Johnson Receives Bipartisan Support

WASHINGTON (AP) - Late Monday, the embattled leader of the House of Representatives for the presidency said he would allow the House to vote on the issue of his own impeachment. He said it was more important to the American people that the House of Representatives have the opportunity to decide whether or not he should remain in office.

The new President also confirmed with Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld that a constitutional amendment would be presented to Congress to allow for the impeachment of the President. The amendment would enable Congress to remove the President from office if they found him to be guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors.

In addition, the Chief Justice of the United States, John G. Hughes, announced that the trial of the President would begin on Monday, and that he had invited the House of Representatives to present evidence against the President. The House would then conduct its own investigation, and the Senate would vote on whether to remove the President from office.

As the President addressed the nation, he said: "The American people have spoken. They have decided that I must remain in office. I will continue to serve as the President of the United States."
