly known as reservations. Various forms of tenure were imposed upon these reservations. In some cases lands were held in trust for the individual.[6] In other cases the Indian acquired title either

[2] Hearings, Committee on Ind. Aff., 73d Cong., 2d sess., on H. R. 7902, 1934, pt. 9, pp. 428 et. seq.

[3] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461 et seq.

[4] Treaty of June 1, 1798, with the Oneida Nation, unpublished treaty, Archives No. 28.

[5] Treaty of September 20, 1816, with the Chickasaw Nation, 7 Stat. 150; Treaty of July 8, 1817, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 156; Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandot, Seneca, and other tribes, 7 Stat. 160; Treaty of October 2, 1818, with the Potawatamie Nation, 7 Stat. 185; Treaty of October 2, 1818, with the Wea Tribe, 7 Stat. 186; Treaty of October 3, 1818, with the Delaware Nation, 7 Stat. 188; Treaty of October 6, 1818, with the Miame Nation, 7 Stat. 189; Treaty of February 27, 1819, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 195; Treaty of August 29, 1821, with the Ottawa, Chippewa, and Pottawatamie Nations, 7 Stat. 218; Treaty of June 2, 1825, with the Great and Little Osage Tribes, 7 Stat. 240 (reservations for "half-breeds"); Treaty of June 3, 1825, with the Kansas Nation, 7 Stat. 244 (reservations for "half-breeds"); Treaty of October 16, 1826, with the Potawatamie Tribe, 7 Stat. 295; Treaty of October 23, 1826, with the Miami Tribe, 7 Stat. 300; Treaty of July 29, 1829, with the United Nations of Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatamie Indians, 7 Stat. 320; Treaty of August 1, 1829, with the Winnebaygo Nation, 7 Stat. 323; Treaty of September 27, 1830, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 333; Treaty of August 30, 1831, with the Ottoway Indians, 7 Stat. 359; Treaty of March 24, 1832, with the Creek Tribe, 7 Stat. 366; Treaty of September 15, 1832, with the Winnebago Nation, 7 Stat. 370; Treaty of October 20, 1832, with the Potawatamie Tribe, 7 Stat. 378; Treaty of October 20, 1832, with the Chickasaw Nation, 7 Stat. 381; Treaty of October 27, 1832, with the Potowatomies, 7 Stat. 399; Treaty of October 27, 1832, with the Kaskaskia Tribe, 7 Stat. 403; Treaty of February 18, 1833, with the Ottawas, 7 Stat. 420; Treaty of September 26, 1833, with the United Nation of Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatamie Indians, 7 Stat. 431; Treaty of May 24, 1834, with the Chickasaw Nation, 7 Stat. 450; Treaty of October 23, 1834, with the Miami Tribe, 7 Stat. 458; Treaty of December 29, 1835, with the Cherokee Tribe, 7 Stat. 478; Treaty of April 23, 1836, with the Wyandot Tribe, 7 Stat. 502; Treaty of November 6, 1838, with the Miami Tribe, 7 Stat. 569.

[6] Treaty of June 1, 1798, with the Oneida Nation, unpublished treaty, Archives No. 28; Treaty of September 20, 1816, with the Chickasaw Nation, 7 Stat. 150.

under a restriction against alienation without the consent of the President,[7] or in fee simple.[8]

Somewhat later allotment came to be used as an instrument for terminating tribal existence. Allottees surrendered their interest in the tribal estate and became citizens.[9]

During the 1850's, this break-up of tribal lands and tribal existence through allotment assumed a standard pattern.[10]

During the last years of the treaty-making period, and for two decades thereafter, the treaty provisions on allotment served as models for legislation.

The legislative development leading up to the General Allotment Act, and the purposes and background of that act are analyzed in Otis' study from which the following excerpts are taken:

> In the 1870's the Government's policy of general allotment of Indian lands in severalty gradually took form. * * * By 1885 the Government had, under various treaties and laws issued over 11,000 patents to individual Indians and 1,290 certificates of allotment.[4] The fact that 8,595 of these patents and 1,195 of these certificates were issued under laws passed and treaties ratified during the period 1850–69 suggests that the forces which produced the General Allotment Act of 1887 were coming to life in the mid-century. In 1862 Congress saw fit to pass a law for the special protection of the Indian allottee in the enjoyment and use of his land.[5] And in 1875 Congress gave further momentum to the whole lands-in-severalty movement by extending to the Indian homesteading privileges. (18 Stat. L. 420.)

[4] Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1885), 320, 321.
[5] H. Rep. No. 1576, May 28, 1880, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 7.

> In the meantime, the Indian Administration was gravitating steadily to the position of supporting allotment as a general principle. * * * * * * In 1877 Secretary Schurz recommended allotment to heads of families on all reservations, "the enjoyment and pride of the individual ownership of property being one of the most effective civilizing agencies."[15] From that date onward the Service as a whole worked for the speeding up of allotment under previous acts and treaties and the passage of a general law. * * *

[15] Report of the Secretary of the Interior, 1877, xi.

LEGISLATION

> In the late seventies there was a growing public opinion in support of the allotment movement. The Commissioner in 1878 declared,
>
> "It [allotment] is a measure correspondent with the progressive age in which we live, and is endorsed by all true friends of the Indian, as is evidenced by the numerous petitions to this effect presented to Congress from citizens of the various States."[20]

[20] Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1880), xvii.

> Early the following year a joint committee of Congress, appointed to consider the matter of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, reported a decision adverse to the change and proceeded to make recommendations of measures to civilize the Indians. One of their proposals was a general allotment law providing for a title in fee with a 25-year restriction upon alienation.[21] That same day, January 31, 1879, Chairman Scales of the House Committee on Indian Affairs reported a general allotment bill.[22] In the next Congress various bills were introduced to the same effect.[23] The House committee on May 28, 1880, reported favorably an allotment bill and accompanied it with statements of the majority and minority views.[24] In the Senate the measure which was to be known for the next few years as the "Coke bill" was introduced.[25]

[21] H. Rep. No. 93, Jan. 31, 1879, 45th Cong., 3d sess., 3–20.
[22] Congressional Record, Jan. 31, 1879, 864. (See also H. Rep., Mar. 3, 1879, 45th Cong., 3d sess.).
[23] Congressional Record, Jan. 12, 1880, 274; Mar. 8, 1880, 1394; May 19, 1880, 3507.
[24] H. Rep. No. 1576, May 28, 1880, 46th Cong., 2d sess.
[25] Congressional Record, May 19, 1880, 3507.

B. THE GENERAL ALLOTMENT ACT

The circumstances surrounding the enactment of the General Allotment Act are thus summarized in Dr. Otis' study:

> Senator Dawes in 1885 credited Carl Schurz with having originated the bill.[26] Its provisions were substantially the same as those of the ultimate Dawes Act, except that the Indian was not thereby declared a citizen.[27] The Coke bill passed the Senate in 1884 and in 1885 and in this latter year was favorably reported in the House.[28] In the meantime certain tribes by special laws were given the privilege of allotments in severalty—the Crows on April 11, 1882 (22 Stat. L. 42), the Omahas on August 7, 1882 (22 Stat. L. 341), and the Umatillas on March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. L. 340). These acts applied to specific reservations the principles of the Coke bill.

[26] Proceedings of the Third Annual Meeting of the Lake Mohonk Conference of Friends of the Indian (1885) in Miscellaneous Document, XIII, 10132.
[27] Congressional Record, Jan. 20, 1881, 778, 779. For debate on the question of amending the bill to extend citizenship to the Indian, see Congressional Record, Jan. 24, 1881, 875–882.
[28] Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1884), xiii; Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1885), xv; H. Rept. No. 2247, Jan. 9, 1885, 48th Cong., 2d sess.

> The allotment movement seemed rapidly to be gaining strength in 1886. President Cleveland in his annual messages in 1885 and 1886 advocated the policy.[29] In 1886 General Sheridan, reporting as lieutenant general of the Army to the Secretary of War, likewise urged an allotment scheme.[30] Finally, Congress acted early in the following year and the President signed the Dawes Act on February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L. 388).[31] The chief provisions of the act were:
>
> (1) a grant of 160 acres to each family head, of 80 acres to each single person over 18 years of age

[29] George F. Parker (ed.), The Writings and Speeches of Grover Cleveland (New York, 1892), 410–415.
[30] In Miscellaneous Documents Relating to Indian Affairs (collected in Indian Office Library), XV, 11660–11663.
[31] The writer regrets that time has not permitted a careful study of the Government documents, especially of the Congressional Record, relating to the Dawes bill. Such a study might by implication throw some light on the forces at work to secure its passage. There is a well-founded suspicion that all the motives of the legislators were not concerned merely with the Indian's welfare. The study would at least show the drift of opinion. In 1887 President Quinton told the Women's National Indian Association that passage of the Dawes bill 8 years previously would have been "an absolute impossibility." She said that the women's petition with 100,000 signatures, which was presented to Congress in 1882, met with "dense ignorance," "prejudice," and the influence of the "Indian Ring." Miscellaneous Documents Relating to Indian Affairs (collected in Indian Office Library), XV, 11968, 11969. In its last stages the bill met with no opposition at all. Debate dealt only with details.

[7] Treaty of October 2, 1818, with the Potawatamie Nation, 7 Stat. 185; Treaty of October 2, 1818, with the Wea Tribe, 7 Stat. 186; Treaty of October 3, 1818, with the Delaware Nation, 7 Stat. 188; Treaty of October 16, 1826, with the Potawatamie Tribe, 7 Stat. 295; Treaty of October 23, 1826, with the Miami Tribe, 7 Stat. 300; Treaty of July 29, 1829, with the United Nations of Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatamie Indians, 7 Stat. 320; Treaty of August 1, 1829, with the Winnebaygo Nation, 7 Stat. 323.

[8] Treaty of September 29, 1817, with the Wyandot, Seneca, and other tribes, 7 Stat. 160; Treaty of October 6, 1818, with the Miame Nation, 7 Stat. 189; Treaty of August 29, 1821, with the Ottawa, Chippewa, and Pottawatamie Nations, 7 Stat. 218; Treaty of June 2, 1825, with the Great and Little Osage Tribes, 7 Stat. 240 (reservations for "half-breeds"); Treaty of June 3, 1825, with the Kansas Nation, 7 Stat. 244 (reservations for "half-breeds"); Treaty of September 15, 1832, with the Winnebago Nation, 7 Stat. 370.

[9] Treaty of November 24, 1848, with the Stockbridge Tribe, 9 Stat. 955 (division of tribe into "citizen" party and "Indian" party); Treaty of April 1, 1850, with the Wyandot, 9 Stat. 987. Cf., Treaty of August 5, 1826, with the Chippewa Tribe, 7 Stat. 290, providing for allotments to half-breeds; Treaty of September 27, 1830, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 333; Treaty of December 29, 1835, with the Cherokee Tribe, 7 Stat. 478; Treaty of July 8, 1817, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 156.

[10] See Chapter 3, sec. 4G.

and to each orphan under 18, and of 40 acres to each other single person under eighteen; [32]

[32] Certain tribes were exempted from the provisions of the act, viz, the Five Civilized Tribes, the Osages, Miamies and Peorias, Sacs and Foxes, in Indian Territory, the Senecas in New York State, and the inhabitants of the strip south of the Sioux in Nebraska (sec. 8).

(2) a patent in fee to be issued to every allottee but to be held in trust by the Government for 25 years, during which time the land could not be alienated or encumbered;

(3) a period of 4 years to be allowed the Indians in which they should make their selections after allotment should be applied to any tribe—failure of the Indians to do so should result in selection for them at the order of the Secretary of the Interior;

(4) citizenship to be conferred upon allottees and upon any other Indians who had abandoned their tribes and adopted "the habits of civilized life." * * *

AIMS AND MOTIVES OF THE ALLOTMENT MOVEMENT

That the leading proponents of allotment were inspired by the highest motives seems conclusively true. A Member of Congress, speaking on the Dawes bill in 1886 said, "It has * * * the endorsement of the Indian rights associations throughout the country, and of the best sentiment of the land." [33] * * *

[33] Congressional Record, Dec. 15, 1886, 196.

* * * * *

The supreme aim of the friends of the Indian was to substitute white civilization for his tribal culture, and they shrewdly sensed that the difference in the concepts of property was fundamental in the contrast between the two ways of life. That the white man's way was good and the Indian's way was bad, all agreed. So, on the one hand, allotment was counted on to break up tribal life. This blessing was dwelt upon at length. The agent for the Yankton Sioux wrote in 1877: [35]

"As long as Indians live in villages they will retain many of their old and injurious habits. Frequent feasts, community in food, heathen ceremonies, and dances, constant visiting—these will continue as long as the people live together in close neighborhoods and villages * * * I trust that before another year is ended they will generally be located upon individual lands of farms. From that date will begin their real and permanent progress."

[35] Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1877), 75, 76. (See also Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1879), 25 (1885), 21 (1886), ix, x.)

On the other hand, the allotment system was to enable the Indian to acquire the benefits of civilization. The Indian agents of the period made no effort to conceal their disgust for tribal economy. * * *

But voices of doubt were here and there raised about allotment as a wholesale civilizing program. "Barbarism" was not without its defenders. Especially were the Five Civilized Tribes held up as an example of felicity under a communal system in contrast to the deplorable condition of certain Indians upon whom allotment had been tried.[41] A minority report of the House Committee on Indian Affairs in 1880 went so far as to state that Indians had made progress only under communism.[42] At this point it is worth remarking that friends and enemies of allotment alike showed no clear understanding of Indian agricultural economy. Both were prone to use the word "communism" in a loose sense, in describing Indian enterprise. It was in the main an inaccurate term. Gen. O. O. Howard told the Lake Mohonk Conference in 1889 about a band of Spokane Indians who worked their lands in common in the latter part of the 1870's,[43] but certainly in the vast majority of cases Indian economic pursuits were carried on directly with individual rewards in view. This was primarily true even of such essentially group activities as the Omahas' annual buffalo hunt.[44] Agriculture was certainly but rarely a communal undertaking. The Pueblos, who had probably the oldest and most established agricultural economy, were individualistic in farming and pooled their efforts only in the care of the irrigation system.[45] What the allotment debaters meant by communism was that the title to land invariably vested in the tribe and the actual holding of the land was dependent on its use and occupancy. They also meant vaguely the cooperativeness and clannishness—the strong communal sense—of barbaric life, which allotment was calculated to disrupt.

[41] Memorial to Congress from Cherokee Nation in Congressional Record, January 20, 1881, 781.
[42] H. Rept. No. 1576, May 28, 1880, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 10.
[43] Twenty-first Reports of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1889), 111.
[44] Alice C. Fletcher and Francis La Flesche, the Omaha Tribe, in Twenty-seventh Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, 1905–6 (Washington, 1911), 273–275.
[45] Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1864), 332.

In any event, the doubters were skeptical as to whether this allotment method of civilizing would work. They placed much emphasis upon the fact that Indian life was bound up with the communal holding of land. In 1881 Senator Teller quoted a chief's explanation why the Nez Perces went on the warpath:

"They asked us to divide the land, to divided our mother upon whose bosom we had been born, upon whose lap we had been reared." [46]

[46] Congressional Record, January 20, 1881, 781, 782. (See also H. Rept. No. 1576, May 28, 1880, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 7–10.)

* * * The minority of the House Committee on Indian Affairs doubted whether private property would transform the Indian. The minority report said: [49]

"However much we may differ with the humanitarians who are riding this hobby, we are certain that they will agree with us in the proposition that it does not make a farmer out of an Indian to give him a quarter-section of land. There are hundreds of thousands of white men, rich with the experiences of centuries of Anglo-Saxon civilization, who cannot be transformed into cultivators of the land by any such gift."

[49] H. Rept. No. 1576, May 28, 1880, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 8.

The believers in allotment had another philanthropic aim, which was to protect the Indian in his present land holding. They were confident that if every Indian had his own strip of land, guaranteed by a patent from the Government, he would enjoy a security which no tribal possession could afford him. If the Indians possession was further safeguarded by a restriction upon his right to sell it they believed that the system would be foolproof. * * *

* * * * *

It must also be noted that while the advocates of allotment were primarily and sincerely concerned with the advancement of the Indian they at the same time regarded the scheme as promoting the best interest of the whites as well. For one thing, it was fondly but erroneously hoped that setting the Indian on his own feet would relieve the Government of a great expense. In 1879 the Indian Commissioner, in recommending an allotment bill to Secretary Schurz, wrote, "The evidently growing feeling in the country against the continued appropriations for the care and comfort of the Indians indicates the necessity for a radical change of policy in affairs connected with their lands." [59] Speaking in favor of the Dawes bill, a member of Congress said in 1886, "What shall be his future status? Shall he remain a pauper savage, blocking the pathway of civilization, an increasing burden upon the people? Or shall he be converted into a civilized taxpayer, contributing toward the support of the Government and adding to the material prosperity of the country? * * * We desire, I say, that the latter shall be his destiny." [60]

[59] Commissioner to Secretary Schurz in H. Rept. No. 165, March 3, 1879, 45th Cong., 3d sess., 3. (See also Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1881), xxiii.)
[60] Congressional Record, December 15, 1886, 190.

The chief advantages that the new system was to bring to the country as a whole were to be found in the opening up of surplus lands on the reservations and in the attendant march of progress and civilization westward. In his report of 1880, Secretary Schurz wrote: [61]

"[Allotment] will eventually open to settlement by white men the large tracts of land now belonging to the reservations, but not used by the Indians. It will thus put the relations between the Indians and their white neighbors in the western country upon a new basis, by gradually doing away with the system of large reservations, which has so frequently provoked those encroachments which in the past have led to so much cruel injustice and so many disastrous collisions."

[61] Report of the Secretary of the Interior, 1880, 12.

* * * * *

It must be reported that the using of these lands which the Indians did not "need" for the advancement of civilization was a logical part of a whole and sincerely idealistic philosophy. The civilizing policy was in the long run to benefit Indian and white man alike. But doubters of the allotment system could see nothing in the policy but dire consequences for the Indian. Senator Teller in 1881 called the Coke bill "a bill to despoil the Indians of their lands and to make them vagabonds on the face of the earth." [64]

[64] Congressional Record, January 26, 1881, 934.

At another time he said,[65]

"If I stand alone in the Senate, I want to put upon the record my prophecy in this matter, that when 30 or 40 years shall have passed and these Indians shall have parted with their title, they will curse the hand that was raised professedly in their defense to secure this kind of legislation and if the people who are clamoring for it understood Indian character, and Indian laws, and Indian morals, and Indian religion, they would not be here clamoring for this at all."

[65] Ibid., January 20, 1881, 783.

* * * Senator Teller had charged that allotment was in the interests of the land-grabbing speculators,[67] but the minority report of the House Indian Affairs Committee in 1880 had gone even further in its accusations. It said: [68]

"The real aim of this bill is to get at the Indian lands and open them up to settlement. The provisions for the apparent benefit of the Indian are but the pretext to get at his lands and occupy them * * *. If this were done in the name of greed, it would be bad enough; but to do it in the name of humanity, and under the cloak of an ardent desire to promote the Indian's welfare by making him like ourselves, whether he will or not, is infinitely worse."

[67] Congressional Record, January 20, 1881. 783.
[68] H. Rept. No. 1576, May 28, 1880, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 10.

* * * * *

It is probably true that the most powerful force motivating the allotment policy was the pressure of the land-hungry western settlers. A very able prize thesis written at Harvard by Samuel Taylor puts forth this theory. The author copiously and convincingly cites evidence to show the cupidity of the westerners for the Indian's lands and their unrestrained zeal in acquiring them.[70] * * *

[70] Samuel Taylor, The Origins of the Dawes Act of 1887 (unpublished manuscript, Philip Washburn Prize Thesis, Harvard, 1927), 25–42.

* * * * *

A special enterprise which undoubtedly affected the establishing and working out of the allotment program was the railroads. It must again be remembered that the 1880's were a time of feverish railroad building. * * *

* * * * *

* * * It is interesting that the same session of the same Congress that passed the Dawes Act went in for grants of railroad rights-of-way through Indian lands on a new and enlarged scale. Of 9 Indian bills that became law, 6 were railroad grants.[80] Of the remaining 3, 1 was the Dawes Act, 1 was the appropriation act, and the third was an amendment to the land-sales law. In September 1887 the Indian Commissioner remarked in his report, "The past year has been one of unusual activity in the projection and building of numerous additional railroads through Indian lands."

[80] Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1887), 272–285.

* * * * *

It is significant that one of the foremost of these empire builders was discovering that under the old reservation system the way of the railroaders was hard. The biographer of James J. Hill tells of the difficulties which the builder of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad experienced in securing a right-of-way across the Fort Berthold and Blackfeet Reservations in 1886 and 1887.[86] Eventually the railroad got its grant (24 Stat. L. 402), but the way was paved for acquiring more easily a second grant, extending the right-of-way westward, by the Blackfeet agreement of 1888.[87] This agreement (25 Stat. L. 113) cut the reservation up into several smaller ones (art. I), allowed the sale of the surplus land, provided for allotment in severalty (art. VI), and stipulated that rights-of-way might be granted through any of the separate reservations "whenever in the opinion of the President the public interests require the construction of railroads, or other highways, or telegraph lines * * *" (art. VIII). Again, the writer of this paper has no evidence to show that the railroad was active in promoting this agreement. But a later comment of James J. Hill indicates that he had been well aware of the disadvantages of the old reservations for railroading. He said: [88]

"When we built into northern Montana, and I want to tell you that it took faith to do it, from the eastern boundary of the State to Fort Benton was unceded Indian land; no white man had a right to put two logs one on top of the other. If he undertook to remain too long in passing through the country, he was told to move on. Even when cattle crossed the Missouri River during the first years to come to our trains, the Indians asked $50 a head for walking across the land a distance of 3 miles, and they wanted an additional amount per head, I don't remember what it was, for the water they drank in crossing the Missouri."

[86] Jos. G. Pyle, Life of James J. Hill (2 vols., Garden City, N. Y., 1917), I, 384.
[87] Jos. G. Pyle, Life of James J. Hill (2 vols., Garden City, N. Y., 1917), I, 386.
[88] Jos. G. Pyle, Life of James J. Hill (2 vols., Garden City, N. Y., 1917), I, 385, 386.

* * * * *

INDIAN ATTITUDES AND CAPACITIES

* * * In 1881 the Commissioner, in a letter to Senator Hill, listed the particular tribes that had petitioned for allotment and concluded by saying, "* * * It may truthfully be said that there are at this time but few tribes of Indians, outside of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, who are not ready for this movement." [36] As early as 1876 agents were reporting Indian sentiment in favor of allotment and presenting Indian petitions and this activity increased up to 1887.[37] * * *

[36] Congressional Record, Jan. 20, 1881.
[37] See agents' reports, Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1876), passim; ibid., (1878), 142 (1880), 25, 50, 87, 171, (1881), 22, 25, 132, 177; especially agents' reports, ibid. (1882) and (1883).

* * * * *

From the repeated statements of those Indians who favored allotment it is clear that what was first and foremost in their minds was a hope that patents in fee would protect them against white inroads upon their lands and against the danger of removal by the Government. A comment as early as 1876 from the Siletz agent in Oregon as to his charges' desire for allotment is typical. He said: "Nothing gives them so much uneasiness as the constant efforts of some white men to have them removed to some other country." [41] There seems to have been little understanding of or desire for a new agricultural economy on the part of the Indians. This was quite as true of the Omahas who at the time were regarded by white proponents of allotment as especially enlightened.

[41] Ibid. [Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs] (1876), 124; see also Miscellaneous Documents relating to Indian Affairs (collected in Indian Office library), IX, 7553–7558, Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1880), 25.

One of the 55 members of the tribe who asked for allotment expressed his sense of the changing order but concluded his statement (as nearly all the fifty-five did) with the usual argument. He said:

> "The road our fathers walked is gone; the game is gone; the white people are all about us. There is no use in any Indian thinking of the old ways; he must now go to work as the white man does. We want titles to our lands, that the land may be secure to our children." [43]

[43] Fletcher and La Flesche, 636, 637; see also Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1882), 112.

There were many expressions of Indian opposition to allotment in the early 1880's. The minority report of the House Committee on Indian Affairs in 1880 noted that since the act of 1862 provided for special protection of allottees in their holdings it was "passing strange" that so few had availed themselves of their privileges.[43] The Senecas and the Creeks made bold to memorialize Congress against disrupting with allotment their systems of common holding.[44] Realizing that they were opposing the trend of official policy the Creeks remarked:

> "In opposing the change of Indian land titles from the tenure in common to the tenure in severalty your memorialists are aware that they differ from nearly every one of note holding office under the Government in connection with Indian affairs, and with the great body of philanthropists whose desire to promote the welfare of the Indian cannot be questioned." * * *[45]

[43] H. Rept. No. 1576, May 28, 1880, 46th Cong., 2d sess., 7.
[44] H. Ex. Doc., No. 83, Mar. 1, 1882, 47th Cong., 1st sess.
[45] Ibid., 26.

Certain tribes had specific objections to allotment. A memorial from the Creeks, Choctaws, and Cherokees in 1881 read:

> "The change to an individual title would throw the whole of our domain in a few years into the hands of a few persons." [48]

[48] Congressional Record, Jan. 20, 1881, 781.

* * * * * * * * * There is a final fact which must be taken into consideration in interpreting reports of Indian sentiments and of the results of allotment experiments, namely, that allotment had become an official policy. As Senator Teller maintained with probable accuracy there would be a tendency on the part of agents and subordinate officials to be influenced in their estimates consciously or unconsciously by the knowledge that allotment was the program to be furthered.[62]

[62] Congressional Record, Jan. 20, 1881, 783.

What can be said from this survey is that there was no apparent widespread demand from the Indians for allotment.

C. CONSEQUENCES OF THE ALLOTMENT SYSTEM

The General Allotment Act proved to be the cornerstone of a system which involved a considerable amount of legislation that supplemented and amended the terms of that act. The working out of the allotment system in its early years is sketched in Part II of Dr. Otis' study, from which the following quotations are taken:

> There was no doubt in the minds of the proponents of the allotment system that they were on the road to the complete solution of the Indian problem. * * * Senator Dawes went so far as to say that the general allotment law had obviated the need for tinkering with the organization of the [Indian] service. He said:[3]
>
> > "It seems to me that this is a self-acting machine that we have set going, and if we only run it on the track it will work itself all out, and all these difficulties that have troubled my friend will pass away like snow in the spring time, and we will never know when they go; we will only know they are gone."

[3] Nineteenth Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1887), 54.

Indeed this "self-acting machine" would finally render obsolete all Government machinery whatever. Senator Dawes went on to express a prediction of which an echo has been heard in discussions of the present proposed policy:[4]

> "Suppose these Indians become citizens of the United States with this 160 acres of land to their sole use, what becomes of the Indian reservations, what becomes of the Indian Bureau, what becomes of all this machinery, what becomes of the six commissioners appointed for life? Their occupation is gone; they have all vanished; the work for which they have been created * * * is all gone, while you are making them citizens * * * That is why I don't trouble myself at all about how to change it [the machinery of administration]."

Dr. Lyman Abbot said:

> 'The Indian is no longer to be cared for by the executive department of the Government; he is coming under the general protection under which we all live, namely, the protection of the courts." [5]

[4] Ibid. (1887), 55.
[5] Ibid. (1887), 53.

* * * * *

THE APPLICATION OF ALLOTMENT

The application of allotment to the reservations was above all characterized by extreme haste.

In September 1887—7 months after the passage of the Dawes Act—the author of the measure told the Lake Mohonk Conference how President Cleveland had remarked when signing the bill that he intended to apply it to one reservation at first, and then gradually to others. Senator Dawes went on to say:[89]

> "But you see he has been led to apply it to half a dozen. The bill provides for capitalizing the remainder of the land for the benefit of the Indian, but the greed of the landgrabber is such as to press the application of this bill to the utmost * * * There is no danger but this will come most rapidly, too rapidly, I think; the greed and hunger and thirst of the white man for the Indian's land is almost equal to his 'hunger and thirst for righteousness.'"

[89] Nineteenth Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1887), 88.

* * * * *

In 1890 the Commissioner reported,

> "In numerous instances, where clearly desirable, Congress has by special legislation authorized negotiations with the Indians for portions of their reservations without waiting for the slower process of the general allotment law." [93]

[93] Ibid. [Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs] (1890), xxxviii.

In 1888 Congress had ratified five agreements with different Indian tribes providing for allotment and for the sale of surplus lands.[94] The following year Congress passed eight such laws.[95] A member of the Board of Indian Commissioners in 1891 estimated that the 104,314,349 acres of Indian reservations in 1889 had been reduced by 12,000,000 acres in 1890 and by 8,000,000 acres in the first 9 months of 1891.[96] * * *

[94] Ibid. (1888), 294, 302, 320, 322, 335–336, 340–344.
[95] Ibid. (1889), 421, 432, 438, 440, 447, 449, 460, 463, 464.
[96] Twenty-third Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1891), 51.

* * * * *

In the meantime, the work of applying allotment was pushed rapidly forward. * * * In 1888 the Commissioner had reported that 3,349 allotments had been approved since the passage of the Dawes Act.[2] There were 1,958 allotments approved in 1890, 2,830 in 1891, 8,704 in 1892; and in this last year Commissioner Morgan reported that since February 1887 the Indian Office had given its approval to 21,274 allotments.[3] In this same year, 1892, he told the Mohonk Conference that the allotments which were about to be made would bring the grand total of all the allotments which the Government had made to over 80,000. He concluded it was time to slow down.[4] His successors seem to have acted upon his advice until the opening of the new century, as the following figures show:[5]

Allotments approved 1893–1900

Years:	Number	Year:	Number
1893	4,561	1897	3,229
1894	3,061	1898	2,015
1895	4,851	1899	1,011
1896	4,414	1900	8,752

[2] Table in Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1916), 94.

[3] Ibid. (1892), 184.

[4] Twenty-fourth Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1892), 37.

[5] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1893), 23 (1894), 20 (1895), 19 (1896), 25 (1897), 21 (1898), 40 (1899), 43 (1900), 53, 54.

In the years prior to 1887 the Government had approved 7,463 allotments with a total acreage of 584,423; from 1887 through 1900 it approved a total of 53,168 with an acreage of nearly 5,000,000.[6] * * *

[6] Ibid. (1916), 93, 94.

* * * * *

* * * So satisfactory was the speed of allotment to Board of Indian Commisioners that in 1891 it was contemplating a very early disappearance of Government supervision over the Indian. The Board's report stated in that year:[9]

> "* * * When patents have been issued and homesteads secured, when Indians are declared and acknowledged citizens, and are actually self-supporting, the supervision of the Government and the arbitrary rule of the agent may be safely withdrawn. * * *"

This faith that the allotment system would mean an early decline of Government supervision and placing the Indian on his own responsibility continued to be expressed by the friends of the Indian through the 1890's. But the hope was not realized. In 1900 there were in existence 61 agencies—3 more than in 1890.[10] But while the maintenance of the agency system was in large measure dependent upon the needs of the service, it was apparently even more dependent on the needs of the agents. The Indian Rights Association reported in 1900 that Commissioner Jones had recommended to Congress the discontinuing of 15 agencies but that the agents had been able to bring such pressure through their friends at the Capitol that Congress had agreed to the eliminating of only one.[11]

[9] Twenty-second Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1890), 9.

[10] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1890), 512–514; Ibid. (1900), 743–745.

[11] Eighteenth Annual Report Indian Rights Association (1900), 57. This report lists the agencies as 56 in 1900 but Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1900) lists 61. See pp. 743–745.

* * * * *

There is no doubt that the idea of allotment was making headway with the Indians, but there is considerable doubt that its progress was the result of a spontaneous and wide-spread interest of the Indians in becoming hard-working American farmers. * * * In that same year [1888] the Yankton agent wrote about a determined opposition to allotment which was led by the old chiefs and which was successfully overcome by two companies of soldiers from Fort Randall.

The agent concluded by remarking that when the survey was finished there was not one Indian on the reservation who did not want his allotment.[15] * * *

[15] Ibid. [Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs] (1888), 70, 208.

* * * * *

There is considerable testimony to the fact that the Indians knew pretty well what the white man's system had meant for their race. One of the members of the Board of Indian Commissioners reported in 1890:[26]

> "The Osages as a tribe are almost unanimously opposed to taking their land in severalty. Eighteen years ago they purchased this reservation of the Cherokees for a home, and as such they want it to be. They argue that the time for such action has not yet come; that they are not prepared in any way to have white settlers for neighbors, and especially that variety of white men with whom it has been their misfortune to come in contact. About 250,000 acres of an area of over 1,500,000 is tillable land, the other is only suitable for grazing, and this they contend is no more than is needed for themselves and children."

[26] Ibid. [Twenty-first Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners] (1890), 27. The Osage population was about 1,500 in 1890, which would allow for an average of about 166 acres of arable land per capita.

This refrain is repeated in the reports of various agents. * * *

* * * In that year [1887] the International Council of Indian Territory, to which 19 tribes sent 57 representatives, voted unanimously against allotment and the granting of railroad rights-of-way through their lands. The council's resolution on the allotment question, which was sent to the President of the United States, cited these tribes' "sad experience" with allotment and assailed the policy as one which would "engulf all of the nations and tribes of the territory in one common catastrophe, to the enrichment of land monopolists."[30]

[30] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1887), 116, 117.

* * * there is a compelling ring to the appeal of the International Council of 1887:[34]

> "Like other people, the Indian needs at least the germ of political identity, some governmental organization of his own, however crude, to which his pride and manhood may cling and claim allegiance, in order to make true progress in the affairs of life. This peculiarity in the Indian character is elsewhere called patriotism, the wise and patient fashioning and guidance of which alone will successfully solve the question of civilization. Preclude him from this and he has little else to live for. The law to which objection is urged does this by enabling any member of a tribe to become a member of some other body politic by electing and taking to himself a quantity of land which at the present time is the common property of all."

[34] Ibid. [Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs] (1887), 117.

The following year the agent to the Five Tribes observed that the half-breeds were becoming favorably inclined toward allotment but, he said,

> "The full-bloods are against it, as a rule, as they fear it will destroy their present government, to which they appear attached."[35]

[35] Ibid. (1888), 135.

This same cleavage which characterized Indian opinion before the passage of the Dawes Act is apparent all through the nineties.[36] This cleavage expresses the fundamental fact that the allotment controversy was a struggle between two cultures. With the irresistible penetration of the white civilization, the conflict within the tribes crystallized into two factions, the half-breeds and the full-bloods, the young and the old, the "progressives" and the "conservatives", the sheep and the goats.

[36] See miscellaneous documents relating to Indian Affairs (collected in Indian Office library), xvii, 14066; Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1888), 93 (1889), 182, 230 (1890), 31 (1892), 294, 457 (1895), 255 (1900), 233, 381.

* * * * *

ADMINISTRATION AND CHANGES IN POLICY: LEASING

* * * * *

Those who were dissatisfied with the results achieved by the Dawes Act saw various causes of failure. For one thing, the whole emphasis of the allotment policy was laid upon farming, and critics from time to time pointed out that large sections of the Indians' lands were not suitable for agriculture. * * *

For another thing, the Government was continuing a policy which was a cause, as well as an index, of allotment's failure. A speaker at the 1890 Mohonk Conference described at length the evil consequences of the rationing system. He showed how it had pauperized the Indians and now deterred them from farming, since they feared if they raised crops the Government would cut down their allowances.[54]

[54] Ibid. [Twenty-second Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners] (1890), 142.

* * * * *

Many friends of the Indian who believed that the allotment system was not accomplishing all that it should were inclined to hold the Government responsible because of its failure to give adequate aid to the allottees. * * * It was not true that the Government made no efforts whatever to equip the Indians for farming. But it made very slight efforts. The appropriation act passed in 1888 provided for the allocation of $30,000 to the purchase of seed, farming implements, and other things "necessary for the commencement of farming" (25 Stat. L. 234). In 1888 alone 3,568 allotments had been made.[57] The appropriation, therefore, granted less than $10 to every new allottee setting out on his farming career. There is, furthermore, no way of knowing how much of this money was expended for this purpose. * * *

[57] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1888), 444.

The following year the same amount was provided (25 Stat. L. 998) but in 1890 no such appropriation was made. In 1891 Congress raised $15,000 for the purpose (26 Stat. L. 1007) and this sum was continued through the next 2 years (27 Stat. L. 137, 630). After 1893 the appropriation acts up to 1900 included no such items.

* * * The Omaha treaties of 1854 (10 Stat. L. 1043) and of 1868 (14 Stat. L. 667), which provided for a form of allotment, required the Government to furnish the Indians with implements, stock, and milling services. Yet these promises were never carried out.[62] One of the Indians who signed the petition for the Omaha allotment bill in 1881 said:

> "Three times I have cut wood to build a house. Each time the agent told me the Government wished to build me a house. Every time my wood has lain and rotted, and now I feel ashamed when I hear an agent telling me such things." [63]

[62] Fletcher and La Flesche, 623, 624.
[63] Ibid., 637.

* * * * *

Defects in the system which * * * occupied the attention of the friends of the Indian were those resulting from the fact that allotted lands must be free from State taxation. The Dawes Act, providing for the 25-year Federal trust period during which time the land might not be encumbered (24 Stat. L. 389), meant, it was clear, that no State could tax the allottee's holdings. As a result, the friends of the Indian were noting in 1889, States were refusing to assume any responsibilities for Indian communities and were withholding such services as the upkeep of schools and roads. It was also apparent that this situation was a source of great hostility to Indians on the part of white neighbors.[73] * * *

[73] Twenty-first Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners, (1889). 107–109.

* * * the most enthusiastic supporters of the allotment policy felt that its first results showed that it needed important revision, itself. In his report for 1889 the Commissioner observed that Indians were asking for equal allotments to all individuals, and he recommended that the law should be so amended. He noted that there was a special need to protect the married women whom the Dawes Act had excluded from allotment benefits. * * *[76] The Board of Indian Commissioners that same year urged upon Congress the equalization of allotments.[78]

[76] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1889), 17.
[78] Ibid. [Twenty-first Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners] (1889), 9.

This proposed change was, significantly, bound up with another and still more important change which most friends of the Indian came to demand. * * * The Mohonk Conference that year heard some talk about the leasing of Indian lands and the freeing of the Indian from bondage. Justice Strong, previously associate justice of the United States Supreme Court, said:

> "But on one subject I am perfectly convinced; namely, that the Government has not the shadow of a right to interfere with an Indian's having an allotment, either with the use of his property or with the manner in which he shall educate his children * * *" [80]

[80] Idem. [Ibid. (1889), 105–109].

But especially the point was emphasized that leasing part of his land would bring the Indian the wherewithal to cultivate the rest.[81] Other arguments from time to time were brought forward by Indian sympathizers to show how leasing would help him.

[81] Ibid. (1889), 110, 112.

* * * * *

The decision to allow the Indian to lease his land was fraught with grave consequences for the whole allotment system. Probably it was the most important decision as to Indian policy that was made after the passage of the Dawes Act. Yet, interestingly enough, the significance of the leasing question seemed to be dwarfed in the eyes of contemporaries by the pressing matter of equal allotments. It is true that after the Attorney General ruled in 1885 that tribal grazing leases were illegal, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommended annually until 1889 a law permitting such leases.[88] But he made no proposal of leasing allotments.

[88] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1888), xxxix.

And no doubt his advocating of grazing leases was looked at with suspicion by the friends of the Indian, as were most of his official acts.[89] The question of leasing allotments had been raised at the 1889 Mohonk Conference,[90] but the Indian Office took no stand on the question in that year. As has been said, Commissioner Morgan was interested in the question of granting equal allotments to Indians of all ages and both sexes.[91] In January 1890 he wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Interior enclosing a bill providing for the granting of 160 acres to every Indian—man, woman, and child. The following month the President transmitted the bill, together with Commissioner Morgan's letter to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs.[92] The Commissioner mentioned several tribes which had opposed allotment because they disliked the system of unequal grants to the different classifications and he thought that if 160 acres were given each Indian "there would be less hesitation on the part of many of the tribes to the taking of land in severalty."[93] He also stressed the predicament of cast-off Indian wives under the existing system and the importance of dealing more liberally with the young Indians who were the future hope of the race.[94]

[89] The criticism directed at the Commissioner especially by the Indian Rights Association was claimed by that organization to be the cause of the Commissioner's dismissal and of the appointment of J. H. Oberly in his place. Seventh Annual Report Executive Commissioner Indian Rights Association (1889), 9, 10.
[90] See above p. 101.
[91] Ibid., p. 100.
[92] S. Ex. Doc. No. 64, February 17, 1890, 51st Cong., 1st sess., 1–4.
[93] Ibid., 2.
[94] Ibid., 3.

Accordingly, on March 10, 1890, Senator Dawes introduced in the Senate a bill to "amend and further extend the benefits" of the Dawes Act.[95] Section 1 of the bill provided for the granting of 160 acres to every Indian. The previous agitation of this question by the official and unofficial friends of the Indian furnished an adequate introduction to this legislative proposal. But section 2 of the bill seems to have come almost unheralded from Senator Dawes, the man who a few months later publicly expressed his misgivings about the leasing policy.[96] Section 2 of the Senator's bill read:[97]

"That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that, by reason of age or other disability, any allottee under the provisions of said act or any other act or treaty cannot personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment, or any part thereof, the same may be leased upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by said Secretary, for a term not exceeding 3 years for farming or grazing, or 10 years for mining purposes."

[95] Congressional Record, March 10, 1890, 2068.
[96] See above, p. 102.
[97] Copy of bill in Senate Document Room files.

* * * a conference committee reached a compromise which was accepted by both Senate and House on February 23, 1891.[4] Eighty acres were to go to each Indian, but an Indian could rent his land only when unable to work it "by reason of age or other disability." The Indian must apply for a lease to the Secretary of the Interior directly and not to the agent, and farming and grazing leases of allotted lands could be for no longer than 3 years.[5] In other words, there was to be something in the way of restraint exercised upon Indian leasing. The President signed the bill on February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. L. 794).

* * * * *

The Indian administration set out at a very cautious gait to apply the leasing provision to allotments. The [4] Ibid. [Congressional Record], Feb. 23, 1891, 3118, 3152.

[5] Sec. 3, 26 Stat. L. 794.

Commissioner in his report for 1892 said:

"Agents are expressly directed that it is not intended to authorize the making of any lease by an allottee who possesses the necessary physical and mental qualifications to enable him to cultivate his allotment, either personally or by hired help." [17]

[17] Ibid. [Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs] (1892), 71.

He said that but two allotment leases had thus far been approved by him.[18] The next year the Commissioner promulgated a set of rules for the making of leases. The rules were primarily concerned with defining the terms in the phrase, "by reason of age or other disability." "Age" applied to all Indians under 18 and all those disabled by senility. "Other disability" applied to all unmarried Indian women, married women whose husband or sons were unable to work the land, widows without able-bodied sons, all Indians with chronic sickness or incurable physical defect, and those with "native defect of mind or permanent incurable mental disease." [19] The Commissioner reported that four allotment leases had been allowed that year.[20] * * *

[18] Ibid. (1892), 72.
[19] Ibid. (1893), 477, 476.
[20] Ibid. (1893), 27.

The Senator [Dawes] had secured an amendment to the House bill taking away from the agents the power of recommending leases and requiring the Indians to apply directly to the Secretary of the Interior.[21] But in 1893 the Commissioner wrote:

"The matter of leasing allotted lands has been placed largely in the hands of Indian agents in charge of the agencies where allotments in severalty have been made."

[21] Congressional Record, Feb. 23, 1891, 3118.

He went on to say that all leases must be approved by the Secretary after recommendation by the agent.[22] How much this administrative ruling was in itself responsible for the subsequent speeding up of leasing cannot be said for at that point a most important change was made in the law. * * *

[22] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1893), 27.

* * * * *

* * * the general Indian appropriation act which became law August 15, 1894, contained a provision which changed the critical phrase in the act of 1891 to read "by reason of age, disability or inability", extended the term of agricultural and grazing leases to 5 years and permitted 10-year leases for business as well as mining purposes (28 Stat. L. 305). Nevertheless, the Commissioner said in his report that year:

"It has been repeatedly stated that it was not the intent of the law nor the policy of the office to allow indiscriminate leasing of allotted lands * * * If an allottee has physical or mental ability to cultivate an allotment by personal labor or by hired help, the leasing of such allotment should not be permitted." [24]

[24] Ibid. [Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs] (1894), 32, 33.

But a new rule which the Commissioner added to those defining "age" and "disability" read:

"The term 'inability' as used in said amended act, cannot be specifically defined as the other terms have been. Any allottee not embraced in any of the foregoing classes who for any reason other than those stated is unable to cultivate his lands or a portion of them, and desires to lease same may make application therefor to the proper Indian agent." [25]

* * * * *

* * * the Indian Appropriation Act of 1897 changed the leasing system back to its original form. Indeed in one respect the provisions were even more restrictive than were those of the 1891 law. The maximum term for mining and business leases was fixed at 5 years. The term for farming and grazing leases was changed back to 3 years, and the word "inability" was dropped so that "age or other disability" became the only legal grounds for permitting leases (30 Stat. L. 85). The Commissioner's report for 1897 commented on the fact that the leasing periods had been changed by the Indian appropriation act but, interestingly enough, he made no mention of the dropping of the word "inability." [34] * * * The Commissioner approved 1,185 allotment leases in 1899 and 2,590 in 1900.[37] In this latter year, the system was again changed by the Indian appropriation act. "Inability" was restored as a reason for permitting allotment leases, and the maximum period of leasing for farming purposes was extended once more to 5 years (31 Stat. L. 229). * * * Apparently the change in policy had not been the doing of the Commissioner. He wrote in his report for 1900: [39]

"The better to assist them the allottees should be divided into small communities, each to be put in charge of persons who by precept and example would teach them how to work and how to live.

"This is the theory. The practice is very different. The Indian is allotted and then allowed to turn over his land to the whites and go on his aimless way. This pernicious practice is the direct growth of vicious legislation. The first law on the subject was passed in 1891. * * *

"It is conceded that where an Indian allottee is incapacitated by physical disability or decrepitude of age from occupying and working his allotment, it is proper to permit him to lease it, and it was to meet such cases as this that the law referred to was made * * * But "inability" has opened the door for leasing in general, until on some of the reservations leasing is the rule and not the exception, while on others the practice is growing.

"To the thoughtful mind it is apparent that the effect of the general leasing of allotments is bad. Like the gratuitous issue of rations and the periodical distribution of money it fosters indolence with its train of attendant vices. By taking away the incentive to labor it defeats the very object for which the allotment system was devised, which was, by giving the Indian something tangible that he could call his own, to incite him to personal effort in his own behalf."

[35] Ibid. (1894), 421.
[36] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1897), 40–43.
[37] Ibid. [Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs] (1899). 60 (1900), 76–78.
[38] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1900), 13.

Thus it seems that the leasing policy had been pushed much further than the friends of the Indian desired. As to who had been pushing it there one can only guess. It is apparent that white settlers and promoters had found leasing a new and effective technique for exploiting Indian lands. So had Indian agents—according to the Indian Rights Association. The association's report for 1900 described the evil consequences of the leasing system under the new law and set forth grave charges.[40]

[40] Eighteenth Annual Report of the Executive Committee Indian Rights Association (1900), 58.

* * * * *

RESULTS OF ALLOTMENT TO 1900

Analysis of the achievements of the allotment system requires first some appraisal of the leasing practice which vitally affected allotment results. There were defenders of the leasing system all through the 1890's. It had certain immediate consequences which recommended it to friends of the Indian who were sincere if lacking in vision. There was the simple fact of allotted lands lying idle which the Indians either could not or would not cultivate. Such waste seemed wicked to a generation that was coming increasingly to set store by efficiency. How much better it was for the lands to be used and the Indians to be deriving an income from them. In 1890, before the passage of the leasing act, a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners regretted that the Government had ousted white share workers from the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservations. He said:

"Farms that could only be worked in this way, owing to peculiar circumstances, are now lying tenantless and abandoned." [41]

[41] Twenty-second Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1890), 31.

In 1895 various agents expressed their approval of the way leasing was working since it was bringing in to the Indians a sizeable revenue.[42] * * *

[42] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1895), 260, 262, 335.

But for the most part, the agents who expressed their approval of allotment leasing saw it as productive of practical results. It took care of minors, women, and the old folks,[45] and it was economically profitable. One agent said the Indians got more out of the leased lands than if they worked them themselves.[46] * * * Leasing was undoubtedly a spur to the taking of allotments. But it seems hardly to have been a spur to the Indian becoming a farmer. * * *

[45] Thirtieth Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1898), 14.
[46] Ibid. (1898) 18; see also p. 15, and Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1900), 361.

* * * * *

Perhaps the most flagrant example of the corrosive influence of leasing was that of the Omahas and Winnebagoes, in Nebraska. The Omahas were the great hope of the allotment enthusiasts. But in 1893 the agent wrote that leasing had gone far among the Omahas and Winnebagoes and that the former were renting their lands without the consent of the agent or Government.[57] In 1894 * * * Professor Painter told the Mohonk conference of his bitter disappointment in the Omahas especially, about whom he had been satisfied and enthusiastic as they had started out under the allotment system. He had recently visited the two reservations and found most of the land in white hands. Real-estate syndicates had leased lands even before the allotment was completed. One company had rented 47,000 acres from the Winnebagoes at from 8 to 10 cents an acre and sublet to white farmers for $1 to $2 an acre. The Winnebagoes got enough income from these lands to stay drunk part of the time. But the Omahas got much more.[60]

[57] Ibid. [Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs] (1893), 193–195; see also (1892), 186.
[60] Twenty-sixth Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1894), 120.

The illegal leasing of allotments had apparently gone to great lengths on these two reservations.[61] In 1894 the agent thought that the Indians were anxious to recover their lands and till some portion of them.[62] The following year this fighting agent set out in a vain effort to bring to heel a powerful land company. The Government ultimately furnished him with 50 extra police and 70 rifles as the local authorities rallied to the support of the land company and were reported to be arming a hundred deputies. Confronted by an injunction in the State courts restraining him from evicting the company's tenants, the agent at last gave in.[63] In 1894 the agent had written,

"The settlers would almost unanimously prefer to lease under the rules and regulations of the Department; but are held, pecuniarily, by the lawless corporations and individuals who have subleased to them." [64]

[61] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1895), 37, 38.
[62] Ibid. (1894), 187, 188.
[63] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1895), 37–41.
[64] Ibid. (1894), 188.

In 1895 the Commissioner explained the effective technique of this particular land company which had been able to flout the Federal authority. His explanation suggests very clearly why this outlaw corporation received the community's support. In many instances the company accepted notes from their subtenants in place of money rent. These notes in turn came into the hands of local bankers. As a result all of the powerful interests in the community were galvanized in opposition to the Government in its attempt to force evictions or collect legal rents.[65]

[65] Ibid. (1895), 41.

Whatever progress the Omahas, especially, might have made under the original allotment system it is clear that the leasing policy doomed their efforts to failure and themselves to demoralization. * * *

The passionate denunciation of leasing by the Omaha and Winnebago agent in 1898 perhaps says the last word on the matter. He wrote that out of 140,000 acres allotted on the two reservations, 112,000 acres had been leased. He then wrote: [67]

"Leasing of allotted agricultural lands should never be permitted. The Indians should be compelled to live upon their allotments and support themselves by cultivating the land. They can do it, but will not unless compelled to. Not 1 acre of allotted agricultural land should be leased to a white man, and it would be far better to burn the grass on the allotted lands than to lease them for pastures to the white man. * * *"

[67] Thirtieth [R]eport of the Board of Indian Commissioners (1898), 25.

* * * * *

* * * the allotment policy began and continued as an act of faith. So it was possible for an agent to report that allotment was working well on his reservation and at the same time submit figures which showed that the greater portion of the Indian lands were leased to white men. Indeed, the testimony which comes even from the friends of the Indian as to the dire results of the leasing policy toward the end of the century makes it seem improbable that the allotment system in the main was working well.

The writer's scepticism as to the real success of the allotment system in the period of the 1890's is based not alone on inference and deduction. The following table contains figures that are pertinent to the question whether or not allotment was producing results:

Land and crop statistics

[Unless otherwise indicated the figures are taken from the current volume of the Annual Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The figures in parentheses are page references]

Date	Total number of allotments to date	Total number of leases to date	Number of families living on and cultivating allotments	Number of acres cultivated by Indians	Indian agricultural production (in bushels)				Page
					Wheat	Oats and barley	Corn	Vegetables
1890	15,166	-----	5,554	288,613	881,419	545,032	1,139,297	482,500	(480)
1891	17,996	-----	5,883	-------	1,318,218	798,001	1,830,704	541,974	(106)
1892	26,700	2	7,302	-------	1,825,715	875,634	1,515,464	558,162	(816)
1893	31,261	6	7,579	-------	[1]1,722,656	883,170	1,373,230	462,871	(723)
1894	34,322	301	8,359	-------	887,809	653,631	911,655	396,133	(598)
1895	39,173	631	8,366	369,974	[1]1,016,754	[2]875,349	[2]2,226,944	476,272	(594)
1896	43,587	1,564	10,045	-------	753,577	731,806	2,100,316	542,538	(551)
1897	46,816	2,851	10,659	-------	788,192	805,466	1,123,260	703,770	(510)
1898	48,831	3,799	11,789	-------	664,930	599,665	1,339,444	494,509	(630)
1899	49,842	4,984	10,704	-------	982,120	850,387	1,386,977	445,935	(597)
1900	58,594	7,574	10,835	343,351	935,731	722,925	1,655,504	396,067	(677)

[1] Over 850,000 bushels of wheat raised by white lessees on Umatilla Reservation.

[2] Unspecified amount of wheat, oats, barley, and corn raised by white lessees on Indian lands.

NOTE.—Allotment and leasing totals, 1891–1900 taken from figures given above pp. 81, 111–113.

The figures given above, while by no means conclusive, indicate that the allotment system was not producing the results which the originators of the policy hoped for. In comparing the number of allotments with the number of families living and working on them, one must bear in mind that several allotments might be made to one family. The act of 1891 which granted 80 acres to every Indian made it possible for one family to possess an even greater number of allotments than before. It is unfortunate that there is no way of knowing the number of specific families allotted and the average number of allotments to each. But the above figures show that the number of families cultivating their allotments was by no means keeping pace with the allotment figures. The number of allotments per family grew from 2.7 in 1890 to 5.4 in 1900. Since it may be supposed that when Indians accepted allotments the family took as many as they could get, and since the only change in the law after 1890 which affected the question of eligibility for allotment was the extension of the privilege to married women, this increasing ratio of allotments to families cultivating them suggests a decline of Indian husbandry. Or at least it suggests a failure to reach the goal envisaged by the friends of the Indian. Even more disquieting are the statistics of Indian agriculture. The above figures show an increase in acreage of Indian farming from 1890 to 1895 which was far from proportionate to the number of allotments made in those years. Then from 1895 to 1900, although more than 19,000 allotments were made, the area of the land tilled by Indians actually decreased by over 26,000 acres. Nor if one takes the figures of crop production for what they are worth, can one observe the progress in Indian agriculture during these 10 years which the friends of allotment expected. * * *

* * * * *

* * * If the allotment system were to have succeeded the Indian would, culturally, have had to be made over. The significance of this fact was never fully grasped by the philanthropists and the Government. * * * So the Indian hopefully if not enthusiastically, went, unprepared, out upon his allotment, as an unarmed man would go unwittingly into a forest of wild beasts.

For if white land seekers and business promoters did not create the allotment system, they at least turned it to their own good use. * * *

* * * * *

Besides the lands that were thrown open to settlement, white men were interested in tribal lands that remained. This was especially true of the cattlemen. * * *

When it came to the actual designation of allotments, white influence was also busy. General Whittlesey, of the Board of Indian Commissioners, said to the Mohonk Conference in 1891, "Another hindrance [to the allotting of lands] is the influence brought to bear by surrounding white settlers, who are waiting to get possession of the lands that may be reserved after allotments are completed. If there are valuable tracts of land, they try to prevent those lands from being allotted, and to prevent Indians from selecting them, by bribery and by other means." [97] * * *

[97] Ibid. [Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners] (1891), 96.

* * * * *

* * * In 1890, General Whittlesey reported that there was a growing demand for the Government to distribute among the Indians on a per capita basis tribal funds that had been so heavily swelled by sales of surplus lands. He said, "That is their own desire, and the desire of many of those who surround them, who know how soon such money disappears." [1] The Umatilla agent who found agriculture languishing on his reservation in 1894—especially among the full bloods—wrote:

> "The few mixed bloods who farm their allotments do so with stock, machinery, and provisions furnished by merchants or bankers, who take a mortgage on the crop, afterwards taking all the crop." [2]

[1] Ibid. [Report of the Board of Indian Commissioners] (1890), 129.

[2] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1894), 269.

And there was a long story of flagrant corruption and exploitation in the activities of lumbering companies who manipulated the allotment system to their great profit, on up into the twentieth century.[3]

[3] See W. K. Moorehead, The American Indian in the United States (Andover, Mass., 1914), 59, 62, 71 ff.

By the middle of the 1890's the friends of the Indian began to express dismay at the course their humanitarian policy had taken in the hands of persons who were not always humanitarians. * * *

* * * * *

In 1895 the Commissioner showed himself well aware of the forces that were crippling Indian development. He made a shrewd comment on his times and a significant forecast. He said:

> "The whites in some sections of the country seem to have very little respect for the rights of Indians who have segregated themselves from their tribes and sought to avail themselves of the benefits of the Indian homestead and allotment laws enacted expressly for them by Congress, and I apprehend that the opposition to them will increase as the public domain grows less and less." [7]

[7] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (1895), 22.

* * * One student of the allotment movement believes that the act of 1891 was the most important step toward ruin. This law by granting the Indian the right to lease and at the same time allotting to each member of the family—to babies and octogenarians—an equal amount of land developed in the Indian idleness and avarice. Children ceased to be a responsibility and became indirectly a source of revenue through their leased allotments. As a result the family was disrupted as a producing unit and the Indian's interest became pecuniary instead of industrial.[8] The present writer agrees with this analysis, but he is inclined to think that basically the leasing policy in almost any form would have meant ultimate defeat for the allotment system.

[8] Flora Warren Seymour, Story of the Red Man (New York, 1929), 376; letter from Mrs. Seymour to the writer.

D. APPRAISAL OF THE ALLOTMENT SYSTEM

A critical appraisal of the consequences of the allotment system is found in a memorandum submitted to the Senate and House Committees on Indian Affairs by Commissioner Collier on February 19, 1934.[11] This memorandum provided at least part of the basis for those provisions of the Act of June 18, 1934,[12] which put an end to the process of allotment:

> The Indians are continuing to lose ground; yet Government costs must increase, while the Indians must still continue to lose ground, unless existing law be changed.
>
> Two thirds of the Indians in two thirds of the Indian country for many years have been drifting toward complete impoverishment.
>
> While being stripped of their property, these same Indians cumulatively have been disorganized as groups and pushed to a lower social level as individuals.
>
> During this time, when Indian wealth has been shrinking and Indian life has been diminishing, the costs of Indian administration in the identical areas have been increasing. The complications of bureaucratic management have grown steadily greater.
>
> Ruin for the Indians, and still larger costs to the Government, are insur[ed] by the existing system.
>
> Neither the Indians themselves, nor the Indian Service, can reverse the downhill process, or even materially delay it, unless certain fundamental impracticabilities of law can be changed.
>
> The disastrous condition, peculiar to the Indian situation in the United States, and sharply in contrast with the Indian situations both of Canada and of Mexico, is directly and inevitably the result of existing law—principally, but not exclusively, the allotment law and its amendments and its administrative complications.
>
> The approximately one third of the Indians who as yet are outside the allotment system are not losing their property; and generally they are increasing in industry and are rising, not falling, in the social scale. The costs of Indian administration are markedly lower in these unallotted areas.
>
> * * * * *
>
> The backbone of Indian law since 1887 has been the allotment act and its amendments and administrative regulations.
>
> The law originally possessed, and still possesses, virtues which can be preserved and made effective. The bill does preserve them. But these virtues, potential rather than realized, have been slight indeed when contrasted with the destructive effects of the law and the system.

HOW ALLOTMENT HAS WORKED AND NOW WORKS

> Land allotment, under the general and special allotment acts, has been mandatory. To each Indian—man, woman, and child—living and enrolled at a specified date, a separate parcel of land has been attached. The residual lands, fictitiously called "surplus," have been mandatorily bought from the tribes by the government and thereafter have been disposed of to whites.
>
> The individualized parcels of land have been held under Government trust over longer or shorter periods. Sometimes, where the land was agricultural, the Indian family has lived upon and has used one or more of the allotments attached to its several members. Where the land was of grazing character, or was timberland, allotment precluded the integrated use of the land by individuals or families, even at the start.
>
> Upon the allottees' death, it has been necessary to partition the land equally among heirs, or to sell it, and in the interim it has been leased.
>
> Most likewise of the land of living allottees has been leased to whites.

STATISTICS OF LOSS OF LAND THROUGH ALLOTMENT

> Through sales by the Government of the fictitiously designated "surplus" lands; through sales by allottees after the trust period had ended or had been terminated by administrative act; and through sales by the Government of heirship land, virtually mandatory under the allotment act: Through these three methods, the total of Indian landholdings has been cut from 138,000,000 acres in 1887 to 48,000,000 acres in 1934.
>
> These gross statistics, however, are misleading, for, of the remaining 48,000,000 acres, more than 20,000 acres are contained within areas which for special reasons have been exempted from the allotment law; whereas the land loss is chargeable exclusively against the allotment system.
>
> Furthermore, that part of the allotted lands which has been lost is the most valuable part. Of the residual lands, taking all Indian-owned lands into account, nearly one half, or nearly 20,000,000 acres, are desert or semidesert lands.
>
> Allotment, commenced at different dates and applied under varying conditions, has divested the Indians of their property at unequal speeds. For about 100,000 Indians the divestment has been absolute. They are totally landless as a result of allotment. On some of the reservations the divestment is as yet only partial and in part is only provisional. Many of the heirship lands, awaiting sale to whites under existing law, have not yet been sold, and the Indian title is not yet extinguished. Under the allotment system it inevitably will be extinguished.
>
> The above statement relates solely to land losses. The facts can be summarized thus:
>
> Through the allotment system, more than 80 percent of the land value belonging to all the Indians in 1887 has been taken away from them; more than 85 percent of the land value of all the allotted Indians has been taken away.
>
> And the allotment system, working down through the partitionment or sale of the land of deceased allottees, mathematically insures and practically requires that the remaining Indian allotted lands shall pass to whites. The allotment act contemplates total landlessness for the Indians of the third generation of each allotted tribe.

THE REMAINING LANDS RENDERED UNUSABLE

> A yet more disheartening picture will immediately follow the above statement. For equally important with the outright loss of land is the effect of the allotment system in making such lands as remain in Indian ownership unusable.
>
> There have been presented to the House Indian Committee numerous land maps, showing the condition of Indian-owned lands on allotted reservations. The Indian-owned lands are parcels belonging (a) to allottees and (b) to the heirs of deceased allottees. Both of these classes of Indian-owned land are checkerboarded with white-owned land already lost to the Indians, and on many reservations the Indian-owned parcels are mere islands within a sea of white-owned property.
>
> Farming, at least at the subsistence level, and commercial farming within irrigated areas, is still possible on those parcels belonging to living allottees. But grazing, upon the grazing land of living allottees, and businesslike or conservative forest operation, upon the allotted forest land of living allottees, are largely, often absolutely, impossible.
>
> On the checkerboarded land maps, the heirship lands each year become a greater proportion of the total of the remaining Indian land. These heirship lands belong to numerous heirs, even up to the number of hundreds.
>
> And one heir possessed equities in numerous allotments, up to the number of hundreds.
>
> The above conditions force some of the Indian allotted land out of any profitable use whatsoever, and they force nearly all of it into the condition of land rented to whites, and rented under conditions disadvantageous to the Indians. The denial of financial credit to Indians is, of course, an added influence.
>
> The Indians are practically compelled to become absentee landlords with petty and fast-dwindling estates, living upon the always diminishing pittances of lease money.
>
> And here there becomes apparent the administrative impossibility created by the allotment system.

ALLOTMENT COSTS THE GOVERNMENT MILLIONS IN BARREN EXPENDITURES THAT CANNOT SAVE THE INDIAN LANDS OR CAPITAL, WHILE EMBITTERING AND RUINING THE INDIANS

> The Indian Service is compelled to be a real-estate agent in behalf of the living allottees; and in behalf of the more numerous heirs of deceased allottees. As such [11] See Hearings, Committee on Ind. Aff., 73d Cong., 2d sess., on H. R. 7902, pp. 15–18.

[12] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461, et seq.

real-estate agent, selling and renting the hundreds of thousands of parcels of land and fragmented equities of parcels, and disbursing the rentals (sometimes to more than a hundred heirs of one parcel, and again to an individual heir with an equity in a hundred parcels), the Indian Service is forced to expend millions of dollars a year. The expenditure does not and cannot save the land, or conserve the capital accruing from land sales or from rentals.

The operation gets nowhere at all; under the existing system of law it cannot get anywhere; it creates between the Indians and the Government a relationship barren, embittered, full of contempt and despair; it keeps the Indians' own minds focused upon petty and dwindling equities which inexorably vanish to nothing at all.

For the Indians the situation is necessarily one of frustration, of impotent discontent. They are forced into the status of a landlord class, yet it is impossible for them to control their own estates; and the estates are insufficient to yield a decent living, and the yield diminishes year by year and finally stops altogether.

It is difficult to imagine any other system which with equal effectiveness would pauperize the Indian while impoverishing him, and sicken and kill his soul while pauperizing him, and cast him in so ruined a condition into the final status of a nonward dependent upon the States and counties.

The Indian Bureau's costs must rise, as the allotted lands pass to the heirship class. The multiplication of individual paternalistic actions by the Indian Service must grow as the complications of heirship grow wtih each year. Such has been the record, and such it will be, unless the Government, in impatience or despair, shall summarily retreat from a hopeless situation, abandoning the victims of its allotment system. The alternative will be to apply a constructi[ve] remedy as proposed by the present bill.

The bill breaks this hopeless impasse.

For a number of years, it has been clearly recognized within the Indian Service that conditions must continue to grow worse, regardless of attempted administrative reforms, unless the allotment situation in its totality be modified.

And for a number of years the directions of practicable modification have become increasingly clear, both within the Indian Service and among observers outside it. The indicated solution has been stated with clarity, and more than once, in debates on the Senate floor and in reports by the Indian Investigation Committee of the Senate. The preceding administration recognized the impasse which had been reached under the allotment system, but did not put forward legislation to break the impasse.

The present bill, in those aspects which are most truly emergency items, is a bill to correct the allotment system, saving the remaining lands, enabling the Indians to get their lands into usable shape, and providing the machinery and authority for restoring, to those Indians already rendered landless, usable lands, if they will demonstrate their wish to possess and use the restored lands.

E. TERMINATION OF THE ALLOTMENT SYSTEM

The allotment system involved four critical steps:

1. The allotting of tribal lands.
2. The termination of trust periods or periods of restricted alienability, after a fixed term of years.
3. The termination of such restrictions prior to the expiration of the statutory period by administrative action.
4. The alienation of allotted lands prior to the termination of such periods.

The Act of June 18, 1934, stopped the continuance of the allotment system at points 1 and 2 [13] and placed severe limitations on the operation of the system at points 3 and 4.[14]

The operation of the Act of June 18, 1934, upon the statutory fabric of the allotment system at each of these points is analyzed in the following pages.

[13] See Act of June 18, 1934, secs. 1 and 2, 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461–462.

[14] See Act of June 18, 1934, secs. 4 and 5, 48 Stat. 984, 985, 25 U. S. C. 464–465.

SECTION 2. RIGHT TO RECEIVE ALLOTMENT

Section 1 of the Act of June 18, 1934 [15] provides:

> That hereafter no land of any Indian reservation, created or set apart by treaty or agreement with the Indians, Act of Congress, Executive order, purchase, or otherwise, shall be allotted in severalty to any Indian.

Its obvious purpose is to preserve in communal ownership all tribal lands of Indian reservations. It accomplishes that purpose by the declaration that no such lands shall be allotted. To that extent, the act is incompatible with and, therefore, supplants all prior laws, both general and special, purporting to authorize allotments in severalty in any form on any reservation to which the act applies, and this notwithstanding the fact that the act contains no general repeal provision.[16]

The act extends to and binds all Indians under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government save those tribes expressly excluded by section 13 and those reservations which, in the exercise of the privilege conferred by section 18, vote against its application.

Since allotments have been discontinued under the mandate of this statute, and under a policy preceding this enactment which applies even to tribes not under the act, a detailed study of the allotment statutes will not be attempted. However, inasmuch as allotments may be made on reservations which have rejected the Wheeler-Howard Act until the surplus lands have been completely disposed of or until prohibited by Congress,[17] and individual rights of Indians in real property have vested under the allotment statutes, it may be useful to offer a short summary of the provisions and legal effect of such statutes.

Section 1 of the General Allotment Act of February 8, 1887,[18] later amended by general acts of February 28, 1891,[19] and of June 25, 1910,[20] and now embodied in section 331 of title 25 of the United States Code authorized the President of the United States to allot land [21] in severalty to Indians living on reserva-

[15] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461.

[16] Where a reservation has by vote come under the act, land may not thereafter be allotted under a prior statute. Op. Sol. I. D., M.27770, May 22, 1935. But where an Indian acquired rights by a proper selection which was approved prior to the passage of the act, it has been ruled that the Secretary may issue a patent, and where lands had been selected but not approved before the passage of the act, they could be approved and patented to the allottee, the approval not requiring the exercise of discretion. Op. Sol. I. D. M.28086, July 17, 1935, 55 I. D. 295.

[17] Op. Sol., I. D., M.30256, May 31, 1939. The Act of June 15, 1935, 49 Stat. 378, provided that all laws affecting any Indian reservation which voted to exclude itself from the application of the Indian Reorganization Act shall be deemed to have been continuously effective as to such reservation notwithstanding the passage of that act. Ibid. On the power of the Secretary over individual lands, see Chapter 5, sec. 11.

[18] 24 Stat. 388.

[19] C. 383, sec. 1, 26 Stat. 794.

[20] C. 431, sec. 17, 36 Stat. 855, 859, 25 U. S. C. 331.

[21] Section 335 of title 25 of the Code, derived from the Act of February 14, 1923, c. 76, 42 Stat. 1246, makes the provisions of secs. 331–334, inclusive, and 336 and 341 heretofore discussed (and secs. 348–350, inclusive, and 381 to be discussed subsequently) applicable to "all lands heretofore purchased or which may be purchased by authority of Congress for the use or benefit of any individual Indian or band or tribe of Indians."

tions, whenever, in his opinion, the reservation or any part thereof might be advantageously utilized for agricultural or grazing purposes. Provision is made for allotments "not to exceed eighty acres of agricultural or one hundred and sixty acres of grazing land." [22]

The allotment policy was by no means uniform, certain tribes, for example, being excepted from provisions of the General Allotment Act of 1887.[23]

In addition to the general statute of 1887, Congress passed special acts authorizing the allotment of lands of specific tribes.[24] For those Indians not residing on reservations and who could otherwise not receive an allotment, Congress provided in section 4 of the General Allotment Act (incorporated in title 25 of the Code as sec. 334) for their receiving allotments upon any surveyed or unsurveyed lands of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Where under this section an allotment was erroneously made and a person thereafter applied for homestead entry upon such an allotment, the Secretary of the Interior was held to have authority to protect the Indian in his allotment even though erroneously made and to deny the application for homestead entry, since to have allowed the entry would have been to visit a considerable injustice upon the allottee.[25]

Section 336 [26] of title 25 of the United States Code provides that where any Indian entitled to an allotment should settle upon lands of the United States not otherwise appropriated he should be entitled to have the same allotted to him in the manner provided for allotments to Indians residing upon reservations, and such allotments were not to exceed 40 acres of irrigable land or 80 acres of nonirrigable agricultural land, or 160 acres of nonirrigable grazing land.

Under section 337 of title 25 of the United States Code,[27] the Secretary of the Interior is permitted in his discretion to make allotments within the national forests to Indians who were living on lands included in a national forest or who had made improvements thereon and were not entitled to an allotment on any existing reservation or whose tribal reservation was not sufficient to give each member an allotment.

As pointed out in Chapter 8, the allotment of lands in severalty did not in any way affect the guardian-ward relationship existing between the national government and the Indian [28] nor did it affect the authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to remove collectors from the reservation.[29] It has also been held that an allotment system does not deprive the tribe of the right to regulate the domestic affairs of its members.[30]

A. ELIGIBILITY

Insofar as eligibility to receive an allotment depends upon tribal membership the cases and statutes on the subject have been elsewhere discussed.[31]

In litigation dealing with the eligibility of Indians entitled to allotments, it has been held that the fact that a member of a tribe is born after the passage of the General Allotment Act does not disqualify him.[32] It has also been held that an Indian woman, though married to a white man, is head of her family and that her children who maintained their tribal relations were entitled to allotments as members of the tribe.[33] In the case of La Clair v. United States [34] the court held that adopted members of the Yakima tribe, who were formerly Puyallup Indians and whose parents had received allotments on the Puyallup Reservation as heads of families, were nevertheless entitled to allotments in the Yakima Reservation.[35] On the other hand, it

---

[22] The Act of 1887 provided for allotments of varying amount to various classes of Indians. For example, a head of a family was to receive a quarter of a section, while only one-eighth of a section was to be allotted to a single person over 18 years of age or an orphan under 18. To "each other single person under eighteen years now living, or who may be born prior to the date of the order of the President," sec. 1 specifies the allotment of one-sixteenth of a section.

[23] Thus sec. 339 of title 25 of U. S. C. which is derived from sec. 8 of the General Allotment Act expressly provided that:

> * * * sections 331 to 334, inclusive, 336, 341, 348 to 350, inclusive, and 381 [of this title] shall not extend to the territory occupied by the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Seminoles, and Osage, Miamies and Peorias, and Sacs and Foxes, in Oklahoma nor to any of the reservations of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians in the State of New York, nor to that strip of territory in the State of Nebraska adjoining the Sioux Nation on the south added by Executive order.

By a proviso annexed to the Act of February 28, 1891, 26 Stat. 796 it was provided that no allotment of lands shall be made or annuities of money paid to any of the Sacs and Foxes of Missouri who are not enrolled as members of said tribe on January 1, 1890.

On the other hand the provisions of secs. 331 to 334, 336, 341, 348, 350, and 381 of title 25 of U. S. C. (Supp.) have by sec. 340, which is derived from the Act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. 1013, been extended to > * * * the Confederated Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw tribes of Indians, and the Western Miami tribe of Indians, located in the northeastern part of the former Indian Territory and to their reservation, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said tribes had not been excepted from the provisions of said sections, except and as otherwise hereinafter provided.

[24] See Act of February 25, 1920, c. 87, 41 Stat. 452 for the Flathead Indians and the Act of March 3, 1921, c. 135, 41 Stat. 1355 for the Gros Ventre and Assiniboine Tribes in the Fort Belknap Reservation.

> Broadly speaking, the act of 1885, known as the Nelson act, provided for the cession by "all the different bands or tribes of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota" of all their title and interest in and to their reservations in said State not needed for allotments; for allotments of land in severalty in conformity with the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 388), and for the sale of the remaining lands. * * *
>
> The act of April 28, 1904 (33 Stat. 539), known as the Steenerson act, providing for allotments to Indians on the White Earth reservation in Minnesota, authorized allotment "to each Chippewa Indian now legally residing upon" that reservation under treaty or laws of the United States in accordance with the express promise made by the Commissioners appointed under the act of January 14, 1889. (Op. Sol. I. D., M. 15954, January 8, 1927.)
>
> * * * We frequently find acts of Congress directing allotments on particular Indian reservations to be made in accordance with the general allotment laws of the United States. When so made, for all practical purposes, such allotments are to be regarded as coming within the scope of the general allotment act. The chief difference lies in the area received by the allottees. Under the general allotment act, ordinarily, each Indian receives 80 acres of agricultural or 160 acres of grazing land, while under the special acts relating to particular reservations they frequently receive considerably more. See the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. 558), relating to the Fort Peck Reservation and the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. 1035) as amended June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. 16), relating to the Blackfoot reservation, both of which are also in the State of Montana. Both of these acts authorize allotments under the general allotment laws of the United States and on each reservation the allottees received in excess of 320 acres. Patents for such allotments however were issued in accordance with the general allotment act of February 8, 1887, as amended. (Op. Sol. I. D., M.12498, June 6, 1924.)

[25] Baldwin v. Keith, 13 Okla. 624, 75 Pac. 1124 (1904). For a discussion of the Secretary's power over Indian lands, see Chapter 5, sec. 11.

[26] This section was derived from sec. 4 of the Act of February 28, 1891, 26 Stat. 794, 795, as amended by sec. 17 of the Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, 860.

[27] Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 31, 36 Stat. 855, 863.

[28] See sec. 2C, and Hollister v. United States, 145 Fed. 773 (C. C. A. 8, 1906).

[29] Rainbow v. Young, 161 Fed. 835 (C. C. A. 8, 1908).

[30] Yakima Joe v. To-is-lap, 191 Fed. 516 (C. C. Ore. 1910). And see Chapter 7, sec. 5.

[31] See Chapter 1, sec. 2; Chapter 5, sec. 13; Chapter 7, sec. 4.

[32] United States v. Fairbanks, 171 Fed. 337, 339 (C. C. A. 8, 1909) aff'd sub nom. Fairbanks v. United States, 223 U. S. 215, 224 (1912).

[33] Bonifer v. Smith, 166 Fed. 846 (C. C. A. 9, 1909). And cf. Ladiga v. Roland, 2 How. 581 (1844), holding that widow living with grandchildren was head of family, entitled to allotment under Creek Treaty of March 24, 1932, 7 Stat. 366, and obtained title thereto by application, although President attempted to award title to another.

[34] 184 Fed. 128 (C. C. E. D. Wash. 1910).

[35] In Mitchell v. United States, 22 F. 2d 771 (C. C. A. 9, 1927), it was held that under a regulation requiring that adoptions be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Commissioner, an adoption without such approval did not entitle the Indian to an allotment.

has been held that a tribal Indian living apart from the tribe and off the reservation is not entitled to an allotment on the reservation.[36] This does not mean, of course, that the Indian had to be on the reservation the instant the Allotment Act was passed.[37]

An Indian may not have allotments from two different tribes;[38] nor claim an allotment under his English name and thereafter claim one under an Indian name.[39]

Although the allotment rolls have been deemed conclusive and final evidence of the right of any Indians of a reservation to an allotment[40] it has been held that they may be changed by the Secretary to correct mistakes.[41]

B. SELECTION OF ALLOTMENT

Section 332[42] of title 25 of the United States Code deals with the selection of allotments and provides that the Indians are to do the selecting, the heads of families selecting for their minor children, and the Indian agent is to make the selection for each orphan. The selections are to be made in such manner as to include the improvements of the Indian making the selection. The Supreme Court has upheld the validity of this clause giving a preferential right to certain lands to Indians who had occupied them and had made improvements thereon, prior to the passage of the Allotment Act affecting the lands of his tribe.[43]

Congress also provided that, if an Indian failed to make his selection within four years after the President authorized an allotment on a particular reservation, the Secretary of the Interior could direct the agent of such tribe or a special agent, if there were no agent, to make the selection. The Supreme Court has sustained the power of the Dawes Commission to place members of the Creek Nation on the allotment roll, upon their refusal to select allotments.[44]

The term "select," used with reference to selection of allotments by Indians, as defined by the Cherokee Allotment Agreement[45] and the Choctaw-Chickasaw Supplemental Agreement,[46] means a formal application for a particular tract or tracts of land in the land office established by the commission for the particular tribe or nation.[47]

It has been held that section 332 contemplates a selection by a living Indian only. Thus the death of a Chippewa Indian before making a selection of an allotment under the Nelson Act terminated his right to an allotment.[48] Where a right to the allotment becomes equitably vested in the allottee,[49] the act of the allotting commissioners in thereafter wrongfully allotting the land to another does not operate to cut off the heirs of the person originally entitled to the allotment.[50]

C. APPROVAL OF ALLOTMENT

Section 333[51] provides that after the filing of the selection the allotments shall be made by special allotting agents or by the agents or superintendents in charge of the reservations on which the allotments are directed to be made.[52]

After an allotment has been approved, the allottee is entitled to have the land patented to him,[53] even after the passage of the Wheeler-Howard Act which provided that "* * * no land * * * shall be allotted * * * to any Indian."[54]

D. CANCELLATION

As might be expected, the wholesale allotment of lands in severalty which characterized Indian administration for many years resulted in numerous instances in injustice to the allottee.[55] This injustice took the form very often of the allotment of a parcel of land which was unsuitable for any purpose to which the allottee could reasonably be expected to put it. To remedy in part this situation, Congress in 1909[56] provided for the can-

---

[36] Lemieux v. United States, 15 F. 2d 518 (C. C. A. 8, 1926), cert. den. 273 U. S. 749. But cf. Vezina v. United States, 245 Fed. 411 (C. C. A. 8, 1917), under Act of June 7, 1897, c. 3, 30 Stat. 62, 90, 25 U. S. C. 184.

[37] Hy-yu-tse-mil-kin v. Smith, 194 U. S. 401 (1904). And see Fairbanks v. United States, 223 U. S. 215, 225 (1912).

[38] Josephine Valley et al., 19 L. D. 329 (1894).

[39] Tiger v. Twin State Oil Co., 48 F. 2d 509 (C. C. A. 10, 1931).

[40] See Act of March 3, 1921, 41 Stat. 1355 (Fort Belknap Reservation); Op. Sol. I. D., M.7599, June 9, 1922. See also Chapter 5, sec. 13.

[41] Op. Sol. I. D., M.7599, June 9, 1922. See also Chapter 5, sec. 13.

[42] This section was derived from sec. 2 of the General Allotment Act. On selection of allotment for minors and incompetents, see Chapter 8, sec. 8A.

[43] E. g., Harnage v. Martin, 242 U. S. 386 (1917). See also Smith v. Bonifer, 154 Fed. 883 (C. C. Ore. 1907), aff'd sub nom. Bonifer v. Smith, 166 Fed. 846 (C. C. A. 9, 1909).

[44] United States v. Wildcat, 244 U. S. 111 (1917). See Chapter 5, secs. 6 and 13.

[45] Act of March 1, 1901, 31 Stat. 861.

[46] Act of June 30, 1902, 32 Stat. 500.

[47] See Millet v. Bilby, 110 Okla. 241, 237 Pac. 859 (1925).

[48] La Roque v. United States, 239 U. S. 62 (1915). See also Chapter 9, sec. 3; Taylor v. United States, 230 Fed. 580 (C. C. A. 8, 1916).

[49] See Op. Sol. I. D., M.28086, July 17, 1935, 55 I. D. 295. Where Indians had made selections prior to the passage of the Wheeler-Howard Act and approval was not of a discretionary nature but was lacking because of clerical error, it was held that the Indians were entitled to the approval and patenting of their selections, even after the passage of the said act which provided that "* * * no land * * * shall be allotted * * * to any Indian." Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984. But cf. Lemieux v. United States, 15 F. 2d 518 (C. C. A. 8, 1926), cert. den, 273 U. S. 749, where the approval was of a discretionary nature; United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80 (1907); St. Marie v. United States, 24 F. Supp. 237 (D. C. S. D. Cal. 1938).

[50] Bonifer v. Smith, 166 Fed. 846 (C. C. A. 9, 1909); Smith v. Bonifer, 132 Fed. 889 (C. C. Ore. 1904).

[51] 25 U. S. C. 333, derived from Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388 and Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, 858.

[52] Sec. 3 of Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, provided only for agents and special agents fulfilling this duty, but sec. 9 of the Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, 858, provided for the inclusion of superintendents as performers of this function.

25 U. S. C. 338, derived from the Appropriation Act of April 4, 1910, sec. 1, 36 Stat. 269, 270, required the Secretary of the Interior to transmit annual reports to Congress of the cost of survey and allotment work on Indian reservations generally. This section was repealed by the Act of May 29, 1928, sec. 64, 45 Stat. 986.

[53] The allottee may bring mandamus to obtain the patent. See Vachon v. Nichols-Chisholm Lumber Co., 126 Minn. 303, 148 N. W. 288, 290 (1914). But when an allotment has not been approved, approval and issuance of patent cannot be compelled by mandamus. United States ex rel. West v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80 (1907); St. Marie v. United States, 24 F. Supp. 237, (D. C. S. D. Calif. 1938). On when mandamus will issue, see Chapter 5, sec. 13B.

[54] Op. Sol. I. D. M.28086, July 17, 1935, 55 I. D. 295.

[55] Section 343 of title 25 of the U. S. Code provides:

> In all cases where it shall appear that a double allotment of land has been wrongfully or erroneously made by the Secretary of the Interior to any Indian by an assumed name or otherwise, or where a mistake has been made in the description of the land inserted in any patent, said Secretary is authorized and directed, during the time that the United States may hold the title to the land in trust for any such Indian, and for which a conditional patent may have been issued, to rectify and correct such mistakes and cancel any patent which may have been thus erroneously and wrongfully issued whenever in his opinion the same ought to be canceled for error in the issue thereof, * * *

[56] Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 784.

From time to time Congress has enacted sundry statutes permitting Indians to surrender the lands allotted to them and select other lands in lieu thereof. See Acts of October 19, 1888, 25 Stat. 611, 612, 25 U. S. C. 350; January 26, 1895, 28 Stat. 641, 25 U. S. C. 343; April 23, 1904, 33 Stat. 297, 25 U. S. C. 343; March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 784, 25 U. S. C. 344. Sec. 2 of the Act of 1888, supra, which has been incorporated in sec. 350 of 25 U. S. C., reads:

> The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and whenever for good and sufficient reason he shall consider it to be for the best interest of the Indians, in making allotments under the statute aforesaid, to permit any Indian to whom a patent has been issued for land on the reservation to which such Indian belongs, under treaty or existing law, to surrender such patent with formal relinquishment by such Indian to the United States of all his or her right, title, and interest cellation of an allotment of unsuitable land and the exchange therefor of other land. This act has been incorporated in section 344 of title 25 of the United States Code.[57] Its provisions are:

> If any Indian of a tribe whose surplus lands have been ceded or opened to disposal has received an allotment embracing lands unsuitable for allotment purposes, such allotment may be canceled and other unappropriated, unoccupied, and unreserved land of equal area, within the ceded portions of the reservation upon which such Indian belongs, allotted to him upon the same terms and with the same restrictions as the original allotment, and lands described in any such canceled allotment shall be disposed of as other ceded lands of such reservation. This provision shall not apply to the lands formerly comprising Indian Territory. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations to carry this law into effect.

In 1927 Congress also provided for the cancellation of fee patents issued without the consent of the Indian:[58] > * * * the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cancel any patent in fee simple issued to an Indian allottee or to his heirs before the end of the period of trust described in the original or trust patent issued to such allottee, or before the expiration of any extension of such period of trust by the President, where such patent in fee simple was issued without the consent or an application therefor by the allottee or by his heirs: Provided, That the patentee has not mortgaged or sold any part of the land described in such patent: Provided also, That upon cancellation of such patent in fee simple the land shall have the same status as though such fee patent had never been issued.

E. SURRENDER

Section 408, title 25, of the United States Code[59] provides:

> In any case where an Indian has an allotment of land, or any right, title, or interest in such an allotment, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may permit such Indian to surrender such allotment, or any right, title, or interest therein, by such formal relinquishment as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of any of his or her children to whom no allotment of land shall have been made; and thereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the estate so relinquished to be allotted to such child or children subject to all conditions which attached to it before such relinquishment.

in the land conveyed thereby, properly indorsed thereon, and to cancel such surrendered patent: Provided, That the Indian so surrendering the same shall make a selection, in lieu thereof, of other land and receive patent therefor, under the provisions of the act of February eighth, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven.

[57] On the question of the necessity for notice and an opportunity to be heard, see Fairbanks v. United States, 223 U. S. 215 (1912).

[58] Act of February 26, 1927, c. 215, 44 Stat. 1247, 25 U. S. C. 352a. Partial cancellation was also provided for. Act of February 26, 1927, c. 215, sec. 2, 44 Stat. 1247, as amended February 21, 1931, c. 271, 46 Stat. 1205, 25 U. S. C. 352b. For an analysis of the power of the Secretary to cancel a fee patent issued without request from the Indian concerned, see Op. Sol. I. D., M.28297, August 1, 1939. See Chapter 2, sec. 2E; Chapter 13, sec. 3B.

[59] Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 3, 36 Stat. 855, 856. For regulations regarding reallotment of lands to unallotted Indian children, see 25 C. F. R. 52.1–52.2.

SECTION 3. POSSESSORY RIGHTS IN ALLOTTED LANDS

An allottee ordinarily acquires by virtue of his allotment full possessory right with respect to the improvements and the timber upon his allotment as well as the minerals beneath it. Occasionally, by the term of special allotment acts, the minerals are reserved to the tribe in which event the allottee acquires at best a right to share in the income flowing therefrom.[60] His right of ownership in timber is limited only by the statutory restriction on alienation.[61] These restrictions upon alienation are elsewhere discussed.[62] When the allottee acquires his patent in fee, however, his right of use and enjoyment becomes an absolute right of ownership.

The allottee's right to water is recognized by the General Allotment Act,[63] section 7 of which provides:

> That in cases where the use of water for irrigation is necessary to render the lands within any Indian reservation available for agricultural purposes, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to secure a just and equal distribution thereof among the Indians residing upon any such reservations; and no other appropriation or grant of water by any riparian proprietor shall be authorized or permitted to the damage of any other riparian proprietor.

The Supreme Court in United States v. Powers[64] declared that under the doctrine of the Winters case[65] waters are reserved for the equal benefit of tribal members and that the Secretary of the Interior is without power affirmatively to authorize unjust and unequal distribution of water. It further declared that when allotments of land were duly made for exclusive use and thereafter conveyed in fee, the right to use some portion of tribal waters essential to cultivation passed to the owner of the allotted land, including both the allottees and those who took from them by conveyance or by purchase of land of deceased allottees at Government sales.

The Powers case compels the view that the right to use water is a right appurtenant to the land within the reservation, and that unless excluded it passes to each grantee in subsequent conveyances of allotted land.[66]

In accordance with the doctrine that the United States has exclusive jurisdiction over reservation lands unless it has specified that state statutes shall be controlling, it has been held[67] that an allottee cannot under the state laws relating to the appropriation of water acquire any right whatsoever in waters reserved to the tribe.

[60] See Chapter 15, sec. 14, fn. 286.

[61] See sec. 4 of this chapter.

[62] Ibid.

[63] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 25 U. S. C. 381. Also see Chapter 12, sec. 7.

[64] 305 U. S. 527, 532–533 (1939).

[65] Winters v. United States, 207 U. S. 564 (1908). For a further discussion of this case in connection with tribal water rights, see Chapter 15, sec. 16.

[66] In Anderson v. Spear-Morgan Livestock Co., 79 P. 2d 667 (1938), the court had occasion to restate the doctrine of the Powers case. It said:

> * * * The purpose of this statute is to provide for the distribution of the right to use the water to the individual Indians. United States v. Powers, * * *. The right to use the water prior to a distribution of it by the Secretary of the Interior may be said to be inchoate in the sense that the precise amount or extent of the right assigned to an individual allottee would be undetermined, but the right is vested in so far as the existence of the right to use the water in the allottee is concerned. This right is appurtenant to the land upon which it is to be used by the allottee. When the allottee became seized of fee simple title, after the removal of the restrictions of the trust patent, then a conveyance of the land, in the absence of a contrary intention, would operate to convey the right to use the water as an appurtenance. United States v. Powers, supra. (P. 669)

[67] United States v. McIntire, 101 F. 2d 650 (C. C. A. 9, 1939), rev'g 22 F. Supp. 316 (D. C. D. Mont. 1937).

Likewise, where statutory attempts have been made to relegate water rights of Indians on certain reservations to the jurisdiction of particular states by requiring that state statutes be complied with in securing water rights for the irrigation of Indian land,[68] it has been held [69] that since the statute contained no specific grant of the reserved waters to the state it could not be construed as the intent of Congress to take from the Indians a vested right and provide in lieu thereof only a means for acquiring an inferior and secondary right.

The water right guaranteed an allottee of Indian land has sometimes been defined in treaty or agreement.[70] In United States v. Hibner,[71] involving such an agreement, it was held that a purchaser from the allottee acquires a water right for the actual acreage under irrigation at the time title passes from the Indians, and for such additional acreage as can be placed under irrigation within a reasonable time.

On the other hand, a purchaser from an allottee is without right to appropriate to his private use water from a creek, most of which comes primarily from a Government irrigation system constructed after he acquired title to the land, which uses the creek bed for a distance as a canal to reach customers below.[72]

[68] Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325, 375 (Uintah Project in Utah); Act of March 3, 1905, 33 Stat. 1016 (Shoshone Project in Wyoming).

[69] United States v. Parkins, 18 F. 2d 642 (D. C. Wyo. 1926).

[70] Act of June 6, 1900, with the Fort Hall Indians, 31 Stat. 672. For a statute guaranteeing a similar right, see Act of May 18, 1916, 39 Stat. 123, 130.

[71] 27 F. 2d 909 (D. C. E. D. Idaho 1928).

[72] United States v. Parkins, 18 F. 2d 642 (D. C. Wyo. 1926). For a holding that one who purchases land in what was formerly an Indian reservation from the United States may not appropriate water for the irrigation of his land from an irrigation ditch, which the United States had constructed for the benefit of Indian allottees, see United States v. Morrison, 203 Fed. 364 (C. C. Colo. 1901).

SECTION 4. ALIENATION OF ALLOTTED LANDS

Since tribal lands are generally nonalienable without the consent of the Federal Government it was natural that Congress should continue federal control of land alienation when tribal land passed into the hands of individual Indians. The same considerations that lay behind the former restrictions—the desire to protect the Indian against sharp practices leading to Indian landlessness, the desire to safeguard the certainty of titles, and the urge to continue an important basis of governmental activity—operated in the case of allotted lands. The first of these motives is usually stressed in the opinions. Typical of the cases is the discussion by the Court of Appeals in Beck v. Flournoy Live-Stock & Real-Estate Co.[73]:

> * * * These limitations upon the power of the Indians to sell or make contracts respecting land that might be set apart to them for their individual use and benefit were imposed to protect them from the greed and superior intelligence of the white man. Congress well knew that if these wards of the nation were placed in possession of real estate, and were given capacity to sell or lease the same, or to make contracts with white men with reference thereto, they would soon be deprived of their several holdings; and that, instead of adopting the customs and habits of civilized life and becoming self-supporting, they would speedily waste their substance and very likely become paupers. The motive that actuated the lawmaker in depriving the Indians of the power of alienation is so obvious, and the language of the statute in that behalf is so plain, as to leave no room for doubt that congress intended to put it beyond the power of white men to secure any interest whatsoever in lands situated within Indian reservations that might be allotted to Indians. This conclusion is fortified by an amendment to the act of February 8, 1887, which was adopted on February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. 794, c. 383), whereby power was conferred upon the secretary of the interior to prescribe regulations and conditions for the leasing of lands allotted to Indians under the previous act of February 8, 1887, whenever, by reason of "age or other disability," the allottee was not able to occupy or improve the land assigned to him with benefit to himself. It is manifest that the amendment in question, authorizing allotted land to be leased in certain cases, under the direction of the secretary of the interior, was unnecessary if power to execute leases of allotted lands had already been conferred by previous enactments or treaty stipulations. The last-mentioned act, therefore, is a legislative declaration that congress did not intend by any previous statute to authorize the leasing of any lands that might be assigned to Indians to be held by them in severalty. (P. 34–35.)

[73] 65 Fed. 30 (C. C. A. 8, 1894), app. dism. 163 U. S. 686.

The opinion in Lykins v. McGrath [74] throws added light upon this basic policy:

> * * * What was the purpose of imposing a restriction upon the Indian's power of conveyance? Title passed to him by the patent, and but for the restriction he would have had the full power of alienation the same as any holder of a fee simple title. The restriction was placed upon his alienation in order that he should not be wronged in any sale he might desire to make; that the consideration should be ample; that he should in fact receive it, and that the conveyance should be subject to no unreasonable conditions or qualifications. It was not to prevent a sale and conveyance, but only to guard against imposition therein. When the Secretary approved the conveyance it was a determination that the purposes for which the restriction was imposed had been fully satisfied; that the consideration was ample; that the Indian grantor had received it, and that there were no unreasonable stipulations attending the transaction. All this being accomplished, justice requires that the conveyance should be upheld, and to that end the doctrine of relation attaches the approval to the conveyance and makes it operative as of the date of the latter.

The broad power of Congress to effectuate this policy and the extent to which the enforcement and relaxation of restraints upon alienation have been entrusted to the Secretary of the Interior have been discussed in Chapter 5.[75]

A. LAND [76]

The policy of restricting alienation finds expression in provisions of allotment acts forbidding alienation of lands during a fixed period of years without the consent of some administrative officer, generally the Secretary of the Interior. The provision contained in section 5 of the General Allotment Act [77] declares:

> * * * And if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same, before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void: * * *.

[74] 184 U. S. 169, 171–172 (1902).

[75] See secs. 5C and 11.

[76] For regulations relating to sale of allotted lands, exclusive of Five Civilized Tribes lands, see 25 C. F. R. 241.9–241.33.

[77] 24 Stat. 388, 389, 25 U. S. C. 348, amended in other particulars by Act of March 3, 1901, 31 Stat. 1058, 1085. Subsequent statutes authorizing alienation of lands with departmental approval are noted in Chapter 5, sec. 11B.

We have elsewhere noted the various forms in which restrictions on alienation are embodied, notably the "trust patent" and the "restricted fee." [78]

Prohibitions against alienation have been broadly interpreted in the light of the policy of Congress to prevent whites from taking advantage of the Indians.[79] This is shown by the interpretation of the term "conveyance" by the Supreme Court of Oklahoma in the case of Potter v. Vernon: [80]

> Under the general rule that all instruments affecting real estate are included under the word "conveyance" are included the following: A mortgage of an equitable interest (Sullivan v. Corn Exchange Bank, 154 App. Div. 292, 139 N. Y. S. 97); a leasehold (Lembeck, etc., Eagle Brewing Co. v. Kelly, 63 N. J. Eq. 401, 406, 51 A. 794); of personal property (Patterson v. Jones, 89 Ala. 388, 390, 8 So. 77); an agreement to execute a mortgage (In re Wight's Mortg. Trust, L. R. 16 Eq. 41, 46); an assignment for the benefit of creditors (Prouty v. Clark, 73 Iowa, 55, 56, 34 N. W. 614); an assignment of a chose in action (Wilson v. Beadle, 2 Head [Tenn.] 510); the satisfaction of a mortgage (Foss v. Dullam, 111 Minn. 220, 126 N. W. 820); an instrument in the nature of a trust deed, even without a seal, acknowledgement, or witness (White v. Fitzgerald, 19 Wis. 480); a release, as an instrument by which the title to real estate might be affected in law or equity (Palmer v. Bates, 22 Minn. 532); a release of a mortgage (Baker v. Thomas, 61 Hun, 17, 15 N. Y. S. 359); or part of land covered by a mortgage (Merchant v. Woods, 27 Minn. 396, 7 N. W. 826).
>
> It is true that under our statute a mortgage of real estate is to be regarded as a lien only, but the lands in question are Indian lands, with reference to which the federal government has dealt in a peculiar manner, due to peculiar conditions. Under our Oklahoma laws our citizens have the right to transfer without let or hindrance, all or part of their real property, but, with respect to its awards, the Indians, the government has always dealt exclusively with the transfer of their lands, not only placing restrictions upon the lands themselves, but upon those who owned them. In this case the legality of the transfer is to be determined by interpretation of the act of Congress, and the meaning of this act is ascertained by discovering, not what was in the minds of the lawmakers of Oklahoma in passing the several statutes with reference to conveyances and transfers, but what was in the mind of Congress when it passed the Act of May 27, 1908, and its use of the word "conveyances" in said act. We must assume that in an act of such sweeping proportions it was intended by Congress to deal finally and comprehensively with the subject in hand. Section 5 of the act uses very general terms:
>
> "That any attempted alienation or incumbrance by deed, mortgage, contract to sell, power of attorney, or other instrument or method of incumbering real estate, made before or after the approval of this act, which affects the title of the land allotted to allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes * * * shall be absolutely null and void." 35 Stat. 313.
>
> Section 9 seems to be just as comprehensive in the following words:
>
> "That the death of any allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes shall operate to remove all restrictions upon the alienation of said allottee's land: Provided, That no conveyance of any interest of any full-blood Indian heir in such land shall be valid unless approved by the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of said deceased allottee. * * *" 35 Stat. 315.
>
> It appears to us that the words "provided that no conveyance of any interest of any full-blood Indian heir in such land" could hardly be more comprehensive. We think that the words "conveyance of any interest" is just as comprehensive and perhaps more so than the word "alienation," and yet a valid mortgage is often the first step in a final alienation of land and even a foreclosure has reference back to the date of the mortgage and must follow the terms thereof.
>
> To give too limited or restricted a meaning to the word "conveyance" and yet a comprehensive meaning to the word "alienation" in the act, the result would be illogical, for it would require, for the making of a deed by the full-blood Indian heir, an approval of the county court, but for the execution of a mortgage upon his land, which might easily be effective to transfer his title, no such approval was necessary. This could not have been in the mind of Congress. It is not to be supposed that Congress inadvertently or through oversight failed to take into consideration that the Indian might wish to mortgage his land, for the mortgaging of real estate is almost as old as our assurances of title, so that, in our judgment, they either entirely overlooked this contingency, or they meant the words "conveyance of any interest" should include every written instrument which might affect the title. It has been, and properly so we think, the design of the government as rapidly as they could with safety to permit the Indians to deal with and have charge of their property, not only for the benefit of the community, but for the distinct benefit of the Indians, by casting responsibility upon them, and we interpret and understand this act of Congress as evidencing that disposition of the government. (P. 614.)

The courts have also considered the remedial nature of this legislation in construing the extent of its coverage. In holding that homesteads were within the purview of the General Allotment Act, Chief Justice Taft said: [81]

> We find that the Indian Homestead Act of July 4, 1884, and the General Allotment Act of February 8, 1887, with its various amendments, constitute part of a single system evidencing a continuous purpose on the part of the Congress. The statutes are in pari materia, and must be so construed. It cannot be supposed that Congress, in any part of this legislation, all of which is directed toward the benefit and protection of the Indians, as such, intended to exclude from the beneficent policy which each Act evidences, an Indian claiming under the homestead act, even though the statute uses the term "allottee." If there were any doubt on the question, the silence of Congress in the face of the long-continued practice of the Department of the Interior in construing statutes which refer only to Indian "allottees," or Indian "allotments," as applicable also to Indians claiming under the homestead laws, must be considered as "equivalent to consent to continue the practice until the power was revoked by some subsequent action by Congress." United States v. Midwest Oil Co., 236 U. S. 459, 481. (Pp. 196–197.)

B. TIMBER

Section 406 of title 25 of the United States Code provides: [82]

> The timber on any Indian allotment held under a trust or other patent containing restrictions on alienations may be sold by the allottee, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid to [78] See Chapter 5, sec. 11B. The inability of incompetent Indians to alienate land has been discussed in Chapter 8, sec. 8B(1).

[79] The effect of bankruptcy of an allottee is discussed in Chapter 8, sec. 7C.

A deed is not executed until delivered; hence, until the Secretary has removed the restrictions upon alienation of allotted lands effective upon the executing of a deed by an allottee, a deed signed by the allottee and given to an Indian superintendent for transmission to a purchaser does not pass title and is subject to cancellation by the Secretary since the execution of a deed had not been completed by delivery. United States v. Lane, 258 Fed. 520 (App. D. C. 1919).

An order of the Secretary of the Interior approving an Indian agent's recommendation that restrictions on alienation be removed from an allotment to be effective thirty days from date would become effective on the thirtieth day after its date and the allottee is enabled to make a valid conveyance on that date. Lanham v. McKeel, 244 U. S. 582 (1917).

Also see Taylor v. Brown, 147 U. S. 640 (1893); Nixon v. Woodcock, 64 Okla. 86, 166 Pac. 183 (1917).

[80] 129 Okla. 251, 264 Pac. 611 (1928).

[81] United States v. Jackson, 280 U. S. 183 (1930); also see Wiggan v. Conolly, 163 U. S. 56 (1896).

[82] Derived from Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 8, 36 Stat. 855, 857. For regulations regarding timber, see 25 C. F. R. 61.1–61.29.

the allottee or disposed of for his benefit under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The rights of an allottee to sell timber on his allotment without administrative approval had been determined by the Supreme Court a few years before the enactment of this provision. The Court in the first case held that the restrictions on alienation did not preclude a sale by the allottee of timber of land which was capable of cultivation after the cutting of the timber. The Court said:[83] > * * * it hardly needs to be said that the allotments were intended to be of some use and benefit to the Indians. And, it will be observed, that on that use there is no restraint whatever. A restraint, however, is deduced from the provision against alienation, the supervision to which, it is asserted, the Indians are subject and the character of their title. It is contended that the right of the Indians is that of occupation only, and that the measure of power over the timber on their allotments is expressed in United States v. Cook, 19 Wall. 592. We do not regard that case as controlling. The ultimate conclusion of the court was determined by the limited right which the Indians had in the lands from which the timber there in controversy was cut.

>
> Certain parties of the Oneida Indians ceded to the United States all the lands set apart to them, except a tract containing one hundred acres for each individual, or in all about 65,000 acres, which they reserved to themselves, to be held as other Indian lands are held. Some of the lands were held in severalty by individuals of the tribe with the consent of the tribe, but the timber sued for was cut by a small number of the tribe from a part of the reservation not occupied in severalty. It was held, citing Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. 574, that the right of the Indians in the land from which the logs were taken was that of occupancy only. Necessarily the timber when cut "became the property of the United States absolutely, discharged of any rights of the Indians therein." It was hence concluded "the cutting was waste, and, in accordance with well-settled principles, the owner of the fee may seize the timber cut, arrest it by replevin, or proceed in trover for its conversion." If such were the title in the case at bar, such would be the conclusions. But such is not the title. We need not, however, exactly define it. It is certainly more than a right of mere occupation. The restraint upon alienation must not be exaggerated. It does not of itself debase the right below a fee simple. Schly v. Clark, 118 U. S. 250. The title is held by the United States, it is true, but it is held "in trust for individuals and their heirs to whom the same were allotted." The considerations, therefore, which determined the decision in United States v. Cook do not exist. The land is not the land of the United States, and the timber when cut did not become the property of the United States. And we cannot extend the restraint upon the alienation of the land to a restraint upon the sale of the timber consistently with a proper and beneficial use of the land by the Indians, a use which can in no way affect any interest of the United States. It was recognized in United States v Clark that "in theory, at least," that land might be "better and more valuable with the timber off than with it on." Indeed, it may be said that arable land is of no use until the timber is off, and it was of arable land that the treaty contemplated the allotments would be made. We encounter difficulties and baffling inquiries when we concede a cutting for clearing the land for cultivation, and deny it for other purpose. At what time shall we date the preparation for cultivation and make the right to sell the timber depend? Must the axe immediately precede the plow and do no more than keep out of its way? And if that close relation be not always maintained, may the purpose of an allottee be questioned and referred to some advantage other than the cultivation of the land, and his title or that of his vendee to the timber be denied? Nor does the argument which makes the occupation of the land a test of the title to the timber seem to us more adequate to justify the qualification of the Indians' rights. It is based upon the necessity of superintending the weakness of the Indians and protecting them from imposition. The argument proves too much. If the provision against alienation of the land be extended to timber cut for purposes other than the cultivation of the land it would extend to timber cut for the purpose of cultivation. What is there in the latter purpose to protect from imposition that there is not in the other? Shall we say such evil was contemplated and considered as counterbalanced by benefit? And what was the benefit? The allotments, as we have said, were to be of arable lands useless, may be, certainly improved by being clear of their timber, and yet, it is insisted, that this improvement may not be made, though it have the additional inducement of providing means for the support of the Indians and their families. We are unable to assent to this view. (Pp. 472–474.)

The Supreme Court held in Starr v. Campbell[84] that where the allotment is all timber and nonarable land the restriction upon alienation extended to timber. The Court said:

> The restriction upon alienation, however, it is contended, does not extend to the timber, and United States v. Paine Lumber Co., 206 U. S. 467, is adduced as conclusive of this. We do not think so. There, as said by the Solicitor General, the land granted was arable, and could be of no use until the timber was cut; here the land granted is all timber land. And that the distinction is important to observe is illustrated by the allegations of the complaint. It is alleged that the value of the land, exclusive of the timber, is no more than $1,000; fifteen thousand dollars' worth of lumber has been cut from the land. The restraint upon alienation would be reduced to small consequence if it be confined to one-sixteenth of the value of the land and fifteen-sixteenths left to the unrestrained or unqualified disposition of the Indian. Such is not the legal effect of the patent. (P. 534.)

C. EXCHANGE OF ALLOTTED LANDS

The Act of October 19, 1888,[85] authorized the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion and when deemed for the best interest of the Indians to permit any Indian to whom a patent was issued for land on a reservation to surrender such patent and authorizes the Secretary to cancel such patent provided that the Indian shall make a lieu selection of other land and receive a patent for it under the General Allotment Act. This provision was interpreted by the Circuit Court of Appeals in United States v. Getzelman, as follows:[86]

> The plain language of the statute indicates that it is intended to effect a change in allotments; that is, to acquire other and different land when that is deemed for the best interest of the Indians. And that conclusion finds support in the history of the act. It originated in the [83] United States v. Paine Lumber Co., 206 U. S. 467 (1907).

[84] 208 U. S. 527 (1908).

However, an Indian allottee under the General Allotment Act may remove and sell dead timber, standing or fallen, from his allotment. The Attorney General said in 19 Op. A. G. 559 (1890):

> The effect of the allotment and declaration of trust are to place the allottee in possession of the land allotted and give him a qualified ownership therein, and the extent to which the allottee is thus restricted as a proprietor remains now to be considered, insofar as necessary to answer the questions submitted.
>
> (1) And first as to timber: In an opinion of Attorney-General Garland dated January 26, 1889, it was held to be waste for an allottee to cut timber standing on his allotment for the direct purpose of selling it, by which I understand him to mean timber that is live and growing. The question before me, however, namely, whether the allottee has the right to sell and remove from his allotment dead timber, standing or fallen, is essentially different from that passed upon by my predecessor, and as I have reached the conclusion that appropriating and selling dead timber of any kind is not waste at common law or by the law of Wisconsin, within the limits of which State the timber in question is situated, it is not necessary to reexamine the question whether an allottee is impeachable for waste. (P. 562.)

In this opinion the Attorney General also held that an Indian cannot contract for or permit the erection of mills on his allotment for the manufacture of lumber or other purposes.

On construction of the word "land" in statutes restricting alienation, see Holmes v. United States, 53 F. 2d 960 (C. C. A. 10, 1931).

[85] Sec. 2, 25 Stat. 611, 25 U. S. C. 350.

[86] 89 F. 2d 531 (C. C. A. 10, 1937), cert. den. 302 U. S. 708.

Department of the Interior. The Secretary wrote the President pro tempore of the Senate on June 7, 1888, transmitting a proposed draft of a resolution. The letter recited that four members of the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians on the Lake Traverse Reservation, in South Dakota, who had obtained allotments under the General Allotment Act, desired to make changes because it had been discovered that in three of these cases the lands allotted were not the lands on which the allottees lived and had made improvements, and in the fourth case the land allotted was not desirable farm land; that steps had been taken to effect relinquishment and new allotments; and that on further investigation it was found that no statutory authority existed for action of that kind. It was further stated that similar cases would likely arise on other reservations; and that for such reason the proposed resolution had been prepared and was transmitted with recommendation that it be passed. The proposed legislation was amended in form from a resolution to an act, and enacted into law. It thus clearly appears that the contemplated object, purpose, and function of the act is to enable an Indian allottee to whom a patent has been issued to make relinquishment and secure other and different land in lieu thereof. It was never intended as a means through which an agreement of the kind outlined in the bill before us could be achieved. The relinquishment of the patent was not for the purpose of enabling John to acquire other and different land more suited and better adapted to his uses and purposes. It was not intended to enable Mary to relinquish the remaining 80 acres of her original allotment and acquire a new allotment for other and different land in lieu of it. The purpose was to enable John to convey 80 acres of his remaining land, to acquire a new patent for the other 80 acres which he already owned, and to receive the $625 from Chapman to be used in making improvements on his remaining 80-acre tract; and further to enable Mary to part with the last 80 acres of her original allotment by conveying it to Chapman and at the same time to acquire 80 acres of the land originally allotted to John. A transaction of that kind falls well outside the intended scope, purpose, and function of the act permitting relinquishment and lieu allotments. In the absence of express authority granted by statute, the Secretary has no power to cancel a patent which has been regularly issued and delivered. See Ballinger v. United States ex rel. Frost, 216 U. S. 240, 30 S. Ct. 338, 54 L. Ed. 464; United States v. Dowden (C. C. A.) 220 F. 277. Measured by the doctrine announced in these cases, it is manifest that the Secretary was without power to cancel the patent for the purpose of accomplishing the unauthorized end. (P. 535.)

The restriction on alienation of allotted lands was held not to prohibit an allottee Indian from selling his improvements to the United States and selecting other lands so that the United States could use the lands for irrigation purposes. The Supreme Court in Henkel v. United States[87] explained:

> The Circuit Court of Appeals in its decision laid emphasis upon the case of Williams v. First National Bank, 216 U. S. 582, in which this court recognized the right of one Indian to surrender and relinquish to another Indian a preference right to an allotment of a tract of land. In that case it was held that one Indian might sell his improvements and holdings to another Indian for allotment, and lay his own on other land which he might find vacant, or which he might, in turn, purchase from another Indian, and the Circuit Court of Appeals held that, this being so, as a matter of course, and for stronger reasons, an Indian might relinquish his rights to the United States, and that restrictions had been placed upon the power of the Indians to alienate their lands or convey their rights of possession only for their protection, and not for the purpose of restricting their right to deal with the United States or to relinquish their rights to the Government, citing Lykins v. McGrath, 184 U. S. 169, and Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1. Without questioning the correctness of this reasoning, we think the purpose of the United States to acquire any property necessary for the reclamation project embraced such transactions as the Secretary had in this case with the Indians, and the action which he took under the authority conferred by that act wholly justified all that was done in the premises.

The effect of the Wheeler-Howard Act on the exchange of allotted lands has been the subject of many administrative rulings.

On March 22, 1935,[88] the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior discussed as follows these features of the act:

> Section 1 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), declares that no land of any Indian reservation created or set apart by treaty or agreement with the Indians, act of Congress, Executive Order, purchase or otherwise, shall be allotted in severalty to any Indian. It may be argued with some force that an exchange of a tract of tribal land for an individual allotment of equal value does not come within the class of transactions which this section of the act was designed to prevent. In such case, the tribal land is not depleted. There is no new allotment as such—merely a change of an existing allotment. However this may be, the authority to make an exchange of this sort appears to be conferred by section 4 of the act which, so far as material, reads:
>
> > "Except as herein provided, no * * * exchange * * * of restricted Indian lands or of shares in the assets of any Indian tribe or corporation organized hereunder, shall be made or approved: * * * Provided * * * That the Secretary of the Interior may authorize voluntary exchanges of lands of equal value and the voluntary exchange of shares of equal value whenever such exchange, in his judgment, is expedient and beneficial for or compatible with the proper consolidation of Indian lands and for the benefit of cooperative organizations."
>
> The exchanges authorized to be made under the foregoing section do not appear to be confined to lands in individual ownership. The main clause refers to "restricted Indian lands" and the proviso refers to "voluntary exchanges of lands of equal value." The terms so used are broad and when given their natural meaning they embrace both tribal and individually owned lands. As I view the section, therefore, it operates to prevent the exchange of a tract of unallotted land for a tract in individual ownership unless the lands are of equal value, the exchange is voluntary and is not inconsistent with the proper consolidation of Indian lands. * * *

In a subsequent memorandum, dated February 3, 1937,[89] the Solicitor further stated:

> Section 4, as I read it, authorizes exchanges of lands of equal value. The parties to the exchange may be two individual Indians, an Indian and a white man, an Indian and an Indian tribe, or a white man and an Indian tribe. The requirement of equality of value is substantially complied with if the difference is so small that both parties are ready to disregard it. It is arguable that an exchange transaction involving a small cash payment to boot falls within the scope of section 4. I would suggest that 5 percent of the value of the land might be regarded as a safe margin within which the maxim, de minimis non curat lex, may operate. Where tracts of land are substantially unequal in value, an exchange transaction under section 4 is not authorized. However, where two parties wish to exchange tracts of land and are willing to put improvements on the less valuable tract to make it equal in value to the other tract, no objection can be raised to an exchange. The validity of this proposition is not affected by the question of which party makes the improvements, or whether the improved land goes to an Indian or a white man. In this situation no Indian loses any land, in point of value. The transaction is therefore consistent with the whole purpose of the Reorganization Act. In these cases the report from the field should show that the lands are of equal value and that the exchange is at least compatible with the proper consolidation of Indian lands.

[87] 237 U. S. 43, 51 (1915).

[88] Memo. Sol. I. D., March 22, 1935.

[89] Memo. Sol. I. D., February 3, 1937.

Section 5 of the act, in my opinion, so far as it authorizes land exchanges has an entirely different purpose from section 4. Under section 5 the two tracts of land may be either equal or unequal in value, but if they are unequal in value it must be the Indians rather than the whites involved in the transaction who emerge from the transaction with an increased land value. Thus, an Indian may not convey $2,000 worth of land to a white man where the white man transfers to the Secretary for the Indian's use a tract of land worth only $500 and a cash payment to boot of $1,500. On the other hand, an Indian may transfer the lesser tract to a white man and make an additional payment of $1,500 in exchange for a transfer of the more valuable tract to the Secretary for the benefit of the Indian. The difference between the two cases is not technical or abstruse. In the one case the Indian is selling land; in the other case land is being bought for the Indian's benefit. The former is forbidden and the latter is authorized by the terms of the act. This distinction, based on the major purpose of the act, should eliminate some of the confusion that appears in certain memoranda on this subject in the attached file.

Where exchanges under section 5 affect only Indians it seems to me that the same principles should be applied. Ordinary commercial transactions in land between Indians are not within the purpose of section 5. It seems to me that a transaction under which an Indian surrenders land does not come within the true purpose of section 5 unless some special circumstances such as are mentioned in the land circular referred to above* are shown. I would suggest, therefore, that any recommendation for approval of a sale or surrender of Indian land under section 5 should be based upon a finding supported by facts that the result of the transaction will be to bring more land into effective Indian use.

* Indian Office Land Circular No. 3162, June 30, 1936.

Familiar cases in which such exchanges may advantageously be made are cases involving the exchange of inherited interests, and cases involving the transfer of a more valuable tract of land by a nonresident Indian in exchange for a less valuable tract and a money payment by a resident Indian able to use the newly acquired land.

Without attempting to analyze every possible transaction, I believe that such cases as the attached will be dealt with more expeditiously in the future if it is borne in mind that section 5 contemplates a land acquisition program looking to general improvement in the land status of the Indians and that section 4 contemplates private transactions which do not interfere with that program.

D. MORTGAGES

Mortgages of restricted lands are also prohibited. The court in United States v. First Nat. Bank of Yakima, Wash. said:[90]

> The crops growing upon an Indian allotment are a part of the land and are held in trust by the government the same as the allotment itself, at least until the crops are severed from the land. The use and occupancy of these lands by the Indians, together with the crops grown thereon, are a part of the means which the government has employed to carry out its policy of protection, and I am satisfied that a mortgage of any of these means by the Indian, without the consent of the government, is necessarily null and void. If the lien is valid, it carries with it all the incidents of a valid lien, including the right to appoint a receiver to take charge of and garner the crops, if necessary, and the right to send an officer upon the allotment armed with process to seize and sell the crops without the consent and even over the protest of the government and its agents. That this cannot be done does not, in my opinion, admit of question. (P. 332.)

E. JUDGMENTS

The Supreme Court in Mullen v. Simmons,[91] in holding that restricted lands could not be encumbered by judgments entered against an allottee, whether based on tort or contract, said:

> The section referred to is as follows: "Lands allotted to members and freedmen shall not be affected or encumbered by any deed, debt or obligation of any character contracted prior to the time at which said land may be alienated under this Act, nor shall said lands be sold except as herein provided." c. 1362, 32 Stat. 641, 642.
>
> The Supreme Court of Oklahoma in deciding that this provision did not apply distinguished between the obligations resulting from an Indian's wrongful conduct and the obligations resulting from his contracts, saying, p. 187, "A judgment in damages for tort is not a 'debt contracted'" within the contemplation of § 15. In other words, the court was of the view that the tort retained its identity, though merged in the judgment. However, we need not enter into the controversy of the cases and the books as to whether a judgment is a contract. Passing such considerations, and regarding the policy of § 15 and its language, we are unable to concur with the Supreme Court of Oklahoma.
>
> This court said, in Starr v. Long Jim, 227 U. S. 613, 625, that the title to lands allotted to Indians was "retained by the United States for reasons of public policy, and in order to protect the Indians against their own improvidence." It was held, applying the principle, that a warranty deed made by Long Jim at a time when he did not have the power of alienation "was in the very teeth of the policy of the law, and could not operate as a conveyance, either by its primary force or by way of estoppel" after he had received a patent for the land.
>
> The principle was applied again in Franklin v. Lynch, 233 U. S. 269, and its strict character enforced against the deed of a white woman who acquired title in an Indian right. It is true, in these cases the act of the Indian was voluntary or contractual, and, it is contended, a different effect can be ascribed to the wrongs done by an Indian and that in reparation or retribution of them the state law may subject his inalienable lands—inalienable by the National law—to alienation. The consequence of the contention repels its acceptance. Torts are of variable degree. In the present case that counted on reached, perhaps, the degree of a crime, but a tort may be a breach of a mere legal duty, a consequence of negligent conduct. The policy of the law is, as we have said, to protect the Indians against their improvidence, and improvidence may affect all of their acts, those of commission and omission, contracts and torts. And we think § 15 of the act of July 1, 1902, was purposely made broadly protective, broadly preclusive of alienation by any conduct of the Indian, and not only its policy but its language distinguishes it from the statute passed on in Brun v. Mann, 151 Fed. Rep. 145. Its language is that "lands allotted * * * shall not be affected or encumbered by any deed, debt or obligation of any character contracted prior to the time at which" the lands may be alienated, "nor shall said lands be sold except" as in the act provided. The prohibition then is that the lands shall not be "affected * * * by any obligation of any character," and, as we have seen, an obligation may arise from a tort as well as from a contract, from a breach of duty or the violation of a right. Exchange Bank v. Ford, 7 Colorado, 314, 316. If this were not so, a prearranged tort and a judgment confessed would become an easy means of circumventing the policy of the law.

F. CONDEMNATION

Section 357 of title 25 of the United States Code, derived from the Act of March 3, 1901,[92] provides:

> Lands allotted in severalty to Indians may be condemned for any public purpose under the laws of the State or [90] 282 Fed. 330 (D. C. E. D. Wash., 1922). But see Miller v. McClain, 249 U. S. 308, 311 (1919).

[91] 234 U. S. 192, 197–199 (1914).

[92] 31 Stat. 1058, 1084. The preceding provision of this section relating to grants of rights-of-way for telephone and telegraph lines through Indian reservations are set forth under sec. 319 of title 25. Permission to state or local authorities for the opening of public highways through Indian reservations or lands allotted to Indians in severalty was authorized by sec. 4 of this act, 25 U. S. C. 311.

The United States is an indispensable party defendant in a condemnation proceeding brought by a state to acquire a right-of-way over lands which the United States owns and holds in trust for Indian allottees. Minnesota v. United States, 305 U. S. 382 (1939). For regulations regarding condemnation of allotted lands, see 25 C. F. R. 256.71–256.74.

Territory where located in the same manner as land owned in fee may be condemned, and the money awarded as damages shall be paid to the allottee.

Subsequent legislation concerning rights-of-way through Indian reservations is found in the Act of February 28, 1902[93] and of May 27, 1908.[94] The first-mentioned act authorized any railroad company to condemn a right-of-way through Indian lands, the second provided that no restriction upon alienation should be construed to prevent the exercise of the right of eminent domain in condemning rights-of-way for public purposes over allotted lands.

G. REMOVAL[95] OF RESTRICTIONS[96]

Restrictions on alienation of lands imposed by the allotment acts run with the land and are not personal to the allottee. Hence the removal of such restrictions as to an allotment by the Secretary in accordance with a statute does not operate to remove restrictions as to other tracts in which the Indian may be interested. In reaching this holding the Circuit Court of Appeals in Johnson v. United States said:[97]

> Appellants rely also on that part of the act of February 8, 1887, as the sixth section thereof is amended by the act of May 8, 1906 (34 Stat. 183 [Comp. St. § 4203]), reading:
>
> "Provided, that the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, and he is hereby authorized, whenever he shall be satisfied that any Indian allottee is competent and capable of managing his or her affairs at any time to cause to be issued to such allottee a patent in fee simple, and thereafter all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said land shall be removed * * *"
>
> and also on subsequent acts (35 Stat. 444; 36 Stat. 855; 37 Stat. 678) which extend the power of the Secretary to determine the heirs of deceased allottees, and provide that, if he is satisfied of their ability to manage their own affairs, he may cause patents in fee simple to be issued to them for their inherited interest. The contention, as we understand it, is that, if the Secretary, acting under these statutes, removes the restriction as to any allotment or an inherited interest therein, such action on his part operates to remove restrictions on other tracts in which the Indian may be interested. But the effect of this contention is to make the restriction against alienation personal to the Indian, whereas the uniform ruling is that it attaches to and runs with the land. In U. S. v. Noble, 237 U. S. 74, it is said, at page 80, 35 Sup. Ct. 532, 59 L. Ed. 844, that the restriction binds the land for the time stated. See, also, Bowling v. U. S., 233 U. S. 528, 34 Sup. Ct. 659, 58 L. Ed. 1080; Id., 191 Fed. 19, 111 C. C. A. 561; Goodrum v. Buffalo, 162 Fed. 817, 89 C. C. A. 525. Furthermore, the facts as we obtain them from the record do not show a removal of restrictions, as claimed, in behalf of any Indian other than those that have been heretofore named and whose conveyances we held to be valid under the act of June 21, 1906, as above stated. (Pp. 956–957.)

H. RIGHTS OF CONVEYEES OF ALLOTTED LANDS

Contracts involving allotted lands which are not yet freed from restrictions have been held void.[98] Justice Holmes in the case of Sage v. Hampe[99] explained:

> * * * The purpose of the law still is to protect the Indian interest and a contract that tends to bring to bear improper influence upon the Secretary of the Interior and to induce attempts to mislead him as to what the welfare of the Indian requires are as contrary to the policy of the law as others that have been condemned by the courts. Kelly v. Harper, 7 Ind. Terr. 541. See Larson v. First National Bank, 62 Nebraska, 303, 308.

Courts and administrators have consistently refused to order the restoration of consideration received by an Indian for a conveyance which violates such laws, despite the good faith of the party dealing with the Indian[100] and the bad faith of the Indian who intended to deceive the purchaser.[101]

In the case of Bartlett v. Okla. Oil Co.,[102] the District Court stated:

> * * * The disabilities under which these wards of the government are placed as to the alienation of restricted lands is very similar to those attaching to minors with reference to their contracts, and in the latter case it is established that the acts and declarations of a minor during infancy cannot estop him from asserting the invalidity of his debts after he has attained his majority. Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 300, 26 L. Ed. 87. (P. 391.)

The Supreme Court in the case of Heckman v. United States,[103] per Hughes, J., said:

> It is said that the allottees have received the consideration and should be made parties in order that equitable

---

[93] 32 Stat. 43.

[94] 35 Stat. 312 (Five Civilized Tribes).

[95] The Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Bartlett, 235 U. S. 72, 80 (1914), discussed a meaning of the word "removed":

> The real controversy is over the meaning of the word "removed." It is not questioned that it embraces the action of Congress and of the Secretary of the Interior in abrogating or cancelling restrictions in advance of the time fixed for their expiration, but it is insisted that it does not embrace their termination by the lapse of time. In short, the contention is that the word is used in a sense which comprehends only an affirmative act, such as a rescission or revocation while the statutory period was still running. Although having support in some definitions of the word, the contention is, in our opinion, untenable, for other parts of the same act, as also other acts dealing with the same subject, show that the word is employed in this legislation in a broad sense plainly including a termination of the restrictions through the expiration of the prescribed period. This is illustrated in §§ 4 and 5 of the act of 1908 and § 19 of the act of April 26, 1906, c. 1876, 34 Stat. 137, 144, and is recognized in Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665, 673, where, in dealing with some of these allotments, it was said that "restrictions on alienation were removed by lapse of time."

[96] On the power of the Secretary of the Interior to remove and reimpose restrictions, see Chapter 5, sec. 11. For regulations regarding issuance of patents in fee, see 25 C. F. R. 241.1–241.2.

[97] 283 Fed. 954 (C. C. A. 8, 1922). Accord: United States v. Estill, 62 F. 2d 620 (C. C. A. 10, 1932).

[98] Allotted lands are declared not liable for debts contracted prior to the issuance of the final patent in fee therefor. 25 U. S. C. 354, derived from Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325, 327. And see Act of February 8, 1887, sec. 5, 24 Stat. 388, 389, as amended, 25 U. S. C. 348.

[99] 235 U. S. 99, 105 (1914).

[100] United States v. Walters, 17 F. 2d 116 (D. C. Minn. 1926), holding that a purchaser of land from an Indian allottee during the trust period is not entitled to return of the purchase money as a condition to the cancellation of the deed at suit of the United States. In United States v. Brown, 8 F. 2d 564 (C. C. A. 8, 1925), cert. den. 270 U. S. 644 (1926), the court said that "Whether the disposition of this land was made in good faith or upon commendable considerations cannot be made to affect this decision, which involves a public policy of far-reaching consequences." (P. 568.) Also see Sage v. Hampe, 235 U. S. 99, 105 (1914), and Smith v. McCullough, 270 U. S. 456 (1926), rev'g 285 Fed. 698 (C. C. A. 8, 1922), invalidating leases negotiated for a forbidden term.

The Circuit Court of Appeals in United States v. Raiche, 31 F. 2d 624 (D. C. W. D. Wis. 1928) said:

> The bona fides of the transaction was held to be beside the point in United States v. Brown, 8 F. (2d) 564 (C. C. A. 8), in which it is said: "The bona fides of these conveyances is unimportant. Whether the disposition of this land was made in good faith or upon commendable considerations cannot be made to affect this decision, which involves a public policy of far-reaching consequences."
>
> Indeed, it seems this must be the correct rule, else the effectiveness of such restrictions would be readily frittered away. * * * (P. 627.)

[101] United States v. Walters, 17 F. 2d 116 (D. C. Minn. 1926).

[102] 218 Fed. 380 (D. C. E. D. Okla. 1914), aff'd sub nom. Okla. Oil Co. v. Bartlett, 236 Fed. 488 (C. C. A. 8, 1916).

[103] 224 U. S. 413 (1912), mod'g. and aff'g. in part United States v. Allen, 179 Fed. 13 (C. C. A. 8, 1910).

restoration may be enforced. Where, however, conveyance has been made in violation of the restrictions, it is plain that the return of the consideration cannot be regarded as an essential prerequisite to a decree of cancelation. Otherwise, if the Indian grantor had squandered the money, he would lose the land which Congress intended he should hold, and the very incompetence and thriftlessness which were the occasion of the measures for his protection would render them of no avail. The effectiveness of the acts of Congress is not thus to be destroyed. The restrictions were set forth in public laws, and were matters of general knowledge. Those who dealt with the Indians contrary to these provisions are not entitled to insist that they should keep the land if the purchase price is not repaid and thus frustrate the policy of the statute. United States v. Trinidad Coal Co., 137 U. S. 160, 170, 171. (Pp. 446, 447.)

SECTION 5. LEASING OF ALLOTTED LANDS

We have elsewhere noted that by virtue of a general statutory prohibition against leasing of tribal lands dating from the Act of May 19, 1796,[104] valid leases of tribal lands can be made only pursuant to specific statutes expressly authorizing such leases. Such is not the case with allotted lands. There is no general statutory prohibition against leasing of allotted lands. Limitations, if they exist, are to be found in the treaty or statute prescribing the tenure under which the allotment is to be held.

No attempt will be made in these pages to analyze the various leasing provisions of statutes applicable to particular tribes.[105]

The prohibition against leases contained in the General Allotment Act is found in section 5[106] of that act, which is embodied in the United States Code as section 348 of title 25, providing:

> * * * And if any conveyance shall be made of the land set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same, before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void. * * *

This general provision has been modified by a series of statutes authorizing leases, subject to Interior Department control, in a variety of cases. Note has already been taken of the historical process, which began in 1891, of amending this provision contained in the General Allotment Act so as to permit leasing in a growing class of cases. These amendments authorizing the leasing of allotted lands vary in four major respects: (1) The purpose of the lease; (2) the term of the lease; (3) who is to make the lease; and (4) who is to approve the lease.

A brief comment on each of these points is in order.

(1) Leasing of restricted Indian allotments, without regard to the purpose of the lease, is authorized by section 4 of the Act of June 25, 1910,[107] which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to consent to the alienation of allotments "by deed, will, lease, or any other form of conveyance" in cases where, by the terms of special allotment laws or treaties, land is inalienable without the consent of the President.

Other statutes in the field limit the leases which they authorize to those made for specific purposes such as "farming and grazing purposes";[108] "irrigation farming";[109] "farming purposes only";[110] and "mining purposes".[111]

(2) The statutes permitting the Secretary to lease certain heirship lands,[112] to approve leases on lands the alienation of which originally required Presidential consent[113] and authorizing mining leases on allotted lands[114] contain no limitations as to the term of years for which the lease may be made. Other statutes limit the term to 5[115] or 10 years.[116]

---

[104] Sec. 12, 1 Stat. 469, 472. See Chapter 15, sec. 19.

[105] Acts applying to particular tribes include the following:

Allotted lands on the Fort Belknap Reservation, susceptible of irrigation, may be leased for not to exceed ten years for sugar beets "and other crops in rotation" (Act of March 1, 1907, 34 Stat. 1015, 1034).

Allotted lands in the Shoshone Reservation may be leased for maximum terms of twenty years (Act of April 30, 1908, 35 Stat. 70, 97).

Yakima Reservation allottees may lease unimproved allotted lands for agricultural purposes for a period of not more than ten years (Act of March 1, 1899, 30 Stat. 924, 941, and Act of May 31, 1900, 31 Stat. 221, 246).

The Secretary of the Interior may lease, for a maximum of ten years, the irrigable allotments of any Indian allottees of the former Uintah and Uncompahgre Reservation in Utah when the allottee is unable to cultivate the same or any portion (Act of April 30, 1908, 35 Stat. 70, 95).

Competent Crow allottees may lease their own and their minor children's allotments for five years. Adult incompetent Crows may lease their own and their children's allotments with the approval of the agency superintendent for terms up to five years. Lands of Crow minor orphans may be leased by their superintendent for the same term (Act of May 26, 1926, 44 Stat. 658).

Most of the foregoing acts place the leasing of Indian allotted lands under the superintendent of the reservations. Competent adult Crow Indians may execute farming and grazing leases without restraint of the Indian Service (Act of May 26, 1929, 44 Stat. 658).

Allottees under the Quapaw Agency may lease lands for not to exceed three years for farming or grazing purposes or ten years for mining or business purposes (Act of June 7, 1897, 30 Stat. 62, 72).

On Five Tribes leasing statutes, see Chapter 23, sec. 10. On Osage leasing statutes see ibid., sec. 12D.

[106] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 389, amended Act of March 3, 1901, sec. 9, 31 Stat. 1058, 1084.

It has been held that an assignment by an Indian of royalties from a mining lease of restricted lands is void as constituting an assignment of part of his inalienable reversion. United States v. Moore, 284 Fed. 86 (C. C. A. 8, 1922).

[107] 36 Stat. 855, 856, 25 U. S. C. 403.

Sec. 5 of this act (36 Stat. 855, 857) makes it unlawful and punishable by fine and imprisonment "for any person to induce any Indian to execute any contract, deed, mortgage, or other instrument purporting to convey any land or any interest therein held by the United States in trust for such Indian, or to offer any such contract, deed, mortgage, or other instrument for record in the office of any recorder of deeds."

On administrative power of the Secretary over leasing, see Chapter 5, sec. 11E. When approval is secured, the lease is effective as of the date of execution. Hallam v. Commerce Mining and Royalty Co., 49 F. 2d 103 (C. C. A. 10, 1931), aff'g 32 F. 2d 371 (D. C. N. D. Okla. 1929), cert. den. 284 U. S. 643 (1931). Also see Hampton v. Ewert, 22 F. 2d 81 (C. C. A. 8, 1927), cert. den. 276 U. S. 623 (1928).

[108] Act of March 3, 1921, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 1225, 1232, 25 U. S. C. 393. On general grazing regulations, see 25 C. F. R. 71.1–71.26. On regulations for leasing of certain restricted allotted Indian lands for mining, see 25 C. F. R. 189.1–189.32.

[109] Act of May 18, 1916, sec. 1, 39 Stat. 123, 128, 25 U. S. C. 394.

[110] Act of May 31, 1900, sec. 1, 31 Stat. 221, 229, 25 U. S. C. 395.

[111] Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 783, 25 U. S. C. 396, amended by Act of May 11, 1938, 52 Stat. 347, 25 U. S. C. 396A–396F.

Leases of Indian mineral lands frequently concern only certain specified minerals. For example, when only oil is named in the lease, it is a wrongful conversion to sell the gas issued from the well, except that such an oil lessee may use gas necessary to facilitate production upon the leased land, such as to run compressors and to repressure his well. Utilities Production Corp. v. Carter Oil Co., 2 F. Supp. 81 (D. C. N. D. Okla. 1933).

[112] Act of July 8, 1940 (Pub. No. 732, 76th Cong.).

[113] Act of September 21, 1922, sec. 6, 42 Stat. 994, 995, 25 U. S. C. 392.

[114] Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 783, 25 U. S. C. 396.

[115] Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 4, 36 Stat. 855, 856, 25 U. S. C. 403.

[116] Act of May 18, 1916, sec. 1, 39 Stat. 123, 128, 25 U. S. C. 394.

The policy behind this limitation of term has been considered in interpreting other statutes relating to leases of Indian lands. Thus the Circuit Court in United States v. Haddock, 21 F. 2d 165 (C. C. A. 8, 1927) said:

> Whenever Congress has authorized Indian allottees to lease their lands without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior

(3) Most of the statutes provide specifically that the lease shall be made by the allottee or by the heirs to whom the allotment has descended.[117] Other statutes leave this to inference.[118] A statute authorizing leasing of lands in heirship status allows the local superintendent to execute leases under specified conditions.[119]

It has been administratively ruled that the statutory requirement of execution by the allottee cannot be waived so as to authorize the execution of leases by the superintendent of the reservation.[120]

(4) Several of the statutes specifically require the "approval" or "consent or approval" of the Secretary to a lease of allotted lands.[121]

Other statutes require approval "of the superintendent or other officer in charge of the reservation where the land is located."[122] Still other statutes leave it to the regulations of the Secretary to determine whether approval shall be by the Secretary, by the Commissioner, or by a local reservation official.[123]

A lease made without the approval required by the statute or by regulations issued pursuant to such statute is generally considered to be void.[124] There are, however, a number of unsettled

---

it has limited the period for which the leases can be made, and in order to protect the Indian allottees it has been held that Congress intended thereby to authorize the allottees to make leases in possession, and not in future or reversion, and such is the doctrine of the Noble Case. But as to leases where the approval of the Secretary of the Interior is necessary to give validity thereto the reason for the rule fails. The allottee is protected by the requirement of departmental approval. The lease here was made and approved as provided by law. * * * (P. 167.)

Also see Bunch v. Cole, 263 U. S. 250 (1923), and United States v. Noble, 237 U. S. 74 (1915), rev'g 197 Fed. 292 (C. C. A. 8, 1912).

The broad outlines of administrative policy concerning the leasing of allotted lands are shown by many of the regulations. For instance, sec. 171.1 of 25 C. F. R. provides "* * * leases should be made for the shortest term for which advantageous contracts can be secured with responsible parties."

[117] Act of March 3, 1921, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 1225, 1232, 25 U. S. C. 393 (farming and grazing leases); Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 783, 25 U. S. C. 396 (mining leases).

[118] Act of May 18, 1916, sec. 1, 39 Stat. 123, 128, 25 U. S. C. 394 (leases of irrigable allotments); Act of May 31, 1900, sec. 1, 31 Stat. 221, 229, 25 U. S. C. 395 (leases where allottee is incapacitated).

[119] The Act of July 8, 1940, Public, No. 732; 76th Cong., 3d sess., provides:

> That restricted allotments of deceased Indians may be leased, except for oil and gas mining purposes, by the superintendents of the reservation within which the lands are located (1) when the heirs or devisees of such decedents have not been determined and (2) when the heirs or devisees of the decedents have been determined, and such lands are not in use by any of the heirs and the heirs have not been able during a three-months' period to agree upon a lease by reason of the number of the heirs, their absence from the reservation, or for other cause, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. The proceeds derived from such leases shall be credited to the estates or other accounts of the individuals entitled thereto in accordance with their respective interests.

[120] "This office has had occasion frequently to point out that the general rule for the leasing of Indian allotments is that the signatures of the Indian owner or owners must be obtained before approval can be given to a lease. In a memorandum dated October 28, 1937, the Solicitor, in dealing with a similar factual situation, held that section 7 of the Leasing Regulations as revised by departmental circular of December 18, 1936, while authorizing a substantial majority of the heirs of allotted land in heirship status to execute a lease thereof does not authorize an heir or heirs representing only a half interest in the land to do likewise. It was pointed out that the Department was without legal power to approve a lease, where the owner, or the owners of a majority interest, were unable to agree to the lease, except in such special cases as infancy, mental disability, or pending heirship determinations. These exceptions are not to be broadened into unlimited administrative discretion. The special circumstances where the Department may act without the consent of the Indian owner, or a majority interest, are those cases where there is no owner, or owners, legally capable of executing a valid lease of the land. They are not every case where Department officials may feel that some of the Indians are acting unwisely or capriciously, or to the detriment of the other Indians interested in the land.

In the present case, one heir, Jennie Kills First, has signed the lease. The other heir, Benjamin Kills First, refuses, however, to sign it. There is no legal authority, therefore, to take the action proposed in the letter. Neither heir holds such a substantial majority interest in the land as to enable him or her to bind the other. The Indian owners are known and are capable of executing a valid lease. Their motives in signing, or not signing, are not relevant at this point." (Memo. Sol. I. D. June 15, 1938.)

Sec. 7 of the leasing regulations above referred to, embodied in 25 C. F. R. 171.8, declares:

> When the heirs owning a substantial majority in interest are desirous of leasing their inherited trust or restricted lands, the Superintendent is authorized to approve such a lease provided the heirs holding a minority interest in the estate have been notified of the proposed lease and have not objected to such a lease. In case the heirs holding such minority interest have objected to the approval of a lease on such inherited lands, the Superintendent, if in his judgment owners of the majority interest are best served, may approve the lease, and in such case, the share of the rentals that would accrue thereunder to the owners of the minority interest shall be held in escrow by the Superintendent to be paid to such heirs upon their request or when and if they sign the lease. Such minority owners may, however, be permitted through partition or other arrangement with their coheirs to make use of such part of the land as may be equivalent to their undivided interests in the whole, in which event the rentals otherwise due them and held in escrow shall be refunded to the lessee. Approved leases executed by the heirs holding a majority interest shall be regarded as covering the entire acreage included in the lease and no refund of any portion of the rentals paid thereunder shall be made to the lessee save when by partition or other arrangement, heirs not parties to the lease have been permitted to use a portion of the land included in the lease. * * * (P. 268.)

For a discussion of the lack of power of the Secretary, or the superintendent on his behalf, to change the terms of a lease, see Holmes v. United States, 33 F. 2d 688 (C. C. A. 8, 1929), and United States v. Sandstrom, 22 F. Supp. 190 (D. C. N. D. Okla. 1938).

[121] Act of September 21, 1922, sec. 6, 42 Stat. 994, 995, 25 U. S. C. 392. And see sec. 1C, supra. Also see Chapter 5, sec. 1E. For a discussion of early statutes giving the Secretary power to approve leases, see Miller v. McClain, 249 U. S. 308 (1919).

[122] Act of March 3, 1921, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 1225, 1232, 25 U. S. C. 393.

[123] Act of May 18, 1916, sec. 1, 39 Stat. 123, 128, 25 U. S. C. 394 (leasing of irrigable land); Act of May 31, 1900, sec. 1, 31 Stat. 221, 229, 25 U. S. C. 395 (leasing where allottee is incapacitated); Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 783, 25 U. S. C. 396 (mining leases); Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 4, 36 Stat. 855, 856, 25 U. S. C. 403 (leasing of trust allotments generally).

By the Act of May 11, 1938, 52 Stat. 347, 25 U. S. C. 396e, the Secretary of the Interior may delegate his power of approval of mining leases to superintendents or other Indian Service officials. Previously it was held that the superintendent had no power of approval of leases. See Central National Bank of Tulsa, Oklahoma, v. United States, 283 Fed. 368 (C. C. A. 8, 1922). By statute, however, the superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes could previously act for the Secretary in approving leases. See Act of May 27, 1908, sec. 2, 35 Stat. 312, interpreted in Holmes v. United States, 33 F. 2d 688 (C. C. A. 8, 1929). The superintendent for the Osage Tribe also possessed such power pursuant to the Act of June 28, 1906, sec. 7, 34 Stat. 539, 545, interpreted in United States v. Sandstrom, 22 F. Supp. 190 (D. C. N. D. Okla. 1938).

The regulation which is specifically concerned with business leases provides:

> Whenever it is deemed advisable to lease allotted Indian land for business purposes, the Superintendent should report the facts, object, terms, and conditions of the proposed lease to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who, if he deems it proper, may grant authority therefor, and no lease of this nature should be made without such prior approval. (25 C. F. R. 171.10.)

[124] "* * * It thus appears that the leases under which the defendants claim the right to the possession of the lands allotted in severalty are wholly void, having been taken in direct violation of the provisions of the acts of congress under which the allotments in severalty were made; that the occupancy of the lands and the cultivation thereof by the defendants is wholly inconsistent with the purpose for which the lands were originally set apart as a reservation for the Indians, and with the object of the government in providing for allotments in severalty; that such occupancy is held contrary to the rules and regulations of the department of the interior, and is held, not for the benefit, protection, and advancement of the Indians, but for the benefit of the original lessees and their subtenants; that such occupancy of said lands by the defendants results in antagonizing the authority and control of the government over the Indians, and is clearly detrimental to their best interests, and materially interferes with the rules and regulations of the department charged with the duty of carrying out the treaty stipulations under which the land forming the reservations was set apart for the benefit and occupancy of the Indians. Having questions as to the legal position of the parties under such an illegal lease.[125]

Apart from the four matters above considered, as to which different leasing statutes vary, it remains to be said that all the statutes subject the leasing of allotments to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Such regulations require the payment of filing fees[126] and the execution of a bond by the lessee.[127] Rents, and, in the case of mineral leases, royalties are ordinarily payable to the superintendent on behalf of the allottee.[128]

Employees of the Office of Indian Affairs may not purchase any lease or have any interest therein, or have any interest in any corporation holding leases on Indian land.[129]

In matters not covered by the statutes or by the regulations authorized thereunder the courts have applied familiar rules of law governing leases. Thus it has been held that a tenant is estopped from denying his landlord's title[130] and that this estoppel continues until the tenant yields title.[131] But the landlord's title means the title which the landlord purported to have at the creation of the tenancy, and termination of such title afterwards may be shown.[132] assumed the duty of securing the use and occupancy of these lands to the Indians, and being charged with the duty of enforcing the provisions of the acts of congress forbidding all alienations of the lands until the expiration of the period of 25 years after the allotment thereof, the government of the United States, through the executive branch thereof, has the right to invoke the aid of the courts, by mandatory injunction and other proper process, to compel parties wrongfully in possession of the lands held in trust by the United States for the Indians to yield the possession thereof, and to restrain such parties from endeavoring to obtain or retain the possession of these lands in violation of law. * * *" (United States v. Flournoy Live-Stock & Real-Estate Co., 69 Fed. 886, 894 (C. C. Neb. 1895).)

[125] See with respect to the parallel situation under unauthorized leases of tribal land, Chapter 15, sec. 19.

[126] See 25 C. F. R. 183.7; also see 189.31 (mining leases). For statutory authority for such fees, see Act of February 14, 1920, 41 Stat. 408, 415, as amended by Act of March 1, 1933, 47 Stat. 1417, 25 U. S. C. 413.

[127] See, e. g., 25 C. F. R. 183.15.

Many statutory requirements are designed to insure the proper payment of rents and royalties.

The Act of May 11, 1938, 52 Stat. 347, 348, 25 U. S. C. 396c, requires lessees of restricted lands for mineral purposes, including oil and gas, to furnish surety bonds for the faithful performance of the terms of the leases.

Lease forms are often prepared by the Department of the Interior. See Montana Eastern Ltd. v. United States, 95 F. 2d 897 (C. C. A. 9, 1938). For a discussion of the power of the United States with respect to violations of leases on restricted lands, see Chapter 19, sec. 2A(1).

[128] 25 C. F. R. 186.12, 189.14. Circumstances under which allottees are permitted to make their own leases are defined in current regulations in these terms:

> Any adult allottees deemed by the Superintendent to have the requisite knowledge, experience, and business capacity may be permitted to negotiate their own leases and collect the rentals therefor. All such leases, however, must be approved by the Superintendent. This privilege should be granted in writing, and with some liberality, and be subject to revocation at any time the allotte proves himself unworthy of it by wasteful expenditure of the money. Indians of this class may also be permitted to negotiate leases on the land of their minor children, but not to collect the rentals, which shall be paid to the Superintendent for deposit to the minors' credit as individual Indian money. Such leases must be approved by the Superintendent. (25 C. F. R. 171.4.)

[129] Act of June 30, 1834, 4 Stat. 735, 738; 25 U. S. C. 68. See Chapter 2, sec. 3B, fn. 335.

[130] Eagle-Picher Lead Co. v. Fullerton, 28 F. 2d 472 (C. C. A. 8, 1928).

[131] Sittel v. Wright, 122 Fed. 434 (C. C. A. 8, 1903).

[132] Eagle-Picher Lead Co. v. Fullerton, supra.

SECTION 6. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION OF ALLOTTED LANDS[133]

No feature of the allotment system has provoked more criticism than the "heirship problem" and it is against the background of this problem that existing law must be reviewed.

> It is doubtful if the serious nature of this problem was appreciated at the time the allotment acts were passed. Because of this feature of the allotment system the land of the Indians is rapidly passing into the hands of the whites, and a generation of landless, almost penniless, unadjusted Indians is coming on. What happens is this: The Indian to whom the land was allotted dies leaving several heirs. Actual division of the land among them is impracticable. The estate is either leased or sold to whites and the proceeds are divided among the heirs and are used for living expenses. So long as one member of the family of heirs has land the family is not landless or homeless, but as time goes on the last of the original allottees will die and the public will have the landless, unadjusted Indians on its hands.[134]

The problem of the landless younger generations on those reservations which were earliest allotted was the chief problem leading to the termination of the allotment system.[135] In place of alienable titles, the tendency today is to grant, out of tribal lands, "assignments" of land which are to be used by the "assignee" and which revert to the tribe for reassignment when no longer so used. This development has occurred on reservations which still retain sufficient areas of unallotted land. As for the other areas, any development along these lines depends upon (a) federal acquisition of land for the tribe, under section 5 of the Wheeler-Howard Act[136] or restoration of ceded lands, under section 3;[137] or (b) the acquisition of land by a tribe, through exchange of allotments for assignments, or through land purchase or through other legal means.[138]

Meanwhile, on the allotted reservations, the complexities of the "heirship" problem increase in geometric progression.

> The problem of land is still the greatest unsolved problem of Indian administration. The condition of allotted lands in heirship status grows more complicated each year. Commissioner Collier supplied the House Appropriations Committee a year ago with examples showing probate and administrative expenditures upon heirship lands totaling costs seventy times the value of the land; and under existing law these costs are destined to increase indefinitely. Responsibility lies with Congress and the administration to work out a practical solution to this problem, either in terms of corporate ownership of lands, or through some modification of the existing inheritance system. (P. 34.)[139]

The chief reasons for this complexity appear to be: (1) The Indian allottee does not ordinarily have ready cash or credit facilities for the settlement of estates where physical partition is not practicable.[140]

(2) The Indian allottee frequently does not consider land in a commercial aspect, and in many cases he could not get as much cash income from the land as a non-Indian, and therefore cannot outbid non-Indian purchasers of heirship lands.[141]

[133] Questions of administrative power in this field are dealt with in Chapter 5, sec. 11C. Questions of jurisdiction are considered in Chapter 19, sec. 5.

[134] Meriam, The Problem of Indian Administration (1928), p. 40.

[135] See sec. 1D, supra.

[136] See Chapter 15, sec. 8.

[137] See Chapter 15, sec. 7.

[138] See Chapter 15, sec. 8.

[139] Abeita et al., The New Day for the Indians (1938).

[140] See quotation from Meriam, supra.

[141] See sec. 1C, supra.

(3) It may be that Indian family relations are more complicated than the family relations of non-Indians in rural areas, although there do not appear to be any authoritative figures on this point.

(4) The Indian population, on most allotted reservations, is without channels by which members of families too large for the family homestead and too poor to increase it move off to other rural or urban areas. The application to the allotted Indians of state inheritance laws adapted to a more fluid population and economy has therefore had striking and largely unforeseen results.

(5) Under existing law the cost of administration is borne by the Federal Government rather than by the individual Indians concerned in the estate. There is thus no economic incentive on the part of the Indians concerned to simplify the status of heirship lands.

A. INTESTACY

In the absence of statute, heirs to an allotment are determined in accordance with tribal custom.[142]

The General Allotment Act, like several special allotment acts, modifies this rule and substitutes state law as a standard for the determination of heirs. The most important consequence of this shift has been the multiplication of the number of heirs and the subdivision of interests in "dead allotments."

This result is achieved by section 5 of the General Allotment Act,[143] which prescribes that the patent issued to each allottee under the General Allotment Act shall > * * * declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located * * *.

Where an Indian to whom an allotment of land has been made dies before the expiration of the trust period and before the issuance of a fee simple patent without having made a will disposing of said allotment the Secretary of the Interior may, under rules prescribed by him and upon notice and hearing, determine the heirs; his decision is final and conclusive.[144] The statute[145] granting him this right further provides:

(1) If the Secretary finds the heirs competent to manage their own affairs he may issue a patent in fee to them for the allotment.

(2) If he finds partition to be to the advantage of the heirs, he may, on petition of the competent heirs, issue patents in fee to them for their shares.

(3) If he finds one or more of them incompetent, he may cause the land to be sold, under certain rules of sale.

(4) The shares of the proceeds of the sale due the competent Indians are to be paid to them.

(5) The shares due the incompetent ones are to be held in trust for their use during the trust period.

(6) The purchaser of the land receives a patent in fee.

The foregoing provision, though phrased to apply to trust allotments, has been held by the Supreme Court to be applicable to restricted allotments in fee as well.[146]

The power of Congress to enact this statute and the power of the Secretary thereunder have been elsewhere treated.[147]

The Act of June 18, 1934, has not affected the mode of intestate descent of allotted lands.

Certain of the regulations pertaining to the determination of heirs define the manner in which the Secretary determines heirs.[148] Eight examiners of inheritance are appointed, one for each probate district in the Indian country.[149] It is made the duty of the superintendent in charge of any allotted reservation, as soon as he is informed of the death of an allottee or an Indian possessed of trust property within the jurisdiction, to cause to be prepared an inventory showing in detail the estate of the decedent and also a certificate of appraisement thereof and statement as to reimbursable claims.[150]

Notice of hearing is provided for by the requirement that the examiner of inheritance shall post, for 20 days in five or more conspicuous places on the reservation or in the vicinity of the place of hearing, notices of the time and place at which he will take testimony to determine the legal heirs of the deceased Indian, calling upon all persons interested to attend the hearing.[151] Copies of the notice are usually served personally on all persons who the superintendent believes are probable heirs or creditors of the deceased.[152] A further requirement is made of the examiner that he inspect carefully the allotment, census, and annuity rolls, and any other records on file at the agency, and obtain all other information which may enable him to make a prima facie list of the heirs of such deceased Indian.[153]

Minors in interest must be represented at the hearings by a natural guardian or by a guardian ad litem appointed by the examiner.[154]

Parties interested in any probate case before an examiner of inheritance may appear by attorney.[155] Attorneys appearing before the examiner of inheritance, the Indian Office, or the Department of the Interior, must have a power of attorney from their respective clients and must be licensed attorneys, admitted to practice.[156] Written arguments or briefs may be presented.[157]

All claimants are required to be summoned to appear and testify at the hearings. There must be present at least two disinterested witnesses, who are acquainted with and have direct knowledge of the family history of the decedent.[158] In case the decedent is a minor, unmarried and without issue, and the heirs are members of the immediate families of the decedent, the ex-

---

[142] See Chapter 7, sec. 6; Chapter 10, sec. 10.

[143] Act of February 8, 1887, 24 Stat. 388, 389, amended Act March 3, 1901, sec. 9, 31 Stat. 1058, 1085, 25 U. S. C. 348.

[144] In Chase v. United States, 272 Fed. 684 (C. C. A. 8, 1921), the court held that the determination by the Secretary of the Interior that a certain person was the heir of a deceased Omaha allottee who as such had a life estate in the allotment under the Nebraska laws was conclusive. The same principle was followed in Lane v. United States ex rel. Mickadiet, 241 U. S. 201 (1916), wherein it was further held that even after determining the heirs the Secretary may reopen his decision at any time during the trust period.

[145] Act of June 25, 1910, sec. 1, 36 Stat. 855; Act of March 3, 1928, 45 Stat. 161; Act of April 30, 1934, 48 Stat. 647; 25 U. S. C. 372.

[146] United States v. Bowling, 256 U. S. 484 (1921).

[147] See Chapter 5, secs. 5C, 11C.

[148] The procedure in Indian probate cases is discussed in Monograph No. 20, Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure (1940).

[149] 25 C. F. R. 81.1, 81.2, 81.3.

[150] 25 C. F. R. 81.5. The superintendent also notifies the examiner for the district and the Probate Division of the Office of Indian Affairs of the demise of an Indian with restricted property. When an Indian of any allotted reservation dies leaving only personal property or cash of a value less than $250, the superintendent of the reservation where the property is found is authorized to assemble the apparent heirs and hold an informal hearing, with a view to the proper distribution thereof. In the disposition of such funds, the superintendent is authorized to pay funeral charges and expenses of last illness and any just claims for necessaries furnished decedent. 25 C. F. R. 81.23 (1940).

[151] 25 C. F. R. 81.6. Also see 81.10–81.11.

[152] The rules also permit service by mail. 25 C. F. R. 81.8.

[153] 25 C. F. R. 81.7.

[154] 25 C. F. R. 81.12.

[155] 25 C. F. R. 81.15. Attorneys appear very rarely.

[156] 25 C. F. R. 81.17.

[157] 25 C. F. R. 81.18.

[158] 25 C. F. R. 81.19–81.21.

aminer may, in his discretion, dispense with the presence of disinterested witnesses, provided the testimony of the interested witnesses is corroborated by the records of the Department.[159]

When, subsequent to the determination of heirs by the Department, property is found which is not included in the examiner's report, this fact must be brought to the attention of the Commissioner, together with an appraisal thereof. The superintendent will then be instructed to include this property in the original findings with instructions as to any additional fee to be charged. However, where newly discovered property takes a different line of descent from that shown by the original findings, a redetermination relative thereto must be ordered and had.[160]

The Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, discussing the authority of the Secretary of the Interior relative to claims against estates of deceased Indians, declared:[161]

> The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to probate Indian estates under the Acts of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 855), and February 14, 1913 (37 Stat. 678). No specific authority is indicated in these acts relative to the allowance or disallowance of claims against the estate. As an incident to the power granted, however, ever since the passage of the acts mentioned, the Secretary of the Interior has passed on claims based on indebtedness incurred by the decedent during his lifetime, and on expense of last illness and funeral charges. While the allotted lands of the Indian are not subject to the liens of indebtedness incurred while the title is held in trust for the Indian (Section 354, Title 25, U. S. Code), the right of the Secretary administratively to allow and settle indebtedness against the Indian decedent has never been seriously questioned.
>
> The priority accorded claims of the United States by virtue of 31 U. S. C. 191, does not apply to the estates of deceased Indians. No administrator or executor is appointed in these Indian estates, and claims against them are not such liens as may be enforced through the sale of the restricted lands involved. Allowed claims are paid from the accruals to the land or from such cash as may be available at the time of death of the decedent.
>
> Priority is however given to claims of the United States against estates of deceased Indians, administratively. There are some qualifications which are covered by Departmental Regulations.
>
> * * * * *
>
> Except when the expenditures above mentioned [medical and funeral] affect the order of priority this Department allows claims administratively as follows:
>
> 1. The probate fee (25 U. S. C. 377; 25 C. F. R. 81.40).
> 2. Funeral bills and expense of last illness in reasonable amount (25 C. F. R. 221.9 and 81.46).
> 3. Claims of the United States.
> 4. General creditors (25 C. F. R. 81.44, 81.46).

Any aggrieved person claiming an interest in the trust or restricted property of an Indian, who has received notice of the hearing to determine heirs or consideration of a will, or who was present at the hearing, may file a motion for rehearing within 60 days from the date of notice on him of the determination of heirs or action on a will, or within such shorter period of time as the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be appropriate in any particular case. A motion so filed operates as a supersedeas until otherwise directed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Any such motion must state concisely and specifically the grounds upon which the motion for rehearing is based and be accompanied by brief and argument in support thereof.

If proper grounds are not shown, the rehearing will be denied. If upon examination grounds sufficient for rehearing are shown, a rehearing will be granted and the moving party will be notified that he will be allowed 15 days from the receipt of notice within which to serve a copy of this motion, together with all argument in support thereof, on the opposite party or parties, who will be allowed 30 days thereafter in which to file and serve answer, brief, and argument. Thereafter, the case will be again considered and appropriate action taken, which may consist either in adhering to the former decision or modifying or vacating same, or the making of any further or other order deemed warranted.[162]

No case will be reopened at the petition of any person who received notice of the hearing or who was present at such hearing, and received notice of the final decision, except as provided in § 81.34. Any other aggrieved person, claiming an interest in the estate, may apply for reopening of the case by petition, in writing, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, to be submitted through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. All such petitions must set forth fully the alleged grounds for reopening, and when such petitions are based on alleged errors of fact are to be accompanied by affidavits or other supporting evidence. On receipt of such petition, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, if he deems it essential, will give the previously determined heirs an opportunity to present such showing in the matter as they may care to offer. Thereafter, the petition together with the record in the case will be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior with such recommendation in the premises as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may deem appropriate. Aside from filing the papers specifically referred to, no further proceedings by the respective parties are required prior to a determination by the Secretary of the question whether a reopening will be granted or not.

Petitions for reopening will not be considered when 10 years or longer have elapsed since the heirs were previously determined nor in those cases in which the estate of the decedent or any considerable part thereof has been disposed of under the previous finding of heirs. Claims for expenses, attorneys' fees, etc., in connection with petitions for reopening will not be considered or recognized prior to a determination of the question whether or not a reopening is to be had, and neither the estate of the decendent nor the determined heirs thereto will be subject to any expense incurred prior to allowance by the Secretary of a reopening of the case.[163]

B. TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION

Statutory provision has been made for the disposal by will of allotments held under trust.[164] This provision, as it appears in

---

[159] 25 C. F. R. 81.20. According to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in Nimrod v. Jandron, 24 F. 2d 613 (App. D. C. 1928):

> The duty of the examiner is clearly defined under the regulations, which require a complete investigation of the mental capacity of the testator at the time of the making of the will, and of the influences to which she may have been subjected at the time, as well as the ascertainment of the legal heirs to her estate. He was required likewise to give a full and complete hearing to all parties interested, * * *. (P. 616.)

The report of the examiner of inheritance, which contains a proposed order for the determination of heirs, is reviewed by the Probate Division of the Office of Indian Affairs and the Office of the Solicitor, and is then submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for approval. While the Probate Division is nominally a branch of the Office of Indian Affairs, it is also subject to the supervision of the Solicitor by virtue of a departmental order which placed all attorneys under the administrative jurisdiction of the Solicitor. Personnel Order No. 3396 of June 30, 1934, supplementing Order No. 639, issued June 9, 1933.

[160] 25 C. F. R. 81.22.

[161] Letter Sol. . D. to Sol. of Dept. of Agr., June 20, 1940.

[162] 25 C. F. R. 81.34.

[163] 25 C. F. R. 81.35.

[164] Acts of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, 856, and February 14, 1913, 37 Stat. 678, 25 U. S. C. 373.

the United States Code,[165] permits the disposal by will of interests in allotments (as well as other property) held under trust by anyone having such an interest who is at least 21 years old. The will is to be executed in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and each will must be approved by him. If after an Indian's decease the will is disapproved, the allotment descends according to the law of the state wherein it is located.[166]

Approval of a will and death of the testator do not automatically terminate the trust. The Secretary may cause the lands to be sold and the proceeds to be held for the legatees or devisees and used for their benefit.

In the case of Blanset v. Cardin,[167] the Supreme Court was of the opinion that this provision was exclusive and that state statutes regarding devises of property have no effect upon allotments held in trust. Thus it held that the death of an allottee who had made a will did not terminate the restrictions[168] and subject the land to the Oklahoma law of wills, under which a wife could not devise more than two-thirds of her property away from her husband.

The power of the Secretary in connection with the approval or disapproval of wills is broad enough to enable him to determine whether he has mistakenly approved a will and whether the hearing before the examiner has been conducted in accordance with statute and regulations even after more than a year has elapsed since the death of the allottee.[169]

The authority of the Secretary of the Interior is limited to approval or disapproval of an Indian will, and he is without authority to change the provisions of the will by making a different provision than that provided by the testator.[170]

But after the will has been approved, the parties interested in the estate may agree upon a different disposition of property, subject, of course, to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Certain of the federal regulations pertaining to the approval of wills illuminate the meaning of the statutory provisions above quoted. It is provided[171] that the will of any Indian who may make such an instrument shall be filed with the superintendent and that the officials of the Indian Office shall aid and assist the Indian as far as possible in the drawing of the instrument so that it will clearly and unequivocally express his wishes and intentions. Statements preferably under oath by the person drawing the will and the witnesses thereto that the testator was mentally competent and that there was no evidence of fraud, duress, or undue influence in connection therewith should be attached to the instrument. Where such evidence exists, a detailed statement should accompany the will setting forth the nature and extent thereof.

Other important regulations as they appear in title 25 of the Code of Federal Regulations are noted in the following summary:

> Section 81.53 requires the examiner, Superintendent, or other officer to make a specific recommendation as to whether the will of a deceased Indian should be approved by the Secretary, based upon a full inquiry into his mental competency; "the circumstances attending the execution of the will; the influences which induced its execution." In the event that the distribution is contrary to the laws of the State in which the testator resides, the examiner is required to seek the best available evidence as to the reasons for such action, including the affidavit of the testator, if living. He must also investigate the competency of all devisees and legatees to manage their affairs and note if any beneficiary is a person not of Indian blood.
>
> Section 81.54 provides that "No will executed in conformity with the Act of February 14, 1913 (37 Stat. 678; 25 U. S. C. 373), shall be valid or have any force or effect so far as it relates to property under the control of the United States, unless and until it shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, who may approve or disapprove the will after a due and proper hearing to determine the heirs to the estate of the testator or testatrix shall have been held, required notice of such hearing first having been given to all persons interested, including the presumptive legal heirs, so far as they may be ascertained, and at which hearing the circumstances attendant upon the execution of said will shall have been fully shown by proper and credible testimony, and after the legal heir or heirs have had ample opportunity to object to the will and its approval. * * *"
>
> Section 81.55 provides that no action on wills will be taken until after the death of the testator, except that during the life of the testator the Office of Indian Affairs shall pass on the form of the will.
>
> Section 81.56 provides that in the absence of a contest, the examiner may secure affidavits of attesting witnesses to the will, in lieu of their personal appearance at the hearing.

Under section 4 of the Act of June 18, 1934,[172] an Indian's real property and shares in a tribal corporation may be devised only to his heirs, to members of the tribe having jurisdiction over the property, or to the tribe itself. In a recent opinion, the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior was called upon to construe this section. His opinion throws considerable light upon the limitation placed by that act upon a testator:[173]

> My opinion has been requested upon the proper construction of section 4 of the Wheeler-Howard Act (48

---

[165] "Any persons of the age of twenty-one years having any right, title, or interest in any allotment held under trust or other patent containing restrictions on alienation or individual Indian moneys or other property held in trust by the United States shall have the right prior to the expiration of the trust or restrictive period, and before the issuance of a fee simple patent or the removal of restrictions, to dispose of such property by will, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That no will so executed shall be valid or have any force or effect unless and until it shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may approve or disapprove the will either before or after the death of the testator, and in case where a will has been approved and it is subsequently discovered that there has been fraud in connection with the execution or procurement of the will the Secretary of the Interior is authorized within one year after the death of the testator to cancel the approval of the will, and the property of the testator shall thereupon descend or be distributed in accordance with the laws of the State wherein the property is located: Provided further, That the approval of the will and the death of the testator shall not operate to terminate the trust or restrictive period, but the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, cause the lands to be sold and the money derived therefrom, or so much thereof as may be necessary, used for the benefit of the heir or heirs entitled thereto, remove the restrictions, or cause patent in fee to be issued to the devisee or devisees, and pay the moneys to the legatee or legatees either in whole or in part from time to time as he may deem advisable, or use it for their benefit: Provided also, That this and the preceding section shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes or the Osage Indians." (25 U. S. C. 373.)

[166] See subsection A, supra. Also see Chapter 7, sec. 6.

[167] 256 U. S. 319 (1921).

[168] Where, on the other hand, an Indian died testate prior to the enactment of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855, his will made under an authorizing statute which was silent as to its effect upon the removal by will of restrictions made upon approval by the President serves to remove such restrictions. Op. Sol. I. D., M.27700, August 3, 1934. See La Motte v. United States, 254 U. S. 570 (1921).

[169] Nimrod v. Jandron, 24 F. 2d 613 (App. D. C. 1928).

[170] In the case of In Re Wah-shah-she-Me-tsa-he's Estate, 111 Okla. 177, 239 Pac. 177 (1925), the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, speaking with reference to the probating of a will of an Osage Indian which had been approved by the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law, said:

> If the will is void for any reason the husband would take under the provisions of section 11301, C. S. 1921, but so long as the will stands the disposition of the property made by its terms must also stand, as the court cannot make a new will nor direct a different division of the property from that made by the testatrix with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. (P. 179.)

[171] 25 C. F. R. 81.50.

[172] 48 Stat. 984, 985, 25 U. S. C. 464. See 25 C. F. R. 81.58.

[173] Op. Sol. I. D., M.27776, August 17, 1934; 54 I. D. 584.

Stat. 984, 985) in so far as this section limits the class of persons to whom an Indian may devise restricted lands. The relevant language of this section declares:

> Except as herein provided, no sale, devise, gift, exchange, or other transfer of restricted Indian lands or of shares in the assets of any Indian tribe, or corporation organized hereunder, shall be made or approved: Provided, however, That such lands or interests may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be sold, devised, or otherwise transferred to the Indian tribe in which the lands or shares are located or from which the shares were derived or to a successor corporation; and in all instances such lands or interests shall descend or be devised, in accordance with the then existing laws of the State, or Federal laws where applicable, in which said lands are located or in which the subject matter of the corporation is located, to any member of such tribe or of such corporation or any heirs of such member: * * *

The question of what persons other than members of the testator's tribe may lawfully be designated as devisees of his restricted property, where such property is subject to the terms of the Wheeler-Howard Act, is raised by the ambiguity of the last two words in the passage above quoted, namely, "such member." If "such member" refers to the testator himself, then the class of nonmembers entitled to receive restricted Indian property will be limited to those who through marriage, descent or adoption have acquired a relationship to the testator sufficient to constitute them heirs at law.

If the words "such member" be construed to mean any member to whom the property in question might be devised, then, apparently, nonmember heirs of other Indians than the testator might be made devisees of the testator's restricted property.

In the third place, the phrase "such member" might be construed to refer to a member who is a devisee under the will in question.

* * * * *

The circumstances under which the phrase "or any heirs of such member" was inserted in the Wheeler-Howard Bill indicate the proper meaning to be attached to that phrase. Early drafts of the legislation (e. g. H. R. 7902, Title III, Sec. 5, April House Committee Print; S. 2755, Sec. 4, May Senate Committee Print), both in the House and in the Senate, limited the privilege of inheriting restricted property to the members of the testator's tribe, in accordance with the fundamental purpose of the legislation to conserve Indian lands in Indian ownership and to prevent the further checker-boarding of Indian lands through the acquisition of parcels of such lands by persons not subject to the authority of the Indian tribe or reservation. To this limitation the objection was urged that in some cases the heirs of a deceased Indian would not be members of the tribe or corporation to which the deceased had adhered, and that it would be unfair to deny such natural heirs the right to participate in a devise of property. The House Committee on Indian Affairs, therefore, added to the clause first considered the phrase "or any heirs of such member." (H. R. 7902, Sec. 4, as reported to the House.) Independently, the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs added to the draft under its consideration a parallel phrase more restricted in scope, "or the Indian heirs of such member." (S. 2755. Sec. 4, Committee Print No. 2; S. 3645, Sec. 4, as reported to the Senate.) It seems clear that the purpose of these legislative after-thoughts was not to alter fundamentally the intent and scope of the original restriction but rather to provide for the exigencies of a special case that had not been distinctly considered, namely, the case of an Indian testor desiring to divide his estate by will among those who would, in the absence of a will, have been entitled to share in the estate, namely, his own heirs.

That the Chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs so construed the phrase here in question is indicated by his explanatory statement to the House of Representatives:

> Section 4 stops a dangerous leak through which the restricted allotted lands still in Indian ownership pass therefrom. Upon the death of an allottee the number of heirs frequently makes partition of the land impractical, and it must be sold at partition sale, when it generally passes into the hands of whites. This section endeavors to restrict such sales to Indian buyers or to Indian tribes or organizations. It however permits the devise of restricted lands to the heirs, whether Indian or not. (Cong. Rec. June 15, 1934, p. 12051.)

It requires no strained construction of language to interpret the phrase "or any heirs of such member" in accordance with this intent and purpose. The phraseology of section 4 suffers from the looseness of syntax incident to the agglutinative process of amendment. Grammatical rules, such as that requiring a definite antecedent for the word "such", are not always religiously observed in the closing days of a Congressional session. In the phrase "heirs of such member" the reference of the word "such" is supplied not by any clear grammatical antecedent but by the fact that the "member" chiefly considered throughout the section, though never expressly named, is the testator. This is not the only instance in the statute where the word "such" cannot be construed by simple application of the rules of grammar. (See the initial words of Sec. 17.)

To conclude, legal usage requires that the phrase "heirs of such member" must refer to the heirs of one who is deceased. Memo est haeres viventis. The only deceased person considered in the section is the testator. Evidence of the intent of Congress indicates that it is the testator's heirs that are being considered. I am of the opinion that the phrase "heirs of such member" should properly be construed to mean "heirs of the testator."

C. PARTITION AND SALE OF INHERITED ALLOTMENTS

In 1935, the National Resources Board published a study entitled "Indian Land Tenure, Economic Status, and Population Trends." Its authors had studied, among others, the problems resulting from the partition and sale of inherited allotments. Their comments on this subject are particularly enlightening:

> In 1902 pressure for legislation which would authorize the sale of heirship allotments could no longer be resisted. The passage of the act of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. 245, 275)[174] opened the sluiceway for a wholesale dissipation of the Indian landed estate.[28] A few years later (1906) it was complemented by another law which permitted the Secretary of the Interior to sell original allotments, as well.

[28] The act of 1902 was later modified to provide a more orderly method of determining heirs, principally by the act of May 8, 1906 (34 Stat. 182), and the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 855, 859).

[174] Although such sale was provided for as early as 1902, no statutory provision for the determination of heirs by the Secretary of the Interior was made until 1910 (Act of June 25, 1910, 36 Stat. 855). As a result, purchasers of allotted Indian lands from heirs of the allottee prior to 1910 found difficulty in obtaining loans upon such property because of the contention of the loan companies that there had not been formal determination of the heirs of the deceased allottees by a court or official clothed with authority to make such determination and that in the absence of such proceedings the title was defective. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior to the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, presents a rather exhaustive review of authority on the validity of sale under the foregoing statutory provisions:

> It has come to the attention of this Department that owners of lands whose titles are founded upon deeds executed by the heirs of deceased Indian allottees and approved by the Secretary of the Interior prior to the enactment of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 855), conferring jurisdiction upon the Secretary of the Interior to determine the heirs of such deceased Indians, are experiencing difficulty in obtaining loans from the Federal land banks and other governmental lending agencies.
>
> The principal trouble appears to be that the abstracts of title furnished by the applicants for loans fail to show that there has been a formal determination of the heirs of the deceased Indian allottees by a court or official clothed with authority to make such determination, and in the absence of such proceedings, the position has been taken that the title is defective. We believe that the position so taken is based upon a misconception of the legal effect of the deeds from these Indian heirs.
>
> The deeds under consideration were executed and approved in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of

Upon the death of an allottee there were four possible methods of disposing of the estate:

(1) The Secretary of the Interior could issue fee patents to the heirs as a group or otherwise remove the restrictions.

(2) The estate could be physically partitioned among the heirs and either trust or fee patents issued to them individually.[175]

(3) The estate could be retained by the superintendent and leased for the benefit of the heirs.

(4) The estate could be sold under Government supervision and the proceeds distributed among the heirs.

Partition of estates is a common procedure when the number of heirs is small; but small families are not the rule among Indians, and the very tardy process of probate in the Office of Indian Affairs causes long periods of time, often running into years, to elapse before the heirs are determined. In the meantime, new heirs may have been born, and the heirs of the original allottee may have died.

The leasing of heirship allotments is a more frequent procedure, with consequences to be noted later. But it is more important to note here that under the act of 1902 a single "competent" heir could demand the sale of the whole allotment. Even though an administration may frown upon the sale of the heirship lands, it is actually powerless to prevent it. It perpetually faces the dilemma of either permitting the land to be sold, or exerting its influence to retain the land in the ownership of the heirs and to lease it. So long as the allotment is held intact, it is subject to progressive subdivision by the death of heirs and the resulting fragmentation of the equities.

If the estate is put up for sale, Indians rarely have the cash to buy it and the allotment almost invariably passes to white ownership. A strong pressure to sell comes from the Indian heirs themselves because of their lack of experience with the white man's property system. Contrary to the hopeful idealism of the proponents of the allotment system, the Indians have not acquired the white man's respect for "land in severalty." Unrestricted, individual ownership, as contrasted with their own communal ownership, tempts Indians to look on land as an asset to be disposed of for cash to meet everyday wants rather than to work it for an income.[29]

[29] Dr. John R. Swanton of the Bureau of American Ethnology recently wrote: "Our own attempts to substitute land for a living fails to attain its object because there is no insistence that land shall be used to furnish a living with the addition of labor instead of being sold outright."

The result of this legislation was exactly what would be expected—a rapid dissipation of capital assets. From 1903, when the first sales were made, to 1934, sales of heirship land totaled 1,426,061 acres, most of which was spent as income. Desperately in need of the steady income which the application of labor to these lands would have provided, Indians were nevertheless permitted to divest themselves of the one asset which they needed most to insure their own survival. (Pp. 15–17.)

* * * * *

With the stoppage of further allotment virtually assured under the Wheeler-Howard Act,[26] all the land now in the possession of original allottees will pass into the heirship stage in the next generation. Sales of land to other than Indian tribes or corporations were also prohibited.[27] It is, therefore, a definite certainty that the area of heirship lands will steadily increase in the immediate future; and inasmuch as the Wheeler-Howard Act left untouched the present system of heirship, except to restrict inheritance to members of a tribe or their descendants (thus preventing acquisition by whites), the problem of what to do with these lands becomes of paramount importance. At present the heirship lands are 12 the Interior under authority of section 7 of the act of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. 245–275) and the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. 1015–1018). The pertinent provisions of these acts read:

---

Sec 7, Act of 1902

> "That the adult heirs of any deceased Indian to whom a trust or other patent containing restrictions upon alienation has been or shall be issued for lands allotted to him may sell and convey the lands inherited from such decedent, but in case of minor heirs their interests shall be sold only by a guardian duly appointed by the proper court upon the order of such court, made upon petition filed by the guardian, but all such conveyances shall be subect to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and when so approved shall convey a full title to the purchaser the same as if a final patent without restriction upon the alienation had been issued to the allottee. * * *" [Italics supplied.]

Act of 1907

> "That any noncompetent Indian to whom a patent containing restrictions against alienation has been issued for an allotment of land in severalty, under any law or treaty or who may have an interest in any allotment by inheritance, may sell or convey all or any part of such allotment or such inherited interest on such terms and conditions and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and the proceeds derived therefrom shall be used for the benefit of the allottee or heir so disposing of his land or interest, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and any conveyance made hereunder and approved by the Secretary of the Interior shall convey full title to the land or interest so sold, the same as if fee simple patent had been issued to the allottee." [Italics supplied.]

In considering the foregoing statutory provisions, it is well to point out that the courts were without jurisdiction to determine the heirs of deceased Indian allottees (McKay v. Kalyton, 204 U. S. 458), and that, other than the Secretary of the Interior, there existed no tribunal with jurisdiction to make such determination. Before any conveyance could be made of the lands of deceased allottees, it was, of course, essential that the heirs be first determined, and the acts of 1902 and 1907, reasonably construed, appear to confer upon the Secretary of the Interior, by necessary implication, the authority to determine the facts of heirship. Neither act makes provision for formal notice and hearing for the determination of heirs, but regulations were approved and promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior providing that when a deed or other instrument conveying inherited lands was submitted to him for approval, it should be accompanied by the following data concerning the heirs of the deceased allottee:

> "By a certificate signed by two members of a business committee, if there be such, or by at least two recognized chiefs, or by two or more reliable members of the tribe, setting forth that the allottee to whom he land was originally allotted is dead, giving as nearly as possible the date of death. Such certificate shall also show the names and ages of the heirs, adults and minors, of such deceased allottee, but the Department reserves the right to require, if in its judgment it shall be considered necessary, such further and additional evidence relative to heirship as may be deemed proper. If the persons who certify to the death of the allottee are, from their own knowledge, unable to certify as to who are the heirs (with their names and ages) of such deceased allottee, an additional certificate made by persons of one of the three classes herein specified, showing who are the heirs and giving their names and ages (adults and minors), must be furnished."

It has been the uniform practice and policy of this Department to regard the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of a deed based upon proof of heirship furnished in accordance with the above regulations as having the effect of finally determining the heirs and conveying the full title, particularly in view of the legislative declaration in the acts of 1902 and 1907 that such an approved deed shall convey full title to the purchaser the same as if a final fee simple patent had been issued to the allottee or purchaser. While the authorities are not in entire harmony, the better view supports the departmental position.

The remainder of the letter above quoted analyzes the cases supporting (Brown v. Boston Steele, et al., 23 Kans. 672 (1880); Egan v. McDonald, 153 N. W. 915 (1915): Hellen v. Morgan, 283 Fed. 433 (D. C. E. D. Wash. 1922); Davidson v. Roberson, 92 Okla. 161, 218 Pac. 878 (1923)) and opposing the foregoing conclusion. (Even cases which deny binding force to secretarial determination of heirs under the circumstances considered indicate that secretarial approval conveys a prima facie title good until someone else shows a better title. See Highrock v. Gavin, 179 N. W. 12 (1920); Tripp v. Sieler, 161 N. W. 337 (1917); Horn v. Ne-Gon-Ah-E-Quaince, 192 N. W. 363 (1923).)

[175] The Act of May 18, 1916, 39 Stat. 123, 127, 25 U. S. C. 378 provides:

> * * * if the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any inherited trust allotment or allotments are capable of partition to the advantage of the heirs, he may cause such lands to be partitioned among them, regardless of their competency, patents in fee to be issued to the competent heirs for their shares and trust patents to be issued to the incompetent heirs for the lands respectively or jointly set apart to them, the trust period to terminate in accordance with the terms of the original patent or order of extension of the trust period set out in said patent.

For regulations regarding applications for partitions of inherited allotments, see 25 C. F. R. 241.8; regarding sale of heirship lands, see 25 C. F. R. 241.9–241.12.

percent of all Indian lands and 35 percent of the allotted lands.

[26] Sec. 1 prohibits further allotment, but by sec. 18 the whole act may be rejected by a negative vote of a majority of eligible voters of a band or tribe.
[27] Sec. 4.

These heirship tracts are potentially one of the most important of the Indian resources. (P. 15.)

The present Federal policy and objectives relating to Indian land have recently been stated in a Handbook of Indian Land Policy and Manual of Procedures prepared by the Office of Indian Affairs.[176]

By exchange of allotments for assignments the problem of the sale and partition of inherited lands is finding a solution and the federal Indian land policy is being carried forward. Section 5 of the Act of June 18, 1934,[177] has provided for the acquisition of land by the Secretary of the Interior for an Indian tribe, through purchase, gift, exchange, or assignment, or through relinquishment of land by individual Indians. It has been held that the purpose of "providing land for Indians" is served by an exchange transaction whereby an individual Indian transfers allotted land to the tribe in exchange for an assignment of occupancy rights in the same or in another tract, since the tribe through this transaction acquires a definite interest in the land over and above the transferor's retained occupancy right.[178] By means of this exchange provision the tribe may acquire Indian allotments or heirship lands and may designate various parcels of tribal land which are not needed for any tribal enterprise as available for exchange. Where a tribe has funds in its tribal treasury or in the United States Treasury, it may decide to use a portion of such funds to buy up lands from Indians who have holdings in the area under consideration. Where the land is in heirship status, if the tribe and all the heirs are unable to agree among themselves on the terms of purchase, the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe the method of sale and valuation.

There is no reason why a tribe may not purchase allotted lands in heirship status where such lands are offered for sale by the Secretary of the Interior. The mechanics of such a transaction are set forth in a memorandum of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior[179] in the following words:

> It will be noted that section 372 of United States Code, title 25, requires that upon completion of the payment of the purchase price a patent in fee shall issue to the purchaser. Does this requirement make impossible sales to individual Indians, to Indian tribes, or to the Secretary of the Interior in trust for such tribes or individuals?
>
> So far as direct sales to Indian tribes are concerned, there is nothing to prevent the issuance of a patent in fee to an Indian tribe. The issuance of patents to an Indian tribe is provided for by the following statutes: Act of January 12, 1891 (26 Stat. 762), providing for patents to Mission Bands; treaty with Cherokees, December 29, 1835 (7 Stat. 478) granting land to Cherokee Nation.
>
> After issuance of such patent, however, an organized tribe might, under section 5 of the act of June 18, 1934, surrender legal title to the land, if it so chose, to the United States, retaining equitable ownership of the land. A tribe not within the provisions of that act could not surrender such legal title.
>
> * * * * *
>
> The necessity for issuance of a fee patent which arises when heirship land is sold by the Secretary of the Interior, does not arise where the conveyance of land is made by all the interested heirs. Such conveyance, made on a restricted deed form, conveys only the same interest as is held by the heirs.
>
> The question of issuing fee patents to Indian purchasers of land does not arise on reservations subject to the act of June 18, 1934, since on such reservations direct sales to individual Indians are prohibited. A related question, however, arises with respect to sales of land to the United States in trust for a tribe or individual Indian under the provisions of section 5 of the said act, which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior,
>
> > "to acquire through purchase, relinquishment, gift, exchange, or assignment, any interest in lands, water rights, or surface rights to lands, within or without existing reservations, including trust or otherwise restricted allotments, whether the allottee be living or deceased, for the purpose of providing land for Indians."
>
> The statute in question specifically provides, with respect to the tenure of lands so acquired:
>
> > "Title to any lands or rights acquired pursuant to this act shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the Indian tribe or individual Indian for which the land is acquired, and such lands or rights shall be exempt from State and local taxation."

[176] The primary object of Indian land policy is to save and to provide for the Indian people adequate land, in such a tenure and in accordance with such proper usage that they may subsist on it permanently by their own labor.

Indian land policy shall have for its purpose the organization and consolidation of Indian lands into proper units, considering the use to be made of the land, the type of labor and capital investment to be applied thereon, and the technical capacities and habits of co-operation of the Indians concerned.

Indian land policy definitely looks toward the substitution of Indian use for non-Indian use of Indian lands.

Implicit in all of the above is the responsibility of affording the Indians the necessary credit and technical training to make possible the best economic use of their lands.

Indian land tenure policy shall be searchingly adapted to various solutions not only as to whole tribes, but also as to natural communities within any particular tribe, and where the facts so indicate, to individual cases.

Indian land policy should take into account and should seek to contribute to the solution of the land policy problems of the Government as a whole.

In the protection and enlargement of an adequate land base, due consideration must be given to the preservation of those Indian cultural, social, and economic values and institutions which have in the past sustained, and are now sustaining, their economic and spiritual integrity and which may hold important possibilities for the future.

Indian land policy shall seek the most rapid possible reduction of uneconomic and nonproductive administrative expenditures, particularly in connection with the management of heirship lands.

In view of the limited amount of funds available for the enlargement of the Indian land base, preference in the application of these funds shall be given to those reservations showing a readiness to cooperate in order to secure the advantages, and to those showing a critical shortage of resources; and within these reservations, preference shall be given to those communities definitely Indian in character.

In the process of simplifying the ownership pattern on Indian reservations, tribal funds, IRA land-acquisition appropriations, or other applicable funds may be used (in default of other and preferable methods) for the consolidation of Indian-owned lands whenever such use supplies an essential element in improving the economy of the tribe, and reducing costs of administration.

The acquisition of land for Indians shall be for Indian use and upon adequate evidence that it will be used by Indians. In all cases where it is practicable, the acquisition should be carried out in response to the request of the Indians and upon evidence furnished by them of their determination to use the land.

Funds accruing to tribes from the past or present disposal of capital assets shall be used to the largest feasible extent for the creation of new productive resources. (Handbook, supra, Pt. III (1938), pp. 1–3.)

[177] 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 465.

[178] Memo Sol. I. D., April 4, 1935.
[179] Memo Sol. I. D., August 14, 1937.

In the light of these provisions it may be asked whether the requirement of section 372 that a fee patent issued to the purchaser of heirship lands remains in force, on reservations subject to the act of June 18, 1934. If it is in force then either the Secretary of the Interior must issue a fee patent to the United States, or, if this is impossible, he must refrain from acquiring heirship land under the provisions of section 372. If the latter view is taken one of the principal objects of section 5 of the act of June 18, 1934, would be defeated. If the former view is taken a legal absurdity is presented. In the face of this dilemma it appears to be a reasonable view that the requirement of section 372 that a patent in fee be issued to the purchaser, is inapplicable where the United States is itself the purchaser, and that in this case section 5 of the act of June 18, 1934, supersedes and amends the relevant provisions of section 372. This view is in accord with the familiar rule that a limiting statute does not run against the sovereign.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the Secretary of the Interior, on reservations subject to the act of June 18, 1934, may acquire heirship land on behalf of individual Indians or Indian tribes, on the same terms as a private individual might acquire such lands under section 372, and that title to such lands is to be held by the United States in trust for the Indian or Indian tribe for which the land is purchased.

In accordance with the foregoing analysis you are advised that existing departmental regulations and orders affecting the sale of heirship lands may be amended to provide for the following transactions, under existing law:

1. On all reservations heirship lands may be sold by the Secretary of the Interior to an Indian tribe. Such sale may be made with or without the consent of the interested heirs. It is necessary that reasonable compensation be paid by the tribe for the land thus sold. Such reasonable compensation may be based upon the actual income-producing prospects and record of the land, due consideration being given to the expenses of leasing created by [the] heirship status insofar as these expenses would be deducted from the sums paid to the lessors. Except for the requirement that 10 percent of the purchase price be paid in advance, the terms of payment are within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

2. On reservations within the act of June 18, 1934, sales of heirship land may be made to the United States in trust for the tribe or for individual Indians. With respect to the terms and manner of sale and the basis of valuation the comments noted in the preceding paragraph appear equally applicable.

3. On reservations not within the act of June 18, 1934, heirship lands may be sold directly to individual Indians or to an Indian cooperative or tribe. It is within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to make such sales with or without the consent of the heirs, without calling for bids or after bids have been called for. Patents in fee must issue to the purchaser upon final completion of payments for the land, unless all the heirs join in making a conveyance of the trust title. If bids are called for it would be proper to limit the bidders either to Indians or to Indians of a particular tribe or to Indians interested in the particular estate or to any other reasonably defined class of Indians, provided that in any case a fair price, in the light of all circumstances, is obtained for the land that is sold. With respect to the terms and manner of sale, and the basis of valuation the comments noted in the first paragraph of this summary appear equally applicable.

CHAPTER 12

FEDERAL SERVICES FOR INDIANS

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION 1. INTRODUCTION

Federal services which the United States provides for Indians are frequently viewed as a matter of charity. The erroneous notion is widely prevalent that in their relationship with the Federal Government the Indians have been the regular recipients of unearned bounties. In reality, federal services were, in earlier years, largely a matter of self-protection for the white man or partial compensation to the Indian for land cessions or other benefits received by the United States. In recent years such services have been continued, partly as a result of the failure of the states to render certain essential public services to the Indians, because of their special relation to the Federal Government.

In the treaty period[1] of our Indian relations, in order to induce the Indian to cease active resistance to further encroachment upon his domain, it was thought wise to educate him in the white man's culture. The Indian's white neighbors would instruct him to seek paths of peace rather than the ways of war, to replace the tomahawk with a religion of love for his fellow man. To obviate responsibility for his support, or the alternative of slow starvation, they would instruct him in the ways of the farm, in the arts of the fireside, and in means of earning a livelihood on his greatly reduced land.[2] This offered a practical alternative to a policy of warfare which, it has been estimated, cost the Federal Government in the neighborhood of one million dollars for each dead Indian.

Reservations were located in the vicinities of army posts. In the panic of an epidemic of smallpox, as a matter of protection to prevent the spread of this disease through the entire population, a statute[3] was enacted which provided for vaccination of Indians by army surgeons.[4] This statute is illustrative of the way in which the Indian health service and other federal services originated.

In making treaties with the Indian tribes, the United States generally offered a more or less substantial quid pro quo for land ceded by the Indian tribes in such treaties and for other promises contained in such treaties that were advantageous to the United States.[5] This quid pro quo might be, and generally was, defined in terms of money, although in some cases the United States undertook to furnish specified supplies or services for a designated period of years. The Indians had little use for money. The practice therefore arose of placing the money in trust in the United States Treasury and expending either the principal or the interest of such funds, in accordance with the wishes of the Indians, for food, clothing, livestock, farm implements, and the pay of blacksmiths, teachers, physicians, and other skilled employees. To this day tribal funds are expended for these purposes.[6]

When treaty and tribal funds of a given tribe came to an end, the Federal Government might have discharged the teachers, physicians, blacksmiths, and other employees maintained by it pursuant to treaty obligation; but many factors, some of them humanitarian, combined to prevent the abandonment of these services. Instead, an increasing amount of what were called "gratuity appropriations," as distinct from treaty appropriations and tribal fund appropriations, was devoted to the maintenance of these various federal services in the Indian country. According to contemporary critics, and according to subsequent official investigations, these funds were in many

[1] See Chapter 3.

[2] 8 Am. State Papers (Indian Affairs, class II, vol. 2) 1815–27, pp. 150–151.

[3] Act of May 5, 1832, 4 Stat. 514.

[4] Appropriations for this service have since been regularly enacted. See Chapter 4, sec. 17.

[5] See Chapter 3, sec. 3C(3).

[6] See Chapter 15, sec. 23.

cases extravagantly and wastefully disbursed. Irrigation projects, for example, frequently were launched without the benefit of expert technical advice and were consequently improperly constructed and ill-advised.[7]

With the increase of gratuity appropriations, the picture of the Indian as a charity ward came to loom large in the public eye. In 1875 Congress provided that Indians receiving supplies from the Federal Government might be required to perform useful labor as a condition precedent,[8] quite ignoring the fact that many Indians were no more "charity wards" than were holders of federal bonds or other legal obligations of the Federal Government.

In an effort to remove federal services to Indians from a gratuity basis, Congress has frequently provided that various expenditures made for the benefit, or supposed benefit, of Indians should be "reimbursable," that is to say, repaid to the United States Treasury out of the future income of the tribes concerned. Even where Congress has not so provided, the rule has been developed in many jurisdictional acts and court cases that appropriations which were supposed to be gratuities when made are to be reimbursed out of judgments rendered in favor of an Indian tribe.[9]

More recently the effort to remove federal Indian services from a charitable basis has taken the form of legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to assess fees for various acts and services benefiting Indians.[10]

[7] See Hearings, Sen. Subcom. of Comm. on Ind. Aff., 71st Cong., 2d sess., Survey of Conditions of the Indians in the United States, pt. 6, Engle Report, January 21, 1930, p. 2285.

[8] Act of March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 420, 449, 25 U. S. C. 137.

[9] Osage Tribe of Indians v. United States, 66 C. Cls. 64 (1928), app. dism. 279 U. S. 811, 68 C. Cls. 788; Choctaw Nation v. United States, 81 C. Cls. 1 (1935), cert. den. 296 U. S. 643; Act of June 7, 1924, 43 Stat. 537 (Choctaw and Chickasaw); Fort Berthold Indians v. United States, 71 C. Cls. 308 (1930); Act of February 11, 1920, 41 Stat. 404.

[10] Section I of the Act of May 9, 1938, 52 Stat. 291, 312, 313, as amended by the Act of May 10, 1939, 53 Stat. 708, 25 U. S. C. 561, provides:

> In the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him, fees may be collected from individual Indians for services performed for them, and any fees so collected shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Cf. Act of January 24, 1923, 42 Stat. 1174, 1185, 25 U. S. C. 377 relating to probate fees, and Act of February 14, 1920, 41 Stat. 408, 415, amended March 1, 1933, 47 Stat. 1417, 25 U. S. C. 413, relating to various management fees for Indian forestry work.

In recent years, and particularly since 1924, when citizenship was granted to all Indians not already citizens,[11] the states have assumed a larger role in supplying the Indians with essential public services. In 1929[12] the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to permit state agents to make inspections of health and educational conditions on the reservations and to enforce sanitation and quarantine regulations or to enforce compulsory school attendance of Indian pupils, as provided by the law of the state, and since 1934[13] the Secretary has been authorized to enter into contracts with state or other bodies for education, medical attention, agricultural assistance, and social welfare, including relief of distress, of Indians, and to authorize the state to utilize existing federal school buildings, hospitals, and other facilities.

Some states have taken kindly to their added responsibility; others have continued to discriminate against the Indian, as, for instance, those states which deny the Indian services available under the Social Security Act.[14]

The year 1934 marked a momentous change in Indian policy. The then prevalent economic conditions brought on by the depression emphasized the desperate plight of the Indian. The Wheeler-Howard Act[15] was passed. A program was launched, with the assistance of federal and tribal funds, to organize and incorporate Indian tribes, to launch tribal enterprises, to enable tribes and tribal members to become self-sufficient by their own efforts in lines of endeavor congenial to native tastes and talents, and to make possible the transfer to the organized tribes of responsibility for services hitherto performed by the Federal Government.

This program is still too close to its inception to warrant estimation of its success. It may be said, however, that the prevailing tendency today is to turn over to the organized tribes, or to the states, where such tribes and states are willing to accept such burdens, an increasing measure of responsibility for the performance of services which have historically been rendered to the Indians by the Federal Government.[16]

[11] See Chapter 8, sec. 2.

[12] Act of February 15, 1929, 45 Stat. 1185, 25 U. S. C. 231. See Chapter 6, sec. 2.

[13] Act of April 16, 1934, 48 Stat. 596, amended June 4, 1936, 49 Stat. 1458, 25 U. S. C. 452, 454.

[14] Act of August 14, 1935, 49 Stat. 620. See sec. 5, infra, and see Chapter 8, sec. 5.

[15] Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984, 25 U. S. C. 461 et seq. See Chapter 4, sec. 16.

[16] See Chapter 2, sec. 3C.

SECTION 2. EDUCATION

A. DEVELOPMENT OF FEDERAL POLICY

"Father," requested Cornplanter, speaking for the Senecas in 1792, "you give us leave to speak our minds concerning the tilling of the ground. We ask you to teach us to plough and to grind corn; * * * that you will send smiths among us, and, above all, that you will teach our children to read and write, and our women to spin and to weave."[17] With equal warmth George Washington replied, through the Secretary of War, that the Senecas might be sure of his willingness and desire to impart to them "the blessings of husbandry, and the arts" and that a number of their children would be received to be educated either at the time of the treaty, or at such a time and place as they might agree upon.[18]

In such a fashion did the President of the United States and a chief of an Indian tribe first discuss the possibility of governmental assistance in bringing to the red man the advan-

[17] 7 American State Papers (Indian Affairs, class II, vol. 1) (1789–1815) p. 144.

That such was not always the attitude of all Indians is clear in an excerpt from Benjamin Franklin's "Remarks Concerning the Savages of North America." In 1744, after the Treaty of Lancaster in Pennsylvania between the government of Virginia and the Six Nations, the Virginia Commissioners offered to the chiefs to educate six of their sons at a college in Williamsburg, Va. They received this reply:

> Several of our young people were formerly brought up at the colleges of the Northern Provinces; they were instructed in all your sciences; but when they came back to us, they were bad runners; ignorant of every means of living in the woods; unable to bear either cold or hunger; knew neither how to build a cabin, take a deer, or kill an enemy; spoke our language imperfectly; were therefore neither fit for hunters, warriors, or counsellors; they were totally good for nothing. We are however not the less obliged by your kind offer, though we decline accepting it: And to show our greatful sense of it, if the Gentlemen of Virginia will send us a dozen of their sons, we will take great care of their education, instruct them in all we know, and make men of them. (Benjamin Franklin, Two Tracts etc. (2d ed., 1794), pp. 28–29.)

[18] Ibid., p. 166.

tages of a European civilization.[19] Although this particular arrangement was destined not to materialize, the interest it aroused quickened, and on December 2, 1794, educational provisions were included in a treaty negotiated with the Oneida, Tuscarora, and Stockbridge Indians.[20] This was followed in 1803 by a treaty with the Kaskaskia Indians which provided an annual contribution for 7 years for a Roman Catholic priest who, among other things, was to instruct in literature.[21] Thus began the practice, which persisted up to the end of treaty-making in 1871, of including educational provisions in treaties.[22] The provisions covered technical education in agriculture and the mechanical arts,[23] support of reservation schools,[24] boarding schools,[25] or schools and teachers generally,[26] and contributions for educational purposes.[27]

On March 30, 1802, Congress made provision for the expenditure of a sum of money not to exceed $15,000 per annum to promote civilization among the aborigines.[28] For another decade this action stood as the sole indication that Congress had recognized responsibility for Indian education; then, in his first message to Congress, President Monroe called for additional efforts to preserve, improve, and civilize the original inhabitants.[29] This recommendation was acted upon 2 years later when Congress enacted a provision which still stands as the organic legal basis for most of the educational work of the Indian Service. As embodied in the United States Code, the law declares:[30]

> * * * The President may, in every case where he shall judge improvement in the habits and conditions of such [19] For additional examples see Bureau of Education, Special Report on Indian Education and Civilization (1888), Sen. Ex. Doc. No. 95, 48th Cong., 2d sess. pp. 161–197. The annual reports of the Commissioners of Indian Affairs throw considerable light on the development of the federal educational policies regarding the Indians. See Chapter 2, sec. 2.

[20] 7 Stat. 47, 48. These provisions allowed for the employment of one or two persons for 3 years to instruct in the arts of the miller and sawyer.

[21] Treaty of August 13, 1803, 7 Stat. 78, 79.

[22] The educational provisions of the various treaties are analyzed and summarized in the following government documents: Industrial Training Schools for Indian Youths, H. Rept. No. 29, 46th Cong., 1st sess. (1879); Industrial Training Schools for Indians, H. Rept. No. 752, 46th Cong., 2d sess. (1880); Treaty Items, Indian Appropriation Bill, H. Doc. No. 1030, 63d Cong., 2d sess. (1914).

[23] Treaty of August 18, 1804, with Delaware Tribe, 7 Stat. 81; Treaty of August 29, 1821, with Ottawa, Chippewa, and Pottawatamie, 7 Stat. 218; Treaty of February 12, 1825, with Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 237; Treaty of February 8, 1831, with the Menomonee Indians, 7 Stat. 342; Treaty of September 21, 1833, with the Otoes and Missourias, 7 Stat. 429; Treaty of March 28, 1836, with the Ottawa and Chippewa, 7 Stat. 491; Treaty of September 17, 1836, with the Sacks and Foxes, etc., 7 Stat. 511; Treaty of October 15, 1836, with the Otoes, etc., 7 Stat. 524; Treaty of January 4, 1845, with the Creeks and Seminoles, 9 Stat. 821, 822; Treaty of October 13, 1846, with the Winnebago Indians, 9 Stat. 878; Treaty of August 2, 1847, with the Chippewas, 9 Stat. 904; Treaty of October 18, 1848, with the Menomonee Tribe, 9 Stat. 952; Treaty of July 23, 1851, with the Sioux, 10 Stat. 949; Treaty of August 5, 1851, with the Sioux Indians, 10 Stat. 954; Treaty of May 12, 1854, with the Menomonee, 10 Stat. 1064; Treaty of December 26, 1854, with the Nisqually, etc., Indians, 10 Stat. 1132; Treaty of October 17, 1855, with the Blackfoot Indians, 11 Stat. 657; Treaty of September 24, 1857, with the Pawnees, 11 Stat. 729; Treaty of January 22, 1855, with the Dwamish, etc., 12 Stat. 927; Treaty of January 26, 1855, with the S'Klallams, 12 Stat. 933; Treaty of January 31, 1855, with the Makah Tribe, 12 Stat. 939; Treaty of July 1, 1855, with the Qui-nai-elt, etc., Indians, 12 Stat. 971; Treaty of July 16, 1855, with the Flathead, etc., Indians, 12 Stat. 975; Treaty of December 21, 1855, with the Molels, 12 Stat. 981; Treaty of October 18, 1864, with the Chippewa Indians, 14 Stat. 657; Treaty of June 14, 1866, with the Creek Nation, 14 Stat. 785; Treaty of February 18, 1867, with the Sac and Fox Indians, 15 Stat. 495; Treaty of February 19, 1867, with the Sissiton, etc., Sioux, 15 Stat. 505.

[24] Treaty of May 6, 1828, with the Cherokee Nation, 7 Stat. 311; Treaty of New Echota, December 29, 1835, with the Cherokee, 7 Stat. 478 (provides for common schools and "* * * a literary institution of a higher order * * *"); Treaty of June 5, and 17, 1846, with the Pottowautomie Nation, 9 Stat. 853; Treaty of September 30, 1854, with the Chippewa Indians, 10 Stat. 1109; Treaty of November 18, 1854, with the Chastas, etc., Indians, 10 Stat. 1122; Treaty of April 19, 1858, with the Yancton Sioux, 11 Stat. 743; Treaty of June 9, 1855, with the Walla-Wallas, etc., Tribes, 12 Stat. 945; Treaty of June 11, 1855, with the Nez Perces, 12 Stat. 957; Treaty of March 12, 1858, with the Poncas, 12 Stat. 997; Treaty of October 14, 1865, with the Lower Brule Sioux, 14 Stat. 699; Treaty of February 23, 1867, with the Senecas, etc., 15 Stat. 513; Treaty of October 21, 1867, with the Kiowa and Comanche Indians, 15 Stat. 581; Treaty of October 21, 1867, with the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, 15 Stat. 589; Treaty of October 28, 1867, with the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, 15 Stat. 593; Treaty of March 2, 1868, with the Ute Indians, 15 Stat. 619; Treaty of April 29 et seq., 1868, with the Sioux Nation, 15 Stat. 635; Treaty of May 7, 1868, with the Crow Indians, 15 Stat. 649; Treaty of May 10, 1868, with the Northern Cheyenne and Northern Arapahoe Indians, 15 Stat. 655; Treaty of June 1, 1868, with the Navajo Tribe, 15 Stat. 667; Treaty of July 3, 1868, with the Eastern Band Shoshones and Bannock Tribe of Indians, 15 Stat. 673.

An unusual educational provision appears in the Treaty of May 6, 1828, with the Cherokee Nation, supra. Art. 5 reads in part:

> * * * It is further agreed by the United States, to pay two thousand dollars, annually, to the Cherokees, for ten years, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States in the education of their children, in their own country, in letters and the mechanick arts; also, one thousand dollars towards the purchase of a Printing Press and Types to aid the Cherokees in the progress of education, and to benefit and enlighten them as a people, in their own, and our language. (P. 313.)

[25] Treaty of November 15, 1827, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 307; Treaty of September 15, 1832, with the Winnebago Nation, 7 Stat. 370; Treaty of May 24, 1834, with the Chickasaw Indians, 7 Stat. 450; Treaty of June 9, 1863, with the Nez Perce Tribe, 14 Stat. 647; Treaty of March 19, 1867, with the Chippewa of Mississippi, 16 Stat. 719.

[26] Treaty of October 18, 1820, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 210; Treaty of June 3, 1825, with the Kansas Nation, 7 Stat. 244; Treaty of August 5, 1826, with the Chippewa Tribe, 7 Stat. 290; Treaty of October 21, 1837, with the Sac and Fox Indians, 7 Stat. 543; Treaty of March 17, 1842, with the Wyandott Nation, 11 Stat. 581; Treaty of May 15, 1846, with the Comanche, etc., Indians, 9 Stat. 844; Treaty of June 5, 1854, with the Miami Indians, 10 Stat. 1093; Treaty of November 15, 1854, with the Rogue Rivers, 10 Stat. 1119; Treaty of November 29, 1854, with the Umpqua, etc., Indians, 10 Stat. 1125; Treaty of July 31, 1855, with the Ottowas and Chippewas, 11 Stat. 621; Treaty of February 5, 1856, with the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes, 11 Stat. 663; Treaty of June 9, 1855, with the Yakama Indians, 12 Stat. 951; Treaty of June 25, 1855, with the Oregon Indians, 12 Stat. 963; Treaty of June 19, 1858, with Sioux Bands, 12 Stat. 1031; Treaty of July 16, 1859, with the Chippewa Bands, 12 Stat. 1105; Treaty of February 18, 1861, with the Arapahoes and Cheyenne Indians, 12 Stat. 1163; Treaty of March 6, 1861, with the Sacs, Foxes and Iowas, 12 Stat. 1171; Treaty of June 24, 1862, with the Ottawa Indians, 12 Stat. 1237; Treaty of May 7, 1864, with the Chippewas, 13 Stat. 693; Treaty of August 12, 1865, with the Snake Indians, 14 Stat. 683; Treaty of March 21, 1866, with the Seminole Indians, 14 Stat. 755; Treaty of April 28, 1866, with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nation, 14 Stat. 769; Treaty of August 13, 1868, with the Nez Perce Tribe, 15 Stat. 693.

[27] Treaty of October 16, 1826, with the Potawatamie Tribe, 7 Stat. 295; Treaty of September 20, 1828, with the Potowatamie Indians, 7 Stat. 317; Treaty of July 15, 1830, with the Sacs and Foxes, etc., 7 Stat. 328; Treaty of September 27, 1830, with the Choctaw Nation, 7 Stat. 333; Treaty of March 24, 1832, with the Creek Tribe, 7 Stat. 366; Treaty of February 14, 1833, with the Creek Nation, 7 Stat. 417; Treaty of January 14, 1846, with the Kansas Indians, 9 Stat. 842; Treaty of April 1, 1850, with the Wyandot Tribe, 9 Stat. 987; Treaty of March 15, 1854, with the Ottoe and Missouria Indians, 10 Stat. 1038; Treaty of May 6, 1854, with the Delaware Tribe, 10 Stat. 1048; Treaty of May 10, 1854, with the Shawnees, 10 Stat. 1053; Treaty of May 17, 1854, with the Ioway Tribe, 10 Stat. 1069; Treaty of May 30, 1854, with the Kaskaskia, etc., Indians, 10 Stat. 1082; Treaty of January 22, 1855, with the Willamette Bands, 10 Stat. 1143; Treaty of February 22, 1855; with the Chippewa Indians of Mississippi, 10 Stat. 1165; Treaty of June 22, 1855, with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, 11 Stat. 611; Treaty of August 2, 1855, with the Chippewa Indians of Saginaw, 11 Stat. 633; Treaty of August 7, 1856, with the Creeks and Seminoles, 11 Stat. 699; Treaty of June 28, 1862, with the Kickapoo Tribe, 13 Stat. 623; Treaty of October 2, 1863, with the Chippewa Indians (Red Lake and Pembina Bands), 13 Stat. 667; Treaty of September 29, 1865, with the Osage Indians, 14 Stat. 687.

[28] Act of March 30, 1802, 2 Stat. 139, 143.

[29] XXXI Annals of Congress, 15th Cong., 1st sess. (1817–18), p. 12.

[30] Act of March 3, 1819, 3 Stat. 516, R. S. § 2071, 25 U. S. C. 271.

> Indians practicable, and that the means of instruction can be introduced with their own consent, employ capable persons of good moral character to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their situation; and for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and performing such other duties as may be enjoined according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct, in the discharge of their duties. A report of the proceedings adopted in the execution of this provision shall be annually laid before Congress.

This statute carried with it a permanent annual appropriation of $10,000 "for the purpose of providing against the further decline and final extinction of the Indian tribes, adjoining the frontier settlements of the United States, and for introducing among them the habits and arts of civilization." [31]

The expenditure of this fund occasioned no little difficulty. The President, anxious to apply it in the most effective manner possible, addressed a circular letter to those societies and individuals—usually missionary organizations—that had been prominent in the effort to civilize the Indians, offering the cooperation of the Government in their various enterprises.[32] Soon the $10,000 was apportioned among them, and later, as treaty funds became available for this purpose, these, too, generally were disbursed to such establishments.[33]

A significant development in the history of Indian education was the establishment by a number of Indian tribes of their own schools. As early as 1805, the Choctaw chieftains maintained a school with annuity funds.[34] In 1841 and 1842, before a number of states had provided for public schools, the Cherokee and Choctaw nations had put into operation a common-school system.[35]

In 1855, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, George W. Manypenny, noted that total expenditures for education among the Indian tribes during the 10-year period ending January 1, 1855, exceeded $2,150,000. Apparently only a small portion of this sum was contributed directly by the Government, for the Commissioner's report shows that while $102,107.14 had been furnished by the United States, $824,160.61 had been added from Indian treaty funds, over $400,000 had been paid out by Indian nations themselves, and $830,000 had come from private benevolence.[36]

After the Civil War a more liberal policy for participation of the Government in the education of the Indians was pursued. In 1870, $100,000 was set aside for this purpose,[37] and in succeeding years the sums allocated were sufficiently liberal to permit a definite expansion of activities.

By 1878, several nonreservation boarding schools had been opened. Indian youths from all parts of the country attended the United States Indian Training and Industrial School at Carlisle, Pennsylvania. Other schools were located at Chemawa, Oregon; Lawrence, Kansas (Haskell Institute); Genoa, Nebraska; and Chilocco, Indian Territory.[38]

By the Act of July 31, 1882,[39] it was provided that abandoned military posts might be turned over to the Interior Department for the purpose of conducting therein Indian schools.

Government participation increased when, in 1890, the Indian Service > * * * began to use public schools for the instruction of Indian children. Individual Indians had attended public schools before, but under the policy adopted in 1890 the Office of Indian Affairs reimbursed public schools for the actual increase in cost incurred by instructing the Indian children. The practice was in accordance with the ultimate plan of the Office of turning over the Indian day schools to the States as soon as white settlers and taxpayers were present in sufficient numbers to justify the establishment of local systems of schools. However, the use of public schools for educating Indian children did not become a common practice until after 1900, when it developed rapidly.[40]

The recent course of federal activity with respect to Indian education is charted in the following excerpt from a recent study prepared under the auspices of the President's Advisory Committee on Education:

> The period since 1900 is marked by a number of changes. In 1906 the schools—several hundred day schools and a number of boarding schools—of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, previously operated by the tribal governments, were placed in charge of the Office of Indian Affairs. At first they were operated under contract but later by the Office of Indian Affairs. * * * A uniform course of study for the Indian schools—now hardly to be regarded as a progressive step—was provided in 1916. In order to increase the efficiency of the teachers, provision was made in 1912 for educational leave not to exceed 15 days a year to attend teachers' institutes or training schools, and in 1922 this leave was increased to 30 days. A provision in 1928 permitted 60 days of educational leave in any 2-year period.
>
> * * * * *
>
> Some of the changes which occurred are reflected in the data on enrollment of Indians in schools. * * * From 1900 to 1926 the enrollment increased from 26,451 to 69,892 or 164 percent. * * *[41]

Since then, a number of other changes have taken place, largely in response to criticism voiced by the Report of the Institute for Government Research, in 1928,[42] and the Report of the National Advisory Committee on Education in 1931.[43] These changes are summarized in additional passages from the 1939 Advisory Committee study:

> * * * A material change has occurred in the point of view of the education of Indians, and a program is being developed which seeks to relate instruction to the needs and interests of children as well as to develop initiative and independence. Much of the deadening routinization has been eliminated. Increased emphasis has been placed on community day schools, there has been a notable decrease in the enrollments of Government boarding schools, and the programs of the boarding schools have been improved to serve primarily the need for secondary education. Vocational education adapted to the needs of Indian children has received some attention. Provision has been made for the higher and technical education of Indian youth. Child labor in the schools has been reduced, although there is still too much of it in the elementary boarding schools. Improvement has been made in the educational personnel through higher requirements and increases in salaries. Congress has also made larger [31] Act of March 3, 1819, 3 Stat. 516. The repeal of this permanent appropriation was contemplated several times and finally accomplished in the Act of February 14, 1873, c. 138, 17 Stat. 437, 461. This appropriation became known as the "civilization fund." Blauch, Educational Service for Indians, Staff Study No. 18, prepared for the Advisory Committee on Education (1939), p. 32.

[32] 8 Am. State Papers (Indian Affairs, class II, vol. 2) 1815–27, pp. 200, 201.

[33] Blauch, op. cit., p. 33.

[34] Treaty of October 18, 1820, with the Choctaw Nation, Arts. 7 and 8, 7 Stat. 210.

[35] Blauch, op. cit., p. 33.

[36] Report of the Secretary of the Interior, Sen. Ex. Doc. No. 1, pt. 1, 34th Cong., 1st sess. (1855), p. 561.

[37] Act of July 15, 1870, 16 Stat. 335, 359.

[38] Blauch, op. cit., p. 34.

[39] 22 Stat. 181.

[40] Blauch, op. cit., pp. 34, 35.

[41] Blauch, op. cit., pp. 37, 38.

[42] Meriam, The Problem of Indian Administration (1928), c. IX.

[43] Federal Relations to Education (1931). The National Advisory Committee on Education was organized in 1929 by the Secretary of the Interior acting for the President.

appropriations to provide for larger expenditures per child in the schools. Educational management has been somewhat decentralized, more control being given to the regional and local superintendents.[44]

Another innovation is the Act of April 16, 1934,[45] commonly known as the Johnson-O'Malley Act providing for federal-state cooperation. Under the terms of this legislation, moneys appropriated by Congress for Indian education may be turned over to "any State or Territory, or political subdivision thereof" or to "any State university, college, or school" or "any appropriate State or private corporation, agency, or institution" under a contract by which the recipient of federal funds undertakes to provide educational facilities in accord with standards established by the Secretary of the Interior to a specified number of Indian students. So far contracts in accordance with this act have been made with Arizona, California, Minnesota, and Washington.

In line with the foregoing tendency towards decentralization of federal educational activities it should be noted that in a long series of special statutes Congress has appropriated money directly to various counties and school districts for the maintenance of public schools attended by Indians.[46] Generally such statutes contain some such provision as the following:

> * * * That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys * * * for the purpose of cooperating with school district * * * in the improvement and extension of public-school buildings: Provided, That the schools * * * shall be available to both Indian and white children without discrimination, except that tuition may be paid for Indian children attending in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior * * *.[47]

From these varying treaty stipulations, statutory provisions and governmental policies have emerged a number of problems concerning education of the Indian. Are all Indians eligible to attend federal schools; state schools? Can Indians be compelled to attend schools? What are the limitations upon the use of funds for Indian education? At various times these and other questions have been dealt with judicially and the substance and application of these decisions must be examined.

B. ELIGIBILITY FOR SCHOOL ATTENDANCE

The most important restriction imposed on the Indian's right to attend federal schools is found in the provision that

> * * * No appropriation, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided.

This restriction, contained in the Appropriation Act of May 25, 1918[48] has been embodied in title 25 of the United States Code as section 297.

At a time when allotment was considered a step towards the termination of governmental obligations, Congress thought it proper to enact a specific statute which declares that the fact of allotment shall not be construed as a reason for excluding the children of allottees from the benefit of federal appropriations for education.[49]

The eligibility of Indians to attend state schools is primarily a matter of state law, and therefore need not be considered at this point. The existence of various federal statutes designed to induce the states to offer educational facilities to Indians has already been noted,[50] and the constitutional issues involved in state discrimination are elsewhere analyzed.[51]

Under certain conditions non-Indian children have the right to attend Indian schools.[52]

C. COMPULSORY EDUCATION

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized at the present time to make and enforce regulations necessary to secure regular attendance of Indian children at Indian or public schools.[53]

Several treaties contained provisions for compulsory school attendance for children between specified ages and for a specified part of the year.[54] Failure to comply with those provisions might involve penalties.[55] However, compulsory education was not a common feature of treaties up to the cessation of treaty-making in 1871.

At least as early as 1877, common schools and compulsory education were urged by the Commissioner of Indian affairs as a general policy.[56]

In 1891,[57] Congress provided for regulations to enforce, by proper means, the regular attendance of Indian children of suitable age and health at schools established for their benefit. In 1893 much stronger methods were adopted. In the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, parents were given the alternative of sending their children to school or losing their portion of the annual rations or subsistence.[58]

A year later, Congress made it clear that compulsory attendance was not to apply to nonreservation schools, enacting legislation[59] which forbade the removal of Indian children to reservations outside the state or territory in which they resided without the consent of parents or next of kin, and further declared:

> * * * And it shall be unlawful for any Indian agent or other employe of the Government to induce, or seek to induce, by withholding rations or by other improper

---

[44] Blauch, op. cit., p. 44.

[45] Act of April 16, 1934, c. 147, 48 Stat. 596, amended by Act of June 4, 1936, 49 Stat. 1458, 25 U. S. C. 452–456.

[46] Act of June 7, 1935, c. 188, 49 Stat. 327; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 189, 49 Stat. 327; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 190, 49 Stat. 328; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 191, 49 Stat. 328; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 192, 49 Stat. 328; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 193, 49 Stat. 329; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 195, 49 Stat. 329; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 196, 49 Stat. 330; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 197, 49 Stat. 330; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 198, 49 Stat. 331; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 199, 49 Stat. 331; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 204, 49 Stat. 333; Act of June 7, 1935, c. 205, 49 Stat. 333; Act of June 11, 1935, c. 215, 49 Stat. 336; Act of June 11, 1935, c. 216, 49 Stat. 336; Act of August 30, 1935, c. 827, 49 Stat. 1013; Act of August 30, 1935, c. 828, 49 Stat. 1014.

[47] Act of June 7, 1935, c. 190, 49 Stat. 328, supra.

[48] C. 86, 40 Stat. 561, 564; Act of May 24, 1922, c. 199, 42 Stat. 552, 576; Act of May 18, 1916, c. 125, 39 Stat. 123, 125.

The Appropriation Act of May 18, 1916, declared that "the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood." (Davis v. Sitka School Board, 3 Alaska 481, 491 (1908).) See also Chapter 21, sec. 7.

[49] Act of August 15, 1894, 28 Stat. 286, 311.

[50] See fn. 45, supra.

[51] See Chapter 8, sec. 10.

[52] Act of March 1, 1907, 34 Stat. 1015, 1018, 25 U. S. C. 288; Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 783, 25 U. S. C. 289.

[53] Act of February 14, 1920, 41 Stat. 408, 410, 25 U. S. C. 282. For regulations regarding education of Indians, see 25 C. F. R. 41.1–47.7.

[54] E. g., Treaty of April 19, 1858, with the Yancton Tribe, Art. 4, sec. 4, 11 Stat. 743; Treaty of March 12, 1858, with the Ponca Tribe, Art. 2, sec. 4, 12 Stat. 997; Treaty of April 29, 1868, et seq., with the Sioux Tribes, 15 Stat. 635, Art. 7.

[55] Treaties of April 19, 1858, 11 Stat. 743, and March 12, 1858, 12 Stat. 997, carried the definite penalty for failure to comply of withholding annuities by the Secretary of the Interior. The Treaty of April 29, 1868, et seq., 15 Stat. 635, contained a pledge to comply. See fn. 72, infra.

[56] Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1877, p. 1.

[57] Act of March 3, 1891, 26 Stat. 989, 1014, 25 U. S. C. 284. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs was authorized to make regulations to secure attendance by the Act of July 13, 1892, 27 Stat. 120, 143, 25 U. S. C. 284.

[58] Act of March 3, 1893, 27 Stat. 612, 628, 635, 25 U. S. C. 283.

[59] Act of August 15, 1894, c. 290, sec. 11, 28 Stat. 286, 313.

means, the parents or next of kin of any Indian to consent to the removal of any Indian child beyond the limits of any reservation.

This provision was reenacted a year later,[60] and has been incorporated in title 25 of the United States Code as section 286.

Under this statute it has been suggested that a writ of habeas corpus will be issued to compel the release of an Indian child placed in a nonreservation school without parental consent.[61]

The Indian Service sought to evade the force of this statute by having a local Indian agent apply in the courts of the state to be appointed the guardian of the persons of the Indian children. His application was granted and he was directed to place the children at the industrial school, which was done. Later this proceeding was declared invalid by the federal court, which declared that if a county court could appoint a guardian of Indian children and could direct the placing of these children in any of the schools of the state, then the tribal condition of the Indians could be speedily broken up, not in pursuance of the acts of the National Government, but through the enforcement of the laws of the state acting upon the persons and property of the Indians.[62]

Consent of parents, guardians, or next of kin is not required to place Indian youths in an "Indian Reform School."[63]

No Indian pupil under the age of 14 may be transported at Government expense beyond the limits of the state or territory where its parents reside or of the adjoining state or territory.[64]

In 1913 an act was passed which authorized retention of annuities due Osage minors from parents who refused to send their children to some established school.[65]

After Indians became citizens and responsibility for the Indian devolved to some extent at least upon the states, state agents and employees, under regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, were authorized to enter reservations as truant officers to enforce laws of states requiring regular school attendance.[66]

D. USE OF FUNDS FOR INDIAN EDUCATION

From time to time Congress has placed certain restrictions on its appropriations for the support of Indian schools.

In 1897, Congress declared it to be the policy of the government thereafter to make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school.[67] In 1905,[68] contracts were made with mission schools, the money being taken from treaty and trust funds (tribal funds) on request of Indians. This use of tribal funds was challenged as being contrary to the policy stated in the appropriation act for 1897. The Supreme Court held, in 1908,[69] that both treaty and trust funds to which the Indians could lay claim as a matter of right, were not within the scope of the statute and could be used for sectarian schools.

In 1917, a statute was enacted which provided that "no appropriation whatever out of the Treasury of the United States" should be used "for education of Indian children in any sectarian school."[70] The effect of the newly added phrase "out of the Treasury of the United States" is not clear. At the present time money is appropriated for the institutional care[71] of Indian children in sectarian schools rather than for their instruction.

Controversies in the Court of Claims involve educational provisions of treaties and the use of tribal funds for educational purposes.[72]

Legislation[73] limiting the annual per capita cost in Indian schools has been repealed.[74]

All expenditures of money appropriated for school purposes among Indians are under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.[75]

Tribal and gratuity funds are made available for advances to worthy Indian youth to enable them to take educational courses, including special courses in nursing, home economics, forestry, and other industrial subjects in colleges, universities, or other institutions, the advances to be reimbursed in not to exceed 8 years.[76]

The status of Indian Service educational personnel involves problems of Indian Office structure and policy, which are separately treated.[77]

---

[60] Act of March 2, 1895, 28 Stat. 876, 906. See also Act of June 10, 1896, 29 Stat. 321, 348, 25 U. S. C. 287.

[61] See In re Lelah-puc-ka-chee, 98 Fed. 429 (D. C. N. D. Iowa, 1899).

[62] Peters v. Malin, 111 Fed. 244 (C. C. N. D. Iowa 1901). Cf. State v. Wolf, 145 N. C. 440, 59 S. E. 40 (1907) (state law compelling school attendance applied to Indian children and federal Indian school). In an Alaskan case, In re Can-ah-couqua, 29 Fed. 687 (D. C. Alaska, 1887), the question of continued attendance at school was at issue. It is interesting to note that the decision was put on a quasi-contract basis, the Alaska district court holding the mother of the child could not reclaim him from the custody of a Presbyterian mission school because she had agreed to allow him to attend for 5 years, and unless a clear breach or abuse of the child or a failure to educate and provide for and properly superintend its moral training was shown, it would be presumed that the best interests of the child would be served by continuance at school. Contrast with this the accepted view that when a white parent agrees to transfer custody of the child to another not in loco parentis, he may ordinarily repudiate that agreement and the courts will return custody to him unless a reciprocal affection has grown up between the custodian and child. The primary concern in these situations is still the best interest of the child, but the courts ordinarily hold that when the parents are alive and competent, it is to the best interest of the child to return him to the parents. Sandro v. Villapiano, 81 F. 2d 255 (App. D. C. 1936).

[63] Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325, 328, 25 U. S. C. 302.

[64] Act of March 3, 1909, 35 Stat. 781, 783; 25 U. S. C. 290.

[65] Act of June 30, 1913, 38 Stat. 77, 96, 25 U. S. C. 285. Cf. fns. 54–55, supra.

It is no longer the practice to withhold annuities to compel attendance.

[66] Act of February 15, 1929, 45 Stat. 1185, 25 U. S. C. 231.

[67] Act of June 7, 1897, 30 Stat. 62, 79, 25 U. S. C. 278. And see Act of June 10, 1896, 29 Stat. 321, 345.

[68] Act of March 3, 1905, 33 Stat. 1048, 1055.

[69] Quick Bear v. Leupp, 210 U. S. 50, 80 (1908).

[70] Act of March 2, 1917, 39 Stat. 969, 988, 25 U. S. C. 278.

[71] The Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 325, 326, 25 U. S. C. 279, provided for receipt of rations by mission schools for children enrolled in such schools who were entitled to rations under treaty stipulations.

[72] See fns. 22–27, fns. 54 and 55, supra.

The educational provisions of the Treaty of April 29, et seq., 1868, with the Sioux Tribe of Indians, 15 Stat. 635, formed the basis of a petition filed May 7, 1923, in the Court of Claims, under authority of the Act of June 3, 1920, 41 Stat. 738 (Sioux). The petitioner alleged that treaty provisions for a teacher and schoolhouse for every 30 children were unfulfilled and asked compensatory damages. The court in dismissing the petition held that the treaty imposed an obligation upon the Indian parents to compel attendance which had not been discharged and that, moreover, there existed no logical basis for computing damages. Sioux Tribe of Indians v. United States, 84 C. Cls. 16 (1936), cert. den. 302 U. S. 740. Other Court of Claims cases concern the possibility of a counterclaim by the United States for gratuitous expenditures for education against Indian tribal claims. The language of pertinent jurisdictional acts on this point varies. Osage Tribe of Indians v. United States, 66 C. Cls. 64 (1928), app. dism. 279 U. S. 811, 68 C. Cls. 788. Fort Berthold Indians v. United States, 71 C. Cls. 308 (1930); Blackfeet et al. Nations v. United States, 81 C. Cls. 101 (1935). Cf. Chickasaw Nation v. United States, 87 C. Cls. 91 (1938), cert. den. 307 U. S. 646.

[73] Act of April 30, 1908, 35 Stat. 70, 72; Act of June 30, 1919, 41 Stat. 3, 6; Act of February 21, 1925, 43 Stat. 958; 25 U. S. C. 296.

[74] Act of March 2, 1929, 45 Stat. 1534.

[75] Act of April 30, 1908, 35 Stat. 70, 72, 25 U. S. C. 295.

[76] See sec. 6, infra.

[77] See Chapter 2.

SECTION 3. HEALTH SERVICES [78]

When the Federal Government assumed the education of Indians, some degree of responsibility for their health was incidentally involved, and the first expenditures for Indian health were made from funds appropriated for education and civilization.[79] Early expenditures for health and medical care were made from tribal funds under treaties and from general appropriations for education or incidentals.[80] These appropriations were allotted among various religious and philanthropic societies already active in educational and missionary work among the various Indian tribes.[81]

While the superintendency of Indian Affairs was under the War Department,[82] the Indians were for the most part in the vicinities of military posts. It was a natural and convenient thing that dispensation of medical care and sanitary regulation be assumed by members of the army medical staff located on the nearby posts.

In 1832, Congress [83] authorized the Secretary of War to provide vaccination against smallpox for the Indians and made an appropriation for that purpose.

In 1849,[84] when the Department of the Interior was established, medical care of the Indian under the Bureau of Indian Affairs passed from military to civil control. Under this department, agency physicians on the reservation at first gave little attention to the Indians and acted more in the capacity of doctors for the government employees, or in connection with Indian schools.[85] Treaties [86] entered into included provisions for physicians and hospitals. In 1873, measures were taken towards furnishing organized medical facilities and an educational and medical division which continued until 1877.[87] By 1874,[88] about one-half of the Indian agencies were each supplied with a physician. After 1878 [89] physicians on Indian reservations were required to be graduates of medical colleges. Between 1880 and 1890,[90] several hospitals were established. In 1909,[91] prevalence of trachoma among the Indians had become so devastating that funds were appropriated for investigation, treatment, and prevention of this disease, and in 1912 [92] money was allotted to the Public Health and Marine Service for a survey of trachoma and tuberculosis.

After 1911,[93] appropriations under the heading "relief of distress and prevention of contagious diseases" were greatly increased and were spent on correspondingly increased medical care and hospital facilities.[94] Since 1921,[95] when the Bureau of Indian Affairs was authorized to expend funds for the conservation of health, funds have been appropriated specifically for that purpose. In 1924, a special division of health was established in the Office of Indian Affairs.

Fees may be charged for medical, dental, and hospital services under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.[96] Other regulations [97] in force relative to health activities of the Indian Service, briefly summarized, state that health personnel is subject to civil service regulations; physicians may not engage in outside practice; they are responsible for health conditions on the reservation, prevention of diseases and are required to treat and medically instruct Indians at established offices, clinics, or in their homes; they are required to make reports of all contagious diseases, inoculations, immunizations, vital statistics; cooperate with state officials and otherwise enforce necessary quarantine regulations and sanitary inspections; immunize and inoculate against contagious diseases.[98] All admissions and discharges to and from hospitals are upon order of physician. Adults leaving the hospital against the advice of physician in charge must give a written release of all liability to the Indian Service. Parents or guardians must give written permission for hospitalization of a minor or incompetent person and consent for surgical operations must be obtained from [78] For regulations concerning hospital and medical care of Indians, see 25 C. F. R. 84.1–85.15.

---

[79] See sec. 2, supra.

[80] Sen. Ex. Doc. 48th Cong., 2d sess., vol. 2, pt. 2, Special Report of 1888 on Indian Education and Civilization, p. 168.

[81] American Board of Foreign Missions, Moravians, Baptist Board of Foreign Missions, Society of Friends. The reports of religious and educational societies even in prerevolutionary days refer to health and medical care for students. Mass. Hist. Coll., 1st series, vol. I (1792 ed.) p. 173. Regarding two Indian students at Cambridge, Mass. in 1654: "The other called Caleb, not long after took his degree * * * died of a consumption at Charlestown, where he was placed * * * under the care of a physician * * * where he wanted not for the best means the country could afford, both of food and physick * * *." Accounts of the Superintendent of Indian Affairs of 1820–21 include items for medical service and supplies. 8 Am. State Papers (class II, Indian Affairs, vol. 2) 1815–27, p. 299.

[82] Act of May 25, 1824, 4 Stat. 35.

[83] Act of May 5, 1832, 4 Stat. 514. "For vaccine matter and vaccination of Indians" was a regular item in appropriation bills.

[84] Act of March 3, 1849, 9 Stat. 395.

[85] Speech of Dr. James Townsend before Western Branch, American Public Health Ass'n., July 24, 1939, "Government and Indian Health."

[86] Treaty of January 22, 1855, with the Dwamish, etc., Indians, 12 Stat. 927, 929; Treaty of January 26, 1855, with the S'Klallam Indians, 12 Stat, 933, 935; Treaty of January 31, 1855, with the Makahs, 12 Stat. 939, 941; Treaty of June 9, 1855, with the Walla-Wallas, Cayuses, and Umatilla Bands, 12 Stat. 945, 947; Treaty of June 9, 1855, with the Yakama Nation, 12 Stat. 951, 953; Treaty of June 11, 1855, with the Nez Perce Indians, 12 Stat. 957, 959; Treaty of June 25, 1855, with the Indians in Middle Oregon, 12 Stat. 963, 965; Treaty of July 1, 1855, and January 25, 1856, with the Qui-nai-elts and Quil-leh-ute, 12 Stat. 971, 973; Treaty of July 16, 1855, with the Flatheads, etc., 12 Stat. 975, 977; Treaty of October 21, 1867, with the Kiowa and Comanche Tribes, 15 Stat. 581, 584; Treaty of October 28, 1867, with the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Tribes, 15 Stat. 593, 597; Treaty of April 29, 1868, et. seq., with the Sioux, 15 Stat.. 635, 638; Treaty of May 7, 1868, with the Crow Tribe, 15 Stat. 649, 652; Treaty of May 10, 1868, with the Northern Cheyenne and Arapahoe Tribes, 15 Stat. 655, 658; Treaty of July 3, 1868, with the Eastern Band of Shoshones and Bannock Tribe, 15 State. 673, 676.

[87] Sen. Ex. Doc., 48th Cong., 2d sess., vol. 2, pt. 2, Special Report of 1888 on Indian Education and Civilization, p. 168. Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1885, p. LXXVI.

[88] Speech of Dr. Townsend, op. cit.,

[89] Ibid.

[90] Annual Reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1887, pp. 227, 264; 1888, p. XXXV.

[91] Act of February 20, 1909, 35 Stat. 642.

[92] Act of August 24, 1912, 37 Stat. 518, 519.

[93] Act of March 3, 1911, 36 Stat. 1058.

[94] Specific appropriations for health work among Indians: 1911, $40,000; 1912, $60,000; 1913, $90,000; 1914, $200,000; 1915, $300,000; 1916, $300,000; 1917, $350,000; 1918, $350,000; 1919, $350,000; 1920, $375,000; 1921, $350,000; 1922, $375,000; 1923, $370,000; 1924, $370,000; 1925, $596,270; 1926, $700,000; 1927, $756,000; 1928, $948,000; 1929, $1,514,000; 1930, $2,658,000; 1931, $3,074,110; 1932, $4,050,000; 1933, $3,213,000; 1934, $2,996,200; 1935, $2,981,040; 1936, $3,534,620; 1937, $4,062,360; 1938, $4,595,690; 1939, $5,024,000; 1940, $5,088,170. See appropriation acts listed in Chapter 4.

[95] Act of November 2, 1921, 42 Stat. 208, 25 U. S. C. 13.

[96] Act of May 9, 1938, 52 Stat. 291, 312, 25 U. S. C. 562.

[97] 25 C. F. R. 84.1–85.15. Regulations apply to tribes organized pursuant to the Reorganization Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984, amended, Act of June 15, 1935, 49 Stat. 378, and the Oklahoma Welfare Act of June 26, 1936, 49 Stat. 1967, 25 U. S. C. 500, 501, except where inconsistent with tribal constitutions or bylaws. In case of conflict, tribal law provisions supersede regulations.

[98] Act of August 1, 1914, 38 Stat. 582, 584, 25 U. S. C. 198.

the patient, if an adult; if a minor or incompetent, from parents or guardians.[99]

Under regulations[100] relating to hospitals, indigent Indians recognized as tribal members are admitted without cost. In tribal hospitals supported by tribal funds, all tribal members are entitled to free hospitalization. Priority of admission is based on necessity for hospitalization and degree of Indian blood. White wives of Indians, Indian children from Government schools, Indian widows of whites or of nonrestricted Indians, if residing on reservations, are eligible for admission. Indian wives and children of white men are not admitted unless residents on reservations and participants in tribal affairs.

Indians as citizens of the states in which they reside frequently claim and sometimes obtain the public health protection of the various states. To facilitate cooperation between the state and Federal Government, the Secretary of the Interior in 1929[101] was authorized to permit agents and employees of any state to enter on tribal land, reservation, or allotment therein for the purpose of making inspections of health and enforcing sanitation and quarantine regulations

In 1934, the Johnson-O'Malley Act[102] became law and provided that the Secretary of the Interior might enter into contracts with states or territories for medical attention to Indians.

In 1935, under the Social Security Act, increased health benefits were made available to the Indians.[103]

In 1936,[104] the President, by Executive order, provided that officials and employees of the Indian Service serving in a medical or sanitary capacity could hold state, county, or municipal positions of similar character without additional compensation, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

In the enforcement of public health regulations the Secretary of the Interior has been authorized to impose quarantine and when necessary to confine persons afflicted with infectious diseases.[105]

[99] 25 C. F. R. 84, 85.

[100] Ibid.

[101] Act of February 15, 1929, 45 Stat. 1185, 25 U. S. C. 231.

[102] Act of April 16, 1934, 48 Stat. 596, amended June 4, 1936, 49 Stat. 1458, 25 U. S. C. 452–454.

[103] See sec. 5 of this Chapter.

[104] Executive Order 7369, May 13, 1936.

[105] Act of August 1, 1914, 38 Stat. 582, 584.

Care of insane Indians has for many years been considered within the powers of the Secretary.[106] Payment for their care is made to various hospitals for the insane including St. Elizabeths Hospital in the District of Columbia, which is a federal institution.[107]

Commitment of an Indian to a hospital for the insane requires a sanity hearing to insure due process.[108] The laws of the states where reservations are located are conformed to in the commitment of insane Indians to state mental hospitals or state institutions for the insane. An insane Indian residing on an Indian reservation under the jurisdiction of the United States may be committed to St. Elizabeths Hospital by order of the Secretary of the Interior. A certificate of insanity made by two reputable physicians who have conducted an examination of the Indian is required before issuance of an order of the Secretary. Notice of the time and place of such examination must be personally served upon the alleged insane Indian, the spouse, parent, or other next of kin known to be residing on the reservation. The Indian alleged to be insane has the right to present witnesses and to submit evidence of his sanity.[109]

In any case in which an Indian is alleged to be insane or of unsound mind, and such Indian has displayed homicidal tendencies or has otherwise demonstrated that if permitted to remain at large or to go unrestrained, the rights of persons and of property will be jeopardized or the preservation of the public peace imperiled and the commission of crime rendered probable, the superintendent has authority to take such Indian into custody and to detain him temporarily in some suitable place pending proper legal adjudication of his insanity.

[106] 25 U. S. C. 13, derived from Act of November 2, 1921, 42 Stat. 208, grants the Bureau of Indian Affairs power to expend money for relief of distress and conservation of health.

[107] Act of April 28, 1904, 33 Stat. 539, directs that insane Indians in Indian Territory be cared for at the asylum for insane Indians at Canton, S. Dak. The Appropriation Act of May 10, 1939, 53 Stat. 685, 736, provides for the admission to St. Elizabeths Hospital of "insane Indian beneficaries of the Bureau of Indian Affairs."

[108] Cf. Barry v. Hall, 98 F. 2d 222 (App. D. C., 1938). This case requires all persons admitted to St. Elizabeths Hospital to have been determined insane upon hearing with an opportunity for defense. Memo. Sol. I. D., July 27, 1939.

[109] 25 C. F. R. 84.

SECTION 4. RATIONS, RELIEF, AND REHABILITATION

The common belief that Indians, as such, receive rations from the Federal Government is not in accord with the facts.[110]

As noted in the introduction to this chapter, frequently in sales of Indian land[111] supplies were used instead of cash as the quid pro quo offered to compensate the Indian for value received by the United States. Later, as the Indians advanced sufficiently in the knowledge of white man's civilization to purchase their own supplies and clothing, the value of promised supplies was frequently commuted and paid in money per capita to the members of various tribes.[112]

As a matter of hospitality, a law[113] authorizing food for Indians visiting at army posts has remained on the statute book for over a hundred years. Relief, frequently dispensed in the form of food, has been authorized in general appropriations[114] for indigent Indians. The charitable nature of these limited appropriations, however, has been mistakenly attributed generally to all provisions relating to rations. The failure to recognize that issuance of rations may be a form of payment of obligations to Indians resulted in the provision in the Act of March 3, 1875,[115] that able-bodied male Indians give service and labor in return for supplies distributed to them.

At the present time, when relief is given in the form of food and supplies, labor is required of recipients of relief rations wherever possible. Such rations may not be sold or exchanged. They can be shared only with dependents of the recipients.[116]

Under recent appropriation acts[117] tribal funds have been made available for relief purposes.

[110] 25 C. F. R. 251.1. Also see 251.2–251.8.

[111] For example, see treaties of February 19, 1867, with the Sissiton and Warpeton, 15 Stat. 505; October 21, 1867, with the Kiowa and Comanche, 15 Stat. 581; May 7, 1868, with the Crow, 15 Stat. 649.

[112] Act of July 1, 1898, 30 Stat. 571, 596, 25 U. S. C. 136.

[113] Act of May 13, 1800, 2 Stat. 85; R. S. § 2110, 25 U. S. C. 141.

[114] See appropriation acts, Chapter 4.

[115] 18 Stat. 420, 449, 25 U. S. C. 137.

[116] 25 C. F. R. 251.2, 251.3.

[117] Act of May 9, 1938, 52 Stat. 291, 314. Tribal funds are appropriated for relief of Indians, "in need of assistance, including cash grants; the purchase of subsistence supplies * * * and household goods; * * * transportation, and all other necessary expenses, $100,000, payable from funds on deposit to the credit of the particular tribe concerned."

Allotments are made to the superintendents of the various agencies for the relief of indigent Indians under their supervision. These allotments are spent chiefly for supplies, food, and clothing;[118] a limited amount being spent also for work relief and for subsistence grants when unusual circumstances warrant such procedure. Rarely is relief given in the form of cash.

[118] Relief situations are often of an emergency nature and purchases for relief dispensation are permitted without usual advertisement required by R. S. § 3709. Compliance is apparently required with the provisions of the Act of May 27, 1930, 46 Stat. 391, requiring purchases of shoes or other articles available from prison manufacture to be made through the Federal Prison Industries, Inc.—Hearings, H. Subcomm. of Comm. on Appropriations, Interior Dept., 76th Cong., 3d sess., pt. II, p. 502.

A chief object of recent rehabilitation work has been to provide landless Indians with land, houses, outbuildings, fencing, water supply, etc., so that with equipment and livestock provided from other sources they may be enabled to work the land in a self-supporting manner.[119] Aid to individual Indians in this field has generally taken the form of loans rather than grants, and is therefore considered under section 6 of this Chapter.

[119] Ibid. The National Resources Board, as the result of a survey of Indian homes in 1935, has reported that some 70 percent of Indian dwellings are probably below a reasonable living standard.

SECTION 5. SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

In 1936[120] the Solicitor of the Interior Department rendered an opinion which held that the Social Security Act[121] was applicable to the Indians. The act contemplates three types of direct aid by states in cooperation with the Government to their needy citizens, that is, aid to needy aged individuals, to needy dependent children, and to needy individuals who are blind.

In connection with these three types of direct aid, it was determined that as a state plan must be "in effect in all political subdivisions of the State," and as Indian reservations are included within states, counties, and other political subdivisions, Indians are entitled to aid under state plans.

Other provisions of the Social Security Act provide federal assistance in the care of crippled children, maternal health service and public health service, special attention being given to rural areas and areas suffering from severe economic distress. One of the bases for allotment of federal funds was population of states. Statistics relating to population included Indians. Their inclusion in the compilation would seem to prohibit any implication that Indians were to be deprived of the benefits of the act. To quote the Solicitor,

> In computing these statistics no omission is made of the Indians and official registration and census rolls have been used which, of course, include the Indian population. It would be manifestly contrary to the intention of the act that funds allotted to cover a certain number of people should be used only for a chosen group to the exclusion of others included in the count.

Furthermore it was held that, as citizens, Indians were entitled to social security benefits, all Indians who were not already citizens having become so by the Act of June 2, 1924.[122]

In view of these considerations, the Solicitor held that no distinction is justified between the Indian and other state citizens, and that the law requires that social security benefits be distributed without discrimination against the Indians.

According to Dr. James Townsend,[123] Director of Health, Office of Indian Affairs, most states are actively assisting in the application of the Social Security Act to Indians, others are assisting to a lesser degree, and still others resist expenditure of state and local funds for Indians, even to the point of failure to accept Indian applications.

[120] Memo. Sol. I. D., April 22, 1936.

[121] Act of August 14, 1935, 49 Stat. 620.

[122] 43 Stat. 253. See Chapter 8, sec. 2.

[123] Speech by Dr. Townsend, op. cit.

SECTION 6. FEDERAL LOANS

Loans advanced by the Federal Government to the Indians are financed from gratuity appropriations,[124] appropriations from tribal funds,[125] and revolving credit funds established under the Indian Reorganization Act[126] and the Oklahoma Welfare Act.[127] The Klamath Indians may borrow from a revolving credit fund specifically set up for that tribe.[128]

In addition, loans and grants have been made available to the tribe and their members under emergency relief appropriation acts beginning in 1935 for financing rehabilitation of families in stricken agricultural areas.[129] It is also possible for Indian tribes to borrow from other federal agencies funds appropriated for such purposes in promotion of the general welfare of the nation as low-rent housing development, when the tribes meet the eligibility requirements of the controlling federal legislation.[130]

A. LOANS UNDER SPECIAL INDIAN LEGISLATION

Since 1912, Congress has appropriated[131] gratuity funds for reimbursable loans direct from the Government to individual Indians. Prior to 1938 loans were made in the form of property, but since that year Indians have received cash loans. These loans were designed to establish Indians in self-supporting individual enterprises including farming, stock raising, and other industries. Loans have been granted also to assist old and indigent Indians who have land they cannot use.

A limited number of qualified Indians are able to obtain loans from gratuity and tribal funds for educational purposes, for payment of tuition, and other expenses in recognized vocational and trade schools.[132]

Recipients of loans from gratuity funds are for the most part members of tribes not organized under the Indian Reorganization Act,[133] who therefore are not eligible to borrow funds under that act. With the exception of members of the Osage Tribe, loans from gratuity funds are not made to residents of the State of Oklahoma.

Congress has also made available for loans to the members of certain tribes a part of their tribal funds. These are handled as tribal revolving credit funds under which loans are made to [124] 25 U. S. C. 13; annual appropriation acts.

[125] 25 U. S. C. 123; annual appropriation acts.

[126] Act of June 18, 1934, sec. 10, 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 470.

[127] Act of June 26, 1936, sec. 6, 49 Stat. 1967, 1968, 25 U. S. C. 506.

[128] Act of August 28, 1937, 50 Stat. 872.

[129] See subsection B, infra.

[130] See subsection B, infra.

[131] 25 U. S. C. 13, 123. And see annual appropriation acts, Chapter 4.

[132] Hearings, H. Subcomm. of Comm. on Appropriations, Interior Dept., 76th Cong. 3d sess., pt. II, p. 175.

[133] Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 470. Under sec. 11 of the Indian Reorganization Act similar provisions are made for loans for educational purposes.

individual Indians whose repayments are returned to the fund and are available for further loans.[134]

Under the Act of May 10, 1939,[135] Congress authorized transfer of tribal revolving funds to the revolving credit funds of organized tribes to supplement credit funds and to be administered under the rules and regulations applicable thereto. In the case of organized tribes, tribal consent is necessary to authorize use of tribal funds for loans or other purposes.[136]

Federal credit to the Indians was greatly extended by the establishment of revolving credit funds under the Acts of June 18, 1934,[137] and June 26, 1936.[138] These statutes authorized the establishment of a revolving fund totaling $12,000,000, from which the Secretary of the Interior may make loans to incorporated tribes, and in the State of Oklahoma to cooperatives,[139] credit associations,[140] and individuals[141] for economic development. Loans as repaid are credited to the revolving fund and reports are made annually to Congress of transactions under this authorization.

Regulations governing loans from revolving credit funds to a tribal corporation, cooperative, credit association, or an individual provide that the tribal application must be accompanied by an economic program.[142] Security or other guarantee of repayment, terms of payment, and plans for managing credit operations must be included in the application. Upon approval of the application a commitment order covering the terms and conditions for making advances of funds is prepared. Any changes to be made in the application or any additional conditions are incorporated in the commitment order, which is then returned to the applicant for acceptance. Advances are made contingent upon accomplishment of certain features of the program. Failure to carry out these provisions is ground for refusing further advances. The tribe, if the loan contract so provides, may relend funds to individuals, partnerships, and to cooperatives, and may use funds for the development and operation of corporate (tribal) enterprises. Credit associations may lend only to individuals.[143]

Definite plans for the use of funds likewise are required of any individual or association of individuals borrowing from the tribe or credit association. These loans may not extend for a greater period than the duration of the agreement of the tribe or credit association with the government. This period varies, ranging from short-term crop loans and intermediate-term loans for livestock products, to long-term loans for permanent improvements. Loans for permanent improvements are made only in exceptional circumstances, preference being given to income-producing enterprises. As a matter of policy loans are not made for land purchases under the revolving fund except in very unusual cases and then in small amounts.[144]

Final approval of all loans made by corporations, or credit associations, is vested in representatives of the Indian Service at the present time.

Legislation authorizing revolving credit fund loans to incorporated tribes has been construed in the light of the avowed purpose of increasing tribal control over tribal resources.

In discussing this legislation the Solicitor of the Interior Department[145] pointed out:

> Money from the revolving credit fund may not be loaned to individual Indians directly. In relation to this fund the Secretary of the Interior can deal only with the tribal corporations representing the interests of all the Indians who are members of the tribes. In this respect the loans contemplated * * * are in distinct contrast to those heretofore authorized by Congress. Under reimbursable appropriations loans have been made to the Indians for designated purposes, * * * are carried on by the Government with individual Indians. * * * The tribal bodies, where such exist, have no responsibility in the administration of such funds.

Under section 10 of the Wheeler-Howard Act,[146] governing the revolving credit fund the Government can deal only with the tribal authorities, and these are charged with the responsibility for making such loans to their members, or for using the funds in such ways as will enable them to create a basis for expanding self-sufficiency. In accordance with the purpose expressed in sections 16 and 17 of the act, by which a large and increasing responsibility for taking care of their own welfare is placed upon the various tribes, organized for local self-government and economic activity, section 10 contemplates that funds loaned to the tribes will be, in large measure, subject to their disposition, consistent with the terms of said provision.

This section was construed by the Solicitor:

> Under section 10 the Secretary of the Interior may determine the conditions upon which he will make loans to Indian corporations. He may prescribe such rules and regulations as are reasonably appropriate to this purpose. He may require reasonable guarantees by the borrowing corporation that the money loaned to it will be used for specified purposes and handled in specified ways. If the Secretary is to exercise any control over money already loaned to the corporation it must be a control which is authorized by mutual agreement, and is designed to enforce the terms of such agreement. The strictly regulatory power of the Secretary, conferred by section 10, ceases when the loan to the tribe is completed. Thereafter the powers of the Department are limited to enforcement of the terms of the tribal loan agreement. The Indian corporation, upon which responsibility is placed for the repayment of the loan, may properly expect, under the terms of section 10, that moneys will not be disbursed to individual members of the tribe in the discretion of the Interior Department, on behalf of the corporation, but that the money will actually be loaned to the corporation to be used or disbursed by the duly elected officers of the corporation in accordance with the terms of a loan agreement and in accordance with the mandates given these officers in tribal constitutions, bylaws and charters.[147]

In view of these purposes, the Solicitor of the Interior Department held, any arrangement placing upon Indian Service officials primary responsibility for the administration of loans from the tribe to the individual would be " a serious invasion of tribal responsibility and initiative" and would "nullify in large measure the promises contained in other sections of the Act." Equally inconsistent with the purposes of the act and with the terms of constitutions and charters adopted thereunder, the Solicitor held, would be any arrangement whereby the tribal authorities administering such loans were subjected to the control of Indian Service officials. Any such arrangement would constitute an assumption of "political control of matters internal to the tribe."

---

[134] See for example 25 C. F. R. 28.1–28.56, governing administration of Klamath Tribal Loan Fund, created by Act of August 28, 1937, 50 Stat. 872, 25 U. S. C. 530–535.

[135] Public Act No. 68, 76th Cong., 1st sess.

[136] Act of June 18, 1934, sec. 16, 48 Stat. 984, 987, 25 U. S. C. 476, giving such tribe power to veto unauthorized use of tribal assets. And see Memo. Sol. I. D. October 18, 1932.

[137] Sec. 10, 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 470. For regulations governing loans to Indian chartered corporations, see 25 C. F. R. 21.1–21.49.

[138] 49 Stat. 1967.

[139] For regulations governing loans to Indian cooperatives in Oklahoma, see 25 C. F. R. 23.1–23.27.

[140] See ibid., 24.1–24.15. For regulations governing loans by Indian credit associations in Oklahoma, see 25 C. F. R. 25.1–25.26.

[141] For regulations governing loans by the United States to individual Indians in Oklahoma, see ibid., 26.1–26.26.

[142] 25 C. F. R., subchapter E.

[143] Ibid.

[144] Ibid., part 27.

[145] Memo. Sol. I. D., December 5, 1935.

[146] Act of June 18, 1934, 48 Stat. 984, 986, 25 U. S. C. 470.

[147] Memo. Sol. I. D., December 5, 1935.

Safeguards against improper disposition of funds by the borrowing tribe must be set forth in the loan agreements between the tribe and the Secretary of the Interior.[148]

The Oklahoma Welfare Act[149] made funds appropriated for loans under the Indian Reorganization Act available for loans to Oklahoma tribes, individual Indians, and cooperatives for land management, credit, administration, consumers' protection, production, and marketing purposes. The act also authorized additional appropriations of an additional $2,000,000 for loans.

The benefit of the revolving credit fund was extended to Alaska by the Act of May 1, 1936.[150]

B. LOANS UNDER GENERAL LEGISLATION

Under various acts making appropriations for rural rehabilitation, and relief,[151] Indians, like other citizens, have received loans and grants. At the same time certain Indian tribes have undertaken to handle their own rehabilitation and relief problems, with federal aid. Thus funds for rehabilitation were granted to various tribes under agreements[152] executed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for, and on behalf of, the United States. Agreements on behalf of organized tribes are signed by tribal officers. Unorganized tribes are represented by trustees. Submission of programs approved by such officers or trustees is required as a condition precedent to the execution of a trust agreement. The funds may be set up by the tribe as a revolving fund and money may be advanced by the tribe to individual Indians, all contracts with individuals being executed by the tribes.

In some cases the tribe, instead of loaning money, uses rehabilitation funds to improve tribal land, and then assigns the use of the land to members. Improvements on tribal land remain the property of the tribe, individual Indians paying fees for the use of the improvements. These payments are, in most cases, to be collected until the original value, or partial value at least, of the improvement has been collected. Payments are placed in a tribal revolving fund.

Property improved under rehabilitation loans is ordinarily held under revocable assignments, subject to revocation upon failure to pay. The assignee may ordinarily designate a successor subject to joint approval of the tribal officers or trustees and superintendent.

Another phase of rehabilitation involves self-help projects. Money is advanced to the tribes for community buildings, in which Indians are engaged in sewing, canning, weaving, and handicrafts. Machine sheds, storehouses, shearing sheds, smithies, shops, grist mills, tanneries have been constructed. Water development and irrigation projects have been financed. Frequently materials are supplied at tribal expense and the workers are paid wages, the products being property of the tribe. By these activities not only have numerous Indian workers received wages but thousands of Indian families have been more adequately fed and clothed.[153]

The tribal programs of rehabilitation were first financed out of appropriations under the Joint Resolution of April 8, 1935,[154] allocated to the Office of Indian Affairs by a Presidential letter of January 11, 1936,[155] This work was continued under the Emergency Relief Acts of 1937[156] and 1938.[157] The Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939[158] made a special appropriation direct to the Office of Indian Affairs.

Those Indians whose needs are not met by the tribal rehabilitation program are entitled to treatment on a parity with other citizens when they apply to the Farm Security Administration for individual rehabilitation loans.[159]

Under the same principle that prompted the holding that individual Indians are eligible to receive assistance under the Social Security Act and from the Farm Security Administration for rehabilitation loans,[160] Indian tribes are eligible to apply for loans under such legislation for the general welfare as that

---

[148] Ibid. In this memorandum the Solicitor declared:

> * * * If the loan agreement is to be regarded as a contract, observance of which by the corporation is a prerequisite to the obtaining and the continued use of funds from the revolving fund, then such contract should be equally binding on the Government. The Secretary of the Interior has no authority, under the power to make rules and regulations contained in section 10 of the Act, to require that the Indians shall observe such agreements on pain of drastic penalties, while the Government is free to change its policies in such ways as it deems best, and to force new terms upon the Indians which were not included in the original agreements. Such an illusory agreement is clearly not justified as a matter of law.
>
> I believe that the rules and regulations should state clearly the minimum terms and conditions which must be inserted in every agreement for a loan from the revolving fund, and further that this agreement should be binding, not only upon the Indians, but also upon the Government. If the Secretary of the Interior and the Indians of a particular tribe agree upon a credit program and upon plans for the economic development of such tribe, and of its members, I do not believe that a subsequent Secretary should have the power at a later date to change the terms of that agreement.

[149] Act of June 26, 1936, 49 Stat. 1967, 25 U. S. C. et seq. For regulations governing loans by United States to individual Indians in Oklahoma, see 25 C. F. R. 26.1–26.26.

[150] 49 Stat. 1250, 48 U. S. C. See Chapter 21, sec. 9.

[151] Joint Resolution of April 8, 1935, 49 Stat. 115; Joint Resolution of June 29, 1937, 50 Stat. 352; Joint Resolution of June 21, 1938, 52 Stat. 809.

[152] Under these agreements, the United States grants to the tribe all of the allocation of emergency funds required to cover the cost of the approved projects, excepting such part of the cost as represents necessary administrative and supervisory expenses. The grant is made subject to the condition that it will be used for approved objects.

[153] Hearings H. Subcomm. of Comm. on Appropriations, Interior Dept., 76th Cong., 3d sess., pt. II, p. 461.

[154] 49 Stat. 115. This act appropriated for rural rehabilitation and relief of stricken agricultural areas.

[155] Presidential letter No. 1323, January 11, 1936.

[156] Joint Resolution of June 29, 1937, 50 Stat. 352, 353. This act appropriated for expenditure by the Resettlement Administration for rehabilitation of needy persons as the President may direct.

[157] Joint Resolution of June 21, 1938, 52 Stat. 809. Under this act only Indians are eligible to positions on Indian work relief projects until these needs have been met. Memo. Sol. I. D., December 13, 1938.

[158] Public Res. No. 24, 76th Cong., 1st sess., 252.

> SEC. 5. (a) In order to continue to provide relief and rural rehabilitation for needy Indians in the United States, there is hereby appropriated to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, $1,350,000.
>
> (b) The funds provided in this section shall be available for (1) administration, not to exceed $67,500; (2) loans; (3) relief; (4) the prosecution of projects approved by the President for the Farm Security Administration for the benefit of Indians under the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938; and (5) subject to the approval of the President, for projects involving rural rehabilitation of needy Indians.

[159] The argument that Indians should be excluded from benefits available to other needy persons under the appropriations to the Farm Security Administration, because of the special appropriation to the Office of Indian Affairs, was considered and rejected by the Solicitor for the Department of Agriculture, in view of the ruling of the Solicitor for the Interior Department that the appropriation to the Office of Indian Affairs > * * * should be narrowly construed in such a manner as to limit expenditures by the Indian Service to those purposes for which expenditures were made during the fiscal year 1939 out of the fund transferred in that year to the Indian Service by the Farm Security Administration. These purposes are, in substance: (1) grants to Indian tribes for the benefit of Indians through a program of tribal or community projects for the construction of buildings and other tribal and community enterprises; and (2) administrative expenses, loans, and relief payments incidental to the foregoing primary purpose or otherwise affecting Indians who are ineligible to receive benefits under section 3 of the act. (Memo. Sol. I. D., December 14, 1939.)

The Solicitor for the Department of Agriculture thereupon ruled:

> * * * there is no occasion for applying the rule that an appropriation for a specific purpose cannot be augmented by the use of funds appropriated in more general terms. * * * funds appropriated to that [Farm Security] Administration under the current [Emergency] Relief Act [of 1939] may be used for loans and grants to Indians, except those Indians who are receiving aid directly from the Indian Office under Section 5 of the Act. (Letter Sol. Dept. of Agriculture, December 22, 1939.)

[160] See secs. 5 and 6, supra.

providing for low-rent housing development, when they are otherwise qualified under the terms of the legislation. The United States Housing Act of 1937 [161] authorizes loans to "public housing agencies," which are defined to include a "governmental entity or public body * * * which is authorized to engage in the development or administration of low-rent housing or slum clearance." [162] In an opinion of the Solicitor,[163] the Interior Department has held that Indian tribes are governmental entities capable of undertaking housing enterprises and that, where a tribe is incorporated under the Act of June 18, 1934,[164] it may be said to be authorized to engage in the low-rent housing and slum clearance projects contemplated by the United States Housing Act of 1937 and it is, therefore, eligible to apply for a loan under that act.

[161] Act of September 1, 1937, 50 Stat. 888, 42 U. S. C. chap. 8.
[162] Sec. 2 (11), Act of September 1, 1937, 50 Stat. 888.
[163] Op. Sol. I. D., M. 30807, August 6, 1940.
[164] 48 Stat. 984.

SECTION 7. RECLAMATION AND IRRIGATION

Evidence of ancient irrigation works abounds in the more arid regions of the western part of the United States, indicating that irrigation was practiced by the Indian in prehistoric times. Without irrigation, much of this land is unproductive and unsuited to human life. When Indian reservations were established in this country, the Federal Government, in order to make it possible for the Indian to become self-supporting, embarked on a program of irrigation development.[165]

At the present time, the Irrigation Division of the Bureau of Indian Affairs is responsible for the administration of over 100 individual irrigation projects embracing approximately 1,250,000 acres, of which some 800,000 acres are under constructed works. The total investment in these projects exceeds $51,000,000. The area under constructed works is being increased each year. The annual operation and maintenance expenditures average about $1,500,000, and the construction expenditures vary from $3,000,000 to $7,000,000 annually.[166]

The field administration is handled from four offices: The assistant director's office in Los Angeles; the supervising engineer's offices in San Francisco and Billings, and a district office in Oklahoma City. There is also maintained a chief counsel's office in Los Angeles and a district counsel's office in Billings. On each of the projects a local operating force is maintained.[167]

Until 1902 [168] irrigation construction, maintenance, and operation were carried on under the direction of the reservation superintendents, with occasional assistance from local engineers temporarily employed.

In 1906,[169] a chief engineer was appointed and gradually since that time a technical staff and organization has been developed to supervise and carry on Indian irrigation.

In 1907,[170] a plan contemplating close cooperation between the Bureau of Reclamation and the Indian Service was formulated. Some of the Indian projects were transferred to the Bureau of Reclamation. Under this agreement construction was carried on by the Reclamation Service on the Flathead, Fort Peck, and Blackfeet projects in Montana and on the Pima and Yuma reservations in Arizona. In 1924,[171] these projects were returned to the Indian Service. In the past few years the Bureau of Reclamation and the Office of Indian Affairs frequently have cooperated on engineering features of various irrigation projects.

[165] The extent to which water rights have been reserved is considered in Chapter 15.
[166] Annual statement of "Costs, Cancellations, and Miscellaneous Irrigation Data of Indian Irrigation Projects, Fiscal year 1939," Interior Department.
[167] Ibid.
[168] By the Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, the Secretary was authorized to contract for construction of projects.
[169] Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat. 386.
[170] Hearings, Sen. Subcomm. of Comm. on Ind. Aff., Survey of Conditions of the Indians in the United States, 71st Cong., 2d sess., pt. 6, Engle report. January 21, 1930, p. 2259.
[171] Act of June 5, 1924, 43 Stat. 390, 402.

The irrigable land on Indian reservations in the Northwest, in almost every instance, is allotted. In the Southwest a few allotments of irrigable land have been made, but on most of the reservations in that area the Indians occupy and use certain small tracts so long as the individual makes beneficial use of the land and irrigation facilities, the ownership remaining in a tribal status. This condition applies to practically all the projects in the Navajo and Hopi country and also to the Pueblo projects.

In the North and Northwest the allotments range from 20 acres to 80 acres, the average being about 40 acres of irrigable land per individual. The southern projects are subdivided into small tracts, the majority being about 10 acres. In areas where fruit or garden is the prevailing crop, individual tracts are frequently as small as 2 acres.[172]

In addition to construction, operation, and maintenance of systems of canals and ditches, the Indian irrigation service has supervised the construction and operation and maintenance of numerous drainage systems, pumping plants, storage and flood control dams, and miscellaneous irrigation developments in connection with subsistence gardens or homesteads. Hydroelectric and Diesel engine power generating plants [173] have been constructed in some instances with transmission lines supplying power to neighboring communities, factories, farms, and mining operations.

